Rex v. Grendon Underwood, 2 Bott, 264; Cald. 359. On Friday before Michaelmas, the pauper hired himself for a year from that Michaelmas, to J. H. to be his carter; he had 11s. earnest, was to have 6*l.* wages, and to go into his master's service the Wednesday after Michaelmas day. On that day he came to his master's, who told him he had hired another servant in the place he had hired him to do; but that he wanted a man to milk and go to plough, and if he liked that work he might stay; the pauper refused; his master told him he might keep his earnest and go about his business; the pauper said, "Am I at liberty to hire myself to any other person?" his master answered in the affirmative. The pauper then went away. In the same afternoon the master met him again, and hired him to serve the place of milkman and go to plough; gave him 2*s.* 6*d.* earnest, and agreed to give him 6*l.* 6*s.* wages, to serve him from that time till Michaelmas. The pauper immediately entered into the service, and continued till February; his master then hired him to serve the place of carter from that time to Michaelmas, gave him earnest, and agreed to give him 10*s.* 6*d.* additional wages; and the pauper continued till Michaelmas. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "In this case it is expressly stated, that on the Friday before Michaelmas-day the pauper was hired for a year from Michaelmas. It is then expressly stated, that they stood in the relation of master and servant from Michaelmas to Michaelmas. If so, it would be repugnant to say that this was not a hiring for a year. The case itself contradicts the idea that it was a hiring from the Wednesday after Michaelmas. Then the absence was matter of indulgence on the part

2. The Service under the Contract.

So whatever the interval provided it be part only of a day.

Service under a hiring for a year, and a minor hiring, the servant quitting between them.

There may be an interval between the two services, if one end and the other begin on the same day, and the discontinuance will not prevent a settlement; even though the servant quit during that interval.

of the master; and whether revocable or not, is so common in these transactions, and so reasonable upon the commencement of a service, that it never has been considered as impeaching or affecting the validity of a contract: but under all these circumstances I consider it as an indulgence which the master might revoke; and that it was a hiring and service for a year without any interruption on account of the short disagreement." Buller, J. said, "That in this as in all other contracts, all the words must have effect given them if possible. The case expressly stated a hiring for a year, and if the conduct of the servant in not coming into his service till the Wednesday, were considered as an act of right, founded upon an exception in the original contract, the contract would be overturned: whereas by construing it as a license or dispensation, effect is given to the whole. If then after the hiring for a year, which is expressly stated in the case, the leave of absence was given, absence by leave is the same thing as service."

3. Of Dispensation.

3. Of Dispensation. (a)

The servant must abide in the same service, if not actually, at least constructively. A constructive service takes place where the relation of master and servant continues, but the master foregoes the benefit of actual service. This is called a dispensation. It is difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile two cases on this subject. In Rex v. King's Pyon (4 East, 410, post, 437,) Lord Ellenborough said, "I should not wish to carry the idea of dispensation further than it has been already carried; which in many of the cases seems to me to be stretched as far as ingenuity could go, upon the false idea that a servant has a right to acquire in gaining a settlement;" and in Rex v. Sudbrooke (4 East, 356; post, 426.) Le Blanc, J. lamented that the words of the statute had been departed from.

Absentee beyond the time of leave, if his master receives him again, is no interruption.

Rex v. Islip, 1 Stra. 423. A person hired for a year, during the year's service obtained his master's leave to go and see his mother for one day, and he tarried three days, and then came home again, and his master took him into his service as before. It was objected that his staying to see his mother without leave was a desertion of the service, and the time he stayed away took so much off from a complete service for a year. But by the court: "This will not prevent the settlement; for the master's taking him again is a purgation of the offence, and no interruption of his service. It was then objected, that the servant for six days was sick and incapable of any service, and therefore could not gain a settlement, which is to be acquired only by a service for a year. (As to this, see Rex v. Sharrington, post, 413.) By the court: "A servant that lies thus under the visitation of God, which befalls him not through his own default, is and must be taken to be all the while in the service of his master; and if this exception were to be allowed, it might prevent all the settlements in the kingdom. The next point was, that the servant three or four days before his service expired, desired leave of his master to go to a fair to hire himself into another service. His master refused, and told him, 'I am resolved you shall gain no settlement in the parish; if you go it shall be for good and all.' The pauper said 'No, I will serve out the year.' The servant went notwithstanding; and did not return until the time of his service was expired. By the court: "This is nevertheless a settlement. The master refuses a reasonable request, coupling it with a declaration that a servant should gain no settlement, which is a badge of fraud on the part of the master, which ought not to prevail. The declaration of the servant that he would serve out the year, and his refusal to allow 6d. for the three days, show that the contract was not dissolved before the end of the year, and the law will not suffer a master to show himself so inhuman to his servant. A master cannot turn off his servant two or three days before the year expires: if he doth, the service in point of law continues, and he gains a settlement notwithstanding. At the end of the year the master deducted for the time that the servant was sick, and for the time he went to his mother, and the servant allowed the deductions. The master also abated for the three last days, but the servant refused to allow it: the master however refusing to pay, the servant took the rest of his wages."

A servant while ill is still under the service of his master.

A servant who absents himself for a reasonable cause at the end of his service, and against his master's leave, may nevertheless gain a settlement.

(a) See division of the subject, ante, 331.

Rex v. Polesworth, 2 Bar. & Adol. 483. Two justices removed J. Barwell from Kingsbury to Polesworth. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was hired by Mr. Hay of Polesworth, at Polesworth statutes, a fortnight before Michaelmas, 1799, as waggoner's lad, at 3*l.* 10*s.* wages for a year, commencing from the day after Fazeley fair, the Tuesday after Michaelmas-day. The pauper remained in the service till a fortnight before Michaelmas in the following year, when he went to Middleton statutes, having previously asked his master's leave and been refused. The following day the pauper asked his master what work he was to do; the master told him he might go where he had been the day before, and that he would not employ him any more. The pauper asked the master to pay his wages, and said if he did he would go. The master refused, and said he would obtain a summons, which he did; but neither of them attended the magistrate on that summons. The pauper left his master's house on the day the summons was served; two days afterwards, the pauper called at his master's house; and the same day they both went to Polesworth statutes, when the pauper hired himself to a new master from the day after the next Fazeley fair. On the day after Polesworth statutes, the pauper summoned his master before the magistrate. When before the magistrate, the pauper, in answer to a question put to him by the magistrate, said he was willing to serve his time out; but the master said he would not take him again. The magistrate then directed the master to pay the pauper his whole wages: which the pauper took and was satisfied. The day after Fazeley fair, he entered upon his new master's service. The case having been argued, Abbott, C. J. said, "it seems to me, that the sessions were quite right in refusing to consider this as a case in which the contract between the parties was dissolved. There can be no dissolution without a mutual consent of the parties, or some justifiable cause of complaint on the part of the master; but here he quarrelled with the pauper without sufficient reason, for the pauper had done no more than, according to Rex v. Islip (ante, 410), he had a right to do. There was, therefore, no justifiable ground for dismissal. Then is there any mutual consent? It appears that the parties went before a magistrate, and the pauper then stated that he was willing to continue in the service: the master, however, peremptorily refused, upon which the pauper, after receiving his full wages, said that he was satisfied; but he neither contracted nor offered to contract any other service. I think there is nothing in this case to show that if on the following day the master had ordered the pauper to return into his service, he would not have been bound so to do." Bayley, J. said, "The circumstance of the servant not having offered to contract with another master, naturally distinguished this case from Rex v. Pyon and Rex v. Leigh. As to the servant saying he was satisfied, that is easily explained; for his whole wages being paid, he was satisfied that the remainder of his service should be dispensed with." Holroyd, J. relied on the absence of any contract inconsistent with his return to the master. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Hanbury, Burr. S. C. 322; 2 Bott, 419. The pauper was hired for a year at Michaelmas, but did not come to his service till three days after Michaelmas, and served till the day after Michaelmas in the next year. He was absent about two or three days at a time, in the whole a fortnight, without consent, but was always received again. At going away, he agreed to make a deduction of 6*s.* 6*d.* of his wages for the time he was absent. The court said he gained a settlement by this service. This court has not been so strict in determining upon the service, as upon the hiring. It has often been held, that though a servant has been absent for a time, yet his master taking him again, purges his absence. And there is no difference between an absence in the beginning and in the middle of the service; for he is a servant from the time of hiring. (Rex v. Grendon Underwood, ante, 409.)

Rex v. East Shefford, 4 T. R. 804. The pauper was hired by Birch for a year, at four guineas' wages; he went accordingly to his service, and continued there eight weeks, when he ran away and was absent thirteen weeks,

2. The Service under the Contract.

A pauper summoned his master for wages. He offered to continue in the service, but the master refused; full wages were paid, and pauper said he was satisfied: he made no contract for the time remaining: Held, a dispensation.

If a servant does not come into the service till three days after his contract, and is absent at different times without consent, but his master receives him again, it is a dispensation.

thirteen weeks, and then his master apprehend him, and give him leave to come back, deducting a sum for the time of absence, it is a dispensation.

during which time he worked with and received wages from another person. Birch then apprehended him by a warrant; but in his way to a justice asked him whether he would come back to his place or go to prison? and if he would come back, and go on in his place as he ought to do, he might. The pauper said he would come back; and his master asked him then what he should be willing to abate for the time he had been absent? The pauper said he thought 1s. a week would not hurt him, which was agreed to; and the pauper returned into his service and continued till the end of his year, when he received all his wages, except the 13s. which had been agreed to be deducted. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "If the old contract were dissolved when the servant absented himself, and a new one entered into on his return, I agree that the pauper could not gain a settlement by serving under it. And therefore the question is, whether the service after the pauper's return were performed under the old or a new contract? This is one of the many cases in which we have to regret that the words of the statute have been departed from: but as there is a series of adjudged cases, the principle of which applies to the present, it is too much for us to overturn them; though, if the question were now to arise for the first time, perhaps we should make a different determination. It has been decided that absence at the beginning, the middle, or the end of the year may be dispensed with, either with the consent of the master or for an excusable cause. In Rex v. Hanbury an absence for a fortnight did not defeat the settlement, though the wages were deducted for that time. Now it is impossible to distinguish this case from that in principle. It has been said, however, that the absence in that case was for a shorter period than in the present: but I wish that those who used such an argument would have drawn the line, and given us the ne plus ultra. Probably, if the first case after the statute had arisen upon an absence of thirteen weeks, the court would have started at the question; but the court have gone on step by step, and having held that service for a fortnight may be dispensed with, I think we are bound by the principle of those cases to say that this pauper gained a settlement; for on his return he was received again into his master's service, where he continued under the old contract. There is no pretence to say that he entered into a new contract; and the master's object in apprehending him by a warrant was to compel him to complete the service under the old contract." Buller and Grose, Js. were of the same opinion.

If a servant, at her master's instance, go from his family on account of illness, to the hospital, and her mistress give her the remainder of her wages, it is a dispensation, although she never return.

Rex v. Christchurch, Burr. S. C. 494; 2 Bott, 436; 1 Nol. P. L. 406. E. Maxey was on the 24th day of August, 1757, hired into Christchurch for a year, and served till the 7th of August, when she was frightened into fits and incapable of doing any service. Her master being disturbed by her fits, desired Mr. Limonier, who lived in Bethnall Green, to take her into his house, that she might be under the care of her sister who lived there; but if Mr. L. refused to receive her, she was then to return to her master's house. Mr. L. took her in; and she resided there about five days, and then was taken into the hospital. The day after she had been received into Mr. L.'s house she returned to her master's to fetch away her clothes, and her mistress paid her two shillings, which made up the full year's wages. No words of discharge passed between her and her mistress; but she looked upon herself as then discharged from her service; but believed that had she recovered her health, her master would have received her again into his service. She continued under the indisposition till after the year from the time of hiring was expired, and never returned again into her master's service, who, on the 17th of August, 1758, hired another servant in her place. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "This is certainly a fair bonâ fide service for a year, without any fraud on either side. If a master gives his servant leave to go upon any other service, or to be absent for a short time, and pay him his whole wages, this is a good service. If the servant be taken ill by the visitation of God, it is a condition incident to humanity and is implied in all contracts. Therefore the master is bound to provide for and take care of the servant so taken ill in his service; (a) and cannot deduct wages in proportion to the continuance of the servant's sickness. And there is no difference, whether the accident of sickness happen in the middle or at the end of the year. It is equally the act of God and without any fault of the servant. And in the present case, the servant's being at Mr. Limonier's or in the hospital, is just the same thing as her being kept in the master's house under his own roof."

Rex v. Sharrington, 2 Bott, 322; 4 Doug. 11. The pauper hired himself before Michaelmas, 1782, for a year to Mr. Hardy, brewer at Letheringsett, to drive a team and do whatever he was bid. After having lived with his master seven weeks, as he was driving the beer waggon, being in liquor, he fell off the shafts and broke his thigh. He was carried to the Norwich Hospital, where he continued twenty-nine weeks. On quitting the hospital he returned to Hardy, who refused to receive him, offering to pay him for the seven weeks, and to make him a present, which the pauper refused. He then went to Sharrington and continued fourteen weeks, and then by an order of justices on the 30th of September, 1783, he was sent to Hardy, who then also refused to receive him. The pauper continued in Letheringsett at a public house. He did no work for Hardy after he came out of the hospital, being incapable of work. The court were of opinion that a settlement was gained by this service at Letheringsett. Counsel did not appear on the other side, and the court said, "it was sufficient, as the pauper tendered his services to his master after his recovery."

Rex v. Maddington, Burr. S. C. 675; 2 Bott, 312. The pauper, being hired for a year from Michaelmas, continued in his service till about three weeks before the next Michaelmas, when having been kicked by one of his master's horses he went home to his friends about five miles off, without his master's knowledge or asking his leave, to cure his leg; and continued there during the remainder of the year, and never returned to his master, except for wages, some short time after Michaelmas; when he was paid the whole except 6s., which the master deducted on account of the said absence, which the pauper consented to. The court held, "that the servant gained a settlement, and they thought it to be within the reason of the determination of the Islip case. There was a reasonable cause of absence, and the master ought not to have deducted any part of his wages."

Rex v. St. Bartholomew, Cornhill, Cald. 48; 2 Bott, 445. The pauper U. Owen was hired for a year on the 11th of June 1771: in April her master told all his servants that he was going to live at Manchester, but did not know the time; and that they might look out for services, or stay with him until he went, as they chose; the pauper continued with her master in St. B. till the 4th of June, when he paid her the whole year's wages and half a guinea over, and that same day he left London. His going that day was quite a casual matter, and if he had remained in London he would have continued the pauper in his service. The pauper went into a new service two days after her master left London. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The only question is, whether the servant continued boná fide in her service during the whole year? To be sure there is a distinction between exceptions from the contract originally, or subsequent dissolution and dispensation of the service; but if the case be of the latter description and boná fide, it can make no difference when the servant is engaged or where; or whether the service be in the same or another occupation; she quitted her service at the desire of her master, and received half a guinea beyond her wages as an equivalent no doubt for her board. It was accidental, and a favour to her master. Rex v. Richmond is full as strong as this, for there a new servant came into the very place. Fraud vitiates every thing; but the justice as well as reason of the thing are here with the settlement. Suppose she had come from a distant country, and had no other settlement, shall she lose her only one which she deserves so well?" Willes, Ashhurst, and Buller, Js. concurred.

Rex v. St. Andrew's, Holborn, 2 T. R. 627. M. Robinson was hired for

2. The Service under the Contract.

A pauper in liquor met with an accident, which disabled him for twenty-nine weeks. His master always refused to receive him back or employ him: Held, a dispensation.(a)

Absence at the end of the service on account of illness, is no dissolution, although the master deduct a sum from the wages on that account.

The master removed to another town, before the servant's year ended, and paid her the whole year's wages, and something over, and the servant two days after entered another service: Held, a dispensation.

The master became bankrupt,

(a) Rex v. Coningsby, post, Parke, J. recognized the doctrine of dispensation where the absence was occasioned by the misconduct of the servant; and Taunton, J. said, "he yielded to authority rather than reason."

2. The Service under the Contract.

and the mistress discharged the servant, paying the whole year's wages: Held, a dispensation.

If a mistress on account of some difference discharge a servant, and pay her her full wages, which the servant accepts, it is a dispensation.

Where the master died three weeks after hiring the pauper for a year, the latter abiding in the service with the widow and sons to the end of the year, gains a settlement in the parish where she served; and it is no less an abiding in the service for a year, because one of the sons, on a frivolous pretence, turned her out of doors three weeks before the end of the year, she offering to stay to the end of the year, but carrying away her clothes the next day, and taking what the son insisted was her full wages for the year, according to the agreement, though she demanded a larger sum.

a year, and was continued in her service until within four or five days of the end of the year; when her master becoming bankrupt, and the messengers taking possession of the house, her mistress discharged her, paying her the whole year's wages. This case was not argued, the court being clearly of opinion that the bankruptcy of the master did not dissolve the contract of hiring without the servant's consent; and that the pauper gained a settlement.

Rex v. St. Philip, in Birmingham, 2 T. R. 624. The pauper was hired for a year to E. Poole, in Powick, where she served until within eight days of the end of the term, when on account of some difference between them she gave her mistress warning that she would leave her service at the end of the year. The mistress, on having hired another servant, by reason of some impatient behaviour of the pauper, discharged her and paid her the full wages, which she accepted and quitted the service, and left the parish eight days before the year ended; but she said she would have served the year if her mistress would have let her. Ashhurst, J. "Though it be true that an agreement to put an end to the service will defeat the settlement, yet if it be not voluntary between the parties, as if a master, with a view to prevent a settlement, fraudulently turn her away or wrongfully discharge her, this will not defeat the settlement. Now this was I think a wrongful act of the mistress, which was submitted to but not agreed to by the servant. Something should have been stated to show that it was voluntary on her part; but it may be inferred she did not go by her own consent, but rather in consequence of the wrongful dismissal of the mistress, for she was desirous of serving the whole year." Buller, J. "thought this one of the clearest cases of dispensation. The warning given by the servant, and the payment of the whole year's wages by the mistress, showed a consciousness in each that they could not dissolve the contract before the end of the year." Grose, J. "It is clear if the servant be turned away by the wrongful act of the master, it will not prevent the settlement. Now here it is either the wrongful act of the mistress or it is a dispensation from service. Rex v. Gresham is distinguishable; this is more like Rex v. Richmond."

Rex v. Hardhorn with Newton, 12 East, 51. M. Lingard was removed from Newton with Seales to Hardhorn with Newton. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was hired by R. Gratrie in Hardhorn for a year. Three weeks after the beginning of the year the pauper's master died, and the farm was continued by his widow and two sons George and William. About three weeks before the end of the year, the pauper fell out with George about her work, because she threw more sand upon the floor than he deemed necessary, and was by him turned out of doors, though she was willing to stay. The next day she came again for her clothes, when George paid her 4*l.* 10*s.* as for her full wages. There was a dispute about the amount of her wages, George insisting that the pauper was hired for 4*l.* 10*s.*, and she demanding 5*l.* 15*s.* The pauper, however, accepted 4*l.* 10*s.* and never got any thing more, though she employed an attorney for that purpose. The pauper, when she came the next day for her clothes, offered to stay to the end of the year, but George would not let her. After argument, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "There must be an abiding in the service for a whole year, in order to confer a settlement; as far as lay in the pauper there was such; but she was wrongfully and forcibly turned out of doors by her master against her will, and when she returned the next day for her clothes he gave her 4*l.* 10*s.*, which he said was the whole of her wages; but she did not assent to that, but demanded more, though she took what he was willing to give her in part, and offered to stay to the end of the year, maintaining her right to her full wages. She, therefore, did all she could to abide in the service, according to her contract, and did so, except so far as she was prevented by an act of force. And he distinguished between this and Rex v. Grantham. The servant having there been improperly turned out of doors by his master, in the first instance, took him at his word, and refused to return to his service, though invited by his master so to do; and when the master at last agreed to pay him his full wages, he left the service contrary to the express request of the master to stay." Grose, J.

"There is no consent by the servant, and as the servant tendered herself to perform the service, that was equivalent to the performance of it in law." Le Blanc, J. agreed and said, "Where the dissolution has not been assented to by both parties, the court has inquired into the cause of the dismissal. The pauper did not here, as in Rex v. Leigh, hire herself into another service before the end of the year, which was there held to be a dissolution of the contract." He added, "her taking her clothes and what money he was willing to pay, does not show her consent to abandon the contract, which she offered to fulfil to the end of the year." Bayley, J. agreed.

Rex v. St. Mary, Lambeth, 8 T. R. 236. The pauper, on the 15th of January, 1797, hired herself to J. Serle, for a year, from the 18th of that month, at seven guineas wages. She went into his service on the 18th, and remained until the 11th of January in the next year, when an information having been laid against her master for keeping a gaming house, he quitted his house, and told his servants (and the pauper amongst them) that he had no longer any occasion for their services, and then paid the pauper her whole year's wages. He would have kept the pauper, but on account of his being obliged to quit his house, and the pauper was unwilling to leave his service. She then went to her sister, and did not engage herself in any other service until after the year expired, though from the time that her wages were paid she considered herself at liberty to go where she pleased. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "If this point were not encumbered with decisions, and we were to resort to the very words of the act of parliament on which the question arises, I should perhaps yield to the argument of the counsel in support of the rule. Or if the cases cited by them proved the point for which they were cited, I should be strongly inclined to adopt them on this occasion. But it has been frequently said here, that it is of great importance that decided cases should be adhered to; and on this subject in particular I applaud the rule stare decisis. The cases cited by the counsel on both sides are nine in number; and though they approach each other very nearly, there is a line of distinction between the four (Rex v. Richmond, Bartholomew, St. Philip Birmingham, and Holborn,) that were relied upon by the one side, and the five (Rex v. Castlechurch, Gresham, Grantham, Clayhydon, and Whittlebury,) on the other. I cannot distinguish the present case from the four that were cited in support of the order; and it was decided in each of those that it was a dispensation with the service, and not a dissolution of the contract. Perhaps I should have had some difficulty in saying, in some of those cases, that it was only a dispensation with the service; but it is sufficient to say, that those cases were so decided, and having been so determined they ought not now to be shaken. But the cases cited on the other side are distinguishable from those, 'because in them the contract was dissolved by the mutual consent of both parties.' The distinction between the different sets of cases is certainly a very nice one, but I think that this case must be governed by the four to which I alluded; and if this be a question of evidence, it appears that the sessions by their determination have 'impliedly found that the parties did not consent to dissolve' the contract." Grose, J. "I consider the servant was wrongfully turned away. The master could continue in his house no longer, and the servant insisted on the whole year's wages, and was unwilling to leave the service."

Eastland v. Westhorsley, 1 Stra. 526; S. C. Fortes. 216; 2 Bott, 426. A servant was hired for a year: the day before the year expired, the master told him, that to prevent his gaining a settlement in that parish, he should go away immediately, which the servant refused to do, insisting to serve out the year, whereupon the master turned him out of doors. The court held this to be such a fraud in the master as should not prevent the settlement of the servant.

Rex v. Frome Selwood, Burr. S. C. 565; 2 Bott, 437. R. Stent, the husband of the pauper, was hired for a year at King's Weston, and served till within ten days of the end of it, when Stent declaring to his master that he wished not to be settled in King's Weston, asked his leave to go and visit his relations, to which the master consented. After the year was expired

2. The Service under the Contract.

An information was laid against the keeper of a gaming house. He quitted it, and told his servants he had no longer occasion for their services, and paid the full year's wages; this is a dispensation.

Where a master turns away his servant to prevent his gaining a settlement, it is a fraud, and will not defeat the settlement.

A quitting the service because the pauper wished to be settled elsewhere, is fraudulent, and a dispensation only.

2. The Service under the Contract.

A person hired for a year, and afterwards told by the master "he shall go away a fortnight at Michaelmas because of his settlement," and at the year's end is paid a year's wages, it is a dispensation, and not an exception.

Stent returned to his master, and then hired himself as a day-labourer, and as such continued with him three months. On making up their accounts Stent allowed out of his daily wages for the days he had been absent in the preceding year. The court held the settlement to be in King's Weston, regarding the consent of the master as fraudulent, and a mere evasion of the settlement.

Rex v. Sulgrave, 2 T. R. 376. The pauper, D. Plester, was hired in February, to Mr. Howes, of Stuchbury, till Old Michaelmas, and served him accordingly. On the Friday before Old Michaelmas his master asked him if he would stay again; the pauper said he would if they could agree about wages, and asked five guineas, which the master thought too much. The pauper immediately went away, and having gone about ten yards, returned for something he had forgotten: he then met his master again, who said he would give him the five guineas, and gave him one shilling earnest. The master, while he was putting his hand into his pocket for the shilling, said, you shall go away a fortnight at Michaelmas, because of your settlement, and I will give you that fortnight to get what you can; to which the pauper agreed, and he accordingly went to his father's, and stayed a fortnight, during which time he worked for Mr. Chester in digging sand on Howes's land, and received from Chester 1s. a day, and once or twice during the fortnight he ate at Howes's; at the end of the fortnight he went to Howes's and continued to serve him at Stuchbury till Lady-day, when Howes removed, and the pauper with him, to Culworth. Howes soon after died, and the pauper continued to serve Mrs. Howes in Culworth, received his wages for that time, and he believes there was nothing deducted for the fortnight, but he does not remember what sum he received. The pauper apprehended that his master would not have hired him if he had not agreed to go away for a fortnight. Ashhurst, J. "The rule established in these kind of cases is this: 'where there is a bonâ fide exception of part of the time at the time of the hiring, that is not a hiring for a year; but if there be no exception at the time of making the original contract, then a permissive absence is considered as a dispensation of part of the service by the master;' and it does not operate in the same way as an exception out of the original contract, which defeats the settlement. And the question whether it be one or the other must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. In this case there was a complete hiring for a year at the time. The parties having disagreed on the terms proposed, the pauper went away, but on his return his master said he would give him the five guineas, which he agreed to accept, and gave him one shilling earnest. It is likewise stated, that while the master was putting his hand into his pocket he told the pauper he should go away for a fortnight; but the contract was complete before that time, and what passed afterwards can only be considered as a dispensation from the service: for at that time the master had a complete right to his service for a year, and the pauper had agreed to serve him for that time, and the shilling earnest was to bind the agreement for one year for five guineas; otherwise it appears to be giving the servant more than he originally asked for the whole year, for serving him for a shorter period. If then the contract was complete before any thing was said relative to the fortnight's absence, this was a dispensation with the service, and not an exception out of the original contract. An exception is a stipulation on the part of the person for whose benefit it is introduced; but here it was not made on the request of the servant, but as the offer of the master, and he said it was for the express purpose of preventing the pauper gaining a settlement. That is not such a reason as the court will give much countenance to. Whether the sessions might not have determined this on the ground of fraud, was for their consideration. As it is, there is no occasion to go into that ground, as we think this is a dispensation from service. As to the servant's apprehension, that cannot vary the case: we are to decide on the terms of the contract, not on the apprehension of the pauper."

Rex v. Willoughby, K. B. Easter T. 11 G. IV. MS. The facts were precisely the same as the above, and the sessions found that it was an exceptive hiring, and the court confirmed it; Parke, J. observing "that the gift of the earnest being after the stipulation for absence, showed that the contract was not till then completed."

Rex v. Market Bosworth, 2 B. & C. 757; 4 D. & R. 306. Case:—The pauper was hired by and lived with Mrs. W. from Shrove Tuesday, 1821, till Old Michaelmas. Three weeks before Old Michaelmas Mrs. W. asked the pauper "to stay again." They agreed on wages, and an earnest was given. Nothing was said about time. A fortnight before Old Michaelmas her mistress said to her, "I have hired you," but mentioned no time; "remember you are hired for fifty-one weeks." The pauper said "Very well." She lived with Mrs. W. until Old Michaelmas day, 1822. She asked to have her week just before Christmas; Mrs. W. said, "You shall have three or four days now, I cannot spare you the whole week." She staid away three successive days and nights, and had the other four days at different times during the year, returning on each of them to sleep at her mistress's, and her mistress gave her two or three holidays besides; she never was absent without her mistress's permission, and always returned into the service, and at the end of the year received her wages. Bayley, J. "The question in this case ought to have been decided by the sessions. It appears that three weeks before Old Michaelmas the mistress asked the pauper to stay again, to which she replied, that she had no objection if they could agree about wages; they did agree for 3*l.* 10*s.* and one shilling earnest was paid: now it is quite clear that that constituted a general hiring for a year; and the question is whether the subsequent conversation between the mistress and the servant amounted to an alteration of the original bargain, so as to convert that which had been a hiring for a year into a hiring for fifty-one weeks only, or whether it was a dispensation by the mistress with one week's service: now it is laid down in Nolan as a general rule, that where the absence of the servant takes place on the master's account and at his request, the courts have been inclined to infer a dispensation, inasmuch as the absence originates with him in whom the power of dispensation is vested, and is only acquiesced in by the servant. Apply that rule to the present case. There having been a general hiring for a year, the mistress afterwards states to the servant that she had hired her, but that she had mentioned no time, and desires her to remember that she was hired for fifty-one weeks. The servant made no overture to the mistress for the change of the original agreement. According to the above rule, therefore, this ought to be construed to be a dispensation. In the first instance there was an hiring for a year at an entire sum of 3*l.* 10*s.*, and there is no stipulation afterwards that the pauper was to be paid wages for fifty-one weeks, at the rate of 3*l.* 10*s.* for the whole year; I think, therefore, that there was no alteration of the original bargain, but that there was a dispensation of the service for one week, and the sessions were warranted in considering this either as a case of dispensation or of fraud. Rex v. Sulgrave (ante, 416) is an authority expressly in point; and Rex v. Coggershall (6 M. & S. 264) is another case which in principle bears upon this." Holroyd and Littledale, Js. concurred.

Rex v. Potter Heigham, Burr. S. C. 690; 2 Bott, 442. A servant, hired for a year, continued till the day before the end of his year, when he desired his master to discharge him; telling his master that as he had hired himself for the next year to a person in a distant place, he wished to pass that day with his friends; and requested to have that time to himself to spend with them. To which the master consented. And he was accordingly discharged; and then received the whole of his wages, except sixpence, which he allowed to his master for that day. The court held this not to be a dissolution of the contract, but an absence by leave of the master; and adjudged that the servant by this service gained a settlement.

Rex v. Bray, Burr. S. C. 682; 2 Bott, 440. On Thursday before Michaelmas-day, 1767, (a Saturday,) J. Hunt was hired for a year to J. Lee, of Bray, farmer, as a carter, to go into his service on the Monday following, until Michaelmas, 1768, for six guineas. At the time of the agreement Lee desired him to go into his service before Monday, but Hunt said it would not

2. The Service under the Contract.

A mistress hired a servant from Shrove Tuesday until Old Michaelmas-day following, and three weeks before the latter day asked her to "stay again," to which the servant replied, she had no objection, if they could agree about wages. They agreed, and one shilling earnest was paid, but nothing said as to the time the service was to continue. A fortnight before Old Michaelmas the mistress said, "I have hired you," but mentioned no time; "remember you are hired for fifty-one weeks;" to which the servant replied, "Very well." The servant continued for a year under this agreement. She had three days' holidays at Christmas, and four other days at different periods, and at the end of the year received her wages: Held, to be a yearly hiring and service to confer a settlement.

If a servant on the last day of his year desire his master to discharge him that he may go and see his friends, and his master thereupon do so, deducting sixpence for that day, it is a dispensation.

Absence for a day at the beginning or the end of the year, either with consent of the master, or for a reasonable cause, may be dispensed with.

If the master give the servant leave to go thirteen days before his year expires, and pay him his full wages, it is a dispensation.

If the servant absent himself, with leave, for the last five weeks of his service, and pay his mistress the sum earned by him during that time, it is a dispensation.

Service with others, by first suit him as he was then in service; and Lee replied, that if he would come into his service on Monday morning, he would shift all that time. He went into his service on the Monday. At the time of the agreement the pauper was in the service of J. Lewis, of South Stock, under a contract which expired on Michaelmas-day, 1767, which service he left on the night of the Michaelmas-day, 1767. He continued in the service of John Lee till the day before Michaelmas-day, 1768, when he desired leave of his master to go to see his relations before he went to another service; his master deducted one shilling from his wages for that day, and paid him the residue; he then went away and returned no more. On the pauper's going away Lee told him that if he quitted the service before Michaelmas-day there might be a dispute about his settlement, and desired him to come back. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "This is a hiring for a year, with a dispensation of the first day. The pauper thought he had his master's leave the last day, and had allowed a shilling for it, which is more than one day's wages. Both master and servant were clear that at the end of the year there was only an absence of one day, and at the beginning of the year the pauper had his master's leave for being absent the first day. Both master and servant meant it as a settlement."

Rex v. Richmond, Burr. S. C. 740; 2 Bott, 443. The pauper, W. Springall, was hired for a year to A. Crawford, Esq. of Richmond, on the 30th of October, to serve till the 30th of October following. On the 4th of September, the pauper married a fellow-servant, who had given a month's warning in August, and was to quit in September; but was desired by her master to stay till the 17th of October, which she did; and then the master said to Springall, that he supposed, as his wife was going away, he would like to do so too. The husband replied he should like it better, if it was agreeable to the master. His master said he had no objection, as he had another footman coming, and would pay him his whole year's wages: which he accordingly did on the 17th in full to the 30th. On the 17th both left the service. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "There is no necessity of an actual service upon every day of the year. The master can always dispense with it. He can give leave of absence. Nay, if the servant is absent without leave, in the middle part of his year, such absence may be purged, as it has been termed, by the master receiving him again, that is, the subsequent consent of the master ratifies the act done. I am clearly of opinion, that the servant has in the present case sufficiently served his whole year. The master voluntarily gave him leave of absence for the last thirteen days; and, of his own accord, paid him the whole year's wages."

Rex v. Nether Hayford, Burr. S. C. 479; 2 Bott, 435. The pauper, John Gare, was hired for a year, to widow Bliss, of Farthingstone, and continued in her service until five weeks before the end of the year, when, with his mistress's leave, he parted with her and went to one Litchfield, at Kissingbury, and staid there the five weeks. After the end of the year, Gare went to Mrs. Bliss for his year's wages; she laid down the whole to him, and he voluntarily deducted 10s. for his five weeks' absence, being the sum he had earned and received for his five weeks at Kissingbury. If his mistress had, during the five weeks, required him to return to her, he would have done so. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question turns singly upon this, whether his absence for five weeks was a dissolution of the contract? If he had his mistress's leave, it was not; if he had it not, it was. And we are all of opinion, that it was only an absence with leave, for it appears that both parties considered the contract between them as subsisting, and not dissolved. He paid her the whole that he had earned in the five weeks that he was absent, considering himself as her servant during that time. For otherwise the deduction would not have been a deduction of the particular sum earned by him, but a deduction in proportion of his whole year's wages to the time of his absence. And he looked upon himself as liable to be called back within the five weeks. Therefore we are all of opinion that the contract was not dissolved."

Rex v. Beccles, 2 Stra. 1207; Burr. S. C. 230. T. Elm was hired to a blacksmith for a year, at 3*l*. During the year, the master gave him leave to work with another smith for three days, with a second for a week, and with a third for a fortnight, and agreed that the servant should have the advantage of it. After which he returned and staid out the year, and the master by his consent deducted the proportion of wages for the time he was away. The sessions thought the first contract was thereby dissolved. Lee, C. J. "It is only a license of departure for a certain time; the contract remains; the service by the master's consent with another person is service of the master; it is not necessary the service be with the same person. If it had been without the master's consent, the absence has been dispensed with by the master's thus receiving him again." The other judges concurred in opinion that this was no dissolution of the contract, but a mere lending of the service of his servant, than which nothing is more customary in harvest time.

Rex v. Goodnestone, Burr. S. C. 251; 2 Stra. 1232. W. Markham was hired for a year, and lived with and served his master, J. Wyborne, in Northbourne, till within three weeks of the end of the year, when he asked leave of his master to go to the herring fishery. The master consented, if he could get a man to do the master's work to his liking. Markham did so, and paid the man. Markham went to sea, and returned about three weeks after the end of his year; the master paid him all his year's wages. Lee, C. J. "I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. Beccles (ante, 418), where absence with the master's consent was holden not to dissolve the contract. In the present case no dissolution of the contract is stated; leave of absence was given by the master, and he paid the whole year's wages."

Rex v. Barton-upon-Irwell, 2 M. & Sel. 329. J. Edwards was hired for a year as a servant to Watkins of Great Lever, whom he served about 19 months there. After having been in that service about two months, being then married, he was taken before a magistrate on the complaint of his master, and committed to the house of correction for one month. When he had been in custody nine days, at the instance of his master, he obtained a discharge from his imprisonment, returned immediately to Great Lever, and served him as before. On such return no mention was made of the terms on which he was to serve. He received no wages for the time he was in custody. By the warrant of commitment, it appeared that the pauper had been charged, upon the oath of Watkins, with divers misdemeanors, and not acting in his service as a servant ought to do: that the justices had convicted him of the offence so charged against him, and had sentenced him to be imprisoned in the house of correction, and there kept to hard labour for one month. The 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 2, enabled magistrates to commit or discharge from service, upon complaints before them between master and servant. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It would be clearly against the policy of the law, if the servant, by his own act of delinquency, should have the power of dissolving the contract. The justices have that power, but they have not exercised it. The imprisonment of the servant was so far from being a cessation of the service, that perhaps his labour might have been required of him by the master, even while he was in prison. Then what farther circumstances appear upon this case? It is stated that the master deducted the wages for the period during which the pauper was absent. But after that period he returns into the service, (then, indeed, he was married, but he goes on under the old contract,) and nothing passes between the master and the servant with respect to any alteration, or any new contract, during the remainder of the 19 months. The master, indeed, had an election to avoid the contract, but he made his election to continue the pauper in his service, which it was in his power to do." Le Blanc, J. "I think there was not any dissolution of the contract; the master might have discharged him, but he did not: he must then have returned on the footing of the old hiring. It is said, there was an interruption of the service; but during the whole time he was subject to his master. It was under the authority of the contract that his master acted when he punished him for misconduct, therefore it was not a dissolution. The master perhaps might have elected to dissolve it, but he has not done so. Neither do I think this was an interruption of the service to prevent a settlement." Bayley, J.

2. The Service under the Contract.

master's consent, he taking the servant again, is service under a dispensation.

So where a servant procure another to take his place for a time, paying him himself, and receiving from his master his whole year's wages.

A yearly servant, on complaint of master, was committed, and after nine days' confinement, was discharged, and returned, and served out the year: Held, that the imprisonment did not dissolve the contract.

2. The Service under the Contract.

Where a female servant, who was fined for a malicious trespass, was advised by her mistress not to pay the fine but go to prison, this is a dispensation.

"The relation of master and servant continued notwithstanding the commitment of the servant procured by the master. The commitment did not set free the servant from his contract to go wherever he pleased after the imprisonment ceased. That would be allowing him to avail himself of his own wrongful act. Then, as to the service during the nine days, perhaps the servant could not strictly be said to be actually serving while in prison, but there was a service for more than a year under a hiring for a year." Dampier, J. "It seems to me that the master had no intention of dissolving the contract, for instead of that, he hastens back the return of the servant by begging off his punishment for the whole of the period, except nine days." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Coningsby, 3 N. & M. 199; 4 B. & Ad. 156. E. Flintham, single woman, was removed from Coningsby to Stickney. Order quashed. Case:—A few days before May-day, 1829, the pauper was hired by Mr. Gosling from the same May-day at the wages of 3*l.* 10*s.*, and went into his service in Stickney on that day. About harvest time in the same year, she was apprehended upon the complaint of W. Foster, her master's neighbour, on a charge of having wilfully and maliciously damaged property belonging to him. The magistrates before whom the complaint was heard fined her, and she not paying the fine, was committed to prison for one month. It was by the advice of the mistress (who was present at the hearing of the complaint) that the pauper went to prison instead of paying the fine. When she was taken to prison, her mistress told her she was to return when her time was out; and she also sent her provisions occasionally during her imprisonment. She was discharged at the end of the month, returned immediately to her master's, and went about her work as usual. She staid in the service till May-day, 1830, and on going away received her whole wages. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether under these circumstances she gained a settlement in the parish of Stickney. Denman, C. J. "This head of settlement is made to depend upon two things—first, there must be a hiring for a year; and secondly, an abiding and continuance in the same service for a whole year. Those words strictly construed would perhaps import actual service. It has been decided, however, that there may be a dispensation by the master with the performance of the servant's duties for a time, and that during such period there is a constructive service sufficient to satisfy the words of the statute. The consent of the master to dispense with such service may be either express or implied, and it is implied where the servant having absented himself for a time, has returned to the service, and been received by the master, and had his full wages paid. I think in this case the absence of the pauper during the imprisonment must be taken to have been with the consent of the mistress. It may be collected from the statement that the pauper could have paid the fine, and that the mistress interfered to prevent her. After the term of imprisonment expired, she received her back, and paid her her full wages. It has been ingeniously argued that the absence here was not permissive, because the law compelled the pauper to be imprisoned unless she paid a fine. But she had her election either to pay the fine or go to prison, and she did the latter by the advice of her mistress, who supplied her with provisions during her confinement. It seems to me, therefore, that the service was dispensed with by the mistress. Rex v. Westmeon, (Cald. 129, post.) and Rex v. North Cray, (Cald. 495, post.) are distinguishable, for there the masters did not consent to the absence, and showed their dissent in the most effectual way by deducting from the wages." Parke, J. "To constitute a settlement by hiring and service, there must be a hiring for a year and a service for a year, but the service need not be actual; of necessity it may be constructive, because no servant serves his master every hour of every day, and a dispensation from service may be implied. Even in the case of a wilful absence, it has been held that if a master receive back his servant afterwards, and pay him his wages, that is a dispensation with the service during the period of absence. In Rex v. North Cray, and Rex v. Westmeon, the absence of the servant was wilful, for the imprisonment was occasioned by his own misconduct; but those cases are distinguishable from the present, because the pauper never returned to the service after the imprisonment. Absence during imprisonment, like absence from other causes, may be purged by consent. It has been said that the master, during the term of imprisonment, could not recal the pauper to his service. But as Mr. Clinton has observed, the same may be said where the absence is occasioned by illness proceeding from the misconduct of the servant, or where the servant during such absence is at a great distance from the master." Taunton, J. "I am of the same opinion. Rex v. North Cray, and Rex v. Westmeon, are distinguishable, because it did not appear that the master again received the servant into his service; but I cannot help thinking the good sense to be in what is stated by Lord Mansfield and Buller, J., in Rex v. North Cray. The pauper, eight or nine days before the expiration of the service, had been committed for not giving security to indemnify the parish as the father of a child likely to be born a bastard, and Lord Mansfield says, 'The single question is, whether the pauper served his year, in fact he did not, did he then constructively? There is not a pretence that the master consented to dispense with the time he did not serve; his absence and imprisonment were the consequences of his own criminality. His imprisonment was not illegal.' Those observations apply to the present case; and I think this doctrine of dispensation has been carried too far. The current of authorities, however, compels me to say there may be a constructive service even during the time for which the servant is committed in execution for misconduct; and I yield to authorities, not to reason." Patteson, J. "I think that we are bound by the authorities to hold that there was a dispensation with the service during the time the pauper was imprisoned." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Hallow, 2 B. & C. 739; 4 D. & R. 299; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 210. Thomas Hewett, &c. were removed from Powick, in Worcester, to Hallow. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper went into the service of J. Price, of Tibberton, having been previously hired by Price, at Pershore Mop, a few days before Old Michaelmas, when the pauper's previous service in Hallow expired, to serve Price as waggoner's boy, from Old Michaelmas to Old Michaelmas following, at the wages of 5*l.* The pauper went into the service of Price, and remained with him till about a month before the said Old Michaelmas-day, when disputes having arisen between Price and the pauper, in consequence of his having charged the pauper with misconduct, Price caused the pauper to be summoned to answer such charges before P. G., a justice. Price and the pauper appeared before P. G., and the complaint was heard, and upon the hearing it was agreed between P. G. and Price, that the pauper should either beg Price's pardon, and be received back into his service again, or if the pauper refused to beg his pardon, that he should remain the rest of his year in prison. The pauper refused to beg Price's pardon, whereupon he was committed for one month. The year for which the pauper had been hired expired two days before the expiration of the month for which he was committed. The pauper remained in gaol during the whole of that month, and left the gaol at the expiration thereof. During his imprisonment, the pauper's clothes remained at Price's; and when the pauper left the gaol, he went to Price's and took away his clothes, and received from Price all his wages, with the exception of 7*s.*, which Price deducted for the time the pauper had been in gaol, and he then quitted Price's house.—Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that there was a complete service for a year, notwithstanding the commitment under 20 Geo. II. c. 19; but I wish to be understood as speaking of a commitment under that statute only. The second section is for the punishment of servants in the character of servants. It gives the magistrates power to put an end to the service, if he thinks fit: when that power is exercised it puts an end to all questions of settlement. But the statute gives another power also, viz. that of imprisoning the offending party for any period not exceeding one month. If an imprisonment for a month, under that provision, defeats the settlement, imprisonment for a week, or even for a day, must have the same effect. There is nothing to show that the legislature contemplated or intended to produce such an effect. I therefore think that a servant committed under the statute in question, must be considered as abiding in the master's service, within the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that this case falls within the distinction taken by Le Blanc, J., in Rex v. Barton-upon-Irwell, (ante, 419). He there says, 'It was under the authority of the contract that his master acted when he punished him for misconduct, therefore it was not a dissolution.' So here the pauper was imprisoned at the instance of the master. The latter might have pressed for a dissolution of the contract, but, instead of that, there was an understanding between him and the justice, that the pauper should either beg his master's pardon, or remain the rest of the year in prison. It has been conceded that that does not operate as a dissolution, and I think it may be put either as a constructive service or a dispensation. In the case cited, it was held that the servant gained a settlement; and I cannot see why the imprisonment should have a different effect at the end from that which it had in the middle of the year. It has been urged in argument, that the master, by taking the servant back, is to be considered as dispensing with his service during his absence. But the contract not being dissolved, if the servant were released from prison before the end of the year, the master would be under the necessity of receiving him." Holroyd, J. "There is a great difference where the servant's absence from actual service arises, as in this case, at the instance of the master, and where it is occasioned by any criminal act done by the servant, and independently of the master. The ground of the commitment of the servant, was absence from his duty for a day: possibly the master might have had a right to discharge him for that neglect; but he neither did that of his own authority, nor applied to the justice to do it, so that the relation of master and servant continued. I think that the service also continued, just the same as if the occurrence had happened in the middle of the year. The servant being imprisoned and punished as a servant, might have insisted upon going back to his master, or the master might have compelled him to return, as soon as he was discharged out of custody."—Little-dale, J. "In this case neither the master nor the justice having discharged the servant, the relation of master and servant continued. Then the servant, when in prison, did not absent himself voluntarily from the master's service. The imprisonment was at the instance of the master; the servant might still be ready and willing to work for him. I am therefore of opinion, that it must be considered as a constructive service." Order of sessions quashed.

2. The Service under the Contract.

A master hired a servant for a year; at the expiration of eleven months he made a complaint against him before a justice, who, under the 29 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 2, committed the servant to the house of correction for one month, which expired after the end of the year for which he was hired: Held, that this was a constructive service for a whole year.

2. The Service under the Contract.

If a person, after being hired for a year, is prevented by illness from entering upon his service at the time agreed, and upon going to his place, his master refuse to receive him, and then he continue there, agreeing to take whatever he should be allowed, the service only commences at the second agreement.

Rex v. Winterset, Cald. 298; 2 Bott, 379. The pauper, George Challenger, was hired at Barnsley statutes, which are held a few days before Martinmas, to Thomas Oundsworth, of Stainsburgh, for one year, received 1s. for his godspenny, and was to have three guineas wages; the very night of the hiring the pauper fell ill, and continued sick and unable to go, and did not go into his service till a month after Martinmas, when the pauper and his mother went to the master's house, who being from home, they were shown to his wife, who complained that the pauper had not come to his service according to the agreement, and therefore refused to receive him: whereupon the pauper's mother said, "we must fall into your will for wages, and take what you will allow us;" and left the pauper in his service, where he continued till Martinmas following; when the mother was sent for, and received for forty-eight weeks' wages after the rate of 1s. 2d. per week, being less than the rate of the original wages. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The service had never commenced under the first contract; if it had, no doubt the master must have supported him in his sickness. But that is not the question; the point is, that the agreement acted upon here was a fresh agreement when he recovered from his sickness, and the beginning of his service was then. Under the former, the mistress refused to receive him. Then considering the old contract at an end, the actual service was but for eleven months, that is, to the Martinmas next; and the submitting to the abatement of the month's wages at the end of the year is an affirmance of the agreement made by his mother; and this, as rescinding the original agreement, destroys more than the legal or constructive service; it shows also that there was no hiring for a year, so that both the hiring and service must be considered as imperfect and ineffectual." Buller, J. "If a servant be taken ill, after the service has commenced, the master is bound to support him, and cannot turn him away on that account. (a) But it is not true, that the service began under the first contract. That was executory. It was made some days before Martinmas to commence at Martinmas; and in fact it never commenced. When the pauper went, they made a new contract, and under that his service commenced."

2. The Service under the Contract.

4. Of Change of Master in the same Service. (b)

4. Of change of master, &c.

It is not essential that the whole year's service should be under the same master or mistress, though there must be an identity in the service. The removal, therefore, of the master with whom the contract was made, and the service commenced, either by death or by the transfer of the farm or establishment to another person, will not prevent the servant from gaining a settlement, by continuing the service under the new master to the end of the year. This rule of settlement law has been considered so little disputable, that very few cases upon it have been brought before the Superior Court.

Rex v. Ivinghoe, 1 Ses. Ca. 121; Sett. & Rem. 109; 1 Stra. 90; 2 Bott, 293. Nicholas Young was hired for a year to John Knight, who rented a farm in Ivinghoe, and he lived with him half a year, who then paid him half a year's wages, and let the farm to Smith, who entered, and took all the stock and servants, and in harvest time took Young off from keeping sheep, and sent him to harvest work, for which he paid him 5s. extra, and at the year's end paid him the other half year's wages. No words passed about dissolving the contract with Knight when he left the farm, or making any new contract with Smith. The question was, if this shall be deemed the same service, so as to gain a settlement? Pratt, C. J. "This is a good settlement: if a master command his servant to live with another for a certain time, it is a service to the first master; and here being no new contract, it is carrying on the service of the first master. And the subsequent master paying his wages did not alter the case; and the 5s. given by Smith does not alter the case, it is no more than if a gratuity be given by a neighbour to a servant for his extraordinary trouble when lent by his master to such neighbour for a week or so. What agreement there was between Smith and Knight non constat, but here is no act done by the servant, which shows his consent to change his master; the contract not being destroyed, he might have brought an action against the first master." The other judges concurred; Fortescue, J., saying, "The difficulty arises upon the word same, which may extend to master, parish and business. And taking it in those senses, this case comes within the words of the statute; and there can be no doubt it comes within the reason of it; for he is no more likely to be chargeable now, than if he had actually served Knight all the year."

If the master let his farm, and the servant continue with the lessee for the remainder of his year, it will give him a settlement.

Rex v. Ladock, Burr. S.C. 179; 2 Bott, 277. J. Roberts was hired for a year in Ladock. His master died within the year, leaving W. Huddy, of St. Enoder, his executor. The executor asked the servant if he was willing to serve out the year with him. The servant agreed to it, and did serve the executor in St. Enoder during the remainder of the year. By the court: "This is a continuance of the same service; the contract was not dissolved by the death of the master, and the servant gained a settlement in St. Enoder. And this is a stronger case than that of Ivinghoe, the assignee of the farm in that case being a mere stranger; whereas this was the case of an executor on whom the law casts a privity of contract." (See also Rex v. Hardhorn-with-Newton, ante, 414.)

So where the servant continues with an executor for the remainder of the year.

5. Of Dissolution. (b)

5. Of Dissolution.

A dissolution of the contract may be effected by the consent of the parties or by act of law.

2. The Service under the Contract.

If a master and servant part three weeks before the year expires, by mutual consent, and the servant therefore abate part of his wages, it is a dissolution of the contract.

Where a servant, with his master's consent, left the service a few days before the expiration of the year, and was paid the whole year's wages, he gained no settlement.

Where a servant on being paid his wages for the time he had served, left the service, but afterwards returned and served the remainder of the year without further agreement, it was held to be a dissolution.

Where before the end of the year, the mistress asked the servant whether she choose to go away on a certain day (within the year), assigning as a reason that she had hired a new servant, who wished to come to her then, and the servant said it was immaterial to her, and agreed to go, which she did; the court thought it sufficient to dissolve the contract.

Pawlet v. Burnham, Fol. 187; 1 Sess. Ca. 71; 2 Bott, 424. The pauper covenanted with R. A. to serve him for a year, but three weeks before the expiration of the year departed from the service with his master's consent, and abated 6s. out of his wages for the remainder of the year. It was contended that as the case stated the pauper to be a covenant-servant, which must be presumed to be by deed, he could not be discharged by parol consent, and therefore he continued a hired servant during the year. The court: "Here is no fraud expressed or implied. It is not within the words of the act, nor the meaning. Can a man compel his servant to gain a settlement nolens volens? As to the covenant being by deed, and so the service continuing, perhaps he might bring an action on the covenant; and as to that point the service continued, but not as to gaining a settlement, where the statute saith he must serve for a year, which this man hath not served."

Rex v. Castlechurch, Burr. S. C. 68; 2 Stra. 1022; (a) 2 Bott, 304. The pauper was hired for a year, and served from the 7th January to the 26th of December following, when he went away with his master's consent, and took his clothes with him, and was paid the whole year's wages. Lord Hardwicke. "I should think this is not a good settlement. The legislature has expressly determined the time of service; they require that it shall continue for one whole year. In this case the contract was determined, and the pauper ceased to be a servant to the master. If so, he could not be said to continue in the service during the twelve days, and consequently it was not a service for a whole year." The other judges concurred.

Rex v. Ross, Burr. S. C. 688; 2 Bott, 441. Thomas Chest, the pauper, hired himself for a year to Edmund Miles, and served him in Langarren only three days. A difference arising between them about the business the pauper was employed in, Miles bid the pauper go about his business. On which the pauper immediately ran away and quitted his service, and hired himself to John Whitby for a year, and served Whitby for six months in Whitchurch. Miles then insisted on Whitby's not keeping the pauper in his service. Whitby paid the pauper his wages to that time, and the pauper quitted that service, and went one or two voyages up the river Wye, as labourer to a barge-master, for a fortnight. Then at Whitby's request, and with Miles's consent, he returned into Whitby's service without coming to any new agreement, or any mention of wages, and continued in Whitby's service in Whitchurch seven months, being a month over the end of the year for which he was hired, in order to make out his lost time, and then received his wages. It was argued that the fortnight's absence being in the middle of the year, it was purged by the master's receiving him again. But the court said "Here is an absolute dissolution of the contract, both by master and servant, at the end of six months. Whereas the statute requires a continuance in the same service for a whole year. The new service cannot be connected with the old hiring."

Rex v. St. Peter of Mancroft, 8 T. R. 477. The pauper was let to Mrs. Morton, about a fortnight before Michaelmas, 1797, by a letter sent by Mrs. M. to the pauper's friends, stating that she gave 3*l.* a year wages, on which the pauper agreed to go, and sent to her mistress to let her know when she should come, and in consequence of a second letter desiring her to come on Thursday the 11th day of October, she went to her service on the 12th of that month; on her going her mistress objected to her not having come the day before, for which the pauper gave as a reason, that she had only quitted her last place late on Old Michaelmas-day. About three weeks after she went, the pauper said to her mistress that it was proper to come to some agreement, as they had never had any further than a few lines, to which her mistress answered, "You know what wages I sent you word, and as the general way is to let for a month's wages or a month's warning, I do not wish to confine you for a year:" but did not say any thing about not choosing to hire for a year; she received her wages quarterly, and about a fortnight before New Michaelmas-day her mistress asked her whether she chose to go away on New Michaelmay-day or Old Michaelmas-day, assigning as a reason for her asking, that she had hired a new servant, who wished to come to her at New Michaelmas. The pauper said it was immaterial to her, as she had not got a place, and agreed to go at New Michaelmas, which she did, at which time the other servant came into her mistress's service. Her mistress was not in a condition of life to keep two servants; and if a place had offered at New Michaelmas, the pauper looked upon herself as in a situation to take it, though when she first got to her mistress she considered herself as to live with her until Old Michaelmas. Upon quitting her service upon New Michaelmas-day, which was a fortnight after the agreement to go, her mistress paid to her the whole which remained due of the 3*l.* wages, although at the time when the pauper agreed to go away at New Michaelmas, nothing was said about wages. The pauper would not have objected to going away at New Michaelmas, if her mistress had proposed to make a deduction for the time, but would have mentioned it to her, and told her she was willing to stay till Old Michaelmas. The pauper liked to go away at New Michaelmas rather than Old Michaelmas, but would not have stayed after Old Michaelmas if her mistress had requested it. The pauper considered the conversation which passed on the fortnight before New Michaelmas, as a month's warning to go away at Old Michaelmas. When this case came on for argument, Lord Kenyon, C. J. said "That upon this case, as disclosed, there was strong evidence to induce the sessions to adjudge that the contract between the mistress and the servant was dissolved before the end of the year, and consequently that the latter did not gain a settlement in St. Peter's, Norwich. That the distinction established in all the cases was perfectly clear, that where the servant continued liable to serve during the whole year, though the master dispensed with the actual service for any part of it, the servant gained a settlement, because the relation of master and servant subsisted all the year, and the master might resume the right to the service if he chose; but that where the parties absolutely put an end to the contract before the expiration of the year, as in the present case, the servant did not gain a settlement. That though it was at first doubted whether or not the master could dispense with the service at the end of the year, so as to give the servant the benefit of the contract for the purpose of a settlement, it had been long settled that it was immaterial whether the service was dispensed with at the beginning, the middle, or the end of the year." Grose, J. "The sessions should state the result of the evidence, and in a case of this kind, they should state the fact one way or the other, whether this were a dispensation with the service, or a dissolution of the contract." The counsel in support of the order of sessions saying there were reasons that would probably induce the sessions to decide that there was a dispensation with the service, the court ordered the case to be sent down to be re-stated.

Rex v. Whittlebury, 6 T. R. 464. J. Roberts was hired by J. Grimsdick of Paulerspury, from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, at the wages of 50*s.* He entered into and continued in the service until five days of the end of the year, when he went to Towcester statute to seek for a place: while he was there he was suddenly taken ill of a fever, which continued for six weeks, and he was deprived of his reason a part of that time; he went from the statute to his mother, but neither of them having any money to maintain him during his illness, he that night desired his mother to go to his master for his money, and to bring away his clothes; the mother went the next day, and at her return she brought his money all but 1*s.* which his master had stopped for the remainder of the year, and gave it to him together with his clothes, with which he was satisfied, and he thought himself at liberty to hire himself to another master if he had been well enough. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "I confess I have not been able to raise the least doubt in my mind on this

2. The Service under the Contract.

The servant being taken ill, sent for his clothes and money, which his master sent, deducting for the absence during illness: Held a dissolution. (a)

(a) "Dissent shown in the most effectual way, by deducting the wages," Lord Denman in Rex v. Coningsby, 1 Nev. & M. 199; 4 B. & Ad. 156, ante, 420.

case. There is no doubt but that the parties may put an end to the contract during any part of the year, either at the beginning, or in the middle, or only a day before the end of it; and if they do, the servant gains no settlement, because the act requires that the relation of master and servant should continue during a whole year. It is not necessary here to decide whether in every case the receipt of wages before the expiration of the year puts an end to the contract, or whether a servant being taken ill during the year, the master can of his own authority discharge him, and put an end to the contract, or whether in such a case justices may put an end to the contract; but it is here stated that five days before the end of the year (and it is immaterial whether that happened five months or five days before the year expired), the pauper sent his mother to his master for his money, and the latter paid the wages stipulated for the whole year except 1s., which he deducted because the whole year's service was not performed. As far therefore as the master had the power, he did put an end to the contract before the end of the year; he had no right to deduct the shilling, but on the ground that the pauper did not continue his servant until the end of the year. Then what was the conduct of the servant? He received his money, saying that he was satisfied; and it also appears that he thought he might have hired himself to another master before the end of the year. One party said I put an end to the contract as far as lies in my power; the other said I also agree to put an end to it as far as respects me; therefore both parties, whose consent was necessary, did consent to dissolve the contract before the expiration of the year." Grose, J. "It must be remembered that when the servant sent for his money, his wages were not due; no money was due till the year expired, or till there was an end of the contract. The message therefore was an offer by the servant to put an end to the contract." Lawrence, J. put it on the same ground.

A servant is taken ill, and receives his whole year's wages, and voluntarily leaves the service to go to the hospital, and never returns, this is a dissolution.

Rex v. Sudbrooke, 4 East, 356. The pauper hired himself for a year, and after eight months, being too ill of a fever to do his work, his master paid him his whole year's wages when he left his master's service and went to the hospital, and never returned into the service. (a) Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The doctrine of dispensation has only been allowed where both parties contemplated the continuance of the relation of master and servant. But here the servant being ill and unable to do his work, voluntarily left his master's service before the end of the year, when his master paid him his whole year's wages; we must therefore take it, not only to be a ceasing to abide, in the words of the act, but a relinquishment of the service altogether. After that, neither party could maintain any action against the other for the affirmance of the contract or continuance of the service. Then if neither had any remedy against the other upon the contract, or any compulsory means of enforcing its execution, it must be dissolved in point of law. In Rex v. Christchurch, at the time of the servant's departure, both parties contemplated the continuance of the service if the servant recovered, for she was sent to Mr. L. at her master's desire, and with a request from him to take her in, and if he refused she was to return to her master. I do not overlook the circumstance pressed upon us, that there was an advance of the whole year's wages before the end of the year; but the same circumstance occurred in Rex v. Godalmin and Rex v. Castlechurch, and yet no settlements were there holden to have been gained by the servants who quitted their master's service before the end of the year by mutual agreement." Lawrence, J. agreed that the question to be considered was, whether the master did or did not retain his control over his servant during the whole year? It is stated the servant left his service, by which we are not merely to understand that he left the house, for that would not be a leaving of the service, unless the contract were dissolved. Le Blanc, J. said "That however we may lament that the words of the statute have been departed from, yet as an extended construction of it has been made in some cases, if this case come within the words and precise determination of those authorities, we must have abided by them; but unless it could be shown to fall within some precise determination, the court will not extend the departure further. I do not found my opinion upon the mere circumstance of the servant's leaving his master's house to go to the hospital, but that I think that the parties came to a determination to put an end to the contract. The servant's illness cannot enable the master to determine the contract; but if the servant should choose, on account of illness, to go away, illness cannot prevent him from coming to an agreement with his master to put an end to the contract. Did they agree here? The servant received his whole year's wages, went away before the end of the year, went to the hospital, and never returned to his master again. Are we not to conclude that this was done by mutual consent? Rex v. Castlechurch shows the payment of the whole year's wages makes no difference if the parties agreed to put an end to the contract before the end of the year. And that though illness would not enable one of the parties to put an end to the contract, it might still induce both to come to such an agreement."

(a) It was assumed as a fact, that the pauper continued ill during the remainder of the year. See 4 East, 356, note.

Rex v. Rushall, 7 East, 471. The pauper sometime before Old Michaelmas-day, 1802, the time at which the service in which she was then living, at Wiston in Sussex, was to end, wrote to her mother, desiring her to look out for a place for her; which she did, and in consequence treated with Mrs. Peck of Rushall, Wiltshire, who informed the mother that she would give her daughter the same wages as she did her other servants, (being ten guineas a year, and a guinea for tea,) and wait till she came down, and desired that she would come as quickly as she could; but the mother made no absolute agreement for her daughter, but afterwards informed her that she had got a place for her, if she liked it. The pauper left her service at W. immediately on its expiration, and went without delay to her mother's; and on Monday, the 18th, Mr. P. applied to her, to know if she liked to come into his service, saying that he wanted her to come immediately, as he had company to dinner. She went to Mr. P.'s house, and then it was, for the first time, agreed between Mr. P. and her, that the wages should be ten guineas for the year, and a guinea for tea, with liberty of parting at a month's wages or a month's warning. She then went to work, and continued in Mr. P.'s service until Old Michaelmas-day following. About five weeks before that time she gave her mistress notice that she should quit her service at the next Old Michaelmas-day. On Old Michaelmas-day, 1803, the pauper came to her mistress to receive her wages, who paid her her whole year's wages and the guinea for tea, but told her she wanted a week of serving out her year. The pauper said she was willing to stay out another week; but the mistress replied that it did not signify, as she had got another servant in her place, who was then in the house (which in fact she was). She then left the house, and never returned into the service afterwards. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The case expressly states that the mother made no absolute agreement for her daughter. The daughter arrived at Rushall about a week after Old Michaelmas-day, when upon Mr. P.'s application to her to know if she liked to come into his service, she went there, and then it was, as the case states, for the first time agreed between Mr. P. and her, &c., with liberty (which was not before mentioned) of parting at a month's wages or a month's warning; this was on the 18th of October. Then about five weeks before Old Michaelmas-day the pauper gave her mistress notice to quit at Old Michaelmas-day. The mistress could not object to receive the notice, and, therefore, looked out for another servant; but when the pauper went to receive her wages, the mistress paid her the whole year's wages, but told her that she wanted a week of serving out the year. The pauper then said, indeed, that she was willing to stay another week; but as the mistress in consequence of the warning which the pauper had given her, and which she had accepted, had provided herself with another servant, and did not want two of them, she told the pauper it did not signify, as she had got another servant in her place, on which the pauper left the house. There can be no doubt upon this statement, that both parties agreed to put an end to the service before the end

2. The Service under the Contract.

Terms had been mentioned, but no agreement made till a week after Old Michaelmas, when the servant entered upon the place. She continued till Old Michaelmas-day of the following year, and then left by mutual agreement, having previously given a month's warning. It was mentioned between them that she had not completed her year by one week, but she received the whole year's wages: Held a dissolution.

2. The Service under the Contract.

Rule for deciding the fact of dissolution.

The pauper was hired at four pounds wages, but the duration of the service was not mentioned; when he went into the service afterwards, as agreed, the master told him he had forgot to mention, that it was not the custom to hire for more than fifty-one weeks, and that he must therefore hire him again for that time, to which the pauper assented, and received fresh earnest. He remained in the service the fifty-one weeks, and received the four pounds: The sessions thought this a dissolution of the original contract, and the court adopted their finding.

of the year. The servant gave above a month's warning to quit at Old Michaelmas, which she had a right to do, and the mistress accepted the warning, and both parties acted upon it. And this, it appears, was in fact before the end of the year, whatever the servant might have supposed when she gave the warning. Now 'the rule,' which the Court has laid down as the test, whether the circumstances attending the departure of a servant before the end of a year amount to a dissolution of the contract, or only to a dispensation of the service, is 'whether the master has the power afterwards of compelling the continuance of the service; if he have not, there is an end of the contract; if he have, but choose to dispense with it, it is a dispensation.' If after this, any person had harboured the servant when the mistress desired her services, could she have maintained an action for it? Certainly not; and that is a fair test that the relation of master and servant had ceased to exist." Le Blanc, J. added, "The mistress accepted the notice not as being to quit at the end of the year, but as a month's warning." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Bottesford, 4 B. & C. 84; 6 D. & R. 99; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 24. J. Whitehead was removed from Bottesford to East Bridgeford. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was hired at the Bingham statutes, which happened about three weeks before Martinmas, 1818, to serve Huskisson of East Bridgeford as a servant in husbandry, for 4*l.*, and received 1*s.* earnest; but no time was mentioned. He was to go into the service about a week after Martinmas, at the regular time for husbandry servants to enter their places. He entered into the service a week after Martinmas, 1818; on the same day his master said to him, "It is not the custom to hire servants in this parish for more than fifty-one weeks, which I forgot to mention to you at the time I hired you at Bingham statutes, and therefore, if you have no objection, I must hire you afresh for fifty-one weeks, and give you another shilling for an earnest," when the pauper accepted of such earnest. The pauper was never out of Huskisson's service from the first moment he came upon the premises, and remained therein until the day after Martinmas, 1819, when he quitted his place, along with the other servants, having first received his wages of 4*l.* Abbott, C. J. "I think the sessions came to the right conclusion. I agree that there was originally a contract operating as a hiring for a year, but the service under it was a service commencing a week after Martinmas. It is stated that the pauper was hired three weeks before, but he was to go into the service a week after Martinmas. There is nothing to show that the service was to commence sooner. Certainly it was not to commence on the day the contract was made, for that was entered into three weeks before. If then it was a hiring for a year, the service to commence the week after Martinmas, it is clear that there has not been a service for a year. Did then the master dispense with the service for the last week, or was the original contract rescinded? The case states, that on the same day when the servant arrived at his master's house, the latter said to him, 'It is not the custom to hire servants in this parish for more than fifty-one weeks, which I forgot to mention to you, and therefore if you have no objection, I must hire you afresh for fifty one weeks, and give you another shilling for earnest;' when the pauper accepted the earnest. I consider that as a dissolution of the original contract, and the substitution of another. If this was a fraud, (although I have great difficulty in saying what is a fraudulent contract in this respect,) the sessions ought to have found fraud. They have not done so. I, perhaps, should not have interfered to set aside the decision of the sessions, if they had drawn a contrary conclusion, but I should not have been so well satisfied with it." Bayley, J. "I agree that there may be a dispensation at any period of the year; but whether there is a dispensation or not, is a question of fact for the sessions to decide. If there had been a hiring here for a year, to commence at Martinmas, and the contract had not been dissolved by the express consent of both parties, then the sessions might have drawn a conclusion different from what they have drawn. Suppose this to have been a hiring for a year, that might be dissolved. But still that was for the sessions to decide. If there was fraud in the case, that was for their decision. My own judgment is, that the sessions have drawn the right conclusion from the facts stated." Holroyd, J. "I think it cannot be taken, from the manner in which the case is stated, that this was originally a hiring from Martinmas. The latter part of the case removes all the doubt I had entertained as to whether this was to be considered as a hiring for a year, and a dispensation of the first week's service; for what afterwards takes place must be considered as a dissolution of the original contract with the consent of both parties." Littledale, J. concurred.

Rex v. Thistleton, 6 T. R. 185; 2 Bott, 339; 1 Nol. P. L. 420, 428, 463. The pauper was hired to Mr. Raworth, of Knawston, from Martinmas to Martinmas, and entered upon the service. Before the end of the year he went to Billesden statutes, and hired himself to Mr. Humphreys, of Billesden, to enter into his service on the 19th of October, if Mr. R. would let him come then, and if he was refused, he was then to come at the end of his year. The next day the pauper asked his master to let him go, who said he could not spare him; he must get a new servant first: some time after he hired a new servant, and then said, "I have got a new servant, you may go now; I have not work for you both." The master then paid him his whole wages, and he went away. This was about a fortnight before Martinmas, and he entered into his new service in three days. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The distinction between the different cases upon this subject seems to be this; if the pauper be absent from the service with the concurrence, remaining however subject to the control, of the master, he may acquire a settlement, because this only amounts to a dispensation with his service; but if the master has once parted with his control over the servant, there no settlement is gained; and the receiving of the whole year's wages does not make any difference. In this case the master had given up all control over the servant; he himself was instrumental in enabling the servant to make another contract with another master; and from what passed between those parties, it was evidently the intention of both that the pauper should become sui juris, and should be enabled to contract with another master. The cases, in which it has been determined that a settlement was gained, notwithstanding the servant was not in actual service during the whole year, proceeded on artificial reasoning, on a supposition that the relation of master and servant continued throughout the year. But that idea is inconsistent with what was done in this case; for if that relation had subsisted here, the master might have insisted on the pauper's returning into his service after the wages were paid: but he agreed not to insist on that when he parted with the servant. It is miscalling this a dispensation with the service; for upon the agreement to part, the pauper's liability to serve the first master ceased." Grose, J. "If we were to say that the service for the latter part of the year was service performed under the first master, we should determine that he was serving two masters at the same time, which would be contrary to the statute."

Rex v. Great Chilton, 5 T. R. 672; 2 Bott, 268; 1 Nol. P. L. 415, 447. The pauper was hired at Martinmas, by W. Grenwell, of Great Chilton, as a servant in husbandry for a year, commencing from Martinmas, (11th Nov.) his wages were to be about 8*l.* with meat and lodging, in his master's house. He entered upon his service at Martinmas, and resided in his master's house. In January following he married, but continued as a menial servant with Grenwell until May-day following. Some days before May-day, Grenwell and he agreed that he with his wife should go as a hind to reside on and manage another farm which Grenwell had in the same township; this second agreement was for a year from that May-day, and he was to have 5*s.* a week, the house to live in rent-free, and some other trifling perquisites, as persons in that capacity usually have. He served as a hind two years from that May-day, being all that time a married man. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This case appears to me not free from difficulty and doubt: but upon the whole, I think that the pauper gained a settlement in Great

2. The Service under the Contract.

If the master, at the servant's request, give him leave to go to another service, before the end of the year, though he pay him the full wages, it is nevertheless a dissolution.

During the service under a hiring for a year, a second agreement for another year, to commence immediately, at different wages, and for a different sort of service, is a dissolution, and not a mere variation of the first contract. (C. J. dissentiente.) (a)

Contract.*

Chilton. To Rex v. St. Giles's, Reading (ante, 407), I perfectly accede, but that cannot decide the present case. There the pauper was hired generally, which the law construes to be a hiring for a year, at a time when it was competent to him to acquire a settlement by hiring and service; he was then unmarried: when the year expired, there was an end of the contract; by continuing in service after that time, the court would infer a second hiring for another year: but at the end of the first year he was a married man, and was disabled from gaining a settlement by a service under a contract entered into at that time. But in the present case the pauper was unmarried when he made the first agreement; and though he married in the course of that year, it has been very properly admitted that that alone did not defeat his settlement, if he served out the remainder of the year under the original agreement made before his marriage. But it has been contended that that contract was dissolved. I admit, that if there were an end of the relation of master and servant when the second agreement was made, the pauper could not gain a settlement in Great Chilton, but I do not think that that was the case. An alteration, indeed, in the man's situation took place: perhaps it was more convenient for him to live with his wife in a separate house than to continue to live in his master's family, and therefore it was agreed that he should go to another farm of his master's in the same township. But that alone did not put an end to the former contract. If a master, who had kept house, and an establishment of servants, chose to break up housekeeping in the middle of the year, and to put his servants on board wages, that would not put an end to the relation between the master and his servants, nor defeat the settlements of the latter. Then it was objected that the servant's employment after his marriage was different from that under the original contract; but I cannot discover much difference, for under both agreements he was to serve in husbandry. And even if the nature of the service were varied, that would not defeat his settlement. A footman who was converted into a butler, would gain a settlement by completing a year's service, notwithstanding such a change in his station. In this case also there was a prolongation of the time of service, and he was to continue half a year beyond the period originally agreed upon; there was also an alteration of wages adapted to his change of situation: but I do not think that either of these circumstances affects the case. The whole question turns on this, whether or not there was a dissolution of the former contract? for if there were, the second agreement was made at a time when by law he was disabled from gaining a settlement by hiring and service. I speak with great diffidence on this case, understanding that the majority of the court are against my opinion. But it strikes me that there was no end of the relation of master and servant, even for a moment, during the whole time the latter continued in the service; and that as the first contract was not dissolved by the subsequent alteration of situation, the pauper gained a settlement in Great Chilton by serving more than a year under a yearly hiring entered into when he was an unmarried man. Rex v. Alton (ante, 407), warrants this opinion, though that indeed appears to be a more doubtful case than the present; because there, under the second agreement, the pauper was to work by the piece, which seems to imply a liberty either to work or not, as he pleased." Ashhurst, J. "At first I was inclined to think that the first contract was not absolutely dissolved, and that the second was merely a continuation and modification of it: but on further consideration, I am of opinion that the first contract was entirely put an end to by the second. This is very distinguishable from Rex v. Alton, for there the principal alteration was in the terms of the contract respecting wages, the servant was to be paid by the piece instead of by the year, whereas in this case there was a variation also in other circumstances. Under the first contract the pauper was to live in his master's house as part of his family, and was to receive the yearly wages of 8*l.* Under the new contract the terms were materially altered: the servant was to go into another farm of his master's, he was to receive weekly wages, and was to continue in service for a year from that time. After the second contract, if the master had wished to compel the servant to return to his own house, and to live in his family at the former wages, the latter might have resisted, on the ground of the second contract, which shows that the former one was abandoned, and that the pauper was not serving under it. Then if the second were a new contract, distinct from the former one, the services under the two cannot be coupled for the purpose of giving the pauper a settlement, because at the time of entering into the second he was married." Grose, J. "I agree to the Alton case; and here, if the original agreement had continued in force, the pauper would have gained a settlement by serving a year under it. But the question is, whether or not there was a dissolution of the service, and of the first contract? I cannot say that the service under the second contract was a service under the first, because, on comparing the two contracts together, it appears that there is a difference in the duration of the term, in the kind of service, and in the wages, the former of which is most material; and where two agreements are totally inconsistent, the second must operate as a dissolution of the first. By the first contract the pauper was hired for a year, to commence at Martinmas; he served under that till May following, when he made another agreement with his master for another year, to commence at that day. Suppose at the end of the first year the servant had said that he would no longer continue in his master's service, for that he had been serving under the first agreement only, and was not bound to serve under the second; there is no doubt but that the master might have compelled him to serve until the May following, by virtue of the second agreement. This shows that the second agreement put an end to the first. It is not necessary to lay so much stress on the two other instances of difference between the two contracts, the kind of service, and the quantum of wages; I rely most on the alteration of the term of service, which I think is decisive." Lawrence, J. "It seems to me that in those cases no question arises respecting the benefit of any particular settlement gained by the pauper, but that the question must be considered on the facts as between the two contending parishes, because if the pauper be not settled in one, the burthen of maintaining him and his family falls on the other; and therefore there can be no bias in favour of one or the other settlement. In order to gain a settlement by hiring and service, there must be a hiring for a year, and a service for a year; and the service for the last forty days must be performed under a contract of hiring entered into when the pauper was unmarried. Then the question in the present case is, whether or not there was a dissolution of the first contract? and not whether there was a discontinuance of the service; for in Rex v. St Giles's, Reading, the pauper continued all the time in the master's service; and there is a difference in this respect, whether the contract be put an end to by flux of time, or by agreement. The only way in which it can be considered that the pauper gained a settlement in Great Chilton, is by treating the second as a prolongation of the original contract; and it has been argued that by the second agreement the pauper was to serve until the end of the then current year, and for six months longer. But it strikes me that this is not the fair construction of the second agreement; at the end of the first six months' service, the pauper did not agree to serve for six months after the end of that year, but for a year to commence at the time of the second agreement. On the whole, it appears to me that the second contract was distinct from the former one, and put an end to it, because the second was inconsistent with it; so that the pauper gained no settlement in Great Chilton, because the service for the last forty days was not performed under a yearly hiring entered into when he was unmarried." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Overnorton, 15 East, 347. Order of removal from Overnorton to Great Rollright, discharged. Case:—On Monday after Michaelmas-day, the 17th of October, 1803, W. Bickerstaffe, the pauper, was hired to serve Jolly of Overnorton, for the year, at 9s. 6d. per week. He served under that hiring, and received the 9s. 6d. every week, either on the Saturday or the Monday following, till the 13th of October, on which day, for the last time, he received 9s. 6d. Three or four days previous to the 13th of October, he had a conversation with his master, and agreed to serve him for another year, at 10s. a-week. On the 20th of October, he received 10s., concerning which no explanation took place at the time, but the pauper said in evidence that he received it under the new hiring. He continued in the service all that year, and seven weeks after. He was married eight weeks after the first hiring. Mackanness contended that the hiring at so much a-week for the year, must mean the current year, i. e. 1803. [But the court said, that the justices were to determine what year was meant, and they had considered that it was for the space of a year from the hiring.] He then contended that the first hiring was put an end to on the 13th of October before that year was expired, and then the pauper, being married, could not gain a settlement under the second hiring. Grose, J. "Whatever the decisions might originally have been upon the construction of the statute, the rule of law is now inveterate, that if the justices find a hiring for a year, and a continued service for a year, though not under the same hiring, that is decisive to give a settlement." Le Blanc, J. "The sessions would have done better not to have found any special case, for strictly speaking it is a question of fact, whether the first contract was intended to be for the space of a year, or only to the end of the current year. But if they thought it was only to enure to the end of the current year, they would have come to a different decision. But however equivocal the expression might have been at first, when the master and servant, on the 13th of October in the following year, spoke of a contract for another year, that showed that they had originally intended a yearly hiring. Then there was clearly a continued service of the same description for a year." Bayley, J. "The sessions were the proper judges to draw the conclusion as to whether the original contract was dissolved before the end of the year; and I cannot say they have done wrong. There was no reason for dissolving it." Order of sessions confirmed. (a)

The master of a yearly servant, twenty-eight days before the end of the year, gave up his business and discharged the servant, paying him his full wages, and the servant took his wages, left the house, and worked with another person, with the master's knowledge, during the twenty-eight days: Held, a dissolution of the contract.

Rex v. Bray, 3 M. & S. 20. Removal from Bray to Great Marlow, order quashed. Case:—John Butler, the pauper, at Old Michaelmas, 1806, hired himself at yearly wages for a year to Hussey, of Cookham, as a servant in husbandry, and entered upon his service at that time. He lived with Hussey until twenty-eight days before the expiration of the year, at which time Hussey gave up his farming business, sold his stock, and discharged the pauper, and all the other servants in husbandry, paying them their full wages; and he told the pauper and the other servants that they might go where they liked. The pauper accepted his wages, took his clothes and left Hussey's house, and worked with another person, with Hussey's knowledge, during the twenty-eight days. Rex v. St. Bartholomew, Rex v. St. Andrew, Holborn, and Rex v. St. Mary, Lambeth, were cited. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "We take it that the sessions held this to be a dispensation; but then a question occurs, why did they so? What is to be the limit to this doctrine of dispensation if it is to be carried thus far? It should seem as if the master might, at the end of a day, or a fraction of a day, if he has no longer occasion for his servant, send him away, and thereby dispense with the whole year's service. But is not that absurd? Where, indeed, the relation of master and servant continues, but the master foregoes the benefit of actual service for part of the time, that has been held a dispensation; but here is every thing which can be predicated of a dissolution of the contract, for the master paid off and discharged the pauper with the rest of his servants, and the pauper left the house, and engaged himself with another master during the remainder of the year. I cannot but say that I am sorry for some of the cases on this subject, which have created such an artificial system: I think that not only

(a) This case has been confirmed, but the true principle is that there was no dissolution of the first contract, and that the pauper served a year, i. e. till the 17th of October, 1804, under the first hiring. Grose, J.'s, observation cannot be supported in reference to this case, for if all the service was not under the same, i. e. the first hiring, a service under the second hiring, made when the pauper was married, could not connect with the former service.

the decision of the sessions in this case is unreasonable, but that several of the cases on which it professes to stand are unreasonable also." Le Blanc, J. "Rex v. Bartholomew was under special circumstances. Here the pauper, after quitting the service of Hussey, worked under a distinct engagement; and though not such an engagement as would gain him a settlement, still it was inconsistent with the continuance of his former contract." Bayley, J. "The moment the pauper quitted the service he was to be at full liberty to contract a new relation, and he did so." Dampier, J. "The master pays him his wages, and tells him to go whither he liked, and the pauper accepts his wages, and contracts a new relation during the time." Order of sessions quashed.

2. The Service under the Contract.

Rex v. Mildenhall, 12 East, 482. Removal from Wilcot to Mildenhall. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, W. Dowling, at Michaelmas, 1803, agreed with J. Stratton, of Wilcot, to serve him for a twelvemonth, at 6s. per week in the winter, and 6s. 6d. in the summer, and a certain allowance besides. He went into the service at Old Michaelmas, and served his master till July, within eleven weeks of the expiration of the year. The pauper not behaving as he ought, his master and he had a dispute, in consequence of which the pauper asked his master to discharge him: but he answered he would not unless the pauper would get another man to stand in his stead. The pauper got W. Racey, to whom he agreed to give a guinea and a half out of his own pocket, to take his place, besides his wages, which were to be paid to him by Stratton. By the evidence of the pauper it appeared that when he brought Racey to his master, the master said, "If this man does any otherwise than well, I can send for you, and make you serve your time out;" to which the pauper replied, "Very well." (a) On the contrary, the master stated in evidence that "he did not recollect having said to the pauper that he should expect him to return; and that it was not his intention to have him back; and that they parted on bad terms." The guinea and a half was paid by the pauper to R. at the time he entered the service; and R. also served out the remainder of the year with Stratton, and received the wages from him for that time. The pauper during the remainder of the year hired himself as a day-labourer, and R. continued to serve S. under a new agreement till the end of the year. Bayley, J., asked "If there was any case where the pauper had been held to gain a settlement by hiring and service, where, after leaving his master during part of the year, he actually hired himself to another?" Upon which Rex v. Goodnestone, (ante, 419), was quoted; and Lord Ellenborough then said, "That was an express case of dispensation of service, and the servant might have returned within the year;" and he added, "that there were reasonable grounds here to warrant the conclusion which the sessions had drawn, that this was a dissolution." His lordship also said, (in reply to the argument that the sessions had admitted illegal evidence in receiving the account of the master's intentions,) "what follows is not giving evidence of the master's intentions, but is merely stated by the master in confirmation of his accuracy in not recollecting what the pauper had stated him to have said, as if the master had said, what confirms me in supposing that no such conversation passed, is, that he had no intention to take the pauper back again. The sessions evidently understood the master as contradicting the pauper, and can we say they did wrong? Though it is said that the pauper might have returned at a day's notice, I do not think that varies the case." Grose, J. "The pauper, upon a quarrel with his master, applied for his discharge: the master refused, unless upon condition that the pauper procured another person to serve in his stead: and the pauper complied with the condition. And then the sessions, contrasting the master's evidence with the pauper's, have concluded that he was discharged, and the contract dissolved, and we cannot quarrel with that conclusion which it was competent for them to draw." Le Blanc, J.

Where a servant, eleven weeks before the end of his year, in order to procure a discharge from his master, engages a man to supply his place, and hires himself to another for the remainder of the year: It was held to be a dissolution.

(a) It would seem that this fact was not credited, and not that it was immaterial; for by Rex v. Maidstone, the power to recal the servant seems a criterion of dispensation.

2. The Service under the Contract.

If a master insist upon turning his servant away, and lay down his wages then due, which the servant takes up and then goes away: it is a dissolution, and the contract cannot be set up again by the servant afterwards returning at the request of his master.

If the servant, nine days before the year is out, goes on a Sunday morning to get another place when his year should be up, and does not return till Tuesday morning, when the master pays him his wages to that time, and will not let him stay out the year, it is a dissolution.

"Unless the court saw clearly that the sessions had concluded wrongly, they would not reverse that conclusion." Bayley, J., concurred. Order confirmed.

Rex v. Gresham, 1 T. R. 101; 2 Bott, 326; 1 Nol. P. L. 417. William Thompson hired himself for a year, at the wages of 3*l.*, to Mr. Cremer, of Beeston Regis; he entered upon his service, and continued therein for about a quarter of a year; and upon some dispute between him and his master, his master insisted upon turning him away, and threw down 15*s.*, which the pauper took up, and went away to his father's house, where he continued for six days, during which time he looked upon himself as a free man: the pauper then returned at the request of his master, and continued in the service to the end of the year, when he received 45*s.*, being the remainder of his wages agreed for at the hiring. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The absence of a servant from his master's service is an equivocal act, and therefore may be explained by other circumstances; but if it appears that the contract has been once dissolved, it cannot be set up by a new agreement. In this case the contract was absolutely dissolved: the master insists upon turning him away, and pays him down all his wages that were due; the consent on the other side is by taking the money up: then how does he come back again? It is upon the request of the master: there is nothing by which the absence can be explained. The meaning of purging an absence is where the act itself is doubtful." See Rex v. St. Philip in Birmingham, and Rex v. Hardhorn with Newton, ante, 414.

Rex v. Clayhydon, 4 T. R. 100; 2 Bott, 459. The pauper agreed with W. Hodges, in Dunkeswale, for a year, at 2*l.* 15*s.*, and served till nine days before the end of the year, when on a Sunday morning he went away in order to get another place when his year should be up, without mentioning it to his master; he returned on the Tuesday following about six o'clock in the morning, when he asked his master what work he should go about; the master told him he might go and serve the master he had worked for the day before. He saw his master about an hour afterwards, who then paid him his wages up to that time only. No conversation passed. He then went away, and did not afterwards return: he wished to have staid out the year, but his master would not let him. The sessions quashed the order of removal from Clayhydon, being, it would seem, of opinion, that this was a service in Dunkeswale. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is now too late to say that a constructive service will not confer a settlement, though I very much doubt whether a greater certainty on this subject would not have been attained by attending strictly to the words of the act; however, in order to preserve an uniformity of decisions, we must adopt the construction which has so frequently been put upon it. But I do not know that it ever has been decided that a settlement was obtained, unless by construction the relation between master and servant continued during the whole year. Rex v. Islip, and Rex v. Maddington, (ante, pp. 410 & 413,) which have been relied on, do not govern the present. In the former, the servant did not return until after the expiration of the year, and the facts of that case left the question open, whether or not the relation between the parties subsisted during the whole year? The court there thought that the master improperly refused his consent, and that though the servant was not in the actual discharge of his duty in his master's house, yet as he was liable to be called into his master's service during the remainder of the year, that he was constructively in that service down to the end of the year. But the present case differs from that; because, during the continuance of a year a further act was done: when the servant returned after his absence the master not only found fault with him, but refused to take him again into his service; it is true that the servant wished to continue, but both parties did that which put an end to the contract; the one paid, and the other received the wages. After that period the servant was no longer under the control of the master. In Rex v. Islip the servant was under the master's control during the whole year: he was liable to be called into the master's service whenever the master thought proper; but here the relation between the master and servant was rescinded before the end of the year by the act of both parties; then it is impossible to say that the pauper was constructively in the service after that time. So in the case of Rex v. Maddington, though the servant left the service three weeks before the end of the year, and went to his friend, because he was not able to perform his service, yet there was no act done during the year to put an end to the contract: afterwards, indeed, when the master paid the wages, he deducted a part of them; but he could not by an act ex post facto deprive the servant of the benefit to which he was before entitled. But Rex v. Gresham (ante, 434), is extremely like the present; there the court held, that by the act of accepting the wages, the servant agreed to put an end to the contract. I am therefore of opinion that there could be no constructive service in this case, when the parties themselves, by mutual consent, put an end to the relation of master and servant within the year." Grose, J. "It is clear, that at the time the wages were paid, both parties consented to put an end to the contract, for it is stated no conversation passed at the time; and though the servant may have wished to stay till the end of his year, he did not communicate that wish to his master. The other fact stated, that he accepted a sum short of the whole year's wages, which shows that it was understood by both that he intended to dissolve the contract." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Seagrave, Cald. 247; 2 Bott, 321. The pauper was hired from Old Martinmas to Old Martinmas. On September 25th he told his master he was going to be married; his master made no answer; he went on Saturday and was married: upon his return he had no intention of quitting his service; the master said he would not employ him any longer; he said he would go if he would pay him his year's wages; the master refused, and said he would only pay him for the time he had served, and asked him if he would take his wages, or go before a justice? his master set out about his business to his farm, when the pauper called him back, and said he would take the money for the time he had served, and that he parted with his own consent." The court thought that the last words of the case were so clear and unequivocal a dissolution of the contract, that they would not permit it to be argued.

Rex v. Roxby, 5 M. & R. 40; 10 B. & C. 51. Order of removal of R. Farmery, &c. from Roxby to Winterton, quashed. Case:—The pauper was hired before Old May day, 1819, (13th of May,) to serve J. B. in Winterton, from the said Old May day to Old May day, 1820, as a servant in husbandry, at 16 pounds wages. He served till the 11th of May, 1820, when, wishing to visit his friends fifteen miles distant, and to attend some statutes on the 12th of May on the way there, and avoid returning back to his master, he requested his master's permission to go altogether: and they settled the pauper's wages, and part was deducted for the time he had to serve. The pauper slept at his master's house, with his permission, on the evening of the 11th of May, and finally left his master's house on the 11th. 1820 was leap-year. The sessions considered this a dissolution of the contract. Lord Tenterden. "The question whether this was a dissolution or dispensation was for the sessions, and they have decided it. I should not be disposed to interfere with their judgment, even if I thought it was wrong, which I do not." Order of sessions confirmed. As to the other point in this case, see ante, 363.

Rex v. Grantham, 3 T. R. 754. Read, the pauper, was hired a fortnight after Martinmas, 1784, by N. Leadenham, of Allington, for a year, and entered upon his service, and continued about six weeks, when, with his master's leave, he went to assist his father who was ill, where he stayed thirteen weeks, when he returned, in consequence of a warrant obtained against him by his master, into his service under the original contract, and continued therein until Sunday evening, three days before the end of the year, when his master came home in liquor, and abused him, and threw him down, and afterwards turned him out of doors. The pauper slept at his father's that night, and the next morning his master would have had him return to his service, and stay out the year, but he refused to go again, and threatened that, unless he paid him the whole of his wages, he would complain of the ill usage he had received to a magistrate. The master then

2. The Service under the Contract.

If a servant consent to quit, and take the wages for the time he had served, it is a dissolution.

Settling wages the day before the year ended, is a dissolution: the pauper by his master's permission slept that night at his house.

If a servant be turned out of doors by his master, and refuse to return, and receive his full wages, and depart, contrary to the express request of his master, it is a dissolution.

2. The Service under the Contract.

agreed to pay him his full year's wages, deducting for the thirteen weeks he was with his father; which he took, and then left his service, contrary to the express request of his master. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The circumstance stated in the case, that this transaction happened only three days before the end of the year, might have led us at first to suppose there was some fraud intended on the part of the master; but none is stated. It has been rightly said, that an actual service is not necessary, for that a constructive service is sufficient. But the question here is, Whether we can say that there was a constructive service for the whole year? and whether the relation of master and servant subsisted during that time? If the absence be for a reasonable cause, it is immaterial whether that absence be at the beginning, the middle, or at the end of the year. And it has been argued that this was an absence for a reasonable cause, on account of the ill treatment of the master; but here there was no animus revertendi, which distinguishes the present from the class of cases alluded to. When the servant was ill used, though he could not have left the service without his master's consent, or without applying to a magistrate to be discharged on that account, yet the master did consent to the servant's leaving him, and both parties agreed to put an end to the contract. If the master had afterwards complained of the pauper's not serving him for those three days, the latter might have answered him by saying that the contract was dissolved. And if its being absolutely put an end to only three days before the expiration of the year will not defeat the settlement, what line can be drawn with respect to the time of the service which is necessary to give a settlement? If one day or three days may be dispensed with, any other time may be equally so. In some cases, indeed, where it has been equivocal what the transaction really was, and the servant has paused and considered whether he would absolutely quit the service or not, other circumstances have been admitted to explain the absence; but here was no suspense, no locus penitentiae; for both master and servant agreed to put an end to the service." Ashhurst, J. "Though the master at length consented to give the servant his full wages, that was not intended to operate as a dispensation with the remainder of the service, but as a redemption of his credit."

Where upon the master ill treating the servant she requires to be dismissed, and he pays her the year's wages, and tells her she may serve the rest of her time, but she refuses, it is a dissolution.

Rex v. Upwell, 7 T. R. 438. Sarah Brown, the pauper, was hired at Michaelmas for a year, and continued in the service until within fifteen days before the next Michaelmas, when her master kicked and beat her: she complained to her father of this ill treatment, and required her master to dismiss her from his service, under a threat of applying to a magistrate for redress; her master then paid her the whole of her wages, and told her she might serve the remainder of the year, but she refused so to do, and immediately left the service. When this case was called on the court said there was no question in it, for it must be considered as an agreement by both parties to put an end to the contract several days before the end of the year, and consequently that the pauper had gained no settlement, and that Rex v. Grantham (ante, 435) was decisive of the present.

Rex v. Corsham, 2 East, 303. Removal from Kington St. Michael to Corsham. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's husband was hired by Mr. Dalmer of Corsham, at four guineas per annum, with whom he continued to serve within a fortnight or three weeks of the expiration of the year, when, upon a dispute between him and his master, he, in consequence of his master's kicking him, would not stay, but went to his father's house. In the following week, and before the end of the year, he returned with his father to Dalmer's house, and received the whole of his wages, and 2s. 6d. over for himself: his master asked him to stay, but he refused, and went back to his father's house. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The cases of Rex v. Grantham (ante, 435), and Rex v. Upwell (supra), have decided this. In both there was a payment by the master of the whole year's wages, and a departure from the service before the end of the year against the will of the master; and in both the court held no settlement was gained. There is nothing material to distinguish this case from those, and it is better to abide by them. It is indeed a question of fact, but of fact mixed with law, and the circumstances are stated that we may draw the proper legal conclusion." Grose, J. "The payment of the whole year's wages was to prevent an action, and argues no consent to dispense with the service.

Rex v. King's Pion, 4 East, 351. The pauper, Alice Wheale, was hired to Mr. Davies, of King's Pyon, to serve him from Old May day, 1800, to Old May day following. At the end of eight months she had a dispute with her master about some burnt stockings, and he dismissed her from his service. She applied to a magistrate; and instances of neglect were stated, but denied; she was desirous of continuing in her service, but her master refused; and the magistrate ordered her master to take her back into his service, or pay her the whole of her wages; he refused to take her again, but paid her the whole of her money, but not some wool which he had stipulated to give her as part of her wages, if she behaved well. After receiving her wages, she offered herself as a servant to several persons. The sessions thought this was a dispensation. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "We are not called upon to say whether the magistrate had or had not a right to discharge the servant from her service; it is enough that he proposed an option to the master to take the servant back or pay her the whole of her wages. The master refused to take her back, but agreed to pay the whole wages, and did pay them; and the servant showed her assent to the dissolution of the contract by taking the wages, and offering her services to other persons. Both parties gave the magistrate a power of dissolving the contract, by showing their assent to what he directed in that respect. Then, after all this, could the master or servant have maintained an action against each other, the one for not performing the remainder of the service, the other for not employing her during that time? This is the true question to be considered. I should not wish to carry the idea of dispensation further than it has already been carried, which seems to me to be stretched as far as ingenuity could go upon the false idea that a servant has a right to acquire in gaining a settlement. I do not mean to disturb any of the cases which have been already decided; but I am not inclined to carry the decisions further still from the plain words of the act of 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30." Lawrence, J. "Here is nothing like an abiding in the service for a year." He then referred to Lord Kenyon's judgment in Rex v. Thistleton (ante, 429), and Rex v. St. Peter's Mancroft (ante, 424), and added, "If the pauper be absent with the concurrence of the master, it is a dispensation; but if the master cannot resume the right to the pauper's service, it is a dissolution." Le Blanc, J. agreed.

Rex v. Maidstone, 12 East, 550. Removal of the wife of G. Langridge, who had deserted her, from Maidstone to Thurnham. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper's husband, at Michaelmas, 1797, hired himself at twelve guineas for a year to S. T., of Thurnham, to serve him as a waggoner, and entered upon his service, and continued in it till October 8, 1798, on which day he was married to the pauper, and his master consented to his leaving the service, and paid him his wages. Nothing was subtracted on account of his leaving his master on the 8th of October. On the 9th of October he hired himself to and went into the service of one Stone. Michaelmas day fell on the 10th of October in the years 1797 and 1798. Lord Ellenborough, during the argument, said, "The case states that the master consented to the servant leaving his service; then upon that statement can we say there is a dispensation?" He afterwards added, "this is clearly a case of dissolution; and that he would not extend the doctrine of dispensation any further than it had already gone." That here "the master consented to his servant's leaving his service," and that there could not be a stronger plea than this by the servant in an action against him by his master for deserting his service." Then he said, "though the opinion of parties is not to be pressed, yet their acts are material, upon the question of dispensation or dissolution." And "here it is stated that after L. had left his first master's service on the 8th, he went on the following day, and which was the day before Michaelmas day, and hired himself into the service of a new master. Here then is an express renunciation on the part of the master of his rights over the servant two days before the end of the year; and the servant's assent to this is signified by his departure from the service, and contracting the next day an obligation to another master, into whose service he entered immediately, subject to all the rights of the new master over his service. How then can I say, in the words of the statute of W., that there was a continuing and abiding by the servant in the same service during the space of one whole year, when it appears that that period of service was abridged by the last two days of the year?" Grose, J. agreed. Le Blanc, J. "I think the sessions would have been well grounded in finding as a fact, that this was a dispensation of the service on the part of the master, and not a dissolution of the contract; for, according to the cases, it is always a question for the sessions to decide, whether the consent of the master to the servant's leaving his service a few days before the end of the year, for a particular purpose, but paying him his whole year's wages, be a dispensation of the service for the remainder of the year, or a dissolution of the contract? Here the servant wanted to marry, and one entire day before the end of the year the master gave him leave to marry and go away from his service. It was a fair and reasonable conclusion to draw, that if the servant wished to go away one day before the end of his service for the purpose of marrying, the master would have no objection to dispense with his service, and give him a holiday for one day; for the service would have ended on the 9th. But the sessions not choosing to draw this conclusion themselves, which I think they might have done, send the case to us upon the dry facts stated, and have not found that the master did consent to give his servant a holiday, and to dispense with his service for the remaining day of the year, but merely state as a fact, that the master consented to his leaving his service. Under these circumstances I cannot say that the sessions have done wrong, though I think they might have drawn a different conclusion." Bayley, J. said, "The sessions had done right. In order to constitute a case of dispensation, I think the master should have power to recal the servant to his service all through the year; but where the master agrees generally to let the servant go away from his service, without reserving to himself the right of recalling him throughout the whole year, I think that puts an end to the contract of service altogether."

2. The Service under the Contract.

A master refused to take his servant back, and the servant took her wages, and offering herself to others as a servant, it was held a dissolution.

Master consents to servant's leaving his service one day before the end of his year, pays him his full wages, and the servant takes another place: Held, a dissolution.

The master insisting upon it, the servant left his master's house, and afterwards asks a magistrate's order to be received again, or paid his whole wages, and afterwards enters another service, it is a dissolution.

Rex v. Leigh, 7 East, 539. John Brazier hired himself on the 31st March, 1795, as a servant in husbandry for a year to S. Jones, of Lulsley, for 6*l.* 10*s.* He resided at L. in J.'s service till March 25th, 1796, upon which day, by his master's leave, he went to the mop, a meeting for hiring servants, to seek a new service for the ensuing year. He returned to his master's at three o'clock in the morning of the 26th of March, with some ribbons in his hat. In the course of that morning his master came to him and observed, "He supposed masters were scarce at the mop, and that he had enlisted for a soldier, and told the pauper he should stop no longer in his service." The pauper told his master he had not enlisted (which was the fact), and that he wished to stop his year out. But the master said he would not keep the pauper any longer in his service, and at the same time offered the pauper something less than 6*l.* 10*s.* as wages, which he refused to accept. The pauper said he would have accepted the full year's wages if then tendered to him by his master, but that he had rather have staid out his year. The pauper left his master's house immediately in consequence, and never returned to it. On the 27th of March, a summons having been taken out by the pauper, he and his master appeared before a justice, and the pauper applied to him to direct his master either to receive him into his service for the remainder of the year, or to pay him his whole year's wages; the magistrate verbally directed 2*s.* 6*d.* to be deducted from the year's wages and retained by the master. On the same day the pauper hired himself to and went into the service of a Mr. Smith. About a week after he went to Jones for his wages, who paid the full sum of 6*l.* 10*s.* Jones some days after applied for a return of the half-crown directed by the magistrate to be deducted, but it was never returned to him. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "How can there be said to have been a constant refusal of the servant to put an end to the contract, when he actually entered into another service before the time when his first contract would have expired. That is an insuperable difficulty. His not receiving his wages before the year was out did not vary the case, for he would have received them at any time, if offered. Rex v. Pyon (ante, 437), is almost in terms the same." Le Blanc, J. added, "If there was any fraud the magistrate must have been party to it."

Discharge by a justice.

Rex v. North Basham, 2 Bott, 323; Cald. 566; 1 Nol. P. L. 412, 413, 431. The pauper, in order to avoid a settlement in East Basham, having three days and a half before the end of the year married a female servant big with child by him, went with his master before a justice, to be by him discharged from his service. The master was willing that the pauper should be settled in his parish, and said so before the justice; and the justice, after hearing both parties, discharged the pauper from his service. The master paid him his wages, all but for the three days and a half. And Lord Mansfield, C. J. said, "This was a discharge before a justice, and it certainly was not fraudulent on the part of the master, for he had no objection to the settlement. It was a solemn discharge by the consent of both parties, and as such, a dissolution."

A female servant may be discharged by her master for being pregnant, and thereby loses her settlement.

Rex v. Brampton, Cald. 11; 2 Bott, 444; 1 Nol. P. L. 385, 435. Hannah Wright was removed from Ashover to Brampton. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper hired herself to Mr. Langsdon for a year, and served till within three weeks of the end of the year, when her master discovering her to be with child, turned her away, and paid her her year's wages, and half-a-crown over; whereupon she went to her father's at Ashover, from whence she was removed; she was willing to have staid her year out if she might; but that it was not material to her, as she had received her whole year's wages, and not being half gone with child, she hoped she could have done her work to the end of the year. The case having been argued, Lord Mansfield, C. J. said, "The 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, is an explanatory law, and must not be carried beyond the words by construction. It declares that there must be a hiring for a year, and a continuance for a year in that service to gain a settlement. With respect to the hiring in conformity to the nature and object of the act, the court has been critical and exact; but service, from the nature of the thing, admits often of questions upon the circumstances; as, whether the absence was with leave, from sickness, &c.? But these questions have always been brought to this point, whether the contract was put an end to within the year? This cannot be done by dismissal of the servant without good and sufficient cause. In Rex v. Castlechurch (ante, 424), there was a discontinuance by agreement, and the contract therefore determined; in such case the payment of the full wages, which might be mere benevolence, could make no difference. The question then is, is this contract dissolved within the year? The answer depends upon this, Has the master done right or wrong in discharging his servant for this cause? I think he did not do wrong. The marginal note cited from 18 Vin. Abr. 459, whatever degree of authority it may be entitled to, is well warranted in principle. If the master agrees to the contract's going on, the overseers, it is true, shall not take her away because she is with child; but shall the master therefore be bound to keep her in his house? To do so would be contra bonos mores; and, in a family where there are young persons, both scandalous and dangerous. Where a servant's absence is said to be purged (which is an improper expression) by receiving him again, the receiving only explains and shows the nature of the absence; the consequence of it indeed is, that such reception must generally be considered as amounting to a dispensation, and thereby subjects the master to the payment of the whole wages. But the effect of a positive act of the master, i. e. the dismissal of his servant under a criminal charge, shall never be done away by an implication arising from the payment of the whole wages." Willes, J. "This case differs from Rex v. Richmond (ante, 418), nor is it like Rex v. Islip (ante, 410), where the cause of the discharge was not reasonable. Here, if the master had daughters, it would not be fit that he should keep such a servant; though I think he could not avail himself of the authority of a magistrate; the jurisdiction of the justices being confined to cases in husbandry." Ashhurst, J. Same opinion. Orders affirmed. Rex v. Marlborough, 2 Bott, 423, is to the same effect.

In Rex v. Welford, 2 Bott, 446; 1 Nol. P. L. 439; where the like decision was made, it is added that the pauper, a man-servant, could not be discharged from his service, on account of a supposed criminal intimacy with a female servant in the same family. Secus, if the criminality had really existed. See tit. "Servants," Vol. V.

Rex v. Westmeon, Cald. 129; 2 Bott, 447; 1 Nol. P. L. 440. Robert White was hired on 11th October, 1779, to John Gibbs, for a year; he entered on the same day, and continued in his service till the 6th October following, when he was apprehended by a warrant, being charged with being the father of a bastard child, then six months old: he was carried to an inn, and kept in custody by the parish officers till the 10th October; his master, on 6th October, settled with him at the inn, saying, that he might not see him again, and deducted 1s. out of his wages, on account of his not serving the whole year; "though he said he had no objection to the pauper's gaining a settlement, yet perhaps the other farmers might:" he did not in any other manner assent to or dissent from the pauper's absence: nor did the pauper, after his being so taken, return to his said service. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "It is not necessary to enter into the question how far this is a crime, because the master has not discharged the pauper upon that ground: that it is wrong and an offence no man will deny; but whether to be animadverted upon both by the ecclesiastical and common law, is not material here: to be sure, it was not punishable as a crime at common law; and the statutes seem only to go to the punishment of the parents for the purpose of securing an indemnity to the parish. But here this offence is not assigned as the reason for discharging the servant; and if it were, I have no difficulty to say, that I think a master hiring a servant after an offence committed, and that not in his own house, shall not at the close of the year discharge him under this pretence: it is not a debauching of his servant, or turning his house as it were into a brothel. I do not go on that ground, nor upon the consent or implied agreement to go before the end of the year, for there was none: it was against the intention of both parties that it should affect the settlement; and if the case were to go upon that, it ought to be returned to the sessions to have that fact stated; there was no fraud intended, because there was no agreement; nor did the master either mean to prevent or promote the settlement; but he deducts a something to leave that question open, which it was the object of other persons who were interested to have discussed. The true point then is, supposing no wages paid and no agreement, here are four days wanting in the service, and it is by means of his own act that he becomes incapable of completing it. His conduct is an offence against morality and the laws, in what jurisdiction soever those laws are administered; and the consequences of it are equivalent to a wilful absence: I therefore think he did not gain a settlement: it is well put, that had an action been brought for his wages, he could not have recovered for these four days."

Rex v. North Cray, 2 Bott, 450; Cald. 562; 4 Doug. 243. The pauper, who was absent nine days before the expiration of his service under a yearly hiring, was charged on oath with being the father of a bastard child not then actually born: he was apprehended by warrant, and committed for want of security, October 11th; the last day of his year he gave a bond of indemnity to North Cray; his master during all this time was one of the overseers; the pauper was discharged from prison by an order of magistracy, and the master paid him all his wages, except for the time of his imprisonment. Lord Mansfield said, "There was no evidence of the master's consent." And by the court, "There is no actual service, and the pauper was absent through his own criminal act." (See remarks by Taunton, J. in Rex v. Coningsby, ante, 420.)

The servant, to avoid an order of bastardy, absconds with his master's privity. In nine days he returns and agrees to work with his master again, and at the end of the year

Rex v. East Kennett, 2 Bott, 451; Cald. 562; 1 Nol. P. L. 443. The pauper was serving under a yearly hiring from Michaelmas, at 7*l.*, and hearing in May following that there was a warrant out against him for getting a bastard child, told his master he must be off, and asked him for money to go off with; his master gave him three guineas and a half; he ran away, leaving some clothes and his threshing tackle; two or three days after, he was taken up, and obliged to marry the woman. After nine days' absence he returned to his master's house for his clothes, &c.: the master said to him, "Where are you going?" The pauper answered, "I do not know;" upon which the master said, "You may as well work for me again as any other." The pauper agreed, and continued to work there without any fresh agreement, and at the expiration received, including the 3*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* his 7*l.* wages, all but half-a-crown, which the master deducted for his absence. The pauper, when he ran away, never thought of going back to him, but considered himself discharged. Lord Mansfield, C. J., adverting to the concluding part of the case, said, "It showed the fact, though it did not alter the law. The servant desires to be off. How off? His service. He received his wages, and if not the whole, it was on account. He goes back, not on the old contract, but for his clothes, and a new agreement takes place. No settlement was gained."

In Rex v. Kenilworth, 2 T. R. 598, Buller, J., said, "The circumstance of the pauper's having been apprehended on a charge of bastardy, I lay out of the question; for it was competent to the master to receive him again after he was discharged out of custody, if he pleased."

Rex v. Preston, Burr. S. C. 69. A person served under a hiring his whole year within five days, and then left his master by consent, the parish officers having first given him two guineas to leave the parish, he being about to be married. The justice held this to be no settlement, and stated the case specially. It was objected that this departure was fraudulent. But by the Court: "The justices might upon evidence have examined into that point; and if they had thought that his departure was fraudulent, they would, without question, have stated it to have been so; that not being done, we cannot intend any fraud, nor that the party hath gained any settlement, it being agreed on all sides that he hath not served his year. But they decided the case upon a defect in the order."

receives the balance of the whole wages, minus 2*s.* 6*d.* for the absence. No settlement was gained thereby.

If fraud be not found by the sessions, the Court will not act upon such an imputation.

3. THE PLACE IN WHICH THE SETTLEMENT IS ACQUIRED. (a)

Although the law requires a hiring for a year, and a service for a year, yet a residence for forty days in any particular parish or place, during such hiring and service, will complete the settlement. But as a servant may during a hiring and service for a year reside forty days in several different parishes, it is held that the settlement will be in that parish where he last completes a forty days' residence.

However, less than forty days' residence in a parish will not gain a settlement, as was held in Goring v. Moltsworth, Sess. Ca. 327; Sett. & Rem. 219; 1 Barnard. 436; 1 Nol. P. L. 423; where a person hired for a year, and who served the year with a master living at Goring, and who kept a boat, which navigated from Goring to London, but the servant was not forty days in the whole year at Goring, but served out the year on board the boat. By the Court: "This was no settlement at Goring."

It is not necessary that the forty days should be continuous; Greenwich v. Longdon, Burr. S. C. 243; 2 Bott, 398. George Wall was hired and served for a year as a livery servant to Saunderson, commander of a yacht, who had a house and family at Greenwich, and resided there when not on the king's service. His master made frequent voyages to Holland, and he always attended him, and he was never forty days together at Greenwich, but during his service he was there forty days at different times. By the Court: "It need not be forty days altogether; it is sufficient if within the year he reside forty days in the whole."

Rex v. Denham, 1 M. & Sel. 221. Order confirmed by the sessions for the removal of Charles Tranter. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. delivered the judgment. "The question was, whether it was necessary there should be forty days' residence within the compass of a year, or whether, if the service were for several years uninterruptedly, a residence of forty days within those several years would be sufficient? The facts were these; the pauper was hired for a year to Smith, and served that year; at the expiration of which he was hired to him for another year, and served half of it; and during that year and a half he was resident in B. for forty days, but he did not reside in B. for forty days either within the first year or within the half year, nor (as was admitted) within any one period of a year whilst he continued with Smith. The sessions were of opinion, that this residence was not sufficient, and we think their opinion right. By 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, poor persons coming to settle in any parish, if likely to be chargeable to the parish, may be removed within forty days after they so come to settle as aforesaid; and it is under this act that forty days' residence is required. By 1 Jas. II. c. 17, s. 3, the forty days' continuance shall be accounted from the delivery of notice in writing to one of the officers of the parish to which such poor person removes: which notice, by 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, is to be read in church the next Lord's day, and registered in the book kept for the poor's accounts. By the same statute if any unmarried person, not having child or children, shall be lawfully 'hired into any parish or town for one year, such service shall be adjudged a good settlement therein, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as aforesaid.' And by 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 4, 'No person so hired as aforesaid shall be adjudged to have a good settlement in any such parish or township, unless such person shall continue and abide in the same service during the space of one whole year.' Upon these clauses settlements by hiring and service now stand. It has been decided that so as there is a hiring for a year, and service for a year, it is not necessary the whole of the service shall be under the yearly hiring, but service not under a yearly hiring may be connected with service under a yearly hiring, and both services if uninterrupted may be taken into the account: but it has never been decided that residences beyond the compass of a year can be connected; and as the legislature, by requiring a hiring for a year, and a continuance and abiding in the same service during the space of one whole year, seem to have contemplated something which was not to be complete in less than a year, but was to be complete within that period, we think we abide most closely by the words, and give effect to the most probable intention of the legislature, by holding that the whole residence must be within the compass of a single year. Suppose the same service to continue uninterruptedly for twenty years, and the servant to sleep twice in every of such twenty years at the same inn in travelling, and to be at that inn the last night of his service, would it be expedient and reasonable that an inquiry extending over so long a period of time at detached intervals should be gone into for the purpose of ascertaining the settlement of a pauper? What notice could the officers of that parish have had that he was come to settle there? And yet there his settlement would be, if we were to hold that residence for forty days beyond the compass of a single year would do."

The forty days' residence need not be under the same year's hiring.

Rex v. Findon, 4 B. & C. 91; 6 D. & R. 116; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 144. William Steff was removed from Bedgrave to Findon. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper continued in Mr. Ventris's service, under successive yearly hirings, from the 2nd November, 1807, until the 2nd November, 1811, when the pauper was again hired by Ventris for another year. The pauper served his master at St. Peter's in the East, Oxford, from the 2nd November, 1811, until the 14th April, 1812. He then accompanied him to several places until the 2nd November, 1812, when he was again hired by Ventris for another year, and he travelled about with his master until the 20th December, 1812, on which day they arrived at Findon (the appellant parish) where they continued more than forty days, and afterwards he accompanied his master to St. Peter's in the East, where they continued up to 2nd April, 1813, a space of thirty-eight days, and on the 2nd April, 1813, left Oxford for Beeding, where they continued until the 2nd May following, thirty days, when they parted by mutual consent. Abbott, C. J. "The settlement of the pauper is clearly at Oxford: he was undoubtedly settled there on the second April, 1813, having resided there more than forty days within the last year of his service, and gained no subsequent settlement. It is not necessary that the whole of the residence should be under the last year's hiring." Bayley, J. "I think this point was in effect decided in Rex v. Denham and Rex v. Hamboro', which was before the court in 1819. It has never been decided that the forty days' residence must be under the last year's hiring. In Rex v. Apethorpe (ante, 402), it was held that part of the residence must be under a contract of yearly hiring."

Rex v. Child Okeford, 3 Bar. & Ad. 809. E. Miller was removed from Child Okeford to Marnhull. Order quashed. Case:—On the 17th April, 1825, the pauper was hired to serve Mr. J. Rossiter, in Child Okeford, as a servant in husbandry, at five guineas a year. He served him under that agreement till the 11th of April 1826, when the pauper made a fresh agreement with his master, at 5s. a week as an out-door servant, and served him under this second agreement for upwards of two months. The service was never discontinued nor was the nature of it changed except as to the pauper becoming an out-door servant from the 11th April, 1826. The pauper resided from the 17th April, 1825, till the 3rd May following, in the parish of Child Okeford. On the 3rd May, 1825, he accompanied his master to and resided in that of Marnhull, till the 6th April, 1826, when he returned with his master to Child Okeford, and resided there during the remainder of his service, under the first agreement from the 6th to the 11th April, and under the second agreement upwards of two months. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The authorities establish, that in order to gain a settlement by hiring and service, some part of the forty days' residence must be while the party is serving under a yearly contract. It is now sought to add another term to that, namely, that the whole forty days' residence shall be within a year from the time of the yearly hiring. Rex v. Denham (1 M. & S. 221; ante, 441), does not go so far. Nothing was said in that case as to the time when the computation of the year was to commence. Lord Ellenborough there dwells upon the inconvenience which would result from picking out a few days' service in several years, and thus extending the inquiry in a case of settlement through an unreasonable period of time, but all that is decided there is, that to give a settlement by hiring and service, there should be forty days' residence within the compass of one year. It is not said that that year is to be computed from the time of making the yearly contract. There is no ground for holding that it must be so reckoned." Littledale, J. "It is sufficient if the forty days' residence be within the compass of a year, it need not be within one year from the yearly hiring." Parke, J. having been present only during a part of the argument declined giving any opinion. Taunton, J. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

3. The Place in which Settlement is acquired.

If the forty days' residence are within the compass of a year they need not be within one year from the yearly hiring.

If the last forty days' service be in different parishes, the settlement is where the servant lodges the last night. As to the meaning of this word, see Rex v. Ringwood, post.

Lowess v. Lanstephan, Burr. S. C. 825; 2 Bott, 404. The pauper was hired for a year to John Williams, of Lanstephan, where his master occupied his own estate. He continued with his master in Lanstephan till some time before St. Peter's Tide, when his master and family removed to Lowess, in which parish his master rented another farm. He continued with his master in Lowess till the 16th of January following, when his master and family removed to Lanstephan, and his master afterwards constantly resided there. But the pauper was sent back by his master to Lowess to thrash the corn and look after his master's cattle. The pauper staid in Lowess two or three nights and days, and ate and lodged there; and then returned again to Lanstephan in like manner as aforesaid; and so continued between the parishes to the end of his year, which was the 17th May following. The pauper never continued forty days together in either of the two parishes after the said 16th January, but lived and resided as aforesaid more than forty days in the whole in each. He believed he resided most at the latter part of his service in Lanstephan, and lodged there the last night; and went from thence in the morning to Lowess, and took some cattle of his master's from thence to the Hay-fair, where he finished his service. The court held him to be legally settled in Lanstephan.

Rex v. Hulland, Doug. 657; Cald. 118; 2 Bott, 288. A person who has resided part of the year in one parish, and part in another, at different times and intervals, making when added together more than forty days in each, is settled in the parish where he lodged the last night.

Rex v. Iveston, Cald. 288; 2 Bott, 407. The pauper was hired for a year

3. *The Place in which
acquired.*

If a yearly servant serve forty days in A., then go with his master's leave to B., his father's parish, and there remain above forty days, then go to another parish to work for his master, and then for the three last days sleep in B., his father's parish, he gains a settlement in B.

A settlement may be gained by service in a parish where the master never lives.

The settlement is at the place of the last forty days' service, though the master is not settled there.

So a person hired as a groom to running horses, to serve as a collier: he resided at Kyo from Martinmas, when he was so hired till the May-day following, when he married; about fourteen days after his marriage, he took a cottage in Iveston, and without the privity of his master, removed thither from Kyo with his wife, where they continued above forty days, and until about fourteen days preceding the expiration of his service, and then they returned to Kyo. The court thought this case similar in principle to Rex v. Hulland (ante, 444), and precisely to that of Lowess, and that they ought to be adhered to; and the settlement was therefore in Kyo.

In Rex v. Great Bookham, Cald. 290; 2 Bott, 407, n., the same point was considered as fully settled.

Rex v. Undermilbeck, 5 T. R. 387. Removal from Undermilbeck to Dalton. John Dixon, late husband of the pauper, was hired for a year, and entered upon his service in the beginning of April, 1783, and continued with his master till December following, when his master, having little to do in the winter season, gave him leave of absence for six weeks to work for himself wherever he pleased, allowing 15s. out of his yearly wages. Dixon then went to his father's house in Sawrey, and continued there seven weeks, being one week longer than he had leave for. About that time his master contracted with one Braithwaite, that he and his servant Dixon would assist Braithwaite in making some fence walls in Pennington, where Dixon continued working with his master above forty days, the same being till within about three or four days of the end of the term, when he went away again to his father's house in Sawrey, with his master's consent; and whilst he so continued in Sawrey, the year's service with Bowness expired. During the time that Dixon worked in Pennington he slept at Dalton, but never worked a day's work in Dalton. When Dixon went the last time to his father's house in Sawrey it was on the Saturday, and his year's service would not have expired till the Tuesday following. On the Monday morning he went to make up some fence-wall on his father's account in Sawrey, but was taken ill that afternoon, and continued out of health for some weeks afterwards. Dixon afterwards went to his master, who paid him his wages, deducting 15s. for the six weeks' absence, and 2s 6d. for the other week he was absent more than agreed for. It was argued that the residence in Sawrey for the last three days could not be connected with the former service in that place, because Dixon did not serve there at all during those three days, therefore the last forty days' service was in Dalton. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It has been properly admitted that the contract was not dissolved by the servant's absence for seven weeks, because the master consented to it, and received part of the servant's earnings; and as the service continued in contemplation of law during the whole year, I think the servant was settled in Sawrey, where he slept the last night, he having before that time served there forty days in the course of the last year. For it has been decided, after much argument, that the last day's service may be connected with any preceding service in the same parish, notwithstanding any intervening service elsewhere for forty days."

St. Peter's in Oxford v. Chipping Wycomb, 1 Stra. 528; Fol. 200; 2 Bott, 275. The master of the Oxford stage-coach hired a servant for a year, to stay in an inn at Wycomb where the coach baited, and to take care of the horses: he lived there for the whole year, and the master all the while lived in Oxford. The question was, where that servant gains a settlement, or whether any by that service? And by the whole Court: "He gained a settlement in Chipping Wycomb, though his master never lived there."

Bishop's Hatfield v. St. Peter's, St. Albans, Fol. 197; 2 Stra. 794. Langley was huntsman to Mr. Arnold, who lived sometimes in Westminster and sometimes in Northamptonshire, but Arnold had no settlement in St. Peter's; Langley served the last forty days of his year in St. Peter's with Arnold. The Court of King's Bench held Langley's settlement to be in St. Peter's, by serving Arnold the last forty days of his year there, though Arnold had no settlement there.

Rex v. East Ilsley, Burr. S. C. 722; 2 Bott, 402. The pauper was hired for a year, and so for two years afterwards, successively, to the Earl of Port-more, to look after his running horses; and during the three years removed from place to place with the horses, the last ten months of which time he resided with the horses at East Ilsley, which was a public place for exercising and training running horses; the earl had no house in East Ilsley, nor any estate there. The question was, whether a groom, residing at a public place, where his master had no house or estate, merely for the purpose of training running horses, should gain a settlement at that public place? And the Court were unanimous that this was a good settlement.

Rex v. Bath Easton, Burr. S. C. 774; 2 Bott, 403. Thomas King, the pauper, was hired as a covenant-servant for a year to Mr. Robinson, who then resided at his house at Bath Easton, as his only place of general residence. He entered upon the service, and served the year and some months. He served the first part of the year at Bath Easton, but about the latter end of April, 1764, he attended Robinson with the rest of his family to Exmouth, where Robinson went for sea-bathing. Robinson hired by the week, at fourteen or fifteen shillings by the week, the whole of a small lodging-house at Exmouth, which belonged to an innkeeper, who kept it ready furnished solely for the purpose of letting it to strangers; in which he stayed for the space of ten weeks; during the whole of which time the pauper served him there. Robinson then hired by the week lodgings in another house in Exmouth, being obliged to quit the former on account of its being engaged to a lady and her niece from London, who came to Exmouth for the same purpose of sea-bathing. He stayed at the last-mentioned lodgings, and the pauper with him, for the space of two months, except an absence of about three weeks on an excursion into Kent, where the pauper attended him; after which he returned to Exmouth, and the pauper with him, who continued in his service at Exmouth till his master discharged him, just before his leaving that place, and returning to his residence at Bath Easton, which was when he gave up the lodgings last-mentioned, at the expiration of the said space of two months. Exmouth is a place generally resorted to by persons from Exeter and London for sea-bathing: but merchants also resort to it from Exeter as to a village. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "This was a common hiring for a year: there is nothing particular in it. And in the case of a common hiring for a year, a service with the master gains a settlement to the servant in the place where the last forty days of such service were performed. Here the service with the master for the last forty days ended at Exmouth. There was no continuance of service with the master after the master's return to Bath Easton. In Alton v. Elvetham (post, 446, n. (a)), there were many particular circumstances; the servant was born at Elvetham under a certificate from Alton, and could not gain a settlement there by his original hiring and service in that place; nor without a discontinuance of it, and a new subsequent hiring. But no discontinuance ever happened in that case; the service did not end at Scarborough, it continued. The servant at Scarborough proposed a new agreement for another year; his master said, it would be time enough when they returned home to Elvetham; whereupon the servant continued on for about six weeks until they returned to Elvetham, when he was again hired by his master for a third year, and served it out at Elvetham, and continued in his master's service for seven years more in Elvetham. So that it was a continuation of the original hiring; the contract did not end at Scarborough. The question, therefore, in that case was, whether serving his master, who resided at Scarborough as a sojourner, for about forty days, should gain the servant a settlement there, when his former hiring at Elvetham was not discontinued nor ended at Scarborough, but, on the contrary, continued and went on until and after their return to the master's general residence at Elvetham; but that case does not lay it down generally, that no servant can gain settlements at places where people go to drink waters, though they serve their masters or mistresses there for forty days; if it does, it is wrong; for no such general rule ought to be laid down. We are all of opinion that this servant who went with his master to this place, and served him there for the last forty days of his service, which ended at this place, and was not at all continued at any further time or place, is legally settled there by serving the and going from place to place to take care of them, will gain a settlement by residence at the last place, though his master had neither house nor estate there.

Residence of a yearly servant with his master at a sea bathing place for forty days confers a settlement.

last forty days at it."—Willes, J. strongly declared his assent to this opinion; and added, "that he hoped it would be understood, that serving a master forty days at a public place gains a servant a settlement at that public place." (a) The judgment in the case of Alton v. Elvetham, Bott, 400, which may be considered as over-ruled by the above case, so far as it supported the doctrine as to a distinction between residence at a watering place and any other place, is as follows. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "This was an order made for the removal of the wife of the pauper from Elvetham to Alton. The sessions state these facts: Alton, in 1722, gave a certificate to the father of the pauper to Elvetham; under which the father went to Elvetham, and has dwelt there ever since; the pauper and other children were born there. The pauper, on the 29th of August, 1734, was hired for a year as a covenant-servant by Sir Henry Calthorpe, at Elvetham, and served that year out in that parish; that at the expiration of this year, he was hired again as a covenant-servant by him for another year, and served that year; but it happened that the last forty days of the second year were at Scarborough in Yorkshire; that he did not, at the end of the year, quit the service, but on the 29th of August, 1736, he applied to his master to make a new agreement for another year, when the master said it would be time enough when they returned home to Elvetham; whereupon he continued for about six weeks with his master at Scarborough, when they returned home to Elvetham; then he was hired for a third year, and served that year out at Elvetham, and continued in his service for seven years more, and his wages were advanced every year; and afterwards he quitted that service, and married, and had four children, mentioned in the order. The justices considered him serving altogether in Elvetham, and that he could not gain a settlement there. It has been contended that they were in the wrong, for he ought to be considered as having gained a settlement at Elvetham, notwithstanding the certificate. That is not contended for directly, because service for a year of a certificate person will not gain a settlement; therefore it is indirectly contended for that he had gained a settlement. His master goes (probably for his health) to Scarborough, and happens to stay there forty days; and it is contended that the servant then gained a settlement at Scarborough, which discharged the certificate, and that he afterwards gained a settlement at Elvetham. The general question is, whether this accidental service of forty days at Scarborough acquired a settlement to the servant? It is immaterial whether the master has or has not a settlement in the place where the service is, because that will not prevent the servant gaining a settlement; but the objection here is, whether the forty days at Scarborough are to be considered barely as a continuation of the service at Elvetham or a new bond fide service at Scarborough? There are several cases where a servant, though locally absent, may yet be considered as continuing his service in the place to which he was hired. So if a servant was ill, and went to Bath, by the consent of the master, that would be a continuation of the service. Therefore the consideration here is, of convenience and inconvenience, of justice and injustice, which will have great weight, unless there are authorities which stand in the way. I will consider this, first, under the circumstances of the case; then, secondly, I will consider the authorities. The general ground upon which this must be determined, if there are no authorities, is this: substantially, the master lived at Elvetham; he hired his servant to be a servant there; the parish was jealous of the servant coming in there, and got a certificate from Alton. Sir Henry happens to go to Scarborough, as a sojourner for a particular purpose, not as an inhabitant. When they are to make an agreement for a third year, they both consider themselves as absent from home. It would be perilous for these public places of resort, if such a service were to gain a settlement. Besides, what fraud would be brought upon parishes, if settlements might be gained in this manner, when a parish trusts to certificates? Suppose a person in service has an accident upon the road by breaking a leg, and he stays forty days at a place, shall that be a settlement? Suppose he stays forty days with his master in a sea-port, being wind bound, would that gain a settlement? The master's abode here is at Elvetham, which I lay great stress on. The domicile (as the civilians call it) of Sir Henry was not at Scarborough. I shall next consider the authorities cited, the principal of which was Rex v. St. Peter's in Oxford, 1 Str. 524. The court will pay regard to former determinations for the sake of certainty. But if an authority were single, and plainly productive of inconvenience, the court will, in such case, over-rule it.

524; is to the same effect, and will be found in its most correct form in the judgment of Lord Mansfield in Alton v. Elvetham, infra, note.

Rex v. St. Andrew's, Holborn, 2 Bott, 408. The pauper, William More, was removed from St. Andrew's, Holborn, to Aston-juxta-Bridworth. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, about 1760, became a yearly hired servant to Mr. Squire, an attorney in Furnival's Inn, London, with whom he lived about eight years. The usual place of Mr. Squire's residence was Furnival's Inn, but he used frequently to go to Bath for his health, when the pauper always accompanied him. His stay on those occasions was sometimes four or five months together. He was always in lodgings there, and generally on the South Parade, in the parish of St. James's in Bath. During the three

A hiring may be in an extra-parochial place, and a settlement may be gained by a service under it in a parish or township; and if the master and

But the present authority does not at all contradict the doctrine I have been laying down. This case was cited to show that a passage or transitory residence might gain a settlement. I shall state the case as it is in Strange, where it is said, that in the case of Rufford it was not doubted, but that hiring into an extra-parochial place would gain a settlement. And so Powell, J., somewhere said, that if a servant were hired for a year in Ireland, and the service were performed here, it would gain a settlement. But here I cannot but observe, that it is a great pity that cases should get abroad under the sanction of great names, which being taken from notes that gentlemen took only for their own use, and not by any public officer appointed for that purpose, are incorrect often in the state of them. The present case, as reported in Strange, is most certainly misreported. It is stated that the pauper was hired for a year into Christchurch, without saying how or under what circumstances her mistress lived there; and that her mistress went upon a visit to Fawley-court. Now her mistress being a single woman, could not possibly have any abode in Christchurch but as a visitor or friend. And it is further said, that the only doubt was, whether the settlement gained at Christchurch was superseded or not? That could not possibly be so. For she could by no means gain a settlement in Christchurch, which was not only an extra-parochial place, but a single house only, having been once a monastery, being in the nature of one of the king's palaces, which may be extra-parochial. I mention this, to show the incorrectness of cases, which cannot be relied on. This case is also in Foley, 215, and Cases of Settl. 139, reported differently. But all of them together may serve to help us to the truth, and which, upon inquiry, I find to be this: Mrs. Cook, the mistress of the servant, had two daughters; one married to Dr. Clavering, dean of Christchurch, the other to Mr. Freeman, who lived at Fawley-court; and as she lived alternately with these two gentlemen, her sons-in-law, and was as much at Fawley-court as at Christchurch, and (as I observed before) it was not possible the servant should be settled at Christchurch, because it was an extra-parochial single house. This was, I think, the only material case cited at bar; but there is another which I have had mentioned to me, Bishop's Hatfield v. St. Peter's in St. Alban's, (Foley, 197,) where a huntsman was hired by one Mr. Arnold, who lived sometimes in Westminster, and sometimes at Northampton, and the servants resided, where the hounds were kept, at St. Alban's; and the only question was, whether the servant could acquire a settlement there by such service, as his master had none? and there was no doubt but he could, for he came exactly within the case of a stage-coachman, who was hired to serve at Wycomb, though the master lived at Oxford; where it was held, that the servant's settlement does not at all depend upon the master's. But that case was very different from the present; for the question was not, whether there was a continuance of service with the master in Westminster or Northampton, but he was settled by living in that place with the hounds; and the master, I suppose, might be probably a member of parliament, and might have a house to go to for hunting merely, which is a very common case in the neighbourhood of London. However, there is no precision in the case, on which the court can rely; and upon the whole, I think it not at all inconsistent with our present resolution, which is, that in the present case the whole of the service was only a continuation of the service at Elvetham. However, I would have it observed in the present case, that I lay great stress on both the master and servant considering Elvetham as their home, as also upon the precedent and subsequent service, and upon the circumstance of the certificate. There was another objection at bar, but not relied on: that it does not appear but that the husband may be living, and he is not removed, and may have gained a settlement since. But this the court will not presume. If he be living, they must remove him after to his family." And both the orders were confirmed.

servant be at a watering place during the last forty days, a settlement will be gained there.

Service with the same master, but not in the same place where the hiring was, will gain a settlement in the last place.

It is not necessary that the servant should lodge at his master's house.

Where a person, during his service, marries, and then lodges with his wife for the last forty days in another parish than that where his service is performed, he nevertheless gains a settlement in the parish where he lodges. And this, though it was unknown to the master where he lodged.

It is not necessary that the residence should have relation to the duties of the servant.

last years, Squire resided rather more at Bath than at Furnival's Inn; and the last time the pauper was at Bath with him, Squire stayed several months in his lodging on the South Parade. The pauper quitted Squire's service in May, 1766, having resided about four months previous thereto in Furnival's Inn: Furnival's Inn is an extra-parochial place. It was afterwards added, that Furnival's Inn was no township or vill within the meaning of stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, and that no removal had ever been made to it. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "It now appears that Furnival's Inn is not a vill within stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12. The hiring there lays the foundation for a settlement, but none can be gained there. You must look back to the last place except Furnival's Inn, where forty days were served; that place is Bath; and it being now settled that settlements may be gained at watering places, the settlement was gained there, notwithstanding the Scarborough case," (ante, 446, n. (a)).

Rex v. Ashton, Fol. 88; Sett. & Rem. 23; 2 Bott, 388. A servant was hired for a year in Ashton, where she served half a year; then her master, and she with him, removed to Patshall, where her master took another farm; the servant continued with him in Patshall for the other half year. By the court: "Here is what the act requires, a hiring for a year, and service for a year; for it is the same service, and the statute doth not tie it down to one place. If a person is hired to a master in one parish, and goes with him into another, and serves him for one whole year, the parish he continues last in for forty days before the end of his year is the place of his settlement; and the reason why the forty days gain a settlement is, because he comes there with his master, and you cannot remove him from his master; and having continued with him forty days unremovable, he gains a settlement."

Rex v. Whitechapel, 2 Sess. Ca. 114; Fol. 146; 2 Bott, 393. A person was hired for five years to work at a glass-house in Whitechapel, at the rate of 10s. a week; but never lodged with his master in the house at any part of the time, but at another house in the parish. By the court: "He has gained a settlement there; for being hired to serve above a year, and having served and resided in the same parish pursuant to such hiring, he hath fully complied with the statute, and it is not material where he lodged, so that it were within the parish."

Rex v. Hedsor, Cald. 51; 2 Bott, 405. Removal from Little Marlow to Hedsor. The pauper was hired for a year to Lord Boston, and served him as a gardener for several years in Hedsor; ninety-five days before the end of the fourth year he married a woman of Little Marlow, and from the time of his marriage until the end of that year's service he lodged with his wife in Little Marlow forty nights, but not successively, but did not lodge for forty nights elsewhere after his marriage. It did not appear that Lord Boston had any property in Little Marlow, nor where the pauper lodged the last night of the year's service in which he married. It appeared that he did not see Lord Boston within that year in which he married, nor had any consent to be absent those forty nights; and that he never performed any service in Little Marlow on account of his master; that he continued to serve Lord Boston several years after his marriage. It was urged if a servant continued forty days in a parish in his master's service, the reason he gained a settlement was, his coming into such parish with his master; but the court would not permit the servant to gain a settlement where his master had no property, and without his consent or knowledge, and clandestinely with respect to his master, and in fraud of the parish, who might not know where he slept, and therefore could not remove him. In reply, a variety of cases were cited to show that a man is settled where he lodges the last forty days, although not successive. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The cases seem to have settled it."

Rex v. Nympsfield, Cald. 107; 2 Bott, 405. The same point was given up as being settled.

Rex v. Dremerchion, 3 Bar. & Adol. 420. John Williams and family were removed from Northop to Dremerchion. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, John Williams, hired with one W. Evans for a year from the 1st of May, 1819, to the 1st of May, 1820, and served with him for a year, residing in Dremerchion from the 1st of May, 1819, until November in the same year, when he married. From that time he resided on the week days from Monday to Saturday evening at his master's house in Dremerchion, during which time he was working for his master, but Saturday night, the whole of Sunday, and until Monday morning, the pauper passed with his wife in St. Asaph parish. The pauper's year expired on Sunday, the 30th of April, 1820. He had slept the night before in St. Asaph, and he slept there that night (Sunday night) also, and on Monday morning he returned to his master's residence in Dremerchion, and commenced working as a day labourer. The contract of hiring was agreed by the pauper and his master not to be dissolved by the marriage in November, 1819. The pauper slept more than forty nights during the year in St. Asaph, but no part of the time passed in St. Asaph was in furtherance of the service, being only allowed by the pauper's master as an indulgence, nor was there any service in fact performed by the pauper for his master in St. Asaph. The question reserved was, whether the pauper was properly removed to Dremerchion. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "There is a distinction recognized in several cases between apprentices and hired servants. The last parish in which the servant completes a forty days' residence is that in which he is settled. But as to apprentices, the residence must be in furtherance of the contract of apprenticeship. The 7th and 8th sections of the 3 W. & M. c. 11, are differently worded; the seventh provides that if a party be hired into any parish, such service shall be a good settlement; the eighth requires a binding and inhabitation in the parish. Why there should have been such a distinction I do not know, but it has been made. Rex v. Hedsor (ante, 484) is a stronger case than this, there the sleeping out of the master's parish was without his consent." Littledale, J., concurred. Parke, J. "It is clearly established that a servant is settled in the parish where he sleeps for the last forty days of his service. Here it is agreed that there was no dissolution of the contract." Patteson, J., concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Sutton, 5 T. R. 657. Case:—H. Boardman, the pauper, was, about Christmas, hired for a year by Mr. Kerfoot, of Great Sankey, to serve in husbandry for 7*l.* 10*s.*, and 5*s.* more in case the master approved of his service; he continued in that service until by the visitation of God he was deprived of his reason in November following, when his father fetched him away to his own house at Bold, and in two or three weeks afterwards he received the wages of 7*l.* 10*s.*, but not the 5*s.*; and the father afterwards kept him at home as part of his family for about ten years in Bold, where the father died; the son all that time, as well as since, continuing in the same situation. Order confirmed. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The cases that have already been decided on this subject have settled the principle on which our judgment must proceed in this case. As this is a removal from Bold to Sutton, all we are called upon to decide in this case is, whether or not the pauper be now settled in Sutton; and whether the settlement which he gained in that place has or has not been superseded by a subsequent settlement? for any question that may hereafter arise between Bold and Great Sankey will not affect this case. The pauper was hired for a year in Great Sankey; he continued in that service as long as he was capable of performing it; but in the course of the year he was deprived of his reason, and consequently rendered incapable of discharging his duty to his master. But in the consideration of questions of this kind it is immaterial whether the servant's incapacity to perform his service proceed from an infirmity of body or of mind. Where indeed the servant commits a crime, the master may apply to a justice to have him discharged; but if no such application be made, the relation of master and servant subsists. In this case, there being no fault in the servant, nor any application to a magistrate to discharge him, (for which, indeed, there was no cause,) I am clearly of opinion that the relation of master and servant continued during the whole year, and consequently that the pauper acquired a settlement by that service. If he had recovered his reason before the expiration of the year, the master might have been compelled to receive him again into his house. It was said by Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. Christchurch, Burr. S. C. 497, (ante, 124,) that the absence of the servant on account of sickness will not prevent his gaining a settlement, and that it is immaterial whether or not such absence happen in the middle or at the end of the year. With regard to Rex v. Sharrington, ante 413, though it was not argued, it appears that the court exercised their judgment upon it, and I subscribe to the doctrine of it. These observations are sufficient to dispose of this case; but there is another question behind, and as probably the magistrates below will be called upon to make another order, I will beg to say a few words upon it for the sake of their information. That question is, whether supposing the pauper gained a settlement by reason of his service with Kerfoot, he is settled in Great Sankey, the parish where the master lived, and where the service was in contemplation of law performed, or in Bold, where the father lived and received his son for the last forty days of the year? And upon this question I have as little doubt as on the other point; being of opinion that the settlement is in Great Sankey, where the service was in law performed, though the servant did not in point of fact reside there the last forty days of the year. In general the servant is settled in the parish where he serves the last forty days; but I consider the residence with the father under these circumstances as a residence in an hospital. We should thwart our own feelings, and act contrary to humanity and principles of public policy, if we were to determine that the father in this case brought a burden on his parish by receiving his son into his house from motives of tenderness and affection. And it must be remembered that this is not a case sui generis; there are others that stand in pari ratione. In general a bastard is settled in the parish where he is born; but if he be born in a gaol or house of correction, his settlement is in his mother's parish. And I think that Rex v. Sharrington goes some way to warrant my opinion in this case; for I cannot consider the pauper's residence with his father as a performance of service with his master; he was there diverso intuitu in order to recover from his illness, and not for the purpose of serving his master. I am therefore clearly of opinion that the pauper's former settlement has been superseded by the subsequent one which he gained in Great Sankey." The other judges concurring, both orders were quashed.

In a settlement by hiring and service, the pauper is settled where his place of rest is during such service.

Rex v. Mildenhall, 3 B. & Ald. 374. Removal by order of two justices from Mildenhall to Newmarket, All Saints. Order quashed. Case:—On the 1st May, 1817, the pauper let himself as a yearly servant to R. Bailey of Mildenhall, and entered into his service on the same day. The pauper was employed by his master every day from the commencement of his service up to the 5th of April, 1818, to drive the mail cart to and from Newmarket and Mildenhall. For this purpose he started every night from Mildenhall, and arrived at Newmarket about eleven o'clock in the evening; and after delivering the bags, &c. which generally occupied about an hour, went to bed at an inn in Newmarket, in a bed hired for him exclusively for a year, and paid for by his master. He slept until about four o'clock in the morning, when the mail-coach arrived at Newmarket from London, and the pauper used to get up and receive the Mildenhall mail-bags, and drive his cart back to Mildenhall, where he generally arrived about six o'clock. He then, after putting up his horse, &c. went to bed in a room provided for him in his master's house at Mildenhall, and slept two or three hours. He was employed during the rest of the day in Mildenhall, as his master chose, and sometimes, which was about eight or ten times in a month, he did not go to bed at all at Mildenhall. He kept all his clothes, and took all his meals in his master's house, and the room and bed in which he there slept were exclusively appropriated to him, and he considered that Mildenhall was his home, but that he took his night's rest at Newmarket. He kept no clothes nor any thing else at Newmarket, and other persons occasionally slept in the same room there with him. From the 5th April, 1818, until the 1st of May, he never drove the mail-cart at all, but lived wholly in his master's service at Mildenhall. On the 1st May, 1818, he quitted Bailey's service. By the court: "Here the pauper was, by the nature of his service, compelled to wait a few hours in the middle of the night for the return of the mail. During that time he slept there; but that sleep was not his ordinary and sufficient rest; for after he returned to his master's house at Mildenhall he went to bed in his own room, which was there provided for his exclusive use. He did not therefore go to Newmarket as to his place of rest, and unless that were so, he could gain no settlement there. Besides, it was for the respondents below to establish affirmatively a settlement in Newmarket, and if that is left doubtful, the court will not quash the order of sessions. But here, in fact, Mildenhall appears to have been the place of rest of the pauper during his service." Order confirmed.

1. Of the statutes relating to settlement by apprenticeship.

The earlier enactments upon this division of the poor laws relate chiefly to the manner in which pauper children should be placed out as apprentices, and the duty imposed upon overseers, &c. in this respect, with a view to the relief of parishes, and the permanent benefit of the paupers. (b) The only statute which expressly provides that a settlement may be acquired by apprenticeship, is the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 8 (post, 452). But the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, by authorizing two justices to remove any apprentice into the parish where he last resided forty days, unless he found security, &c., impliedly made a residence by an apprentice for forty days in any one parish a sufficient settlement (and see 31 Geo. II. c. 11, s. 1, post, 458). And it seems to be reasonable that an apprentice should acquire a settlement in the parish which has had the benefit of his services. (c) There are other provisions regulating the mode in which the relation of master and apprentice must be created, particularly in the case of parish apprentices, the observance or neglect of which frequently form the matter of dispute. The statutory provisions on the subject are as follows:

up in any craft, mystery, or occupation. It also contained many regulations respecting the qualifications of persons entitled to take apprentices, and the term of years for which apprentices should be bound, and as to the mode of binding. These enactments were for the most part repealed by 54 Geo. III. c. 96 (post, 472.)

The 5 Eliz. c. 5, s. 12, enacts "That from henceforth it shall be lawful to all and every owner and owners of ships or vessels, and to every householder using and exercising the trade of the seas by fishing or otherwise, and to every gunner or gunners, commonly called cannoneers, and to every shipwright, to take and keep one or more apprentice or apprentices to be brought up in the said trade or trades, every of the same apprentice or apprentices to be to them bound for ten years or under; and every apprentice so taken, being above seven years of age, shall be by the same covenants bound, ordered, and used to all intents according to the custom of the city of London; so that the same covenant or bond of apprenticeship be made by writing indented, and enrolled in the town where the same apprentice shall be then inhabiting, if it be a town corporate; and if the town be not incorporate, then to be enrolled in the next town incorporate to the habitation of every such apprentice: and that the officers of every such town corporate shall take for every such enrolment not above twelve-pence; any law, statute, or other matter whatsoever to the contrary notwithstanding."

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, enacts, "That it shall and may be lawful for the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, by the assent of any two (a) justices of the peace aforesaid, to bind any such children (b) as aforesaid to be apprentices where they shall see convenient till such man-child shall come to the age of twenty-four, (now twenty-one by 18 Geo. III. c. 47, post, 458), and such woman-child to the age of twenty-one years, or the time of her marriage; (c) the same to be as effectual to all purposes, as if such child were of full age, and by indenture or covenant bound him or herself."

The 7 Jac. I. c. 3, enacts, how money given for the binding out of poor children apprentices shall be employed, and by whom, and within what time the money shall be put out; and contains a provision "that if there be not fit persons in the parish to be bound apprentice, then poor children of any of the next adjoining parishes shall be bound apprentices," and then directs what poor children shall be so bound, and contains regulations to prevent the misapplication of money.

The 3 Car. I. c. 40, s. 22, contains a further provision as to overseers putting out apprentices.

By 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, s. 1, "It shall and may be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish to any justice of peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming so to settle as aforesaid in any tenement under the yearly value of ten pounds, for any two justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove and convey such person or persons to such parish where he or they were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or they give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said justices."

The 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 8, (before alluded to, ante, 451), enacts, "That if any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture, and inhabit in any town or parish, such binding and inhabitation shall be adjudged a good settlement, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as aforesaid." (d)

(a) One of them must be of the quorum. 2 Stra. 1110.

(b) This, with reference to the first section of the act, ante, 30, means "children of all such whose parents shall not by the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to keep and maintain their children."

(c) Burr. S. C. 248, post.

(d) "Such notice," &c. This refers to the third section. See 1 Nolan, P. L. 286, where the reason of this enactment is explained.

It has been correctly observed in these statutes, that nothing more was required by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, to settle an apprentice duly bound, than a residence of forty days; and the 3 W. & M. c. 11, exempts him from the necessity created by different statutes of giving notice of his inhabitancy. 1 Nolan, P. L. 285, 493.

The 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 5, after reciting, that under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, it has been doubted whether the persons to whom children were bound were compellable to receive such children as apprentices, enacts and declares, "That where any poor children shall be appointed to be bound apprentices, pursuant to the said act, the person or persons to whom they are so appointed to be bound shall receive and provide for them according to the indenture signed and confirmed by the two justices of the peace, and also execute the other part of the said indentures; and if he or she shall refuse so to do, oath being thereof made by one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor, before any two of the justices of the peace for that county, liberty, or riding, he or she, for every such offence, shall forfeit the sum of ten pounds, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods of any such offender, by warrant under the hands and seals of the said justices, the same to be applied to the use of the poor of that parish or place where such offence was committed; saving always to the person, to whom any poor child shall be appointed to be bound an apprentice as aforesaid, if he or she shall think themselves aggrieved thereby, his or her appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for that county or riding, whose order therein shall be final, and conclude all parties." (And see construction in Rex v. Fleet, Cald. 31; and see 20 Geo. III. c. 36, post, 458, 459.)

By 9 & 10 W. III. c. 11, no certificated person has absolute settlement in any parish, unless he take a tenement of 10*l.* per annum or execute some parish office.

The 2 & 3 Anne, c. 6, s. 6, altered by 4 Anne, c. 19, s. 16, provides, "That parish boys bound apprentices, may be turned over to the sea service as therein mentioned; and contains regulations relative to such apprentices and their masters."

The 8 Anne, c. 9, contains regulations as to duties to be paid on premiums given with clerks and apprentices. The 32, 33 & 34 sections related to the amount of duty; and were afterwards consolidated by 44 Geo. III. c. 98, s. 1, and which was again altered by the 55 Geo. III. c. 184, (post, 474,) as regards the amount of duty.

Sect. 32. "That there shall be throughout the kingdom of Great Britain, raised, collected, and paid to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, the further rates, duties, and sums of money following, that is to say, the duty, rate, or sum of sixpence for every twenty shillings, for every sum of fifty pounds or under, and the duty, rate, or sum of one shilling, of every twenty shillings, of all and every sum and sums amounting to more than fifty pounds, which shall, at any time or times, from and after the first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and ten, and during the term of five years from thence next ensuing, be given, paid, contracted, or agreed for, with or in relation to every clerk, apprentice, or servant, which shall be, within the kingdom of Great Britain, put or placed to or with any master or mistress to learn any profession, trade, or employment, and proportionably for greater or lesser sums; which said duties, rates, and sums, shall be paid by the said masters or mistresses respectively."

Sect. 33. "That for the better and more effectual levying, collecting, and paying unto her Majesty, her heirs and successors, the said duties after the rates of sixpence, and one shilling for every such respective sum of twenty shillings as aforesaid, the same shall be under the government, care, and management of the commissioners for the time being appointed to manage her Majesty's duties on stamp vellum, parchment, and paper; and the same commissioners shall employ and appoint such inferior officers as shall be necessary for managing and collecting the duties last mentioned and hereby granted, and for keeping accounts thereof, and for stamping all such indentures and other writings, which are hereby required to be stamped as herein after is mentioned, and otherwise to act in and relating to the same duties as

Sect. 34. "That the duties last-mentioned and hereby granted shall be all paid or transmitted, from time to time, as this act directs, into the hands of the receiver-general for the time being of the said duties on stamp vellum, parchment, and paper, who shall keep a separate and distinct account thereof, and pay the same into the receipt of the Exchequer of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, weekly, on Wednesday in every week, unless it be a holy-day, and then the next day after which shall not be a holy-day, for the purposes in this act expressed, and under the like penalties, forfeitures, and disabilities, as are to be inflicted by this act, for diverting or misapplying any monies by this act appropriated or appointed for repayment of loans, or satisfaction of interest monies as is hereinafter mentioned."

Sect. 35. "That the full sum or sums of money received, or in any-wise directly or indirectly given, paid, agreed, or contracted for, during the term aforesaid, with or in relation to every such clerk, apprentice, and servant, as aforesaid, shall be truly inserted and written in words at length in some indenture or other writing, (b) which shall contain the covenants, articles, contracts, or agreements, relating to the service of such clerk, apprentice, or servant as aforesaid, and shall bear date upon the day of the signing, sealing, or other execution of the same; upon pain that every master or mistress, to or with whom, or to whose use, any sum of money whatsoever shall be given, paid, secured, or contracted, for or in respect of any such clerk, apprentice, or servant, as aforesaid, which shall not be truly and fully so inserted and specified in some such indenture, or other writing, shall, for every such offence, forfeit double the sum so given, paid, secured, or contracted for; the one moiety of which forfeitures shall be to her Majesty, her heirs and successors; and the other moiety, with full costs, to any person or persons who shall inform and sue for the same by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any court of record at Westminster, or in the Exchequer of Scotland, at any time after the executing, making, or signing of any such indenture or writing, or making any such contract or agreement, and within one year after the time limited or appointed for the service of any such clerk, apprentice, or servant, to or with such master or mistress, shall be expired."

Sect. 36. Sect. 37. "That all the said indentures, and other writings, which shall or ought to contain the whole sum truly given, paid, agreed, or contracted for, as aforesaid, which shall, within or during the said term of five years, be entered into, executed, or signed, in any part of Great Britain, (not being within the limits of the said weekly bills of mortality,) shall (at the option of the party concerned) be brought or sent (a) either to the head office within the limits of the said weekly bills, or else to some of the collectors, appointed or to be appointed for her Majesty's duties upon stamp vellum, parchment, and paper, who shall reside without the limits of the said weekly bills, in England, Wales, or the town of Berwick upon Tweed, or to some of the officers to be appointed for the duties by this act granted in Scotland, within two months after the date, execution, or signing of every such indenture or writing respectively; and upon producing of every such indenture or writing, either at the said head office, or to such collector, or other officer, as aforesaid, her Majesty's duties hereby granted shall be paid, either to the said receiver-general at the said head office, or to such collector or other officer as aforesaid; and in case the said payment shall be made to the immediate hands of the receiver-general in the said head office, for her Majesty's use, then the indenture or writing, for which such payment shall be made, shall be forthwith stamped with one of the said new stamps, as the case shall require; and in case such payment shall be made to the hands of such collector, or other officer, without the limits of the said weekly bills, the same collector or other officer is hereby required to endorse on such indenture or other writing a receipt for the monies so paid, in words at length, bearing date the day on which such payment shall be made, and to subscribe his name thereto, (to the intent that he may thereby be charged with every sum so paid to him,) and forthwith deliver back the said indenture or writing so endorsed to the bringer thereof."

Sect. 38. "That every such indenture or writing so endorsed (in case the same be entered into, executed, or signed within the space of fifty miles, to be computed from the limits of the said weekly bills of mortality,) shall, within three months after the date or making thereof, and if the same be entered into, executed, or signed in any part of Great Britain at a greater distance from the limits aforesaid, shall, within six months after the date or making thereof, be brought or sent to the said head office, where the same (being produced with the said receipt endorsed) shall be immediately stamped with one of the said new stamps, as the case shall require, by the officer appointed, or to be appointed, for that purpose."

Sect. 39. "That all such indentures or writings as aforesaid, wherein shall not be truly inserted and written the full sum and sums of money received, or in any wise directly or indirectly given, paid, secured, or contracted for, with or in relation to such clerk, apprentice, or servant, as aforesaid, or whereupon the duties payable by this act shall not be duly paid or lawfully tendered, or which shall not be stamped, or lawfully tendered to be stamped, according to the tenor and true meaning of this act, within the respective times herein for that purpose severally and respectively limited, shall be void, and not available in any court or place, or to any purpose whatsoever; (b) and the clerk, apprentice, or servant, whom the same shall concern or relate to, shall in such case be utterly incapable of being free of any city, town, corporation, or company, and of following or exercising the intended profession, trade, or employment; any charter, law, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding." I, A. B., do swear, that I will faithfully execute the trust reposed in me pursuant to the act of parliament, intituled, An act for laying certain duties upon candles, and certain rates upon monies to be given with clerks and apprentices, towards raising her Majesty's supply for the year one thousand seven hundred and ten, without fraud or concealment; and shall from time to time true account make of my doings therein, and deliver the same to such person or persons as her Majesty, her heirs and successors, shall appoint to receive such account; and shall take no fee, reward, or profit for the execution or performance of the said trust, or the business relating thereto, from any person or persons, other than such as shall be paid or allowed by her Majesty, her heirs and successors, or some other person or persons under her or them to that purpose authorized.

Which oath shall and may be administered by any two or more of the commissioners last mentioned, or any justice of the peace."

Sect. 43. "That no indenture or writing required by this act to be stamped as aforesaid, shall be given or admitted in evidence in any suit to be brought by any of the parties thereunto, unless such party, on whose behalf the same shall be given or admitted in evidence, do first make oath, that to the best of his or her knowledge, the sum or sums therein for that purpose inserted or mentioned was or were really and truly all that was directly or indirectly given, paid, secured, or contracted for, on behalf or in respect of such clerk, apprentice, or servant, to or for the benefit of the master or mistress to or with whom such clerk, apprentice, or servant was put or placed."

Sect. 44. "That the said commissioners for managing the said duties on stamp vellum, parchment, and paper, and all other officers who shall be employed in or about the collecting or managing of the duties last mentioned and hereby granted, shall, in and for the better execution of their several offices and trusts, observe and perform such rules, methods, and orders as they respectively shall from time to time receive from the Lord High Treasurer now being, or the Lord High Treasurer of the Exchequer, or commissioners of the treasury for the time being; and that no fee or reward shall be demanded or taken by any of her Majesty's officers, relating to the said stamp duties, from any of her Majesty's subjects, for any matter or thing to be done in pursuance of this act; and in case any officer entrusted, or to be entrusted, in the execution of this act, in relation to the said stamp duties, shall refuse or neglect to perform any matter or thing by this act required to be done or performed by him, whereby any of her Majesty's subjects shall or may sustain any damage whatsoever, such officer so offending shall be liable, by any action to be founded on this statute, to answer to the party grieved all such damages with treble costs of suit."

Sect. 45. "That during the said five years, where any thing or things, (a) not being lawful money of Great Britain, shall directly or indirectly be given, assigned, conveyed, delivered, contracted for, or secured, to or for the use or benefit of any master or mistress, with or in respect of any such clerk, apprentice, or servant, for whom a duty is chargeable by this act; the duties hereby granted and last-mentioned shall be answered and paid for the full value or values of such thing or things, (a) and the same duties for the said values shall be secured and answered in the same manner and form, and under the like pains, penalties, forfeitures, and incapacities, as are before in this act provided for securing the said rates upon monies given or paid, or agreed to be given or paid, with such clerks, apprentices, or servants as aforesaid.

The 9 Anne, c. 21, renders perpetual the duties and regulations of 8 Anne, c. 9, and the words "or other considerations," are substituted for "thing or things," in the prior act.

The 12 Anne, stat. 1, c. 18, s. 2, enacts, "that if any person whatsoever, who shall be an apprentice, bound by indenture to, or shall be a hired servant to or with any person whatsoever, who did come into, or shall reside in any parish, township, or place, in that part of Great Britain called England, by means or license of such certificate, and not afterwards having gained a legal settlement in such parish, township, or place, such apprentice, by virtue of such apprenticeship, indenture, or binding; and such servant, by being hired by or serving as a servant as aforesaid to such person, shall not gain, or be adjudged to have any settlement in such parish, township, or place, by reason of such apprenticeship or binding, or by reason of such hiring or serving therein; but every such apprentice and servant shall have his and their settlements in such parish, township, or place, as if he or they had not been bound apprentice or apprentices, or had not been a hired servant or servants to such person as aforesaid; any act or acts of parliament to the contrary notwithstanding."

The 10 Geo. II. c. 31, regulates to what waterman an apprentice may be bound; and see Rex v. Gravesend, 3 Bar. & Adol. 240, post.

The 13 Geo. II. c. 17, s. 2, enacts, "That every person, who, not having before used the sea, shall bind himself apprentice to serve at sea, shall be freed and exempted from being impressed for the full space of three years, to be computed from the time of his binding himself apprentice as aforesaid."

The 18 Geo. II. c. 22, s. 23, 24, enacts, "That if the master shall neglect to pay the duties, he shall, besides all other penalties, forfeit double duty."

The 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 3, enacts, "That it shall and may be lawful to and for any two or more such justices, upon any complaint or application by any apprentice put out by the parish, or any other apprentice, upon whose binding out no larger a sum than five pounds of lawful British money was paid, touching or concerning any misuse, refusal of necessary provision, cruelty, or other ill-treatment of or towards such apprentice, by his or her master or mistress, to summon such master or mistress to appear before such justices, at a reasonable time to be named in such summons; and such justices shall and may examine into the matter of such complaint; and upon proof thereof made, upon oath, to their satisfaction (whether the master or mistress be present or not, if service of the summons be also, upon oath,

Sect. 4. "That it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices, upon application or complaint made, upon oath, by any master or mistress, against any such apprentice, touching or concerning any misdemeanor, miscarriage, or ill-behaviour, in such his or her service (which oath such justices are hereby empowered to administer), to hear, examine, and determine the same, and to punish the offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to remain and be corrected, and held to hard labour for a reasonable time, not exceeding one calendar month; or otherwise by discharging such apprentice, in manner and form before mentioned."

Sect. 5. "That if any person or persons shall think himself, herself, or themselves aggrieved by such determination, order, or warrant of such justice or justices as aforesaid (save and except any order of commitment), he, she, or they may appeal to the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be held for the county, riding, liberty, city, town corporate, or place where such determination or order shall be made; which said next general quarter sessions is hereby empowered to hear and finally determine the same, and to give and award such costs to any of the respective persons, appellant or respondent, as the said sessions shall judge reasonable, not exceeding forty shillings; the same to be levied by distress and sale, in manner before mentioned."

Sect. 6. "That no writ of certiorari, or other process, shall issue or be issuable to remove any proceedings whatsoever, had in pursuance of this act, into any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster."

Sect. 7. "That nothing in this act contained shall extend to the stannaries in the counties of Devon and Cornwall."

The 22 Geo. II. c. 45, s. 5, 6, 7, 8, contains important provisions enabling the master or apprentice, on certain terms, and on payment of double duty, to render the indenture valid, even within two years after the termination of the apprenticeship. (See these clauses, post, sixth head.)

The 31 Geo. II. c. 11, s. 1, enacts, "That no person who shall have been bound an apprentice, or who shall hereafter be bound an apprentice, by any deed, writing, or contract, not indented, being first legally stamped, shall be liable to be removed from the town, parish, or place, where he or she shall have been so bound an apprentice, and resident forty days, by virtue of any order of removal, granted by two justices of the peace of any county, riding, division, city, borough, town corporate, or place; or by virtue of any order, of the justices at their general or quarter sessions, by reason or on account of such deed, writing, or contract, not being indented only." See Rex v. Ditchingham, 4 T. R. 770.

The 2 Geo. III. c. 15, s. 22 and 23, was repealed by 50 Geo. III. c. 108, s. 1.

The 18 Geo. III. c. 47, prohibits the binding of a male apprentice beyond the age of twenty-one years.

The 20 Geo. III. c. 36, intituled, "An Act for obviating doubts, touching the binding and receiving of poor children apprentices, in pursuance of several acts of parliament made for the relief of the poor within particular incorporated hundreds or districts; and for ascertaining the settlement of bastard children born in the houses of industry within such hundreds or districts," enacts, "That the respective persons to whom any poor children shall be appointed to be bound apprentices, in pursuance of any act or acts of parliament made and passed for the better relief and employment of the poor in any particular incorporated hundreds or districts, within that part of Great Britain called England, shall, and they are hereby required to receive and provide for such children, according to the indentures to be executed by the directors and acting guardians of the poor for such respective hundreds or districts, for the binding of such poor children, in like manner as persons are now obliged by the laws in being to receive and provide for poor children appointed to be bound apprentices by churchwardens and overseers of the poor with the assent of two justices of the peace, and also to execute the counterpart of such indentures respectively. And if any person, to whom any poor child shall be appointed to be bound apprentice, in pursuance of any such act of parliament as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to receive and provide for such poor child, or to execute the counterpart of the indenture for binding such child as aforesaid, every person so refusing or neglecting, upon proof of such refusal or neglect being made, by the oath of one of the directors or acting guardians, or of some other credible witness, before any two justices of the peace, acting in and for the county, liberty, or place within which the incorporated hundred or district to which such child belongs shall be situate, shall forfeit and pay to the directors and acting guardians of the poor for such incorporated hundred or district, or to their treasurer or appointee, to be applied to the relief of the poor within the same, the sum of ten pounds; such penalty or forfeiture to be levied, by distress and sale of the goods of the person refusing or neglecting as aforesaid, by warrant under the hands and seals of such justices; saving always to the person, to whom any poor child shall be so appointed to be bound an apprentice, his or her appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for that county, liberty, or place, whose order therein shall be final." (See 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 5, ante, 453).

Sect. 2. "Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to compel any person to take any such poor child apprentice as aforesaid, unless such person shall be an inhabitant and occupier of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in the parish to which such child belongs; and that all bastard children born or to be born in the house of industry within any such incorporated hundred or district, shall be deemed to belong to the parish or place where the mother of such bastard child was legally settled."

The 28 Geo. III. c. 48, intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of Chimney-Sweepers and their Apprentices," enacts, "That from and after the fifth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight, it shall and may be lawful to and for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, for the time being, of the several and respective parishes, townships, or places, within the kingdom of Great Britain, by and with the consent and approbation of two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, acting in and for any county, riding, city, town corporate, borough, or division, within Great Britain, (such consent and approbation to be signified by such justices in writing, under their hands, according to the form prescribed by the indenture contained in the schedule hereunto annexed), to bind or put out any boy or boys, who is, are, or shall be of the age of eight years or upwards; and who is, are, or shall be chargeable, or whose parents are or shall become chargeable to the parish or parishes, or places, where they shall so be; or who shall beg for alms; or by and with the consent of the parent or parents of such boy or boys, to be apprentice or apprentices to any person or persons using or exercising the trade, business, or mystery of a chimney-sweeper, for so long time, and until such boy or boys shall attain or come to the age of sixteen years; and such binding out any such apprentice and apprentices shall be as effectual in the law, to all intents and purposes, as if such boy or boys was or were of full age, and by indenture had bound himself or themselves an apprentice or apprentices."

Sect. 2. "And, to the end that the time of the continuance of the service of such apprentice or apprentices may plainly and certainly appear; be it further enacted, That the age of every such boy or boys, so to be bound apprentice or apprentices, shall be mentioned and inserted in such indenture, being taken truly from the copy of the entry in the register book, wherein the time of his or their being baptized is or shall be entered (where the same can or may be had); which copy shall be given and attested by the minister, vicar, or curate of such parish or parishes, or places wherein such boy or boys' baptism shall be registered, without fee or reward, and may be written upon paper or parchment, without any stamp or mark; and where no such copy of such boy or boys being baptized can be had, such justices of the peace shall, as fully as they can, inform themselves of his or their age or

Sect. 3. "And, to the end and intent that there may be no doubt or uncertainty as to the form of the indenture, by which such boy or boys shall be bound apprentice or apprentices as aforesaid, and that the stipulations and agreements to be made and entered into by the said master or mistress may plainly and fully appear; be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That such indenture shall be made and written out according to the form in the schedule hereunto annexed, and that the same shall not be charged with, or liable to, the payment of any higher or other stamp duty, than is now charged upon indentures for binding out poor children by their respective parishes or places; any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 4. "That all indentures, covenants, promises, and bargains, hereafter to be made, or taken, of or for the having, taking, employing, retaining, or keeping of any boy or boys, as or in the nature of an apprentice or apprentices, or servant or servants employed in the capacity of a climbing boy or chimney-sweeper, who shall be under the age of eight years as aforesaid, than is by this act limited, ordained, and appointed, shall be absolutely void in the law to all intents and purposes: and that every person who shall from henceforth have, take, employ, retain, or keep, any such boy or boys, as or in the nature of an apprentice or apprentices, or servant employed in the capacity of a climbing boy or chimney-sweeper as aforesaid, who shall be under the age of eight years as aforesaid, contrary to the tenor and true meaning of this act, and being convicted thereof, as hereinafter mentioned, shall forfeit and pay for every such apprentice or servant, so by him or her had, taken, employed, retained, or kept, any sum not exceeding ten pounds, nor less than five pounds."

Sect. 5. "And whereas, in many large parishes within this realm, there are several townships or villages, and overseers of the poor are chosen and appointed within and for each such township or village respectively; be it therefore further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the overseers of the poor of every such township or village shall and may from time to time, within every such township or village, do, perform, and execute all and every the acts, powers, and authorities hereby enacted or directed to be done, performed, or executed, by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of a parish or place; any thing herein, or in any other law or laws, contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

Sect. 6. "That it shall and may be lawful for one or more such justice or justices, and he or they shall have full power and authority, and is and are hereby authorized and empowered to inquire into and examine, hear, and determine, as well all complaints of hard or ill usage from the several and respective masters or mistresses, to whom such apprentice and apprentices shall be so bound as aforesaid, as also all complaints of such boys as already have, or who shall at any time hereafter voluntarily put themselves apprentices to such trade, business, or mystery of a chimney-sweeper as aforesaid; and in like manner also to inquire into and examine, hear, and determine all complaints of masters or mistresses against such apprentice and apprentices, and to make such orders therein respectively, as he or they is or are now enabled by law to do in other cases between masters and apprentices."

Sect. 7. "That no person or persons using or exercising the trade, business, or mystery of a chimney-sweeper, shall retain, keep, or employ any more than six apprentices at one and the same time; and that the name of every person so taking or receiving an apprentice or apprentices as aforesaid, and also the place of his or her abode, shall be marked or put upon a brass plate, to be set or affixed in the front of a leathern cap, which every master or mistress shall provide for each such apprentice, and which he shall wear when out upon his duty; and that every master or mistress shall forfeit for every apprentice so retained, kept or employed by him or her beyond the number limited by this act, or for neglecting to provide each such apprentice with such leathern cap, and brass plate to be so affixed thereupon, and marked with his or her name and place of abode as aforesaid, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, any sum not exceeding the sum of ten pounds, nor less than five pounds."

Sect. 8. "That if any such master or mistress shall misuse or evil treat his or her apprentice, or that the said apprentice shall have any just cause to complain of the forfeiture or breach of any of the covenants, clauses, or agreements, to be expressed and contained in such indenture, made and written out according to the form in the schedule hereunto annexed, on the part or behalf of such master or mistress, then, and in such case, such master or mistress, being convicted thereof in manner hereinafter mentioned, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding ten pounds, nor less than five pounds."

Sect. 9. "That no person or persons using or exercising the trade, business, or mystery of a chimney-sweeper, shall let out to hire, or lend by the day or otherwise, to any other person for the purpose of sweeping chimneys, any boy or boys that are already apprentice or apprentices, or that shall hereafter be bound apprentice or apprentices, under the directions of this act, nor shall cause such boy or boys to call the streets before seven of the clock in the morning, nor after twelve of the clock at noon, between Michaelmas and Lady-day, nor before five of the clock in the morning, nor after twelve of the clock at noon, between Lady-day and Michaelmas; and that if any master or mistress shall, after the passing of this act, offend in any of the cases aforesaid, he or she shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding ten pounds, nor less than five pounds."

Sect. 10. "That all convictions for penalties and forfeitures, by this act imposed for any offence against the same, shall be made before one or more justice or justices of the peace, acting for the county, riding, city, town, borough, or division, where such offence was committed, either by confession of the offender, or upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses; and for that purpose it shall be lawful for one or more such justice or justices, upon complaint made to him or them thereof, to summon the person or persons so offending before him or them to answer to such complaint in such manner as he or they is and are authorized to do in any other matter cognizable before a magistrate."

Sect. 11. "That all penalties and forfeitures by this act imposed for any offence, neglect, or default against the same, and all costs and charges to be allowed and ordered by the authority of this act, shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, or person liable or ordered to pay the same respectively, by warrant under the hand and seal of one or more such justice or justices of the peace acting for the county, riding, city, town, borough, or division, where such offence, neglect, or default shall happen; and such order for payment of such costs or charges shall be made, rendering the overplus of such distress and sale (if any) to the party or parties, after deducting the charges for making the same; which warrant such justice or justices is and are hereby empowered and required to grant, upon conviction of the offender, by confession, or upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, or upon order made as aforesaid; and the penalties and forfeitures, costs and charges, when so levied, shall be paid, the one half to the informer, and the other half to the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place, where the master or mistress of such apprentice shall dwell and inhabit; and in case such distress cannot be found, and such penalties and forfeitures, or the said costs or charges, shall not be forthwith paid, it shall and may be lawful for such justice and justices, and he and they is and are hereby authorized and required, by warrant under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, to commit such offender or offenders, or person or persons liable to pay the same respectively, to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, riding, city, town, borough, or division, where the offence shall be committed, or such order as aforesaid shall be made, for any

Sect. 12. "Provided, nevertheless, that no warrant of distress shall be issued for levying any penalty or forfeiture, costs or charges, until six days after the offender shall have been convicted, and an order made and served upon him or her for payment thereof."

Sect. 13. "That where any distress shall be made for any sum or sums of money, to be levied by virtue of this act, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party or parties making the same be deemed a trespasser or trespassers, on account of any default or want of form in any proceedings relating thereto; nor shall the party or parties distraining be deemed a trespasser or trespassers ab initio, on account of any irregularity which shall be afterwards done by the party or parties distraining; but the person or persons aggrieved by such irregularity may recover a full satisfaction for the special damage in an action on the case."

Sect. 14. "That no plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in any action for any such irregularity, trespass, or wrongful proceedings, if tender of such amends shall be made by or on the behalf of the party or parties who shall have committed, or caused to have been committed, any such irregularity or wrongful proceedings, before such action brought; and in case no such tender shall have been made, it shall and may be lawful for the defendant, in any such action, by leave of the court where such action shall depend, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he or they shall see fit, whereupon such proceedings or orders and judgments shall be had, made, and given, in and by such court, as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into court."

Sect. 16. "That if any person shall think himself or herself aggrieved by any thing done by any justice or justices of the peace, in pursuance of this act, such person may appeal to the justices of the peace at the next general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county, riding, city, town, borough, or division, wherein the cause of such complaint shall arise, having first entered into a recognizance, with sufficient surety, before such justices, to prosecute and abide by the order or orders that shall be made on such appeal, and also giving, or causing to be given, to the justice by whose act or acts such person shall think himself or herself aggrieved, notice in writing of his or her intention to bring such appeal, and of the matter thereof, within six days after the cause of such complaint shall have arisen."

Sect. 17. "That this act shall be deemed, adjudged, and taken to be a public act; and be judicially taken notice of as such by all judges, justices, and other persons whomsoever, without specially pleading the same." (See also 56 Geo. III. c. 139, post, 475.)

The Schedule to which the Act refers.

Form of indenture to a chimney-sweeper.

This Indenture, made the _____ day of _____ in the _____ year of the reign of our sovereign Lord, George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c., and in the year of our Lord _____ between A. B. and C. D., churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of _____ in the county of _____ [or "E. F., the father or next friend of the boy to be placed out," as the case may be], of the one part, and _____ of the parish of _____ in the county of _____ chimney-sweeper, of the other part, witnesseth, That the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor [or "the said E. F.," as the case may be], by and with the consent and approbation of G. H. and I. K., two of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the county, riding, city, town, borough, or division [as the case may be], signified as hereunder written, put, bound, and by these presents _____ put and bind a poor boy of the said parish, township, or place, being of the age of _____ years [as the case may be], to be apprentice to the said he being his first, second, third, fourth, fifth, [or] sixth apprentice [as the case may be], to learn the trade, business, art, and mystery of a chimney-sweeper, and with him [or "her"] to dwell, remain, and serve, from the day of the date of these presents, for and during the term of years, from hence next ensuing, fully to be complete and ended; during all which time he, the said apprentice, his said master [or "mistress"] faithfully shall serve and obey, his [or "her"] secrets keep, and his [or "her"] lawful commands every where gladly do and perform; he shall not haunt ale-houses or gaming-houses, nor absent himself from the service of his said master [or "mistress"] day or night, without his [or "her"] leave, but in all things as a faithful apprentice shall behave himself towards his said master [or "mistress"] and all his [or "her"] during the said term: And the said in consideration of the good will which he [or "she"] hath and beareth towards the said apprentice, and of the faithful service so to be performed by him, doth hereby covenant, promise, and agree with the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor [or "the said E. F.," as the case may be], that he [or "she"], the said his [or "her"] said apprentice, in the art and mystery of a chimney-sweeper, which he [or "she"] now useth, shall and will teach and instruct, or cause to be taught and instructed, in the best manner that he [or "she"] can, and shall and will provide and allow unto the said apprentice, during all the said term, competent and sufficient meat, drink, washing, lodging, apparel, and all other things necessary for the said apprentice: And that the said executors, administrators, or assigns, shall not nor will assign over this present indenture, or the apprentice to be bound thereby, without the consent and approbation, in writing, of two or more such justices of the peace, to be signified according to the form of the approbation hereunder written. And whereas, from the nature of the business or employment of a chimney-sweeper, it is necessary for the boys, employed in climbing, to have a dress particularly suited to that purpose, which dress is only fit for that part of the occupation; the said doth hereby also covenant, promise, and agree to and with the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor [or "the said E. F.," as the case may be], to find and allow such suitable dress for the said apprentice, as often as need or occasion shall be and require, and provide for and deliver to the said apprentice, once in every year at least, during the term aforesaid, over and above the said dress proper for climbing, one whole and complete suit of clothing, with suitable linen, stockings, hats, and shoes: And further, that the said shall and will, at least once in every week, cause the said apprentice to be thoroughly washed and cleansed from soot and dirt, and shall and will require the said apprentice to attend the public worship of God on the Sabbath day, and permit and allow him to receive the benefit of any other religious instruction; and that the said apprentice shall not wear his sweeping dress on that day: And that the said shall not nor will compel or oblige the said apprentice to call the streets, or any other places, before seven of the clock in the morning, nor after twelve of the clock at noon, between Michaelmas and Lady-day, nor before five of the clock in the morning, nor after twelve of the clock at noon, between Lady-day and Michaelmas: And that the said shall not, nor will at any time during the said term, let out his [or "her"] said apprentice for hire by the day, night, or otherwise, to any other person or persons exercising or using the said trade, nor shall the said or any person or persons whomsoever by his [or "her"] directions, require or force him, the said apprentice, to climb or go up any chimney which shall be actually on fire, nor make use of any violent or improper means to force him to climb or go up any such chimney; but shall in all things treat his [or "her"] said apprentice with as much humanity and care as the nature of the employment of a chimney-sweeper will admit of. In witness, &c.

Form of Approbation by Justices.

We, the above-named G. H. and I. K., two of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the county, riding, city, town, borough, or division [as the case may be], having inspected and examined the above-named [the boy to be placed out or assigned over], do hereby consent to, and approve of his being bound [or "assigned over"] as an apprentice, to the above-named [the master or mistress], according to the terms and stipulations expressed in the above-written indenture.

Proviso to that effect to be annexed to covenant, but if omitted, the covenant to continue no longer in force.

Within three months after the death of a master, two justices may order apprentices to serve the residue of their terms with persons of the description herein specified, on application, &c.

thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, in case of the death of any master or mistress of any parish apprentice, during the term of such apprenticeship, upon the binding out of which apprentice no larger sum than five pounds has been or shall be paid, such covenant as is before mentioned for the maintenance of such apprentice, inserted in the indenture of apprenticeship, by which such apprentice shall have been or shall be bound, shall not continue and be in force for and during any longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, and that during such three calendar months such apprentice shall continue to live with and serve, as an apprentice, the executors and administrators of such master or mistress, some or one of them, or such person or persons as such executors or administrators, some or one of them, shall appoint; and the master or mistress whom such apprentice shall accordingly serve during the said three calendar months, and also such apprentice shall during that time be subject and liable to all the laws which are or shall be in force for the better government and regulation of masters and parish apprentices; and that in all such parish indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid, which shall be made from and after the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, there shall be annexed to the covenant in such indentures to be entered into on the part of the master or mistress of such apprentice, for such maintenance as aforesaid, a proviso declaring, that such a covenant shall not be made to continue and be in force for any longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, in case such master or mistress shall die during the term of such apprenticeship; which proviso may be in the form or to the effect mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed, marked with the letter A.; and in case such proviso shall happen to be omitted in any such indenture, the covenant therein contained on the part of the master, for the maintenance of the apprentice, shall be deemed and taken to continue in and be in force for no longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, in case such master or mistress shall die during the term of such apprenticeship; any thing in any such covenant to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 2. "That within such three calendar months after the death of such master or mistress, it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place, where such master or mistress shall have died, on application made to them by the widow of such master, or by the husband of such mistress, or by any son or daughter, brother or sister, or by any executor or executrix, administrator or administratrix, of such master or mistress, by indorsement on any such indenture of apprenticeship, or the counterpart thereof, or by any other instrument in writing, (which indorsement or instrument may be in the forms or to the effect mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed marked with the letters B. and C.,) to order and direct that such apprentice shall serve as an apprentice any one of such persons so making such application as aforesaid (such person having lived with, and having been part of the family of, such master or mistress at the time of his or her death,) as the said justices shall in their discretion think fit, for and during the residue of the term mentioned in such indenture of apprenticeship; and the person obtaining such order shall declare his acceptance of such apprentice, by subscribing his or her name to such order; and that from and after such order shall be made, the executors and administrators, and the personal assets, estate, and effects of the master or mistress so dying as aforesaid, shall be released and discharged of and from any promise or covenant whatsoever, contained in any such indenture of apprenticeship, on the part of such master or mistress, his or her executors or administrators, to be done and performed; and the person obtaining the same shall be, and be deemed and taken to be, the master or mistress of such apprentice, in like manner as if such apprentice had been originally bound to such master or mistress; and that such last-mentioned master or mistress, his or her executors and administrators, each and every of them, shall be held and bound by the several promises and covenants contained in any such indenture of apprenticeship on the part of the master or mistress therein named, his or her executors or administrators, to be done and performed, in like manner as if such master or mistress obtaining such order as aforesaid had duly executed the counterpart of such indenture; and that such master or mistress and apprentice shall be subject and liable to the several penalties, provisions and regulations which shall then be in force for the better government and good order of masters and parish apprentices; and that all justices of the peace shall have the like powers and authority with respect thereto as they shall then have by any act or acts of parliament relating to parish apprentices."

Sect. 3. "That all and singular the regulations and provisions hereinbefore made, and directed to take place on the death of the original master or mistress, shall be deemed and taken to relate to the like event of the death of any such subsequent master or mistress, and to their several relations and representatives before enumerated, from time to time, as often as the case shall happen, during the continuance of the term mentioned in any such indenture of apprenticeship."

Sect. 4. "That in case no such application shall be made as aforesaid within three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, or in case such two justices, to whom any such application as aforesaid shall have been made, shall not think fit that such apprenticeship should be continued, then the said apprenticeship shall be determined, and the indenture of apprenticeship and covenants therein contained shall be at an end, in like manner as they would have been at the expiration of the term therein mentioned."

Sect. 5. "That nothing herein-before contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any parish apprentice, but to such only as shall be living with, and shall make part of the family, or shall be in the actual employment, of such original master or mistress, or of any subsequent master or mistress appointed under and by virtue of the several provisions of this act at the time of the death of any such masters or mistresses respectively."

Sect. 6. "That in case any such original master or mistress as aforesaid, or any master or mistress appointed under or by virtue of this act, shall, during the term of any such parish apprenticeship as aforesaid, or if the executors or administrators of such masters or mistresses, any or either of them, having assets, shall, during such three calendar months as aforesaid, refuse or neglect to maintain and provide for any such apprentice according to the terms of such covenant, it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place in which the parish or place shall lie, to which such apprentice shall belong, on complaint of such apprentice, or of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place, by warrant under their hands or seals, to levy by distress and sale of the personal estate and effects or assets of such master or mistress respectively, such sum or sums of money as shall be necessary for the maintenance and clothing of such apprentice, and as shall also be necessary to reimburse to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place any sum or sums of money that shall have been reasonably expended by them for that purpose."

Sect. 7. "That it shall and may be lawful for any master or mistress of any such parish apprentice as aforesaid, by indorsement on the indenture of apprenticeship, or by other instrument in writing, by and with the consent of two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place where such master or mistress shall dwell, testified by such justices under their hands, to assign such apprentice to any person who is willing to take such apprentice for the residue of the term mentioned in such indenture of apprenticeship: provided always, that such person to whom such apprentice is intended to be assigned shall at the same time, by indorsement on the counterpart of such indenture, or by writing under his or her hand, stating the said indenture of apprenticeship and the indorsement and consent aforesaid, declare his or her acceptance of such apprentice, and acknowledge himself, herself, his or her executors and administrators, to be bound by the agreements and covenants mentioned in the said indenture, on the part of the master or mistress of such apprentice to be done and per-

Sect. 8. "That it shall and may be lawful for two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place, where any such master or mistress shall live, on the application of such master or mistress requesting that any such apprentice may be discharged for the reasons aforesaid, to enquire into the matter of such allegations, and to discharge any such apprentice from his apprenticeship, in case the said two justices shall find such allegations to be true."

Sect. 9. "That nothing herein-before contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to the indenture made on the binding of any apprentice by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish or place, or the major part of them, under and by virtue of the powers given to them by the statute made in the forty-third year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in the case of any such binding, where a larger sum than five pounds shall be given, but that such binding shall be subject and liable to the like rules and regulations as they would have been subject and liable to in case this act had not been made."

Sect. 10. "That no indorsement or indorsements on any parish indenture of apprenticeship herein-before mentioned, made or executed in pursuance of this act, shall be charged or chargeable with any duty imposed upon stamped vellum, parchment, and paper, but the same shall be, and are hereby declared to be exempted therefrom, and that no other instrument or instruments in writing herein-before mentioned shall be charged or chargeable with any higher duty than with the duty imposed or to be imposed on parish indentures of apprenticeship."

Sect. 11. "That in every case where any parish apprentice whatsoever shall be discharged from his apprenticeship by two justices, under and by virtue of the said last mentioned act, it shall and may be lawful for such two justices to order such master or mistress to deliver up to such apprentice his or her clothes and wearing apparel, and also to pay to such churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish or place to which such apprentice shall belong, some or one of them, a sum not exceeding ten pounds, to be applied by them, some or one of them, under the order of such justices, for the again placing and binding out such apprentice so discharged as aforesaid, or otherwise for his or her benefit as to such justices shall seem meet; and also to pay a sum, not exceeding five pounds, in case such master or mistress shall refuse to deliver up such clothes and wearing apparel; and in case such master or mistress shall refuse to pay the sum so ordered by the said justices to be paid as aforesaid, or either of them, or any part thereof, it shall and may be lawful for such two justices, by warrant under their hands and seals, to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such master and mistress, together with the reasonable expenses of such distress; and also, that it shall and may be lawful for such two justices, if they shall so think fit, to compel such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, some or one of them, to enter into a recognizance for the effectual prosecution by indictment of such master or mistress for such ill treatment of any such apprentice so discharged as aforesaid, and also to order that the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid and discharged, or reimbursed to such person or persons entering into such recognizance as aforesaid, one moiety thereof out of the poor-rates of the parish or place to which such apprentice shall belong, and the other moiety thereof out of the common stock of the county in which such parish or place shall lie; and in case the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place for the time being shall refuse to pay such their moiety as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for such two justices, by warrant under their hands and seals, to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, any or either of them, together with the reasonable expenses of such distress."

32 Geo. 3, c. 57.

Sect. 12. "That in every case where any parish apprentice shall have been so discharged from any master or mistress as aforesaid, under and by virtue of the said last mentioned act, and such master and mistress shall have been convicted of such offence, in consequence of such prosecution by indictment as aforesaid, or shall have been found guilty thereof in any action brought at the suit of the party injured, it shall not be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish or place, or the major part of them, to bind any other apprentice upon such person; but that whenever such person ought or would be compellable to take a parish apprentice, it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place, where such person shall reside, upon application made to them by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place, to order and direct that such person shall pay into the hands of such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, some or one of them, a sum not exceeding the sum of ten pounds, nor less than five pounds, for the purpose of binding out the child (intended to be bound) an apprentice, with the approbation of such two justices; and in case such person shall refuse to pay such sum as aforesaid, then that it shall and may be lawful for such two justices, by warrant under their hands and seals, to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such person, together with the reasonable expenses of such distress: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for such master or mistress as aforesaid, from whom any parish apprentice shall be discharged under and by virtue of the act, made in the twentieth year of the reign of King George the Second, to appeal against the order made for such discharge as aforesaid, and also against any such order made for his or her payment of any such sum or sums of money in consequence thereof as aforesaid, or for his or her payment of any sum or sums of money in lieu of a subsequent binding, under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, to the next general quarter sessions of the peace of the county, city, riding, division, or place, where, such orders, any or either of them, shall be made, and upon such appeal the said court of general quarter sessions shall finally determine the same, and, in their discretion, allow to all parties their reasonable costs; and no such distress for enforcing the payment of any such sum or sums of money as are last mentioned, shall be taken until after the general quarter session of the peace to be holden next after any such order as aforesaid shall be made, in case the person who is ordered to pay the same shall within seven days after notice given to him or her of such order being made, give notice to such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, some or one of them, of such intended appeal; and in case such person shall fail to appear in support of his appeal at such general quarter session, then the sum of forty shillings shall be added to the expenses of the distress before directed to be taken and levied accordingly."

Justices may order any master, convicted under the last recited act, when liable to take a parish apprentice, to pay to the parish officers a sum not exceeding ten pounds, nor less than five pounds, for the purpose of binding out the child, &c.

Masters may appeal to the quarter sessions, &c.

On notice of such appeal, no distress to be made till after the quarter sessions.

Forty shillings penalty for failing to support appeal.

Sect. 13. "That in all cases where any parish apprentice shall be discharged by two justices, under and by virtue of the said last mentioned act, from his or her apprenticeship, on account of any misdemeanor, mis-carriage, or ill-behaviour on the part of such apprentice, that it shall and may be lawful for such two justices, if they think proper, by warrant under their hands and seals, to punish such offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to remain and be corrected and kept to hard labour for a reasonable time, not exceeding three calendar months, as to such justices shall seem meet."

sale shall be returned upon demand to the owner or owners of such goods and chattels, after deducting the costs and charges of making, keeping, and selling such distress; and such penalties and forfeitures shall be applied for the use of the poor of the parish, township, or place, for which such offender or offenders shall be overseer or overseers; and in case sufficient distress cannot be found, or such penalties and forfeitures shall not be paid forthwith, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices, by warrant under their hands and seals, and they are hereby required to commit every such offender to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, city, or place where the offence shall be committed, there to remain without bail or mainprize, for any time not exceeding one calendar month, unless such penalties and forfeitures shall be sooner paid and satisfied."

Sect. 3. "That it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons at all seasonable hours to inspect such book or books in the hands of the said overseer or overseers, and to take a copy of such entry in such book or books, upon payment of the sum of sixpence, except in case of any of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the said county, who shall be entitled at all such times to inspect such book gratis; and every such book shall be and be deemed to be sufficient evidence in all courts of law whatsoever in proof of the existence of such indentures, and also of the several particulars specified in the said register respecting such indentures, in case it shall be proved to the satisfaction of such court that the said indentures are lost or have been destroyed."

Sect. 4. "That the justices of the peace before whom any person shall be convicted by virtue of this act shall and may cause the conviction to be drawn up in the following form; (videlicet)

Form of conviction.

BE it remembered, that on the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord _____, A. B. is convicted before us two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the [specifying the offence, and the time and place when and where committed, as the case may be] contrary to an act made in the forty-second year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled, [here set forth the title of this act.] Given under our hands and seals the day and year above mentioned."

Sect. 5. "That whenever any such apprentice shall be assigned or bound over to any other master or mistress by virtue of an act, passed in the thirty-second year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled an act for the further regulation of parish apprentices, then and in every such case the overseer or overseers, party or parties to the assignment of such apprentice, shall insert the name and residence of the master or mistress to whom such apprentice shall be assigned or bound over as aforesaid, together with the other particulars, in the book or books herein directed to be provided and kept by such overseer or overseers; and for non-performance thereof, every such overseer or overseers shall be liable to the pains, penalties, and forfeitures incurred by this act, in like manner as if such apprentice had been originally bound to such master or mistress."

Sect. 6. And whereas by different acts of parliament the like powers are given to certain persons therein named for binding out parish apprentices as are given to the overseers of the poor be it therefore enacted, that such several persons shall be subject to the like pains, penalties and forfeitures for non-compliance with the several provisions and directions in this act contained, for registering any parish apprentice bound out or assigned by them respectively, to which overseers of the poor are subject and liable by virtue of this act for noncompliance with such provisions and directions."

Sect. 7. "That if any person or persons shall think himself, herself, or themselves aggrieved by any thing done in pursuance of this act, it shall and may be lawful to and for such person or persons to appeal to the justices at the first general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county or place where the cause of appeal shall arise, within four calendar months next after the cause of appeal shall have arisen, on giving to the person or persons appealed against ten days' notice of such appeal and of the matter thereof; and the justices at such sessions are hereby authorized and required to hear and determine the matter of such appeal in a summary way, and to grant such costs and expenses to either party as to them shall seem reasonable."

When apprentices shall be assigned under 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, a like entry thereof shall be made in the said book.

This act extended to persons having like powers as overseers.

Appeal may be made to quarter sessions.

6. Of Settlement by Apprenticeship.

Sect. 8. "And whereas by an act passed in the twentieth year of his present Majesty the powers which were given by several preceding acts of parliament to bind poor children apprentices are, by the said act of the twentieth year of his Majesty, extended as to the power of compelling persons to receive and provide for such poor children as should be appointed to be bound apprentices to them in pursuance of the said prior acts: and whereas since that time several acts have passed by which houses of industry, or establishments for the poor, have been authorized to bind apprentices; and doubts have arisen whether the powers and provisions in the said act of the twentieth of his Majesty will extend to the case of apprentices so bound out under the authority of such subsequent acts; be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the several powers and provisions in the said recited act of the twentieth of his Majesty contained, shall extend and are hereby extended, and shall have full effect, to poor children bound apprentices under the authority of any acts passed since the said recited act, in the same manner as if such acts had passed prior to the said recited act of the twentieth of his Majesty."

The 54 Geo. III. c. 96, intituled, "An Act to amend an Act passed in the fifth year of Queen Elizabeth, intituled, 'An Act containing divers orders for Artificers, Labourers, Servants of Husbandry, and Apprentices.'" "Whereas by an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth, intituled, 'An Act containing divers Orders for Artificers, Labourers, Servants of Husbandry, and Apprentices,' it was enacted, That from and after the first day of May then next coming, it should not be lawful to any person or persons, other than such as did then lawfully use or exercise any art, mystery, or manual occupation, to set up, occupy, use or exercise any craft, mystery, or occupation then used or occupied within the realm of England or Wales, except he shall have been brought up therein seven years at least as an apprentice; nor to set any person on work in such mystery, art, or occupation, not being a workman at that day, except he shall have been apprentice as aforesaid, or else having served as an apprentice as aforesaid shall become a journeyman, or hired by the year, upon pain that every person willingly offending, or doing the contrary, shall forfeit and lose for every default forty shillings for every month: and whereas it is expedient

(a) This enactment obviates the objections to the settlement taken in Rex v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 143; and was suggested by the decision in that case, per Bayley, J., 2 B. & Ald. 202. And see construction of the acts in Rex v. St. Margaret's, Leicester, 2 B. & Ald. 200 (post, Parish Apprentices).

that so much of the said act should be repealed: be it enacted, that so much of the said recited act shall be and the same is hereby repealed, and declared to be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

Sect. 2. "And whereas by the said statute divers rules and regulations were enacted respecting the qualification of persons entitled to take and become apprentices, and the term of years for which such apprentices should be bound, and as to the mode of binding such apprentices; and it was also enacted by the said statute, that all indentures, covenants, promises, and bargains, of and for the having, taking, or keeping of any apprentice, otherwise thereafter to be made or taken, than is by the said statute limited, ordained, and appointed, should be clearly void in the law to all intents and purposes; and that every person that should from thenceforth take or newly retain any apprentice contrary to the tenor and true meaning of the said act, should forfeit and lose for every apprentice so by him taken the sum of ten pounds: and whereas it is expedient that so much of the said recited act should be repealed; be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said recited act shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and that it shall and may be lawful for any person to take, or retain, or become an apprentice, though not according to the provisions of the said act; and that indentures, deeds, and agreements in writing entered into for that purpose, which would be otherwise valid and effectual, shall be valid and effectual in law, the repeal of so much of the said act as is herein last above recited notwithstanding."

Sect. 3. "That any justice or justices of the peace may hear and determine any complaints that may arise respecting any apprenticeships, in like manner as if they had been made under the act hereby in part repealed."

Sect. 4. "That this act, or any thing herein contained, shall not extend or be construed to extend to defeat, alter, or prejudice the custom and order of the city of London concerning apprentices, or the ancient custom, usages, privileges, or franchises of the said city, or of any other city, town, corporation, or company lawfully constituted, or the citizens and freemen thereof; or any bye-law or regulation of any corporation or company lawfully constituted."

The 54 Geo. III. c. 107, intituled, "An Act to render valid certain Indentures for the Binding of Parish Apprentices, and Certificates of the Settlement of Poor Persons," after reciting that churchwardens sworn into office for a whole parish have acted as churchwardens of townships within such parish, without being sworn to act in the latter capacity, enacts, "That all indentures for the binding of poor apprentices, and all certificates of the settlements of poor persons, which have been heretofore signed and executed, or which shall hereafter be signed and executed by a person or persons, who at the time of his or their signing and executing such indenture, or certificate of settlement, acted as churchwarden or churchwardens, chapelwarden or chapelwardens, of the township, hamlet, or chapelry, binding such poor apprentice, or granting such certificate of settlement, shall be deemed and taken to be as good, valid, and effectual as if the same had been signed and executed by a person or persons actually sworn into the office of churchwarden or chapelwarden of such township, hamlet, or chapelry: provided always, that such person or persons shall have been duly sworn into the office of churchwarden of the parish wherein the township, hamlet, or chapelry binding such poor apprentice, or granting such certificate, be contained, or into the office of churchwarden or chapelwarden of such township, hamlet, or chapelry."

Sect. 2. "That all indentures for the binding of poor apprentices, and all certificates of the settlement of poor persons, which shall have been heretofore signed and executed, or which may hereafter be signed and executed by the overseers of the poor of any township, hamlet, chapelry, or place, and the churchwarden or churchwardens, chapelwarden or chapelwardens, acting for or appointed in respect of such township, hamlet, chapelry, or place, or the major part of them, shall be deemed and taken to be as good, valid, and effectual as if the said indentures and certificates had been signed and exeapprentice at a greater distance; and if the father or mother of such child shall be living, and shall reside in or near the place to which such child shall belong, such justices shall (if they see fit) examine such father or mother, or either of them, and shall particularly enquire as to the distance of the residence or place of business of the person or persons to whom it shall be proposed to place such child, and the means of communication therewith; and such justices shall also enquire into the circumstances and character of such person or persons; and if such justices shall, upon such examination and enquiry, think it proper that such child should be bound apprentice to such person or persons, such justices shall make an order, declaring that such person or persons is or are fit person or persons to whom such child may be properly bound as apprentice, and shall thereupon order that the overseer or overseers of the place to which such child shall belong shall be at liberty to bind such child apprentice accordingly: which order shall be delivered to such overseer or overseers, as the warrant for binding such child apprentice as aforesaid, and such order shall be referred to by the date thereof, and the names of the said justices in the indenture of apprenticeship of such child; and after such order shall have been made, such justices shall sign their allowance of such indenture of apprenticeship, before the same shall be executed by any of the other parties thereto: provided always, that no such child shall be bound apprentice to any person or persons residing or having any establishment in trade, at which it is intended that such child shall be employed out of the same county, at a greater distance than forty miles from the parish or place to which such child shall belong, unless such child shall belong to some parish or place which shall be more than forty miles from the city of London; in which case it shall be lawful for the justices who shall authorize the apprenticing of such child to make a special order for that purpose, in which order such justices shall distinctly specify the grounds on which they shall think fit to allow of the apprenticing of such child to a person or persons residing or having an establishment in trade at a greater distance than forty miles from the parish or place to which such child shall belong."

Sect. 2. "That in all cases where the residence or establishment of business of the person or persons to whom any child shall be bound, shall be within a different county or jurisdiction of the peace from that within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situated, and in all other cases where the justices of the peace for the district or place within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situate, and who shall sign the allowance of the indenture by which such child shall be bound, shall not have jurisdiction, every indenture by which such child shall be bound at any time after the said first day of October shall be allowed as well by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place by the officers of which such such child shall be bound shall be situated, as by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place shall be situated wherein such child shall be intended to serve: provided always, that no indenture shall be allowed by any justice of the peace for the county into which such child shall be bound, who shall be engaged in the same business, employment, or manufacture, in which the person to whom such child shall be bound is engaged; and notice shall be given to the overseers of the poor of the parish or place in which such child shall be intended to serve an apprenticeship, before any justice of the peace for the county or district within which such parish or place shall be shall allow such indenture; and such notice shall be proved before such justice shall sign such indenture, unless one of such overseers shall attend such justice, and admit such notice."

Sect. 3. "That the allowance of two justices of the peace for the county, within which the place in which such child shall be intended to serve an apprenticeship shall be situated, shall be valid and effectual, although such place may be situated in a town or liberty within which any other justices of the peace may in other respects have an exclusive jurisdiction."

Sect. 4. "And whereas there are several cities and boroughs which are counties of themselves, and several districts situated without the limits of the county to which such districts respectively belong; be it enacted, that the distance to which parish apprentices may be bound shall not be construed to be limited to such cities and boroughs being counties, but shall extend to the county in which any such city and borough, and any such district, though belonging to another county, shall be locally situated."

Sect. 5. "That no settlement shall be gained by any child who shall be bound by the officers of any parish, township, or place, by reason of such apprenticeship, unless such order shall be made, and such allowances of such indenture of apprenticeship shall be signed as herein-before directed."

Sect. 6. "That in case any overseer or overseers shall bind an apprentice to any person or persons, without having obtained such order and such allowances as hereinbefore required, and in case any person or persons shall receive any such apprentice as so bound, without such order and allowances having been first obtained, the said overseer or overseers, and the said person or persons, shall each respectively forfeit the sum of ten pounds for each apprentice so bound, to be recovered as the penalties hereinafter given are directed to be recovered."

Sect. 7. "That from and after the said first day of October, it shall not be lawful for any parish officers to bind out any child as parish apprentice, until such child shall have attained the age of nine years; any thing in any act or acts of parliament to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 8. "That if any person or persons to whom any child shall be bound apprentice by the overseers of the poor of any parish or place, shall, after the said first day of October, remove his, her, or their residence or establishment of business out of the same county, or forty miles from the parish or place wherein the same was when such child was bound apprentice, such person or persons shall, at least fourteen days previous to such removal, give a written notice thereof to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the place where such apprentice shall then reside, unless such person or persons shall reside in such place under certificate; and in that case such persons shall give the like notice to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the place where such apprentice shall then be legally settled, and which churchwardens and overseers, and also the master or masters, mistress or mistresses, of such apprentice, shall cause such apprentice to appear before two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the county or district within which such apprentice shall be then serving, who shall inquire whether it may be fit and proper that such apprentice should continue in the service of such person or persons, or be discharged therefrom, or bound or assigned over to any other person or persons; and shall thereupon make order, either for the continuance of such apprentice with such person or persons, or for the discharge of such apprentice, or for the binding or assigning of such apprentice to any other person, as to them in their discretion shall seem meet; and if they shall see fit, shall also require the person or persons so giving notice of removal, to pay the amount of the premium received with such apprentice, or such portion of it as to them shall seem meet, for the expense of assigning or binding such apprentice to any other person, to be approved by the said justices: and the person or persons to whom such apprentice shall be so bound or assigned, shall be subject to the same rules and regulations as the person or persons to whom such apprentice shall be originally bound; and in case any such master or masters, mistress or mistresses, shall remove as aforesaid, and shall take any such apprentice to any other place, without such order as aforesaid, or shall wilfully abandon and leave any such apprentice, without giving such notice as aforesaid, every person so offending shall forfeit the sum of ten pounds for every such apprentice, to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein, at the time of such removal or taking, the apprentice shall have been legally settled, for the use of the poor of the same parish, township, or place; provided an information shall be exhibited for such offence within three calendar months next after the commission of the same."

Sect. 9. "And whereas it may be expedient that those to whom parish apprentices are bound or assigned, should be empowered to place out or assign over such apprentices to others, and it is proper that such placing out or assignments should in all instances be under the inspection and control of the magistrates; and it is fit that the person to whom such putting out or assignment shall be made, and also the apprentice, shall be made subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of justices of the peace with respect to masters and parish apprentices; and it is inexpedient that any master or mistress should in any way discharge or dismiss from his or her service any parish apprentice without the consent of such justices: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the first day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixteen, it shall not be lawful for any master or mistress to put away or transfer any parish apprentice to any other, or in any way to discharge or dismiss from his or her service any parish apprentice without such consent of justices as is directed in an act passed in the thirty-second year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled, An act for the further Regulation of Parish Apprentices; and that no settlement shall be gained by any service of such apprentice, after such putting away or transfer, unless such service shall have been performed under the sanction of such consent as aforesaid."

Sect. 10. "That any person or persons who, after the first day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixteen, shall put away or transfer any parish apprentice to another, or who shall in any way discharge or dismiss from his or her service any parish apprentice without such consent as aforesaid, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding ten pounds for every apprentice so transferred."

Sect. 11. "And whereas the salutary provisions enacted by an act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of her majesty Queen Elizabeth, intituled, An act for the Relief of the Poor, are frequently evaded in the binding out of poor children, and the premium of apprenticeship, or a part thereof, is clandestinely provided by parish officers, who are thus enabled to bind out such poor children without the sanction of justices of peace: be it further enacted, that after the said first day of October, no indenture of apprenticeship, by reason of which any expense whatever shall at any time be incurred by the public parochial funds, shall be valid and effectual, unless approved of by two justices of the peace, under their hands and seals, according to the provisions of the said act and of this act."

Sect. 12. "That all penalties and forfeitures hereby imposed for any offence against this act, shall and may be recovered by information before any two justices of the peace of the county or district where such offence shall be committed."

Sect. 13. "That it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices before whom any such penalty shall be recovered to direct such penalty, after deducting the necessary costs and charges attending any information and the proceedings thereon, to be paid, applied, and distributed, either to the person or persons giving information of the offence for which such penalty shall be incurred, or to the overseer of the poor of the parish or township in which such offence shall have been committed, or by the officers whereof such apprentice shall have been bound, for the use of the poor of such parish or township, or in the binding of the apprentice, respecting whom such offence shall be committed, to any other person, or to be distributed and applied for any one or more of such purposes as to such justices shall seem meet."

Sect. 14. "That in case of non-payment of any penalty hereby imposed, the same shall be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods and chattels, by warrant under the hands and seals of the justices before whom such offender shall have been convicted, or of any other two justices of the peace of the same county or district; and for want of such distress, such offender shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for any period not less than one nor more than six months, to be appointed by the justices before whom such offender shall be convicted."

Sect. 15. "That the conviction of all offences against this act shall be in the form following; that is to say,

1. Statutes on Apprentices' Settlements.

52 Geo. 3, c. 139.

Form of conviction.

Be it remembered, that on the _____ day of _____ in the year of our Lord _____ is convicted before us _____ of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of _____ upon the information of _____ that [here state the offence] contrary to the form of the statute passed in the fifty-sixth of the reign of his Majesty King George the Third, intituled, An Act to regulate the binding of parish apprentices, and for which offence we do adjudge that the said _____ shall forfeit and pay the sum of _____ to be paid and applied as follows [here state the application of the penalty], and in case such penalty shall not be paid by the said _____ or levied by distress upon goods and chattels, within _____ days from the date of this conviction, we adjudge that the said _____ shall be imprisoned in _____ for the space of _____ Given under our hands and seals the day and year first above mentioned."

Sect. 16. "That in case any person convicted for any offence against this act shall not pay the penalty imposed by such conviction within one calendar month next after such conviction shall take place, it shall be lawful to and for the justices making such convictions, or for any two other justices of the county or district, to issue their warrant for the apprehending and imprisoning of such offender, notwithstanding such offender may have goods or chattels whereby such penalty might have been levied."

Not paying penalty.

Imprisonment.

Sect. 17. "That any person or persons who shall be dissatisfied with any act done by any justice or justices of the peace in the execution of this act, may appeal against the same to any court, or general or quarter sessions to be holden for the county within which such act shall have been done, within three calendar months after the fact so complained of, upon giving notice in writing to such justice or justices, and also to the person or persons who shall be interested in such appeal, within twenty-one days next after the act so appealed against shall have taken place; and in case such appeal shall be against any conviction, entering into a recognizance, with two sufficient sureties, before any justice of the peace of the county or district within which such conviction shall have taken place, to appear at such general or quarter sessions to abide the judgment of the court upon such appeal, and to pay the costs which may be awarded thereon; and that it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices at such sessions to hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and to award costs therein, as they in their discretion shall think fit; and all such appeals shall be to the sessions of the county within which the act appealed against shall have taken place, and not to any district or liberty within the same."

Appeal.

Sect. 18. "That the provisions and penalties herein contained, respecting overseers of the poor, shall be deemed to extend to all churchwardens having the power and authority of overseers of the poor; and that all the provisions herein mentioned and contained respecting any parish or place, shall extend to any incorporated or other district for the maintenance of the poor; and that the officers of any such district, having power to bind apprentices, shall be subject to all the rules, regulations, and penalties herein mentioned and contained respecting overseers of the poor."

Power of overseers extended to churchwardens.

"Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect or set aside any decision or judgment made or given in any court of judicature respecting any such indentures or certificates, or to alter, impeach, or affect the settlement of any person for whose removal any order of justices shall have been duly made previous to the passing of this act, or to legalize or make valid any indentures or certificates to be signed or executed as hereinbefore mentioned after the passing of this act."

The 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 51, enacts, "That no collector or person renting such tolls, or residing in such toll-house as aforesaid, and no apprentice or servant of any such collector or person, shall thereby gain a settlement in any parish or place whatsoever; and that no tolls to be taken at any gate erected or to be erected by the trustees or commissioners of any turnpike road, nor toll-house erected or to be erected for the purpose of collecting the same, nor any person in respect of such tolls or toll-house, shall be rated or assessed towards the payment of any poor's rates, or any other public or parochial levy whatsoever." (See 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 31, post, 482.)

The 4 Geo. IV. c. 25, (a) intituled, "An act for regulating the number of apprentices to be taken on board British merchant vessels; and for preventing the desertion of seamen therefrom," enacts, "that so much of the 37 Geo. III. c. 73, as requires the master of any ship trading to his Majesty's colonies and plantations in the West Indies to have on board an apprentice or apprentices, shall be and the same is hereby repealed."

Sect. 2. "That from and after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, all and every master and masters of any merchant ship or merchant ships, exceeding the burthen of eighty tons, shall have on board his or their ship or ships, at the time of such ship or ships clearing out from any port of the united kingdom called Great Britain, one apprentice or apprentices, in the following proportion to the number of tons of her admeasurement, according to the certificate of registry; that is to say, for every ship or vessel exceeding eighty tons and under two hundred tons, one apprentice at least; for every ship or vessel of two hundred tons and under four hundred tons, two apprentices at least; for every ship or vessel of four hundred tons and under five hundred tons, three apprentices at least; for every ship or vessel of five hundred tons and under seven hundred tons, four apprentices at least; for every ship or vessel of seven hundred tons and upwards, five apprentices at least: who shall, at the period of being indentured, respectively be under the age of seventeen years: provided that every apprentice so to be employed on board any ship or vessel, as above described shall be duly indentured for at least four years; and the indenture or indentures of every such apprentice shall be duly enrolled with the collector and comptroller at the custom house of the port from whence any such ship or vessel shall first clear out after the execution of such indenture or indentures."

Sect. 3. "That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to alter or in anywise affect any act now in force, and not amended or repealed by this act, whereby any ships or vessels are required to have on board apprentices, and that such apprentices as shall be on board any ships or vessels conformably to the rules and regulations of any such act shall be counted, deemed and reckoned in the number required by this act."

Sect. 4. "That every apprentice so enrolled shall be and is hereby exempted from service in his Majesty's navy, until he shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, provided he is regularly serving his time either with his first master or ship owner, or some other master or ship owner to whom his indentures shall have been regularly transferred; and all and every owner or owners, or master or masters, neglecting to enrol such indenture or indentures as aforesaid, or who shall suffer any such apprentice to leave his service, except in case of death or desertion, sickness or other unavoidable cause, to be certified in the log book, after the vessel shall have cleared outwards on the voyage upon which such ship or vessel may be bound, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of ten pounds, to be paid in manner following,—that is to say, one moiety by the owner or owners of such ship or vessel, and the other moiety by the master or masters thereof, to be levied, recovered and applied in manner hereinafter mentioned."

Sect. 5. "That every person to whom such apprentice shall have been bound, may employ him at any time in any vessel of which such person may be the master or owner, and may also with the consent of such apprentice, if above the age of seventeen, and if under that age, with the consent of his parents or guardians, transfer the indentures of such apprentice, by endorsement thereon, to any other person who may be the master or owner of any registered ship or vessel."

Sect. 6. "That no stamp duty shall be charged on any such transfer by endorsement."

The 4 Geo. IV. c. 29, intituled, An Act to increase the power of magistrates in cases of apprenticeships. "Whereas by an act made in the twentieth year of the reign of His Majesty King George the Second, intituled, An act for the better adjusting and more easy recovery of the wages of certain servants, and for the better regulation of such servants, and of certain apprentices, it is, among other things, enacted and provided, that it shall and may be lawful to and for any two justices of the peace, upon any complaint or application by any apprentice put out by the parish, or any other apprentice, upon whose binding out no larger sum than five pounds of lawful British money was paid, touching or concerning any misuse, refusal of necessary provision, cruelty or other ill treatment of or towards such apprentice, by his or her master or mistress, to summon such master or mistress to appear before such justices, at a reasonable time to be named in such summons; and such justices shall and may examine into the matter of such complaint, and upon proof thereof made upon oath to their satisfaction, (whether the master or mistress be present or not, if service of the summons be also upon oath proved,) the said justices may discharge such apprentice, by warrant or certificate under their hands and seals, for which warrant or certificate no fees shall be paid; and it is also enacted, that it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices, upon application or complaint made upon oath by any master or mistress against any such apprentice, touching or concerning any misdemeanour, miscarriage or ill behaviour in such his or her service, (which oath such justices are hereby empowered to administer,) to hear, examine and determine the same, and to punish the offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to remain and be corrected and held to hard labour for a reasonable time, not exceeding one calendar month, or otherwise by discharging such apprentice in manner and form before mentioned: and whereas by another act made in the thirty-third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled An act to authorize justices of the peace to impose fines upon constables, overseers, and other peace and parish officers, for neglect of duty, and on masters of apprentices for ill usage of such their apprentices, and also to make provision for the execution of warrants of distress granted by magistrates, it is enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, assembled at any special or petty sessions of the peace, upon complaint made to them upon oath, by or on the behalf of any apprentice to any trade or business whatsoever, whether bound apprentice by any parish or township, or otherwise, (provided that not more than the sum of ten pounds be paid upon the binding of such apprentice,) against his or her master or mistress, of any ill usage of such apprentice by such master or mistress, (such master or mistress having been duly summoned to appear and answer such charge or complaint,) to impose, upon conviction, any reasonable fine or fines not exceeding the sum of forty-shillings upon such master or mistress respectively, as a punishment for such ill usage; and by warrant under the hands and seals of any two or more of such justices assembled at any such special or petty sessions as aforesaid, to direct such fine or fines, if not paid, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so offending, rendering the overplus (if any,) after deducting the amount of such fine or fines, and the charges of such distress and sale, to such offender or offenders. And whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the said act should be extended to apprentices upon whose binding out a larger sum than five pounds or ten pounds respectively, as mentioned in the said acts, was paid: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the first day of August, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, the provisions of the said recited acts, so far as the same relate to apprentices, shall extend and be deemed and construed to extend to all apprentices, upon whose binding out no larger a sum than twenty-five pounds of lawful British money was or shall be paid; any thing contained in the said acts, or either of them, to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding."

Sect. 2. And be it further enacted, that from and after the first day of August, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, in any case where they shall direct any apprentice or apprentices to be discharged under and by virtue of the said recited acts or of this act, to take into consideration the circumstances under which such apprentice or apprentices shall be so discharged, and to make an order upon the master or mistress of such apprentice or apprentices to refund all or any part of the premium or premiums which may have been or shall be paid upon the binding or placing out of such apprentice or apprentices, as such justices in their discretion shall see fit; and in case any sum or sums of money which shall be so ordered to be refunded by such master or mistress, shall be neglected to be paid to the person or persons directed in any such order to receive the same, it shall and may be lawful for such two or more justices, in petty sessions, by warrant under their hands and seals, to levy the same upon the goods and chattels of such master or mistress, with the cost and charges of levying such distress, rendering the overplus of the sale of such goods and chattels, upon demand, to such master or mistress; and in case there shall not be sufficient goods and chattels whereon to levy the same, then it shall and may be lawful for such justices to commit such offender or offenders to the house of correction for any time not exceeding two months, unless the sum or sums ordered to be refunded, with all costs, shall be sooner paid and satisfied."

Sect. 3. "And be it further enacted, that the said recited acts, and all and every of the powers and provisions thereof (save and except such parts thereof as are varied, altered or repealed), shall be as good, valid and effectual, for carrying this act into execution as if the same had been repeated in this act."

The 4 Geo. IV. c. 34, is "an act to enlarge the powers of justices in determining complaints between masters and servants, and between masters, apprentices, artificers and others."

The 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 31, enacts, "That no collector or receiver of any tolls or penalties for overweight, residing in any house or building erected or used by the trustees of any turnpike road for the residence or accommodation of persons appointed for weighing any waggons or other carriages, and no apprentice or servant of any such collector or receiver, shall thereby gain a settlement in any parish or place; and that no tolls or penalties for overweight to be taken at any house or weighing machine erected or to be erected, or adjoining to any turnpike-road, nor any person whatsoever in respect of such tolls or penalties, or any house or building as aforesaid, shall be rated or assessed towards the payment of any poor's rates, or any other public or parochial rate or levy whatsoever." (See 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, ante, 480.)

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 49, it is enacted "That where any person shall be an apprentice to a bankrupt at the time of issuing of the commission against him, the issuing of such commission shall be and enure as a complete discharge of the indenture or indentures whereby such apprentice was bound to such bankrupt; and if any sum shall have been really and bonâ fide paid, by or on the behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt, as an apprentice fee, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, upon proof thereof, to order any sum to be paid to or for the use of such apprentice as they shall think reasonable, regard being had, in estimating such sum, to the amount of the sum so paid by or on behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt, and to the time during which such apprentice shall have resided with the bankrupt previous to the issuing of the commission."

The 6 Geo. IV. c. 107, s. 138, enacts, "That no person shall be deemed to be an apprentice for the purposes of an act passed in the fourth year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled An act for the regulating the number of apprentices to be taken on board British merchant vessels, and for preventing the desertion of seamen, unless the indenture of such apprentice shall have been enrolled with the collector and controller of the port from which any such apprentice shall first go to sea after the date of such indenture, or in default of such enrolment, until the same shall have been enrolled at some port from which the ship in which such apprentice shall afterwards go to sea shall be cleared."

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 56, s. 17, "and for the greater encouragement of navigation," enacts, "That no higher duty of stamps than two shillings shall be charged upon the indenture of any apprentice bound to serve at sea in the merchant service, nor upon any memorandum or agreement made between the master and mariners of any ship or vessel, for wages or service on any voyage in such ship or vessel; anything in any other act to the contrary notwithstanding."

By 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 63, s. 1, after reciting doubts to have arisen on the construction of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, it is enacted, that "from and after the passing of this act all indentures for the binding of parish apprentices which have been previous to the passing of this act allowed, and shall hereafter be allowed, by two justices of the peace acting as well for the county or district within which the place by the officers of which such child shall be bound shall be situated, as for the county or district within which the place shall be situated wherein such child shall be intended to serve, shall be deemed and taken to be as good, valid, and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if the same had been allowed by two justices of the peace acting only for the county or district in which the place from which such child shall be bound is situated, and also by two other justices of the peace acting only for the county or district within which the place shall be situated in which such child shall be intended to serve."

Sect. 2. "And whereas, by divers acts of parliament heretofore made and passed, the directors, guardians, acting guardians, or other officers of incorporated hundreds, parishes, and other districts are by the said acts of parliament respectively authorized to bind poor children apprentices in the manner by the said acts of parliament respectively prescribed and directed: and whereas the said directors, guardians, acting guardians, and other officers have bound out poor children apprentices by indentures to which the said directors, guardians, acting guardians, and other officers have been, by their description as directors, guardians, acting guardians, or other officers of such incorporated hundreds, parishes, and other districts respectively, made parties of the one part, or to which they have, by their said descriptions respectively, been binding parties, and which indentures have been executed by the said directors, guardians, acting guardians, and other officers, by affixing thereto the seal of the corporation of which they are directors, guardians, acting guardians, and officers respectively, and in no other manner by them: and whereas doubts have been entertained as to the effect and validity of indentures so executed; and it is desirable to remove such doubts; be it declared and enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, in all cases where any indentures for the binding out poor children apprentices have been heretofore or shall be hereafter executed by any directors, guardians, acting

Sect. 3. "And whereas it is expedient that justices of the peace in every city, borough, or town corporate should have concurrent jurisdiction with county magistrates in apprenticing any child or children within the limits of such city, borough, or town corporate; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act every indenture for the binding of parish apprentices within any city, borough, or town corporate shall be allowed by two justices of the peace, one of such justices acting for and on behalf of the county, and the other of such justices acting for and on behalf of the city, borough, or town corporate within the limits of which such child shall be bound."

Sect. 4. "Provided always, and be it further enacted and declared, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect or set aside any decision or judgment made or given in any court of judicature respecting any such indentures."

By stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 15, "the commissioners are empowered to make and issue (inter alia) rules, orders and regulations for the apprenticing the children of poor persons." And by sect. 61 it is enacted, "that from and after the period at which any rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners shall come into operation for the binding of poor children apprentices, in addition to such assent or consent, order or allowance of justices, as are now required by law, such justices or any one justice are and is hereby authorized and required to examine and ascertain whether the rules, orders, or regulations of the said commissioners then in force for the binding of poor children apprentices have been complied with, and to certify the same at the foot of every such contract or indenture, and of the counterpart thereof, in such form and manner as the said commissioners, by such rules, orders, or regulations, may direct; and until so certified, no such contract or indenture of apprenticeship shall be valid: provided nevertheless, that nothing in this act, or in any rule, order, or regulation of the said commissioners, shall affect the jurisdiction of any justices of the peace over any master or apprentice during the period of apprenticeship."

The annual Mutiny Act usually enacts, "that no officer of his Majesty's forces, residing in barracks or elsewhere under military law, shall be deemed liable to have any parish poor child bound apprentice to him; but that every such officer shall be wholly exempt from taking or receiving, or from having bound to him, any such child as an apprentice, any law, statute, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

2. Of the Instrument of Binding.

2. OF THE INSTRUMENT OF BINDING.(a)

Person bound apprentice by deed, &c., though not indented, is entitled to a settlement.

The 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 8 (ante, 451, 452), in conformity with the 5 Eliz. c. 4 & 5, requires that the binding shall be by indenture, that is, by deed indented; and under that statute it was necessary that the deed, being a writing sealed and delivered by the parties, should be actually indented. (Rex v. Mellingham, 2 Bott, 492.) But the formality of indenting was removed by 31 Geo. II. c. 11, s. 1, which enacts, "that no person who shall have been bound an apprentice by any deed, writing, or contract, not indented, being first legally stamped, shall be liable to be removed from the town, parish, or place where he or she shall have been so bound an apprentice, and resident forty days, by virtue of an order of removal, granted by two justices of the peace of any county, riding, division, city, borough, town corporate, or place, or by virtue of any order of the justices at their general or quarter sessions, by reason or on account of such deed, writing, or contract not being indented only" (ante, 458).

(a) See division of the subject, ante, 451. See also Vol. I. tit. "Apprentices."

But the binding must still be by deed, though indenting is no essential part of it.

Rex v. Ditchingham, 4 T. R. 769; 2 Bott, 377. The pauper H. Cook at eight years of age was placed out by the parish officers of B. to a parishioner, under the following agreement, which was written on the leaf of the parish book, together with several other agreements of the same sort, viz. "August 7, 1774. At a general parish meeting, held this day, it is agreed that R. Fisher shall take H. Cook and maintain her after the manner of an apprentice, with washing, lodging, clothing, &c. from this day until Michaelmas, 1780; R. Fisher to have 20*l.* with her, and at the expiration of the time to double clothe her: witness my hand, R. Fisher." This agreement was not stamped. The court said, that although a modern act of parliament had dispensed with the necessity of having the deed of apprenticeship indented, still the binding must be by deed. (See also Rex v. Mawman, Burr. S. C. 290.)

Rex v. Stratton, Burr. S. C. 272. An infant must be bound by indenture, and if by deed-poll it will be bad. (Smith v. Birch, 1 Bott, 528.)

The sessions are bound to receive evidence of an extrinsic illegal consideration, such as illicit cohabitation rendering the binding void. (Rex v. Northwingfield, 1 Bar. & Adol. 912.)

2. Of the Instrument of Binding.

The agreement must be by deed.

3. THE PARTIES TO THE BINDING. (a)

3. The Parties to the Binding.

It will be perceived by the cases on this subject, that the relation of master and apprentice may be contracted as freely as that of master and servant: (see ante, 332 to 345,) though it is usual for the parent to be an executing party to the deed and to covenant for his good conduct; and in the case of parish apprentices, the law imposes certain duties upon the parish officers and neighbouring magistrates, the observance of which is essential to the validity of the contract; and the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 7, prohibits parish officers from binding any child as a parish apprentice until such child has attained the age of nine years (ante, 477).

In general, however, an infant may bind himself to serve an apprenticeship so as to acquire all the rights and benefits thereof, and to subject himself to the jurisdiction of justices, although he cannot, whilst under age, be sued on his covenant (b) unless by special custom as in London (c).

Rex v. Arundel, 5 M. & Sel. 257. George Slater was removed from Arundel to Ferring. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice to one Barber, by indenture, in the usual form, (d) having a thirty shilling stamp, and regularly executed by Barber and the pauper, but not signed by any of the parish officers of Arundel, or assented to by any of the justices; and the question was, whether the signature of the parish officers, and the assent of the justices, were necessary to the validity of this indenture under the circumstances: the pauper was a cripple settled in Arundel; his mother in the first instance applied to Barber, expressing a wish that her son might be placed with him as an apprentice. The pauper when the indenture was executed was eighteen years of age, and had been for about a year before, and was then, in the Arundel workhouse, from whence he went to the attorney's office, where the indenture was executed, and there met his father and the parish officer; and it was agreed between Barber and the parish

An infant may bind himself apprentice by indenture, because it is for his benefit.

(d) The indenture began, "This indenture witnesseth, that G. Slater, of Arundel, in the county of Sussex, aged nearly eighteen years, of his own free will doth put himself apprentice to C. Barber of Patching, cordwainer, &c. for four years, &c.; and the said C. Barber, in consideration of the sum of 40*l.* to him in hand paid, &c."

3. The Parties to the Binding.

officer that the pauper should go into the service of Barber, and that the parish should pay the sum of 40*l.*, which was paid accordingly out of the fund belonging to Arundel. The pauper's father was present when the indenture was executed, and it was read over at the time. The pauper had not been previously consulted, and it was not with his good will that he went into the service, but he never expressed to any one any objection to being bound. Barber lived at Patching at the time of the binding, and afterwards removed to Ferring, where the pauper continued with his master, under the indenture, for nearly a year. After hearing Courthope, in support of the order, and D'Oyley, contra, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "This indenture must be considered clearly as for the infant's benefit, and not having been vacated it must be considered as binding, so as to confer a settlement on him by reason of his service under it. This was not the binding of a parish apprentice, it was to a person not residing in the parish; and all that the parish officers did was the advancing of 40*l.* as the premium. As to any supposed controlling influence of the parish officers, I do not see how we can enter upon that subject, nothing being stated concerning it in the case. The influence, however, seems to have been that of the mother; the parish officers make the advance, and the pauper executes the indenture. I think the binding was undoubtedly for his benefit, and therefore valid." Bayley, J. "The pauper executed the deed without objection, and there was not any compulsion used at that time." Order of sessions quashed.

An infant may bind himself.

Newbury v. St. Mary's in Reading, Fol. 154, And. 373; 2 Bott, 363. A poor boy of fourteen years of age bound himself apprentice for seven years to a weaver. It was argued that this was not a binding according to the statute, and therefore did not gain a settlement; and that the indenture was void, because an infant could not bind himself. But by the court: "It did gain him a settlement; for an infant may make an indenture for his own benefit."

Infants of seven years may be bound.

In Rex v. Saltren, Cald. 444; 1 Bott, 717; where the infancy of the apprentice was also made an objection to the validity of the binding, Willes, J. said, "No age is specified in the 43 Eliz., under which this binding is made, or in the 8 & 9 Will. III., which compels the master to receive the apprentice and gives the appeal. Still, it is said that, under 5 Eliz. c. 4, it is necessary that the apprentice should be above ten years of age, and that all the subsequent statutes are in pari materia. But that statute relates only to husbandry, which may require more bodily strength than most other occupations; and that statute cannot be connected with 43 Eliz., which was made for the maintenance of the poor. The present case is that of a female child bound to housewifery. In other instances, the legislature has not considered seven as too tender an age. The children of vagrants may at that age be bound out, and the strength and ability of children, which from seven years of age to ten must vary greatly in point of fitness, in this respect is matter of consideration and discretion in the magistrates." And Ashhurst and Buller Js. agreed, "that the statute does not require any precise age, and that the whole consideration of fitness is in the discretion of the parish officers and the magistrates, who are the proper tribunal for such enquiries."

However, a modern statute (28 Geo. III. c. 48, s. 4, ante, 460), has humanely provided, that children under the age of eight years shall not be bound apprentice to chimney-sweepers.

But a boy under eight years of age cannot be bound apprentice to a chimney-sweeper; the indenture is void by 28 Geo. 3, c. 48, s. 4, and will not confer a settlement.(a)

Rex v. Hipswell, 8 B. & C. 466; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 474. E. Miller was removed from Morpeth to Hipswell. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's husband, Joseph Miller, son of Jane, the wife of Thomas Salkeld, was, at the age of five years, bound by Thomas an apprentice to W. Wright, a chimney-sweeper, by an indenture made the 21st day of May, 1804, between T. S., yeoman, and pauper's husband, his son, and W. Wright, chimney-sweeper. The pauper's husband of his own free will, and with the consent of his father, bound himself apprentice with W. W., after the manner of an apprentice, to dwell with and serve him from the date thereof for seven years. And W. W. covenanted with the apprentice that he would teach him the trade of a chimney-sweeper, which the master used; and also would provide him with meat and clothes. In the case of the master's death, the apprentice might choose a master for himself. The pauper's husband served under it as an apprentice to W. W. during the time specified in the indenture. Bayley, J. "The title of 28 Geo. III. c. 48, is general, 'For the better regulation of chimney-sweepers and their apprentices.' The preamble states, 'that the laws in being respecting masters and apprentices are not sufficient to prevent the complicated miseries to which boys employed in climbing chimneys are liable.' The 1st sect. empowers parish officers to bind under certain circumstances. The 2d sect. contains a regulation applicable to parish apprentices. The 3d sect. enacts, that a particular form of indenture shall be adopted, equally applicable whether the binding is by the parish officers or the parents. It is not, however, necessary to decide whether those clauses apply to all bindings; because the fourth and several other sections clearly extend to all cases of bindings, whether by parish officers or parents, and reach all bindings or contracts of apprenticeship or service. The former branch of the 4th sect. enacts, that all indentures, &c. for binding any boy under eight years of age as an apprentice to a chimney-sweeper, 'than is by this act limited,' shall be void in law to all intents and purposes. The words, 'than is by this act limited,' are not sensible; but the object of the legislature is manifest, namely, to render void every indenture by which a child under eight years of age is bound apprentice to a chimney-sweeper. If the former part of the section left any doubt upon this subject, it would be removed by the latter part, the meaning of which is perfectly clear, 'that every person who shall henceforth have, take, employ, retain, or keep any such boy or boys as or in the nature of an apprentice or apprentices, or servant, employed in the capacity of a climbing-boy or chimney-sweeper as aforesaid, who shall be under the age of eight years as aforesaid, contrary to the tenor and true meaning of this act, and being convicted thereof, as hereinafter mentioned, shall forfeit and pay for every such apprentice or servant so by him or her had, taken, employed, retained, or kept, any sum not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.*' But it is said, that void has been sometimes held to mean voidable only; and where the provision is introduced for the benefit of the parties only, such a construction may be right; but where it is introduced for public purposes, to protect those who were incapable of protecting themselves, it should receive its full force and effect. It would be contrary to the spirit of the act to consider the indenture in this case as voidable only; the consequence is, that no settlement has been acquired by service under it." Littledale, J. "The 4th sect. as it stands is certainly not very intelligible, nor can it be rendered so without either inserting or rejecting some words. By either of those means it may. By inserting the words 'or otherwise,' the sense is rendered complete; by rejecting the words 'than is by this act limited,' the same result is produced; and the rejection of those words gives effect to the enactment. The 4th sect. thus considered most clearly comprehends this case, and the indenture is therefore void."

(a) From J. Holroyd's judgment in Rex v. Stoke, 7 B. & C. 571, it seems that if an indenture is voidable only, and the parties at any time avoid it, no previous service will confer a settlement. This point is not noticed by the report of the same case in 1 M. & R. 458.

It is clear from many of the cases, and from the language of several of the statutes, that a person of the full age of twenty-one may bind himself to serve as an apprentice. But a boy should not be bound to serve a chimney-sweeper after the age of sixteen. 28 Geo. III. c. 48, s. 1 (ante, 459).

Rex v. St. Petrox in Dartmouth, 4 T. R. 196. The father of the pauper's husband agreed with Mary Hayne, widow, to bind his son, then aged about eight years, an apprentice to R. H., son of M. H., who was then between the ages of fourteen and fifteen, and was then resident in his mother's house as a part of her family, and had no habitation or business of his own. Lord Kenyon said, "It has been properly admitted that this indenture was not absolutely void, but only voidable, on account of the infancy of the par-

Rex v. Great Sheepy, 8 B. & C. 74; 2 M. & R. 286; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 252. Order of removal of E. Burton, &c. from Great Barford to Great Sheepy confirmed. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice by the parish on the 28th day of April, 1807, (the pauper being then aged seven years, or thereabouts,) to George Wilkins of Deddington, butcher, with him to dwell and serve till he should be twenty-one. The father of the pauper, whose settlement was at Great Sheepy, had died, and his widow had gone to reside with her father, George Wilkins, at Deddington, Great Sheepy relieving the widow till the pauper was seven years old. The parish then proposed to the mother to put the pauper apprentice to Measham cotton works, and told her they should no longer relieve her unless the pauper was apprenticed. Upon this the mother requested the officers to bind the pauper to her father, in order that the boy might not be removed from her. The officers consulted their rector, (a magistrate,) and having received his sanction, they and the mother, and Wilkins, met together, and went before the justices, without the pauper, for the purpose of binding him. The justices allowed the binding, and the indenture was executed by all parties, and a premium of 6*l.* was paid to Wilkins by the parish officers. There was nothing in the appearance of Wilkins to excite any suspicion that he was an improper person, and there was not any fraud or collusion on the part of the magistrates, or of the parish officers. The pauper continued to dwell with Wilkins, in Deddington, after the execution of the indenture, running on errands and doing whatever he was bidden to do till after he was nine years of age, when he left his grandfather and never afterwards returned to him; but after the binding he continued to go to school by day as he had gone before, and he never knew that he had been bound apprentice, neither did he receive any instruction in the trade of a butcher; and although Wilkins had been a butcher, it did not appear that he ever killed meat after the binding, and he was a man of needy circumstances. The sessions found that the pauper and the grandfather had

(a) Gye v. Felton, 4 Taunt. 876. In an action for harbouring an apprentice it was proved that the plaintiff, to whom the boy had been apprenticed, was not twenty-four years of age when the indenture was executed, in 1809; was not a housekeeper, as required by 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 26; and carried on no trade mentioned in the statute. Mansfield, C. J., delivered the judgment: "Upon looking into the statute, which is a great and comprehensive law, and probably at the time a very wise one, to prevent there being idle persons, it appears that apprentices are obliged to be bound; but with respect to the words of sect. 41, on which the present question arises, certainly they at first startle one,—it says, 'all indentures made otherwise than is by this statute appointed shall be clearly void to all intents and purposes.' Many cases have been cited, which say that indentures not conformable to the act shall be only voidable, and not void. If 'voidable' was applied to adults only it would be extremely strange. With respect to infants, if applied to them, one can understand it. In all these cases the question arose with respect to infant apprentices; but there has been no case cited where the doctrine that the contract is voidable and not void is applied to the case of a master. There is a ground which makes it impossible for the plaintiff to recover, for it is further provided, that every person who shall take an apprentice contrary to this act shall forfeit 10*l.*, making it not only void, but unlawful; and if such a taking is illegal, it is impossible that the master can recover damages for the violation of a supposed right, originating only in a contract which the law forbids." Rule for nonsuit absolute.

colluded together and fraudulently imposed the grandfather upon the parish as a proper master for the child, and on the ground of this fraud alone held that no settlement was gained under the indenture, though they acquitted the parish officers of all participation in the fraud, and found that they had acted bona fide in the matter. Lord Tenterden, "The sessions have found that a fraud was committed, but not by the parish officers. It appears that an imposition was practised on them by the master. If it were competent, after a great lapse of time, to inquire into the fact, whether fraud had been committed in the binding out of an apprentice by any of the parties to the indentures, a vast number of settlements might be disturbed and great expense incurred. The law, by requiring in the case of a parish apprentice, that the master shall be approved by two justices, has endeavoured to provide that there shall be a proper master, and that every thing shall be done correctly. Where the justices have sanctioned a binding, and there has been no fraud in the parish officers, the safest course for us is to say, that service under such a binding confers a settlement, although the master may have imposed upon the justices. The sessions have mistaken the effect of the fraud found by them. Even supposing that they were right in finding such fraud, still it will not prevent a settlement." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Louth, 8 B. & C. 247. An indenture by which an apprentice was bound for seven years, to serve A. B. for the first four years, and his own father for the last three, to learn two different trades, is valid, and one stamp is sufficient. More fully stated, post, 504.

Rex v. Chesterfield, 2 Salk. 479; 5 Mod. 329. A servant was put out by his late master to a barber, who was to teach him to shave and make peri-wigs, for which he was to have 5*l*. The servant was no party to the covenants between his master and the barber. And the court adjudged it not to make a settlement, because it was no service, and the servant was no more than a boarder there for his education, which was no service to make a settlement.

Rex v. Cromford, 8 East, 25. The pauper's husband, W. H., went on the 1st of May, 1796, being then 14 years of age, as apprentice to N. Kniveton, of Wirksworth, weaver, and continued to serve him as an apprentice for five years. The following indenture was executed by the master and the father of W. H., but not by W. H. himself: "This agreement, made the 1st day of May, 1796, between N. K., weaver, and J. H., miner; the said N. K. shall teach W. H., the son of J. H., the art and mystery of weaving, &c. in the best way he can, for five years from the date above; and that N. K. shall find W. H. all utensils belonging to the business; and that W. H. shall receive of N. K. half of what he earns, and the remainder to N. K." W. H. did not execute or become a party to any other indenture. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Here is neither a binding of the son himself apprentice, nor, if I may so say, of his parent for him, for there is no contract for his serving his master; nothing to bind the son to serve. He might serve in fact, but was under no obligation to do so: he only continued to be taught as long as he pleased, but was not obliged to stay. This was no apprenticeship." The other judges concurred.

Rex v. Ripon, 9 East, 295. Removal from Ripon to Darlington, and quashed by the sessions. The pauper, being twenty-three years of age, was put apprentice by her father-in-law with her own consent, to one Husbands, in Hunton. She was present at the making of the agreement; but the indenture was only executed by the master and her father-in-law, but not by herself: neither was it ever tendered to her for that purpose, though she lived under it with her master for nearly twelve months in Hunton. And, without argument, by the court, "Is it possible to maintain this to be a competent binding of an adult who was no party to the indenture? The relation of master and apprentice did not exist."

Rex v. Arnesby, 3 B. & Ald. 584. Removal from Arnesby to Abthorpe. The pauper served some years under an indenture of apprenticeship in Abthorpe. The indenture stated that Simcoe, the pauper, son of Samuel Simcoe, glover, with the consent of his father, did put himself apprentice to

3. The Parties to the Binding.

May be bound to two masters successively.

The apprentice must be a party to the deed, though an infant.

If the binding be by the act of other parties, without his own intervention, no settlement is gained thereby.

An indenture is void if the pauper, an adult, (though assenting,) is not a party to the deed.

By the common law a father has no authority to bind his infant son apprentice without his assent; consequently, where an indenture was executed by the master and the father, but not also by the apprentice, it was held invalid, and gave no settlement.

3. The Parties to the Binding.

But a parish apprentice may be bound without his assent.

W. S. framework-knitter, to learn his art, and with him, after the manner of an apprentice, to serve from the 10th day of May, 1802, for the term of seven years. It was regular, except that it was executed only by the father of the pauper and the master, and not by the pauper himself. Abbott, C. J. "The words of the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11 are 'that if any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture, and inhabit in any town or parish, such binding and inhabitation shall be adjudged a good settlement.' Before therefore any settlement can be gained, the court must see that the party is bound by indenture. Now the ordinary mode is for the party to bind himself, by executing the indenture. Even if he does not do that, still in the special case of a parish apprentice he may be bound without such execution; but then the binding takes effect by the authority of an act of parliament. This however is not the case of a parish apprentice; and unless we were to hold that it is competent for a father to bind his son apprentice without his assent (for which no authority can be produced), we must hold this indenture to be invalid. Rex v. Houghton-le-Spring (ante, 343) is very different. This was a case of hiring and service, the statutes applicable to which say nothing of the mode in which the contract of hiring is to be made; and there it was held that the deed executed by the servant, and his employment under it, were evidence to show the terms under which the hiring had been made. And I think that that decision was right. This case however stands upon very different grounds." Bayley, J. "An infant can only bind himself apprentice by deed; and the question in this case is, whether according to the words of the act this party is bound by indenture. The indenture indeed purports to bind the son, but the son has not executed it. It is said however that he has done that which is tantamount to an execution. If we were to hold that to be so, we should hold, contrary to all principle, that an infant might be bound by his act in pais, without executing the deed. In the case of a parish apprentice there is a special power given by the statute of Elizabeth to parish officers, and there an apprentice may be bound without his assent till he come of age. But a father has at the common law no such right. The passage cited from Comyn's Digest is unsupported by any authority. I think therefore that the indenture in the present case was invalid, and that no settlement was gained by the service under it." Holroyd, J. "The apprentice did not gain a settlement by the service in this case; for an infant cannot be bound merely by an act in pais. It has been argued, that as he has taken the benefit of the deed by serving under it, he must be bound by it. But that argument is not, as it seems to me, available. In Rex v. Cromford (ante, 489), the apprentice had served out his time; and in Rex v. Ripon (ante, 489), the indenture was executed by the father of the apprentice and the master, with her consent, and she also served under it. Yet in both those cases the indentures were held to be invalid. According to my recollection the distinction is this: where a party takes the benefit of a deed, but does not execute it, he will not be liable under it as for a covenant broken, but he may be liable under the implied contract raised by the acts of benefit which he takes under it. Here the infant was not bound by indenture, and no settlement was gained." Best, J. "It is said that the service here was tantamount to an execution: but where is that argument to stop? It might go the length of proving that a service for a single day, and that perhaps without proof of his knowledge of the contents of the indenture, would bind the apprentice. The dictum to which we have been referred applies only to land qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus, et transit terra cum onere; and even there it would be a difficult point to establish that where a person took possession of the land for a single day, he was bound by all the covenants of a long lease which he had never executed. It seems impossible to consider this as the case of a person bound by indenture; and unless that he be so, he is not within the statute, and has gained no settlement."

Contrary decisions reconciled.

The case of Rex v. St. Nicholas, Nottingham, 2 T. R. 726, has been thought to be at variance with the doctrine laid down in the above case; but there is this distinction in the circumstances of them which may reconcile their apparent contradiction. In Rex v. Arnesby (ante, 489), the binding was voluntary, but the indenture was not executed by the apprentice, and therefore invalid: whereas in Rex v. Nottingham the binding was by the parish, and the execution by the apprentice was not necessary to make the binding valid. The principal objections however were, that the master resided in another county from that in which the justices resided who allowed the indenture, and from which the pauper was bound. It was admitted that the master could not have been compelled, under the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 5, to receive the pauper, but he had executed the indenture (a) and received the apprentice, and consequently the objection with respect to him, it was held, could not be supported; and with regard to the other objection, it was observed, that by the 43 Eliz. the parish officers are to bind out the children 'where the justices shall see convenient,' and whether in or out of the parish is not specified. The judgment of Lord Kenyon therefore must be taken as applicable to the particular facts of the case, and not as laying down any general principles as applicable alike to all questions of apprenticeship." His lordship said, "If the master does not reject the binding, but assent to it, there is a concurrence of all parties to give validity to the binding, and if no objection be made to the binding before the apprentice has resided forty days, he thereby gains a settlement." Ashhurst, J. "At all events there can be no doubt that the parish officers may make such a binding as this, by consent of all parties. Here the master consented by receiving the pauper. The pauper did not object, but lived under the indenture five months. That implies his consent, and it was only on ill-treatment that he applied for his discharge; now that application is an acknowledgment on his part that the indenture is binding. The pauper having then served more than forty days, ought to have the benefit of it." Grose, J. "I consider all the parties consented to the binding. The case of St. Margaret's, Lincoln, Burr. S. C. 728, was considered as an express authority." (b)

Rex v. St. George, Exeter, 5 Nev. & Man. 61; 3 Adol. & Ellis, 373, S. C. By an order of two justices of the peace for the city and county of the city of Exeter, Mary Lee and her five children were removed from the parish of St. George to Crediton. Upon appeal the Exeter quarter sessions quashed the order, subject to the following case:—The settlement of the paupers depends upon that of John Lee, the deceased husband of Mary Lee. John Lee was born in Crediton of parents legally settled in that parish. When he was about twelve years old, an indenture dated 15th October, 1811, was executed by the parish officers of Crediton for the purpose of binding him apprentice to William Mugford, who was his uncle, and resided in the parish of St. George, Exeter. At the time of the execution of this indenture his father was at sea, and his mother having other children living with her in Crediton, was in the receipt of relief from that parish. John Lee himself was not residing with her, but had lived for a year or more with his uncle (Mugford) in the parish of St. George. The indenture was executed by the churchwardens and overseers of Crediton at the pay table of that parish, neither Mugford nor Lee being present, nor the magistrates who signed the allowance of the indenture; and it does not appear at what time or in what place they signed it, but it bears the signatures of two magistrates of the county of Devon. A counterpart was executed by Mugford at his house in Exeter, but Lee was not present when he executed it, and was not a party to it, nor to the original indenture. He continued to reside with Mugford, serving him in his business of a thatcher, till about a year after he attained the age of twenty-one years. The question for the opinion of the court is,

Where a family were receiving relief from the parish in which they resided, held that the parish officers might, under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, and previous to the passing of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, bind out as a parish apprentice one of the children who had been living for more than a year past with a relation in another parish, and who was not present at the time of his being bound, and that it was not necessary that the master should be residing in the same parish: Held also, that the consent of the apprentice was not requisite for the validity of the binding.

(a) In a note to Rex v. Arnesby, 3 B. & Ald. 588, it is said the master did not execute the indenture, and it is so copied into 4 Burn, 498, 25th edit.; by reference to the report, however, this will be found incorrect.

(b) Mr. Nolan treats this case as an authority, for he says, speaking of an apprentice put out by the parish, "His consent shall be implied if he lives under the binding." Mr. Gambier, on the contrary, in his clear and correct work, says "The adoption of the contract is not tantamount to execution," and quotes Rex v. Arnesby.

3. The Parties to the Binding.

whether this was such a binding of John Lee as that the residence and service under it would confer a settlement, he having lived out of the parish of Crediton a full year before the indenture was executed. The judgment of the court was now delivered by Lord Denman, C. J., who, after stating the facts of the case, proceeded as follows: "One point was made, which however was not intended to be reserved by the sessions, namely, whether before the stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 139, a child could legally be bound by the parish officers to a master not resident in their parish. We have no doubt on this point; it is expressly decided by Rex v. St. Nicholas, Nottingham, the authority of which case has never hitherto been questioned. The point which was intended to be reserved was, whether the parish officers had power under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, to bind out any child not at the time resident in their parish. That section, by the word 'such,' refers to the first section of the same act, and the first section has these words, 'the children of all such whose parents shall not by the churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to keep or maintain their children.' The words are not grammatically correct, but their meaning is obvious. At the time of the passing of the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2, there was no law of settlement, nor could the children of paupers, if at a distance from their parents, be sent home by the parish officers. In that state of the law the provisions of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, could not apply to any children not actually resident in the binding parish. But since the law of settlement has been introduced, all the unemancipated children of a pauper are considered as part of his family, and we think that the parish officers of any parish where the pauper is settled and residing, and unable to maintain his children, may bind out his child, with the assent of two justices, and in the proper form, without the formality of having that child, if resident at a distance, brought home to his family. The case of Rex v. Cole Orton (1 B. & Adol. 25), would at first sight seem to lay down the rule that the statute of Elizabeth is to be construed without any reference to any subsequent statutes; but on consideration we do not think that any such rule is there laid down. All that is decided is, that when a child is resident in a parish, and the parents are unable to maintain it, the parish officers may bind out the child though the parents be not settled in the parish, which is quite consistent with their having power to bind out one of a family legally settled and resident in and chargeable to their parish, though the individual be at the moment resident elsewhere. As to the consent of the child, it is not requisite in the case of a parish apprenticeship, and no danger need be apprehended that a child may be taken from a friend or relation against the will of that friend or relation, and against the will of his parents, and bound to a stranger, for the whole matter is under the superintendence of the justices, who cannot be supposed likely to sanction such an arbitrary proceeding. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the order of sessions must be confirmed." Order of sessions confirmed.

what watermen.

Rex v. Gravesend, 3 Bar. & Adol. 240. The 10 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 5, after reciting the inconvenience which happens by watermen, &c. taking apprentices before they are housekeepers or have any settled habitation for themselves or their apprentices, enacts "that it shall not be lawful for any waterman, though a freeman of the (waterman's) company, or his widow, to take to keep any person as his or her apprentice, unless he or she shall be the occupier of some house or tenement wherein to lodge him or herself and such apprentice, and that he or she shall keep such apprentice in the same house or tenement wherein he or she shall lodge or lie, on pain of forfeiting 10*l.* for every offence." By section 4 it is provided that no such freeman or freeman's widow shall take or retain more than two apprentices at the same time, under a penalty. Held, that by section 5, any contract to take an apprentice, entered into by such freeman or widow, not being an occupier of some house, &c., or having already two apprentices, was prohibited, and therefore that where a pauper bound himself by indenture of apprenticeship to serve the widow of a waterman, she not having such house, &c., but it being understood that he was to live at the house of a freeman of the company (which he did), and to serve him conformably to the indenture, he having two other apprentices at the time, such indenture was absolutely void, and no settlement was gained by serving under it.

4. THE EXECUTION OF THE INSTRUMENT. (a)

It will be observed by the cases under the last head, that although, generally speaking, the parties to the deed become so by executing it, yet there are some instances in which this ceremony is not essential to the validity of the instrument. In 1 Nol. P. L. 499, it is said, "although the master and apprentice must be parties to the deed, yet the settlement is not prevented by the master's neglect to execute, provided the apprentice is bound, and the law is the same whether it be a parish or a voluntary apprentice;" and several of the preceding cases are cited; to which may be added Rex v. Ribchester, 2 M. & S. 135; and Rex v. St. Peter's on the Hill, 2 Bott, 495. The pauper was bound an apprentice in St. Peter's in Chester for seven years, to a carpenter, but the indenture was not executed by the master. Lee, C. J. "It is objected that this indenture is not good, because it is not executed by the master, but that makes no difference if the apprentice himself were bound."

Rex v. Fleet, Cald. 31. The indenture was properly executed by the parish officers, and allowed by two justices, but neither that nor the counterpart were executed by the master. It was contended that as the 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 5, requires the master to execute a counterpart, a settlement could not be gained unless the master executed. But Lord Mansfield, C. J. said, "There is no doubt. The binding was authorized by the 43 Eliz. long before the act requiring a counterpart. But, though the binding was valid, it was doubtful, till that act was made, whether the persons to whom they were bound were compellable to receive them. That statute was therefore made, and it subjects the master, upon his refusal to receive the apprentice, to a penalty; but in no other respects confirms the power of binding, which was already fully established."

Rex v. St. Cuthbert, Wells, 5 Bar. & Ad. 939; 3 Nev. & M. 100, S. C. On special case the sessions found that J. E., by indenture, in 1774, was put apprentice to P., for and in respect of W.'s estate; and there was a covenant by P. to teach J. E. the business of husbandry. The indenture was executed by the parish officers, and W. P. was a farmer, and tenant to W., who was a stocking weaver. J. E. never served P., but lived with W. long enough to gain a settlement by apprenticeship, if he could acquire one by such service. The sessions not having found that P. ever executed the indenture, or assigned the apprentice to, or assented to his service with W., it was held that a settlement by apprenticeship was not proved.

Rex v. Lutterworth, 3 B. & C. 487. Where a parish has united with others for the support of the poor, according to the provisions of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and a guardian has been appointed, the churchwardens and overseers may, nevertheless, bind poor children apprentices, and it is not necessary that the guardian should sign the indentures.

5. OF THE TERM OF YEARS. (a)

Although the 5 Eliz. c. 4, declared apprenticeships for less than seven years void, yet before the repealing act, 54 Geo. III. c. 96, it was held that such contract is voidable only, and not void; and that, therefore, a service under an indenture for a less term than seven years entitles the apprentice to a settlement.

St. Nicholas v. St. Peter's, Ipswich, 2 Stra. 1066; Burr. S. C. 91; 2 Bott, 493. There was an indenture of apprenticeship for four years, which the apprentice served accordingly. It was urged that this could not gain a settlement; for the 5 Eliz. enacts, that all indentures otherwise than by that statute shall be clearly void in the law to all intents and purposes; and by Rex v. St. Petrox, Burr. S. C. 248; 2 Bott, 496. The pauper was bound a parish apprentice in St. Petrox until her age of twenty-one, without the alternative, or till time of marriage, as the statute, 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, (ante, 452), requires. It was urged that she gained no settlement, the binding being contrary to the statute, and therefore void. But by the court: "St. Nicholas v. St. Peter's is in point. The indenture is not void, but only voidable by the parties themselves, if they shall think fit to take advantage thereof; but it is neither void nor voidable by the parish as to gaining a settlement."

Rex v. Evered, Cald. 26; 1 Bott, 638, S. C.; cited per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., Gray v. Cookson, 16 East, 27. In this case it appeared that the apprentice had been bound, when an infant, for six years, by indenture; and that afterwards when of age he had run away; and it was held that such a binding was not void, but merely voidable.

The same point was determined in the case of a parish apprentice, in Rex v. Chalbury, 1 Bott, 706.

Rex v. Woolstanton, 1 Bott, 707. An unlimited binding of a parish apprentice was not void, but only voidable. And that the statute for putting out parish boys apprentice, as to that part which speaks of binding them till the age of twenty-four, is only directory; but that if it were compulsory, the indenture would be, for want of this, only voidable.

We have seen that apprentices to chimney-sweepers should not be bound longer than sixteen years of age, (ante, 459).

Rex v. St. Gregory, Canterbury, 2 Adol. & Ellis, 99; 4 Nev. & Man. 137, S. C. Where a statute, incorporating guardians of the poor of a certain district, enacted that it should be lawful for the corporation to bind out apprentices for any number of years, "provided such child be not bound for a longer term than until he or she shall have attained the age of twenty-two, if a boy, and twenty, if a girl," it was held, that an indenture by which a boy, fifteen and a half, was bound for seven years, was voidable only, and not void; and that therefore a settlement might be gained under it. Public policy was said to be an unsafe and unsatisfactory, though a legal ground of decision.

6. OF THE PREMIUM AND DUTY THEREON, AND STATEMENT THEREOF IN THE INDENTURE. (a)

The statute, 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 32 to 45 (ante, 453 to 457), and the 9 Anne, c. 21 (ante, 457), first imposed a duty on any premium, whether pecuniary or otherwise, given with any apprentice, and which at present is regulated in amount by the 55 Geo. III. c. 184 (ante, 474). The 35 & 39 sects. of 8 Anne, c. 9, (ante, 454, 455), declared void all indentures of apprenticeship, unless the full premium were truly inserted in the deed, and unless the deed were brought to the stamp office within certain times, and duly stamped (ante, 455), but contain exemptions in favour of certain parish apprentices; and the 18 Geo. II. c. 22, s. 23, 24, and 22 Geo. II. c. 45, s. 5, 6, 7, 8, contain provisions for remedying the defect.

The stamp is therefore an essential part of an indenture of apprenticeship; and formerly it was requisite that there should be one stamp in respect of the instrument itself, and another in respect of the fee or premium, where a fee was given; but two stamps have not been necessary in any such case since the consolidation of the stamp duties by the 44 Geo. III. c. 98, which afterwards gave place to the 55 Geo. III. c. 184, by which the stamp duty upon these instruments is now regulated. (a) Cuerden v. Leyland, 2 Stra. 903; 2 Sess. Ca. 134; 1 Bott, 545. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice by indenture, and the master had 20s. paid him; he served three years, but the master never paid the duty of 6d. in the pound according to 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 39, which says, that if the duty be not paid, the indenture shall be void to all intents and purposes whatsoever. The case was referred to Fortescue, J., who went the circuit, and he held it a settlement, because the master had six months to pay the duty in; so that during those six months a settlement was gained, and it should not be in the power of the master to defeat it by matter ex post facto. And pursuant to this opinion, the sessions held it a settlement. But upon debate in the King's Bench, the order was quashed; for they said it was making the indenture good to one purpose, when the act of parliament had made it void to all intents and purposes whatsoever. And though it was a hard case, they could not break through the positive words of the act.

Baxter v. Faulam, 1 Wils. 129; 1 Bott, 549. The question upon a demurrer was, whether an indenture of apprenticeship, where 6d. is mentioned to be the sum given with the apprentice, was void for want of the duty being paid for that sum. By the court: "No duty was ever intended to be paid for so insignificant a sum, there being no coin in England small enough to pay it. And by the act no stamp is required for less than 20s."

Rex v. Yarmouth, Burr. S. C. 379. The pauper, W. Jackson, was bound, and served a seven years' apprenticeship in St. Julian's, Norwich. But it appeared that the apprenticeship was in consideration of 6d. given to the master with the apprentice, and no duty was proved to be paid for the same: the point was given up, on the authority of Baxter v. Faulam, (supra).

Rex v. Chipping Norton, 5 B. & Ald. 412. Removal of Jane Eely from Aynho to Chipping Norton. Order confirmed. Case:—By indenture of the 30th October, 1794, William Eely, the late husband of the pauper, bound himself to serve R. Philips, of Chipping Norton, as an apprentice for seven years, and Phillips, in consideration of 25*l.*, the sum given with the apprentice, covenanted to instruct him in the business of a cooper. The indenture was duly stamped, with a stamp denoting the payment of the several duties, amounting in the whole to 6*s.*, imposed by different statutes upon the indenture itself: but it was not stamped with any stamp in respect of the premium, as required by 8 Anne, c. 9, within the time required by that statute, nor until the making of the order of removal, and after the entering of the appeal. Before the hearing of the appeal, the indenture was stamped, upon the payment of 5*l.* penalty, and of 1*l.* with a stamp denoting payment of a duty of 1*l.*, being the ad valorem duty stamp used to denote the payment of such duty under 55 Geo. III. c. 184, and 1*l.* being the duty payable under that statute in respect of a premium of 25*l.* given with an apprentice. The duty payable in respect of the like premium under 8 Anne, c. 9, was 12*s.* 6*d.* only; the duties payable under both the last-mentioned statutes, were, after they were paid into the exchequer, applicable to the same purposes. The stamps used by the commissioners under 55 Geo. III. c. 184, are of a different sort from those which were required to be procured and used by 8 Anne, c. 9, which were poundage stamps. These stamps were used until the passing of 44 Geo. III. c. 98, which imposed an ad valorem duty, and the poundage stamps were disused, and the dies with which they were formed were then broken up, and are not now in existence. Eely served under the indenture seven years.—Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that this indenture

Where the duty is not paid, the indenture is void, and no settlement acquired.

An indenture of apprenticeship, executed before the 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, must be stamped with the premium stamp within the time prescribed by 8 Anne, c. 9; and where such an indenture was stamped at the time of its being produced in evidence, with the stamp required by 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, but not within the time prescribed by 8 Anne: Held, that the indenture was altogether void, and that the pauper gained no settlement by serving under it.

(a) Quære, whether an indenture of apprenticeship, executed since the 55 Geo. III. c. 148, would be affected by the decision in Rex v. Chipping Norton, 5 B. & Ald. 412; and whether a proper stamp in proportion to the duty might not be impressed on payment of a penalty?

was void, not having been stamped within the time required by law; and consequently that the pauper gained no settlement by serving under it. By 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 32, a premium stamp is imposed, and by sect. 36, indentures signed within the limits of the weekly bills of mortality were required to be stamped within one month after the date, and by sect. 37, every indenture entered into elsewhere in Great Britain shall be either stamped within two months, or brought within that time to some collector or officer appointed for the management of these duties, who shall indorse a receipt for the duty paid, bearing date on the day of payment. By sect. 38, indentures executed within fifty miles, to be computed from within the limits of the weekly bills of mortality, shall be stamped within three months; and if at a greater distance, within six months after the date or making thereof. By sect. 39, all indentures not stamped within the respective times for that purpose limited by the act, are declared void, and not available in any court or place, or to any purpose whatsoever. Here, therefore, the legislature expressly requires that the instrument shall be stamped within the prescribed time, and declares that, in case of omission, it shall be void to all intents and purposes; and that forms a distinction between this case and those that have been cited in argument." (a) Order of sessions quashed.

Time of stamping, when immaterial.

Rex v. Preston, 5 B. & Adol. 1028. Where an instrument is not required by law to be stamped within a particular time after its execution, the court, upon its being offered in evidence, will not inquire when the stamp was affixed, nor, if a penalty was incurred, whether the proper penalty was paid on the stamping. An indenture of apprenticeship without premium was executed April 27th, 1825, but not stamped till July, 1832, when a 1*l.* stamp was put on it, and a 5*l.* penalty paid. Afterwards a double duty (2*l.*) was paid. The indenture was offered in evidence to prove the settlement of a pauper by service under it. Held, that as it was not within stat. 8 Anne, c. 9, which limits the time for stamping indentures, the court was not called upon to notice the circumstances under which the stamps were affixed.

The premium given by the parish officers, upon the binding out of a poor apprentice, need not be set out in the indenture in words in full length; such an indenture being exempted from any duty by 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 40, the insertion of the premium being required only to ascertain the amount of the duty.

Rex v. Oadby, 1 B. & Ald. 477. A poor child, by indenture executed by himself, his father and master, bound himself an apprentice. The parish paid all the expense of binding, and gave the master a premium of one guinea. The premium was not mentioned in the indenture. Was it void for this omission? The Court thought that the act was entirely a revenue act. It contains no provisions but those relating to duties. Its title is, "for laying certain duties on candles, and certain rates on monies paid with clerks and apprentices." It had been urged that the premium should appear, as justices had a jurisdiction when the sum paid did not exceed 5*l.* and might award restoration of part. But the court thought there was not in general such a penury of words in statutes, that if that had been the intention, it would not have been expressed in some corner of some clause. Bayley, J. said, "Though sect. 39 in terms requires the sum paid to be inserted, yet it was only for the purpose of raising a duty. When therefore sect. 40 exempts parish indentures from the duty, it entirely supersedes the necessity of inserting the sum paid; and the reason of the provision ceasing, the provision itself ceases to be necessary." Abbott, J. "The court ought not, without seeing its way clearly, to hold this to be a good objection, for it may involve questions of considerable importance; such as the freedom of a corporation, and the following of a profession."

A public annual charitable subscription, held to be a "public charity."

Rex v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, Burr. S. C. 574; 1 Bott, 641. 5*l.* was inserted in the indenture as given with the apprentice, and was paid to the master, and the indenture had no stamp denoting the duty of 6*d.* in the pound being paid. This sum was paid out of a voluntary annual subscription for putting out children apprentices, brought up at the charity school of the parish of St. John, Wapping; and trustees are appointed annually for managing the charity, and a treasurer. It was objected, that this being a private and not a permanent charity, and consequently not within the exception of the act of parliament as to public charities, the indenture, therefore, not being stamped, was void. But by Lord Mansfield and the court: "It is a public charity, and a very laudable one. It is not necessary that it should be a permanent charity. The reason of the distinction between a public and private charity is obvious; a private charity might be calculated to evade the act; a public one cannot be supposed to have been so. But upon payment of the duty and penalty, and a receipt thereof from the stamp office produced in evidence, the writing is made good." (See 8 Mod. 365.)

Rex v. Fakenham, 2 Adol. & El. 528; 4 Nev. & Man. 553, S. C. An order of justices, whereby Stephen Carter and wife were removed from the hamlet of Heigham, in Norwich, to the parish of Fakenham, in Norfolk, was confirmed, subject to the following case. In order to prove a settlement in Fakenham, the respondents produced the will of John Norman, dated 19th February, 1720, whereby certain real estates were devised to trustees and their heirs, upon trust (at certain intervals after testator's death) to put to school, and at the age of fifteen to bind out apprentice to some trade a son of some one of his or his first wife's relations, until the whole number of boys together in being, that should be thus put to school and provided for, should amount to thirty. And the testator directed that as often as there should be a deficiency of the descendants of his or his first wife's relations, the trustees should put to school and place out apprentice a son or sons of some inhabitant or inhabitants of Beer Street Ward, or Upper Conisford Ward, in Norwich, or of the parish of Catton, in Norfolk; and the testator directed, that at the end of sixty years after his decease, the number of boys should be increased by two, three or four in a year, until it reached 120, of his or his said first wife's descendants, if they could be known or made out by his trustees, and if not, of such others as aforesaid out of Beer Street or Conisford Wards, and Catton, if enough were there to be had, if not, out of the neighbouring parishes in Norwich, at the discretion of his trustees, such children of strangers to be chiefly of such parents as had been reduced by losses and had paid to church and poor. An indenture of apprenticeship, dated 1st February, 1821, not stamped, was then produced, by which the pauper, with his father's consent, bound himself apprentice to H. Vincent, of Norwich, tinman, to learn his art for seven years, at a premium of 15*l.* stated in the indenture to be paid to the master by George Morse, the treasurer appointed according to the will of Norman, for the purpose of annually binding out poor children apprentices; and Vincent covenanted with the pauper, and his father, and Morse, to teach the pauper the art or mystery of a tinman, and to pay the father 3*s.* a week for the first year, and an additional shilling a week during each succeeding year of his apprenticeship. The indenture was executed by Vincent, the pauper, and Morse. The pauper was bound out as the son of a relation of Norman or his first wife. The premium was paid out of the rents of the trust estates, and the indenture was prepared by the clerk to the charity and paid for by the charity. There never had been a deficiency of the sons of such relations, and no stranger had had the benefit of the bequest. The pauper served Vincent, in Norwich, under the indenture, for about three years and a half, when at the request of the pauper (who was still a minor) Vincent consented that he should serve the remainder of his time with his (the pauper's) brother, in his trade of plumber and glazier, and agreed to give to the brother 6*l.* as part of the 15*l.* paid as a premium on the binding of the apprentice for taking him. In pursuance of this agreement, Vincent returned to the pauper 6*l.* as part of the premium received with him. For this sum the pauper accounted with his brother. There was no agreement in writing between the first and second masters, or between the pauper and his second master. The pauper served his brother two years, and was taught by him the trade of a plumber and glazier, and during that time slept in Fakenham. Neither the trustees under Norman's will, nor the treasurer, were parties to the agreement with the pauper's brother. The counsel for the appellants objected to the indenture's being received in evidence for want of a stamp, but the court received it and confirmed the orders of removal. If this court shall be of opinion that the indenture required a stamp, either originally or upon the pauper's going to serve his brother, or that the service with the brother was insufficient to confer a settlement, either on the ground that the trade of the brother was different from that of his first master, or that neither of the trustees nor the treasurer were parties to the agreement between his master and brother, the order is to be quashed; otherwise, to be confirmed. Lord Denman, C. J. "In this case it was the old master that paid the new. The statement in the case, that the 6*l.* was paid as part of the old consideration paid out of the charitable fund, must be construed consistently with the facts of the case; it must be taken to mean that the 6*l.* was considered a fair proportion of what the original money was, not that it was a part of the original money." Littledale, J. "The object of the will was, that every thing relating to the apprenticeship should remain in the hands of the trustees. A new arrangement was made, both as to the service and premium, to which the trustees were no parties. Whatever exemption therefore belonged to the transaction originally, it was taken away when the master stood by himself, and a transfer took place, with which the charity had nothing to do." Williams, J. concurred. Order quashed.

A bequest of money to put out children apprentices, is a "public charity" within 8 Anne.

Rex v. Clifton upon Dunsmore, Burr. S. C. 697; 1 Bott, 641. G. Hammond, about thirteen years of age, was bound apprentice by indenture stamped with a treble sixpenny stamp, to W. W. of Swinford, for seven years. The consideration money in the indenture (being 7*l.*) received by the master, was mentioned in the indenture to be paid by J. Baily of Clifton, being charity money left by C. B. widow. The indenture was not stamped with any stamp denoting 6*d.* in the pound to have been paid, nor any apprentice duty paid. One item of the will was, to "Clifton 50*l.* to be given as my brother thinks fit; some of it to put out children apprentices." The court held this to be a public charity, and that therefore the duty was not payable on the apprentice fee.

Where money is given by the apprentice's grandfather to the master to clothe the boy, before he enters upon his apprenticeship; it is not such a consideration as the statute requires to be set out in the indenture.

Rex v. North Oworm, Burr. S. C. 145; 1 Bott, 462. The mother of S. Spenser, the pauper, proposed to put him apprentice to a master at North Oworm, who refused to take him because he wanted clothes; but proposed to take him if they would clothe him, or give him money to clothe him with. The grandfather of the boy said he would do so. And it was agreed, that the grandfather should pay 30*s.* to the master to clothe the boy, and that the master should take him as an apprentice. In pursuance of that agreement, the master did lay out 30*s.* in clothing for the boy. Afterwards an indenture was executed by the master and the apprentice: the 30*s.* was paid by the grandfather to the master. The apprentice served under such indenture for six years in North Oworm. In the indenture a covenant was made for the master to find clothes for the apprentice during the term. But no mention was made of the 30*s.* neither was any duty paid for the same, nor was the indenture stamped with the additional stamp required by the 8 Anne, c. 9, to denote such sum given with the apprentice. By the court: "The not inserting in words at length the full sum received or contracted for, subjects the master to a forfeiture, but doth not make the indenture void. And upon the state of the case, the master is to be looked upon in no other condition than if he had been a stranger employed as an agent by the grandfather to clothe the boy; and the grandfather was obliged to repay him, and did repay him. This clothing was before the binding, so that it amounts to no more than putting a boy apprentice ready clothed. It is not a premium received by the master. The statute means money given for the benefit of the master. But he has no benefit from this 30*s.* He was not obliged to clothe the boy before he was his apprentice; and this agreement was executed before the indenture was sealed. And adjudged that the apprentice gained a settlement.

Consideration money given with an apprentice by parish officers is not liable to the

Rex v. St. Petrox in Dartmouth, 4 T. R. 196. J. Hambling, the father of the pauper's husband, deceased, having been told by the parish officers of Townstall they would give him 20*s.* to bind out his son an apprentice, did so bind him out: and the agreement between H. the father, and M. Haynes, a widow, and the mother of an infant, to which infant the boy was to be bound, was, that he should pay M. H. 20s. as a consideration for such apprenticeship. It did not appear that she knew of any promise made by the overseers to Hambling respecting such advance of money. Hambling afterwards received from them the 20s.; he paid 5s. of that sum to M. H. and procured the remainder, but applied it to his own use. The indenture had no stamp for the consideration money. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "We must consider this to be a fair binding to the son, because the sessions have not stated it to be fraudulent. Then, if it were, as it professed to be, a binding to the son, and not colourably to the mother, the statute requires no duty for the consideration money, even though the money were not raised at the charge of the parish. The act of parliament, taking it altogether, undoubtedly imposes the duty on money paid to the master or mistress ONLY; for it says, 'that every master or mistress to or with whom, or to whose use any sum shall be given, paid, secured, or contracted for or in respect of any such apprentices,' &c. Now here the master did not receive the money which was given with the apprentice, but for reasons (not here stated) the mother received it; and it is not stated that she received it as agent for her son. But even supposing that the master had received or contracted for the consideration money, it was not subject to the duty imposed by the statute of Anne, because it was money raised at the common and public charge of the parish of T., and as such it comes within the proviso in that act. It was assumed in argument, that there can be no binding of a parish apprentice within the meaning of this proviso, unless it be compulsory under 43 Eliz., with the concurrence of two magistrates. But that cannot be the construction of the statute, for one of the purposes of raising rates for relief of the poor, was to put out children apprentices at the expense of the parish; that is not restrained to a compulsory binding, which is under a subsequent clause. The object of the act is as well answered by a binding with the consent of the parents, as by a compulsory binding without their interference. All that is required is, that it should be obligatory on the children. If the parents discharge their duty, there is no necessity for the interference of the magistrates or parish officers; but if they neglect it, or are not able to procure masters, the parish officers are bound to interfere, and they stand loco parentis." Ashhurst, J., giving no opinion on the objection that the payment had been made to the master of the apprentice, and not to the mother, said "that the money having been paid out of the public fund of the parish, was decisive." Grose, J. agreed.

Rex v. Portsea, Burr. S. C. 884. An indenture of apprenticeship covenanted "that sufficient meat, apparel, physic, and lodging, and all other necessaries, during the term, should be provided for the apprentice by the father; for which purpose the master was to allow him 4s. per week." There was a covenant for deduction from this payment in case of absence or loss of time. It was objected that the duty had not been paid for the lodging and physic, covenanted to be found by the father. And it was answered, "that the 4s. per week was an equivalent, and the additional stamp unnecessary." And the court held that this answer was sufficient, as there was nothing before them to show that 4s. per week was not an equivalent; and they were not to presume it was not an equivalent; (i. e. that it was not equal to the amount as cost of the board, &c.;) if it were less than that cost, then the overplus paid for by the father would be a benefit to the master, he being at common law bound to provide for his apprentice: as to this obligation, see Rex v. Leighton (post, 500). And Aston, J. hinted that the 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 45, which says, "that where any thing or things, not being lawful money of G. B., shall directly or indirectly be given," means such other equivalents as a horse, or other valuable thing of that sort; not such an agreement as this is, "to provide necessaries for a son."

Rex v. Walton in Le Dale, 3 T. R. 515. R. Cunliffe was removed from Walton in Le Dale to Kirkham. The pauper bound himself by an indenture of apprenticeship to Croft and Hall, calico-printers, for seven years. The indenture contained a covenant on the part of the pauper, that he would pro- duty imposed by 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 35, even though the binding be voluntary, and the party receiving the apprentice be not privy to the gift.

The father providing lodging, board, &c. for the apprentice, and the master to pay four shillings per week to the father for the same, no additional stamp is necessary.

Where an apprentice covenants to provide himself meat, drink, lodging, &c., and the vide for himself meat, lodging, apparel, and physic, during the term; and his master covenanted to pay him 5s. per week for the three first years; 6s. per week for the fourth and fifth years; and 7s. per week for the sixth and seventh years. There was a proviso that the pauper should not be entitled to any wages during sickness or neglect of his work. And in case he was not employed at the business for which he was bound, then his masters should be at liberty to reduce one half of his wages for two months yearly. The pauper served under this indenture, which was written upon the proper stamp, but no additional duty was paid according to 8 Anne, c. 9. (a) It was insisted that the indenture was inadmissible in evidence, and void, not only for want of a stamp for the additional duty, but also on account of the nature of the contract and the clauses contained in the indenture; but the sessions thought otherwise, and reversed the order. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "Pennington v. Sudall, 1 Bott, 551, which has been cited, cannot be taken as an authority deciding any thing. If we were to infer any thing from that case, it would rather be the reverse of that which has been supposed; because the case went off on an agreement to admit the apprentice to his freedom, which could only have been done under the idea that he had served a legal apprenticeship. The principal question relative to the additional stamp duty cannot be decided on this case, as it is now stated. I believe it is the practice at the stamp office to set a value on these sorts of benefits as a matter of course, when the indentures are carried to them. Now here the apprentice stipulated to provide himself with certain things, which it is said the master is bound by law to provide for him, and for which it is contended an additional stamp duty ought to have been paid, because it is a benefit to the master: but, on the other hand, the master was to make certain weekly payments to the apprentice. Then how can we say that those payments were not equivalent for the maintenance, &c.? I believe they are much more. But before we can decide the material question the justices must find the fact, whether those payments were or were not an equivalent. I therefore studiously avoid giving any opinion on the general question; and it is enough for me to say at present, that it does not appear but that the master gave an equivalent for the benefit which he received." Buller, J. "I do not see any thing like a benefit to the master, for which an additional duty ought to have been paid. The master covenanted to pay the apprentice so much per week; that clearly is not within the statute. Then it was provided that in case the apprentice should be ill, and be unable to perform his business, or neglect to do it, he should not receive any wages; but this was no benefit to the master; it was only an agreement that he should not pay, but not that he should receive any thing."

If the friends of an apprentice covenant to maintain him on every Sunday, and to provide him with clothes, this is not such a benefit as is liable to a duty imposed by 8 Anne.

Rex v. Leighton, 4 T. R. 732; 1 Bott, 556. J. Price was removed from Leighton to Church Coppenhall. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice by his father to R. Lindrop, of Church Coppenhall, shoemaker, under an indenture for four years, to learn the trade of a shoemaker, in which was a covenant by the father that he would, at his own charge, provide for his son sufficient meat and lodging, on every Sunday during the term, and would provide him with apparel (except working aprons and shoes) and washing. There was a covenant on the part of the master to provide for the apprentice meat and lodging (except on Sundays) during the term. The indenture was on a 5s. stamp. The pauper served the four years for six days and nights in each week, and went to his father's every Sunday. The father expended 5*l.* and upwards in clothing his son, and in providing meat, &c., for him on Sundays during the term; for this no additional duty was paid. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This has been verata questio ever since I came into Westminster Hall, and various opinions have been entertained upon it. It is true that if an indenture be taken to the stamp office, they will set their value upon every supposed benefit to the master for the sake of the revenue: but that is by no means decisive. The question depends on 8 Anne, c. 9,

(a) It was admitted, but not stated in the case, that the wages were equivalent to the board, whilst the apprentice was employed as a printer.

s. 32, 45 ; the former section imposes a duty on all sums of money given with any apprentice, &c., and the latter enacts, 'that where any thing, not being money, shall be given, contracted for, or secured, to or for the use or benefit of the master, the duty shall be paid for the full value of such thing, in such manner,' &c. The latter provision was inserted for the purpose of protecting the revenue from any fraud which might otherwise be practised by the parties giving something in lieu of money. For if, as in the case put by Aston, J., a horse, or other valuable thing of that sort, be given by the friends of the apprentice to the master, that must be considered to be a benefit to the master, for which a duty should be paid. It occurred to me early in the argument, that in order to see what would or what would not be considered as a benefit to the master, it was necessary to inquire what were the duties that resulted from the bare relation of master and apprentice. And I think that the 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 5, throws a great deal of light upon that point ; because if, from the time of the statute of Eliz. to that time, masters could not be compelled to provide for parish apprentices, and that law was made for the purpose, it shows that the obligation of providing for apprentices did not result from the mere relation of master and apprentice ; for if it had, that part of the statute of W. III. was unnecessary. The case of parish apprentices is the only one where an apprentice can be put out nolens volens ; all the others depend on the express stipulation to be made by the parties interested. It has never been held that the obligation of the master extended to the providing clothes for the apprentice, and yet I cannot distinguish that from the obligation to provide sustenance ; for the former are equally necessary with the latter : and in other cases than those of parish apprentices, clothes are generally provided by the friends of the apprentice. But if every thing is to be valued, and a duty set upon it, from which a benefit arises to the master, it might be equally said that the earnings of the apprentice should be liable to the duty. The argument, therefore, that every benefit which the master derives from the apprentice, by proving too much, proves nothing. The authority of Aston, J. is in all cases worth resorting to, but particularly so in cases of sessions' law, in which he was remarkably conversant. And his opinion in the case alluded to is very strong to this point. I think, therefore, that the clear meaning of the statute of Anne is, that where money or money's worth is given to the master by the friends of the apprentice, by way of premium, a duty ought to be paid for it ; but where meat, clothes, &c. are to be provided for the apprentice, no duty is payable, because there is not any thing given to the master." Buller, J. "The terms of the s. 32 refer to something which is given to the master or contracted for, and only apply to cases where the master is to derive a benefit from the friends of the apprentice, independent of the benefit to be derived from the apprentice himself ; and, therefore, whatever is given for the advantage, benefit, and accommodation of the apprentice, does not fall within the clause. Grose, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Aylesbury, 3 Bar. & Adol. 569. On appeal against an order of removal from Aylesbury to Leighton Buzzard the sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the court on the following case :—The pauper, on the 4th November, 1823, was bound apprentice by the trustees of a public charity to W. Fryer, for seven years. The master covenanted to find the pauper meat, drink, apparel, washing, lodging, and all other things needful during the apprenticeship. Before the indenture was executed the father of the pauper, who was no party to it, agreed with the master to find the pauper clothing and washing during the term, and he accordingly did so during great part of the time ; and the clothes and washing so supplied might amount to 10*l.* in value. The master said he would not have taken the pauper unless the father had made such agreement. There was no evidence that the trustees of the charity were privy to this arrangement. The indenture was not stamped, and it was objected by the appellants, that the apprentice had not been bound by or at the sole charge of a public charity, and therefore that the want of a stamp rendered the indenture invalid, and the sessions allowed the objection. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the indenture ought to have been stamped under the statute 55 Geo. III. c. 184. By Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. Leighton, 4 T. R. 732 (ante, 500), where this point seems to have been very fully considered. That case turned upon 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 45, the words of which are very similar to those of 55 Geo. III. c. 184, schedule, part i. tit. (Apprenticeship), and the decision proceeded on the ground that there was no obligation on the part of the master, in the absence of express stipulation, to provide clothes or sustenance for an apprentice, and therefore that the agreement so to do by the father could not be considered a benefit to the master; and the concluding words of Lord Kenyon's judgment apply to this case (ante, 500). It is urged that this case is distinguishable, because there the father covenanted in the indenture to provide clothes, &c., but that here the benefit is given to the master by the father's agreement, independent of the indenture. But that agreement being prior to the indenture, if it was made without the knowledge of the trustees of the charity, it was a fraud upon them, and therefore void, even if the providing clothes could be considered as any thing given to or for the benefit of the master; but I think that the agreement by the father to provide clothes cannot be considered as having that effect." Littledale, J. "I think this case falls within the case of Rex v. Leighton." Parke, J. "It is said that there is a benefit conferred on the master by the agreement of the father to provide clothes, and that this is equivalent to a sum of money. Assuming it to be so, the agreement was then a fraud on the trustees of the charity; for it is clear from the covenant in the indenture, that they bound out the pauper on the faith that the master was to find apparel, &c. (see Rex v. Baildon, 3 Bar. & Adol. 427, post, 501), and the latter could not have sued the father for not providing clothes, for there was no binding engagement on him to do so." Patteson, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

A master stipulating for part of the apprentice's earnings, is not a consideration within the statute.

Rex v. Wantage, 1 East, 601; 1 Bott, 559. The pauper, T. Smart, was bound apprentice to a ropemaker for seven years. The indentures were lost, but it appeared that the pauper was to find himself in clothes, board and lodging; the master was to allow him full journeyman's wages, but was to have 4d. out of every shilling of the pauper's earning. The indentures were stamped, but no duty was paid for any consideration reserved to the master. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "It was impossible to argue that a part of the apprentice's earnings reserved to the master was a benefit to him within the meaning of the statute, when by law he was entitled to the whole, and might be rather considered to have given up that part which he did not reserve, than to have acquired any thing."

Where the stamp duty is on the sum contracted for, and that sum is inserted in the indenture, though a less sum be actually paid by the apprentice, still the indenture is good, and service under it gains a settlement.

Rex v. Keynsham, 5 East, 309; 1 Bott, 560. The pauper, in October, 1791, was bound apprentice for seven years, to J. C., at Bath. Five guineas was agreed to be paid by the father to the master as a premium, and was the sum inserted in the indenture. The only sum paid was the sum of four guineas, which was paid at the time of executing the indenture. Grose, J. "We must attend to the intention of the legislature, which was to raise a revenue; for this purpose the act requires, (s. 35,) 'that the full sum of money received, or in anywise directly or indirectly given, paid, agreed, or contracted for, with the apprentice, shall be truly inserted,' under a certain penalty. By s. 39 the indenture is avoided, 'if the sum received, given, paid, secured, or contracted for,' be not so truly inserted. By requiring the full sum to be inserted, it meant that not less than the sum upon which the duty was really payable should be inserted. Here, not only the full sum, but more than the sum for which the duty was payable, has been inserted, and the duty paid upon such larger sum. Then more than the act required has been complied with." Lawrence, J. observed, "that he saw no reason why the master might not recover the remainder of the five guineas in an action." (See Rex v. Quinten, 2 M. & Sel. 338, post, 519.)

Rex v. Bradford, 1 M. & Sel. 151. Removal of T. Holgate from Bradford to Thornton. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper, being twenty-one years of age, by indenture of the 3d of April, 1805, bound himself apprentice to D. Fawcett, of Bradford, for three years and twenty-one weeks by an inindenture. The pauper agreed to allow his master 2s. per week, and to have (leaving a blank) wages, and to provide for himself for the term. The pauper served his master for the term in Bradford, and the 2s. a week were deducted out of the wages he received during his service. The indenture was upon a 15s. stamp, and it was objected that the 44 Geo. III. c. 98, required a stamp of 1l. 10s., and therefore the indenture was void. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If the words of the covenant were transposed, they would run thus: the pauper to have wages and to allow his master 2s. per week; and then there would be no doubt of their meaning an allowance out of the wages simply; and what difference does the order in which they now stand make in the sense? It therefore can never be considered as a boon to the master, who, instead of having the labour of his apprentice for nothing, which he was entitled to have, agrees to pay him wages, deducting 2s. per week out of them." Le Blanc, J. "The master had a right to the whole of the earnings, but allows, by way of wages, such a sum as they are computed at, minus 2s. per week, on account of his providing for himself."

Rex v. Bourton-upon-Dunsmore, 9 B. & C. 872. Order of removal of H. Webb, &c. from Stretton-upon-Dunsmore to Bourton-upon-Dunsmore. Confirmed. Case:—The pauper resided in a third parish more than forty days, under an indenture of apprenticeship: it was contended that this was void upon this evidence. The mother of the pauper (who was illegitimate) was deserted by her husband, not the father of her child: he gave a premium of 10l. and no more; the master required 20l.; this the mother refused, but they came to a private understanding that he should receive something besides the 10l., but the particular sum did not appear. It was agreed that 10l. should be inserted in the said indenture, which was done; the step-father paid the 10l., and the mother paid him further two-and-a-half guineas; neither the apprentice nor the step-father knew of the private understanding, and never knew that a greater sum than 10l. had been paid, but the master was not aware that the agreement of the mother was without the privity of her husband. The indenture had the proper stamp for any sum not exceeding 30l. Bayley, J. "The sum really and bonâ fide paid and contracted for, was inserted in the indenture. There was no binding agreement for any sum beyond that amount; the promises made by the feme covert, did not bind her." Littledale, J. "Assuming that the contract was binding, there was no contract to pay a specified sum, so that it was impossible to insert in the indenture the sum paid." Parke, J. "The Stamp Act attaches on the specific sum given, paid, secured, or contracted for. As soon as the master executed the indenture, he became bound to take the apprentice. 10l. was the only sum given, contracted, or agreed for. The promise to pay the extra sum was a mere honorary agreement." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Baildon, 3 Bar. & Ad. 427. The consideration expressed in an indenture of apprenticeship was 4l., to be paid to the master by a public charity; but the apprentice's mother privately agreed to pay, and did pay the master after execution of the indenture, 1l. in addition. Held, that the indenture (though stamped) was void, by 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 39, the full sum contracted for with or in relation to the apprentice not being inserted. (But see Rex v. Aylesbury, 3 Bar. & Adol. 569, ante, 501.)

In Rex v. Amersham, H. T. 1836, a person paid 15l. to the master; but the fact was unknown to the trustees, who were the parties to the indenture. The 15l. must be mentioned in the indenture or the apprentice will not gain a settlement.

Rex v. Mabe, 5 Nev. & Man. 241. Upon appeal against an order of two justices of the borough of Penryn, for the removal of Nicholas Halvosso, his wife and children, from Penryn to Mabe. Case:—By indenture duly executed, dated 16th October, 1799, and since lost, Nicholas Halvosso, then being about fifteen years of age, was bound apprentice, with the consent of his surviving parent, to Thomas Bolitho, of the parish of St. Gluvias, tanner, until he should attain the age of twenty-one; no sum of money or value was given or contracted for with or in relation to the said apprentice; the said indenture was stamped with the several stamps impressed on indentures of that class by the several statutes prior to 37 Geo. III. c. 111, amounting to 10s.; but the sessions considering it liable, under that act, to an additional stamp duty of 10s. held that it ought not to be received in evidence, and confirmed the order subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench. Lord Denman, C. J. "This is an evident mistake in the act, but we have no power to correct a mistake of the legislature. According to the only construction which we can put on this proviso, it operates to exempt only money contracts, (or contracts for other valuable consideration,) of a certain limited amount." The other judges concurring, order of sessions confirmed.

Same point.

Rex v. Holbeck, Burr. S. C. 198; 2 Bott, 864. P. Orange, the pauper, was bound a parish apprentice by indenture; but the indenture was not stamped. The 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 21, s. 11, lays a duty of 6d. upon the indenture of a parish apprentice; and enacts, that such indenture shall not be given in evidence, nor be available in any court, till the duty and also a penalty of 5l. be paid, and the parchment or paper stamped. By the court: This indenture was necessary evidence to make out the proof of a binding by indenture; for that binding could be no otherwise proved but by the indenture, and the indenture, being unstamped, could not be admitted as evidence, and the justices ought to have paid no regard to it.

The stamp formerly must have been of the proper kind as well as value; even though the stamp used was higher than that required, and applicable to the same kind of instrument. But by 55 Geo. III. c. 184, s. 10, all instruments upon which any stamp shall have been used of an improper denomination or rate of value, but of equal or greater value than the regular stamp, shall be valid, unless the stamp is specifically appropriated to any other instrument by having its name on the face thereof.

An apprenticeship to two masters, to serve them consecutively in two distinct trades, is valid, and requires only a single stamp.

Rex v. Louth, 2 Man. & R. 273; 8 B. & C. 247. The pauper, Benjamin Furnish, was, in 1780, bound apprentice to his father, Thomas F., a woolcomber, and to J. Grozer, a weaver, not co-partners, by indenture duly executed by all parties, upon which there is only one 5s. stamp. The indenture was made between Grozer, weaver, Furnish, woolcomber, and the pauper. The pauper of his own free will, and with the consent of his parents, bound himself apprentice with Grozer and Furnish, and with them as apprentice to dwell and serve from the date thereof for seven years; the apprentice his said masters well and faithfully would serve; hurt to masters shall not do; the goods of his said masters shall not waste; nor from his masters' service at any time absent himself; but as a true apprentice shall behave himself towards his said masters and all his; and a just account of all his masters' goods, committed to his charge, faithfully should give his said masters: and Grozer did covenant with the pauper that Grozer and Furnish, his executors, &c. should teach him in the trade of stuff-weaving and woolcombing, which the said masters then used; and also should provide for the apprentice sufficient meat, and John Grozer to provide him meals and lodgings for the first four years; (to and not exceeding eight hanks per day, and to have four hanks allowed for looming; to have three days each year for himself, and to have four shillings for a low count, if he works any over-work, and so in proportion;) the apprentice to serve the latter three years with T. Furnish; (and not to exceed five pound per day;) the said apprentice to receive one shilling per year wages; and Grozer to be absolutely free from the apprentice at the end of four years from the date thereof; and the said apprentice not to have above three days if he should have to stand for work. The pauper served and resided under such indenture at Leeds for four years and three months, and then removed to Louth. Bayley, J. "It was formerly supposed that under the statute of the 5 Eliz. c. 4, an apprenticeship for less than seven years was void. The effect of that statute was, that certain benefits attached on a seven years' binding before 57 Geo. III. But the indentures are voidable only at the election of the parties, and, therefore, a binding for four years had been held to confer a settlement. It appears to me that this is a valid indenture to constitute the party an apprentice for seven years. There is certainly a degree of peculiarity about it. In ordinary cases, the party is bound for seven years, to serve one master and learn one trade. In seven years, a party may have time to learn two distinct trades; and the acquisition of one may materially assist the party in practising the other. The father, of course, is anxious that his son shall learn as much as possible, and that he shall also be under proper control. The object was to acquire instruction. The father prevails upon a master to take his son for less than seven years; but, at the same time, he wishes to provide a person who shall stand in the relation of master to his son during the remainder of that period. He might not wish to take an assignment. This is nothing more than a stipulation, and, in my opinion, a reasonable one, that there shall be an apprenticeship for seven years, during which the apprentice shall be learning two trades; and that one period shall be fixed for learning one trade, and another for another. The whole is one transaction, and requires only one stamp." During the argument, Bayley, J. observed that "the circumstance of the binding being for seven years was important." Holroyd, J. "The contract is for a certain period, though the apprentice was to serve two masters, who carried on different trades. It will be a good contract if the apprentice is bound to two masters, to learn successively two different trades. The next question is, whether the indenture is rendered void by the stamp act. I am of opinion that it is not void, unless it be shown that the parties adopted this particular form to evade the payment of duties, which by law they would otherwise be bound to pay. Unless that be shown, I think we should construe the indenture so as not to avoid it. Now if it was bonâ fide agreed between the father and first master, that his son should have the benefit of a seven years' apprenticeship, that the father should take him at the end of the first four years, he would take him under the indenture, and no new stamp would be necessary. The duty is imposed on every indenture, not with reference to the number of masters, or the number of trades. No fraud being found, I think this is but one binding and one indenture. There may have been two bindings, as far as the masters are concerned, but so far as the apprentice is concerned, there was but one; he was bound by an indenture to serve one master for four and another for three years." Littledale, J. "Suppose that, before the 5 Eliz., a parent, intending that his son should learn two trades, (connected or unconnected,) and had agreed with two persons that each should teach him a trade, there would be no objection, at common law, to the two persons taking the apprentice successively. The statute confers privileges on persons who serve for seven years, but it does not render other contracts void. By the stamp act, a duty shall be paid on every indenture, not a distinct duty in respect of each master or each trade. This instrument does not operate as two indentures, or as an indenture and assignment, so as to require two stamps. There was no intention to evade the stamp duties. It relates to one transaction. And if it was originally agreed that the father should take the apprentice at the end of four years, he took him by virtue of the indenture, and not of the assignment.

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 56, s. 17 (ante, 483), enacts, that only two shillings shall be charged upon the indenture of any apprentice to serve at sea in the merchant service.

8. Of the other Essentials of the Contract.

8. OF THE OTHER ESSENTIALS OF THE CONTRACT, AND THAT AN IMPERFECT APPRENTICESHIP CANNOT OPERATE AS A HIRING AND SERVICE. (a)

Where parties intend to create the relation of master and apprentice, the contract entered into between them for that purpose can have no force with reference to the law of settlements, but as a contract of apprenticeship; and therefore if their contract, from any defect of form or substance, falls short of what it purports to be, it is not available as a contract of hiring and service. If it has not all the legal requisites of an apprenticeship, it is an absolute nullity; and the ingredients to constitute a hiring for a year, or a term of years, cannot be picked out of such a contract, so as by a service under it to entitle the party to a settlement (ante, 393).

The defects of form which are fatal to the right of settlement by apprenticeship, have been exhibited in the preceding cases: it remains to be seen in what manner the contract itself will be insufficient to establish a settlement of this description.

If the intention be to create an apprenticeship, and the indenture is void, it confers no settlement.

Salford v. Storeford, 2 Barnard. 39; 2 Bott, 363. Order of removal confirmed. Case:—Lineacre had been bound an apprentice by indenture, and served his master the last two years of his apprenticeship at Salford; the indenture was not stamped. The justices judged this to be a good settlement by way of service, though not as an apprenticeship. But the court held this to be no settlement, on the authority of Cuerden v. Leyland (ante, 495), and quashed the order.

Where one is taken as an apprentice, but the indentures are not executed, it cannot be converted into a hiring and service.

Rex v. Whitchurch Canonorum, Burr. S. C. 450; 2 Bott, 368. The pauper, being of the age of twenty-two years, agreed with a stone-mason that he should take him apprentice for six years, to teach him the trade, and that the indentures should be executed accordingly. He went and served five years, when they parted by consent: no indentures were executed. It was contended that this was good as a hiring and service. By the court: "Here is no hiring, expressed or implied. A binding as an apprentice, and a hiring as a servant, cannot be converted one into the other." Rex v. St. Mary Kalendar, Winchester, was mentioned as in point.

Where an unstamped agreement recited that the pauper is to be bound apprentice, it was held that no settlement was gained.

Rex v. All Saints in Hereford, Burr. S. C. 656; 2 Bott, 370. The pauper, Abraham Lewis, when a boy, together with his father, entered into an agreement in writing, not stamped, with Mrs. Tringham of All Saints, reciting, that "whereas the boy, with the consent of his father, is to be bound apprentice to her for seven years;" she agrees to pay the boy 25s. the first year, the four following years 50s. each, the sixth year 3*l.*, and the seventh year 4*l.* He served her two years, and received the money agreed on for the time, then left his mistress; no indenture was executed. By the court: "An apprenticeship was certainly the thing in view; but no indenture was executed; nor could the agreement be esteemed to supply the want of it, as it was not stamped. Nor can it be considered in the nature of a service; for in that case there must be a hiring for a year, and a service for a year under such hiring. And the binding as an apprentice cannot be converted into the hiring as a servant."

If A. serve seven years as an apprentice, and there be no indenture, he cannot gain a settlement, either as an apprentice or yearly servant.

Rex v. Margram, 3 T. R. 378; 2 Bott, 378. The pauper's mother had made an agreement with Mr. Tyler, agent for the English copper company, who lived in Margram, for him to serve seven years as an apprentice; and he served in the copper works for eight years, and learned the trade of a refiner, and received weekly wages; as also 20s. a year, as a refiner, and he conceived himself serving as an apprentice, but he signed no indenture or agreement whatsoever, nor was any signed by any other person on his behalf, or to his knowledge. The court, without hearing any argument, were clearly of opinion that this servitude as an apprentice, could not be converted into a service under a hiring.

If, for fraudulent seventeen years of age, went to W. Evans, of St. Mary de Crespt, in Gloucester, carpenter, for the purpose of being his apprentice for four years, to learn the trade of a carpenter; but to save the expenses of indentures and duty, (four guineas' consideration being paid by the pauper to his master,) he and his master agreed to sign an agreement on unstamped paper, which was accordingly done. Lord Mansfield, C. J. and the court held, that it was clear that a fraud was intended; that the pauper meant to be an apprentice and defraud the revenue; and that therefore no settlement could be gained by service under such circumstances.

Rex v. Laindon, 8 T. R. 379. Order of removal of J. Claydon from East Horndon to Laindon, confirmed. Case:—The pauper went to Ingrave in November, 1792, and after being one month upon trial with J. Mander, a carpenter, in East Horndon, he entered into this unstamped written agreement: "November 20th, 1792, I, John Mander, do hereby agree with J. Claydon to serve me three years to learn the business of a carpenter; the first year to have 1s. 2d. per day; the second year to have 1s. 6d. per day; the third year to have 1s. 10d. per day: witness my hand, J. Claydon, J. Mander. Witness, Robert Beles." The pauper proved that at the time of signing the agreement, he agreed to give Mander the sum of three guineas as a premium (a) to teach him the said trade, and paid Mander 1l. 15s., which, with 1l. 8s. due for wages during the month of trial, made the three guineas; and that he was not to be, and was not employed in any other work than that of a carpenter. The pauper worked with and served Mander under this agreement the whole three years, and slept the last forty nights in East Horndon, and considered himself as an apprentice under the agreement; but he thought himself at liberty to leave his master if he used him ill. The parol evidence, explanatory of the agreement, was objected to, but received. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The justices who made this order, and the justices who confirmed it, were of opinion that the pauper was not hired to serve Mander as a yearly servant, but that the relation which was created between them, was that of master and apprentice. The opinions of the magistrates ought not indeed decidedly to influence our judgment, as they have referred the case to us; but when a certain opinion has gone abroad, founded on the decisions of this court, upon which magistrates have been acting, it ought not lightly to be departed from. The first question that arises in this case is, on the admissibility of the parol evidence. This parol evidence was not offered to contradict the written agreement, but to ascertain an independent fact, and I think it was properly received in evidence. That being so, the case appears to be shortly this: in consideration of three guineas paid by the pauper, the master undertook to teach him the business of a carpenter, and the pauper was to serve three years. I am sorry that nice distinctions were ever taken in the determination of cases on this subject; but notwithstanding those little differences, we must consider the whole class of decisions on this point, and extract the principle from them. It is admitted in all of them, that if two persons intend to enter into the relation of master and apprentice, and owing to some circumstance the relation of apprenticeship is not duly constituted, as if the indentures be not stamped, this shall not change the condition of the parties; if they cannot avail themselves of the consequences of the condition in which they intended to stand, they shall not be put into another condition in which they did not mean to place themselves. But when it is urged that this relation can only be formed by using the term "apprentice," it may be observed that the argument would lead to an absurd consequence: for then if the word "clerk" were used in regular indentures of apprenticeship, the clerk would not gain a settlement by serving under the indenture, merely because he was not retained eo nomine as an apprentice; but it would be a disgrace to our laws, if we were obliged to decide according to words, without considering their reasons, the indenture is not completed, no settlement can be gained under it.

A contract of apprenticeship may be formed without using the word "apprentice;" but a defective contract of apprenticeship cannot be converted into a contract of hiring and service, so as to give the apprentice a settlement.

(a) The fact of giving the premium, seems to be material, as showing the service to be under an intention of apprenticeship.

meaning. It was properly said by Lord Hardwicke, that 'there is no magic in words;' and he said this not as a discovery just then made by him, but as a maxim that was handed down to him from his predecessors. If the relation of master and servant be created by the contract of the parties, though they do not use the very words tantamount, it is sufficient. In this case, a premium was paid by one man to another who engaged to teach him a trade: now, what is that but an apprenticeship? The term 'apprentice' is taken from the French word apprendre, to learn. Unfortunately, Lord Mansfield did not adhere to his first opinion in Rex v. Little Bolton (ante, 393); but even when he gave his second opinion in that case, he took it for granted that the rule remained unshaken; that if the parties intended to create the relation of master and apprentice, and it were not legally created, so that the apprentice could not gain a settlement as such, he could not acquire a settlement as a yearly servant: and in Rex v. Highnam (Cald. 491, ante, 506), Lord Mansfield adopted the opinion he had first given in Rex v. Little Bolton, conformably to all the other cases. Therefore, we may rely on this last case, and if it be not distinguishable from that of Rex v. Little Bolton, it is sufficient to say that it is subsequent to it, and that Rex v. Little Bolton is an anomalous case. When we find the current of authorities one way, I should be sorry that a little inadvertence in the court, in the decision of one case only, should be supposed to break in upon the general rule. For Rex v. Coltishall (ante, 394), which has been cited, is distinguishable from this class of cases; there, by the agreement of the parties, the pauper was to do any work that the master set him about. I am, therefore, most clearly of opinion, that in this case the parties intended to form the relation of master and apprentice; and that as that relation was not legally constituted so as to give the latter a settlement as an apprentice, the relation cannot be converted into that of master and servant, so as to give him a settlement as a yearly servant. And I think we should do infinite mischief, if we were to overturn that which has been so long a settled rule." Lawrence, J. "The first point is, that the sessions ought not to have received the parol evidence, because it contradicted the written agreement; but it was not offered for that purpose, but to ascertain a fact collateral to the written instrument, in order to explain the intention of the parties, the instrument being in some measure equivocal. The fact being established, the case was this: on the one hand, the pauper paid a premium to the master, and was to receive certain wages: and on the other hand, the master engaged to teach him the business of a carpenter; then the question is, whether or not by this agreement the parties were to stand in the relation of master and apprentice, of which I think no doubt can be entertained. In Rex v. Little Bolton, Lord Mansfield only went thus far: that it must be collected from the words of the instrument, whether or not the party is to serve as an apprentice; his lordship could not mean to say that a contract of apprenticeship could not be formed, so as to give a settlement to the party serving under it, without the introduction of the word 'apprentice.' With regard to the instance put at the bar, of servants at inns, it is to be remembered that they do not pay their money in order to learn a trade, but as a premium to the master to let them have the perquisites of that situation: but in the case of a trade, the relation of apprenticeship is created for the very purpose of the party being instructed in that trade: the two cases do not bear the smallest resemblance to each other. Therefore, there does not appear to me to be any reason for shaking the authority of Rex v. Highnam, especially as the great body of cases support it. It is much to be lamented, that settlement cases should ever have been determined on nice distinctions; it would be better to decide them on some general rule, that every person who reads may understand it." Le Blanc, J. "If the master, in consideration of a premium, engage to teach the other his trade, it is the same as if he agree in express words to receive him as an apprentice and teach him his trade." Orders confirmed.

Rex v. Rainham, 1 East, 531; 2 Bott, 383. Order of removal of Moses Smith from Rainham to Eltham quashed. Case:—The pauper, on the 8th of November, 1784, entered into the following agreement with Hills, a sawyer, living in Eltham. "An agreement made the 8th of November, 1784, between J. Hills, sawyer, and M. Smith; viz. Smith doth agree with J. Hills to serve him for three years from the date of the agreement; viz. for the first year 10s. per week; for the second year 11s.; and for the third year 12s. per week; and J. Hills doth agree and promise to learn M. Smith the art of a sawyer, which he now follows: and it is agreed that if Smith shall wilfully lose any time to the prejudice of Hills, he agrees to pay Hills 3s. per day for all such neglect. If Smith repents of this agreement before the time expires, he promises to pay Hills 10*l.* on demand; or if Smith is sick, or by any disorder or misfortune rendered incapable of work, not to receive any pay from Hills." The agreement was signed and sealed by both parties, and stamped: no premium was paid by the pauper to Hills. The pauper immediately went to Hills, and resided with him in Eltham for two years and a half. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The sessions have stated the deed and the service under it in fact, leaving this court to draw the conclusion: and that can only be done in one way, namely, that this was a contract of apprenticeship. The instrument was under seal, and need not be indented. It has been determined, that the party serving need not be retained eo nomine as an apprentice; but that it is enough, if the purpose of the contract be, that the one shall teach and the other learn the trade. That is the case here; for the master engaged to learn, i. e. teach the pauper the art and mystery of a sawyer, and the object of the pauper was to be taught the business. No technical words are necessary to constitute the relation of master and apprentice; nor is it necessary that there should be any premium given to the master."

Rex v. Bilborough, 1 B. & Ald. 115. Where by a parol contract the master agreed to teach the pauper to make stockings during the year, for which he was to receive two guineas, and the pauper was to have his earnings, paying his master for the use of the frame, &c. and the pauper went to learn the business, and continued in the service a year and a half: it was holden that the pauper did not gain a settlement by hiring and service. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "In this case the pauper never contracted to serve the master; the only agreement was that the master should teach the pauper for a year. In Rex v. Burbach (ante, 396), there was an agreement on the part of the pauper to work for two years; that forms an essential distinction between the two cases." (See observations of Patteson, J. on this case in Rex v. Newton 1 Adol. & Ell. 238, post, 510).

A contract merely on the part of the master to teach, without any reciprocal engagement on the part of the pauper to work, will not confer a settlement, though there be actual service.

Rex v. Mountsorrel, 2 M. & Sel. 460. Order of removal from Mountsorrel to Quorndon quashed. Case:—When G. Swain, the husband, was about thirteen years old, his father made an agreement with one Rawlins of Quorndon, that R. should take his son for six years, to teach him the trade of a framework knitter, and he was to allow R. 9s. per week for the first three years, for teaching him and his board and lodging. G. Swain served R. six years in the whole in Quorndon. The court distinguished this case from Rex v. Little Bolton (ante, 393), inasmuch as by this contract the son was entitled to none of his earnings, and instead of receiving wages from his master, his master was to receive wages from him, as the price of teaching him: it was a hiring of the master to teach the apprentice. The whole contract with the father was bottomed and had for its object the instruction of the son, and nothing else. Order of sessions quashing the removal confirmed.

The father agreed that R. should take his son for six years, to teach him his trade, and he was to allow R. 9s. a week for the first three years, for his board, &c.: This was held a defective contract of apprenticeship, and gave no settlement.

Rex v. Crediton, 2 B. & Ad. 493. On appeal against an order of removal whereby Joseph Middlewich, his wife and children, were removed from the parish of St. Mary Major, in the city and county of the city of Exeter, to the parish of Crediton, in the county of Devon; the respondents proved a settlement by hiring and service in Crediton. The appellants then set up a subsequent hiring and service in a third parish, St. Edmund's. The sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this court on the following case respecting the alleged settlement in St. Edmund's. The pauper agreed with one West, a sawyer, of the parish of St. Edmund's, in the city of Exeter, for a twelvemonth, to learn sawing, and was to have 7s. 6*d.* out of every 20s. earned by his master and himself. He served out that year, providing his own board and lodging. At the end of the year he made a new agreement with West for another year, under which he was to receive 8s. out of every 20s. earned by his master and himself. Nothing was said about Sundays or the hours he was to work; but he was occasionally absent without permission from West. He lived out the second year with West in the parish of St. Edmund's. Littledale, J. "It seems to me the sessions came to the right conclusion. In all the cases cited there was some work to be done, though there was a contract to learn. This case falls within Rex v. Bilborough (1 B. & Ald. 115, ante, 509). There one Smith, by parol, agreed with the pauper to teach him to make stockings during the year, for which Smith was to receive two guineas, and the pauper was to have his earnings, paying the master for the use of the frame, &c. and it was held, that no settlement was acquired by living out the year under the agreement, for the pauper never contracted to serve the master, the only agreement was that the master should teach the pauper for a year. In Rex v. St. Mary, Kidwelly (4 D. & R. 309; 2 B. & C. 750; ante, 401; and post, 515), the father of the pauper agreed by parol to give a shoemaker a guinea a week, for teaching his trade to the pauper, for twelve months; and it was held, that that agreement created the relation of teacher and scholar, and not that of master and servant. In Rex v. The Hamlet of Walton (Carth. 400; 2 Bott, P. L. 267), the pauper was put out to a barber for one year to learn to shave, and the barber was to have the benefit of the boy's work, and received some money for teaching, and the boy lived with him for a year; it was held, that the boy was in the situation of a scholar, and not of a servant. On the other hand, in Rex v. Hitcham (Burr. S. C. 489), where the pauper agreed to let himself to his brother, who was a carpenter, for a year, and was to receive no money by way of wages, but his brother was to teach him as much as he could of the trade during the time, and provide him with meat, drink, washing, and lodging; and the pauper was to do all his brother's business in the farming way: that was clearly held to be a contract for service, and a hiring for a year. Here, as by the express terms of the contract, the pauper was to learn, an obligation on the part of the master to teach must be implied. The agreement for the second year is substantially the same as that for the first. The only difference is, that the wages are increased." Parke, J. "I think the sessions have put the right construction on this contract. To gain a settlement by hiring and service the pauper must have hired himself to serve for a year. Here, the relation of master and apprentice, not that of master and servant, was created. The case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Bilborough (1 B. & A. 115, ante, 509). There the contract was that the master was to teach the pauper; here it is, that the pauper shall learn; but if the one is to learn, it must be implied that the other is to teach. The only difference between the agreement for the first and that for the second year is that the wages were different, in other respects the contracts are the same." Taunton, J. "I am of opinion that the relation contemplated in this case was that of master and apprentice. The only difference between the first and second agreement is in the sum to be received by the pauper. What then is the purpose for which the pauper agreed to contract any relation with West? It is stated expressly in the agreement to be to learn sawing. I take the true distinction in these cases to be this, where teaching on the part of the master, or learning on the part of the pauper, is not the primary, but only the secondary object of the parties, that will not prevent (where work is to be done for the master) the contract being considered one of hiring and service. In all the cases cited where the contract was so considered it appeared that the pauper agreed to work for his master, and the master undertook to teach him the particular trade in which he was conversant; but the teaching and learning were incidental, and therefore it was held to be a contract of hiring. But where teaching and learning are the principal object of the parties, though there was a service, the contract is considered to be one of apprenticeship." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Newton, 1 Ad. & Ell. 238. An order for removing John Stanley and family from Newtown to the Berriew was quashed. Case:—The pauper acquired a settlement in Berriew as a servant in husbandry. Immediately on leaving such service, when he was 21 years old, and unmarried, and without child or children, he agreed by parol with John Williams, a master flannel manufacturer in Newtown, for three years, to learn the art of weaving flannels, and was to be paid by his said master one-half of what he could get, and to find himself meat, drink, clothes, washing, and lodging; and the master was to have the other half for teaching him the art of weaving. The pauper thereupon went and remained in Williams's employ six weeks, and during that time wove for him two pieces of flannel. The pauper then left J. W. by consent, and applied to James Evans, another master flannel manufacturer in Newtown, to take him on the same terms as J. W. had, and informed him of his having left J. W. and what the contract with him was, and how he had been employed by him, and particularly that he had been employed by him to make slays, and could throw the shuttle, but had had bad slays (Slay or sley a weaver's reed. See Johnson's Dictionary by Todd. That part of a loom which strikes up the work. Ash's Dictionary.) to work with; to which Evans said, that the pauper's having had bad slays to weave with would improve him, and as to throwing the shuttle it was no more than a tailor threading his needle; that he would take him on the same terms he had been with J. W., but for twelve months only, adding, that twelve months would be long enough if he was a good boy. The pauper agreed to go to Evans for twelve months to learn the art of weaving, and to give half of his earnings. The pauper went to Evans on the following day, and continued to weave flannels in his master's room, from his master's materials, and with his loom, to the end of the year, on the terms originally agreed upon. The pauper could not leave nor be turned away during the twelve months, and was paid by his master one-half of what he earned, and his master kept the other half for teaching him the trade. He found himself meat, drink, clothes, washing, and lodging, and lodged during the above time with his mother in the parish of Newtown. After his time was up with Evans he began to weave by the piece, then he had all he got, like other workmen. Littledale, J. "There has certainly been some undulation of opinion in the court at different times on this subject; but I think we are bound by the last decision. The present case is like Rex v. Crediton (2 B. & Ad. 493, ante, 509), but stronger; and there, as in this case, the pauper found his own board and lodging. On the facts of this case as found by the sessions I think the contract was for learning, and was not a hiring for service. In Rex v. Eccleston (2 East, 299, ante, 393), the contract was generally 'to serve.' Here by the agreement the pauper was to learn the art of weaving flannels, and the master was to have half his earnings for teaching. The master's observation that twelve months would be long enough if the pauper was a good boy, strongly shows the intention of the parties to have been teaching and learning, and their language throughout has the same tendency. If the master had gone into a different business I should doubt if he could have insisted on employing the pauper in it. I question whether he had a right to employ him in any thing but weaving flannels. Upon the whole, there is nothing here to show a hiring for the purpose of service; and I think that an apprenticeship was not merely the primary, but the only object of the contract." Patteson, J. "I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. Crediton (2 B. & Ad. 493), and being bound by that authority we must decide accordingly. I confess I am also unable to distinguish the case from Rex v. Burbach (1 M. & S. 370, ante, 396); but I think that is overruled by Rex v. Crediton (2 B. & Ad. 493). The distinction between cases where the agreement is to work or to serve, and where it is to learn, seems to have been first distinctly taken by Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Bilborough (1 B. & Ald. 116, ante, 509); yet in Rex v. St. Margaret's, King's Lynn (6 B. & C. 97; 9 D. & R. 160; post, 516), the same words are stated. In Rex v. Edingale (10 B. & C. 789, post, 512), where the agreement was held to be a defective contract of apprenticeship, the boy's agreement was to serve for four years, and that was held an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. I cannot reconcile the cases, but ever since Rex v. Bilborough (1 B. & Ald. 116), the current of opinion has been to consider agreements like the present as imperfect contracts of apprenticeship." Williams, J. "I agree in the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Lawrence in Rex v. Eccleston (2 East, 302, ante, 393), of the importance in these cases of adhering to what has been once expressly determined. When the court begins to decide them on nice and evanescent distinctions infinite trouble is occasioned. The tendency of opinion latterly has been to treat agreements like this as imperfect contracts of apprenticeship; and without considering the several instances in which an inclination has been shown to depart from the doctrine laid down in Rex v. Little Bolton (Cald. 367, ante, 393), it is enough to say, that I think the present case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Crediton (2 B. & Ad. 493), and ought to be governed by it." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Edingale, 10 B. & Cres. 739. Upon an appeal against an order of two justices, whereby H. Brown, his wife and children, were removed from Edingale to Clifton and Haunton, the sessions quashed the order, subject to the following case:—The pauper, H. Brown, before the death of his father, which took place about thirty years ago, when the pauper was ten or eleven years of age, had used to work with his father at his trade of a tailor. After the death of his father he was put by his mother, from time to time, to work with other tailors, who paid him for the work he did. At the age of fourteen he went to live with J. Tricklebank, a tailor, residing in Clifton and Haunton, under an agreement, the circumstances of which were as follows: The pauper first saw Tricklebank when he went over to his shop on an errand for a suit of black. Tricklebank said the pauper was just such a one as he wanted, he thought he would suit him. The pauper said his mother would like to make him an apprentice. Tricklebank said he would not take him apprentice, because if he did he should offend the farmers: he would take him on agreement for four years. A week after this, Thornton, the pauper's father-in-law, and the pauper, went over again to Tricklebank, and Thornton agreed with him that the pauper should serve him four years. He was to go to him to learn his trade, to have meat, drink, washing, and lodging the whole time, to receive no money for the first two years, but 2s. 6d. a week for the last two years. It was said at the time the agreement was made, that the pauper was to go to him to learn his trade. When the pauper had lived with Tricklebank under this agreement about a year and eight weeks, his father-in-law having neglected to supply him with clothes, Tricklebank agreed with the pauper to give him 1s. 6d. a week from that time for the remainder of the term, instead of 2s. 6d. a week for the last two years. In the third year the pauper having quarrelled with his master, ran away and went to his mother at Tamworth; upon which he was taken by Tricklebank before a magistrate, who made him return to his master, with whom he continued to live until the expiration of the four years, and remained four days over to make up the lost time. During the whole time that he thus lived with Tricklebank he worked at his trade of a tailor, and did nothing else. He slept in Clifton and Haunton during all the time. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The question is whether the contract between the master and the pauper is to be considered a contract of apprenticeship, or of hiring and service? If that was a question of fact, as it may be, the sessions have decided it. If, on the other hand, it be a question of law for the decision of this court, I am of opinion the contract was one of apprenticeship, and not one of hiring and service. We must form our judgment of the nature of the contract from the substance of the bargain between the parties. It appears that when the pauper first saw the master the latter said he would not take him as an apprentice, because if he did he should offend the farmers; but at the time when the agreement was finally made between the master and the pauper's father-in-law, it was stated that the pauper was to go to him to learn his trade. That being the object of the parties expressed at the time of making the agreement, I cannot distinguish this from the case of Rex v. Combe, which followed shortly after that of St. Margaret's, King's Lynn, in which the master offered to take a boy to learn his business, and that being the object for which he was to be taken, the court thought that there was not sufficient to warrant the sessions in finding that the relation of master and servant subsisted between those parties." Bayley, J. "A plain intelligible rule is laid down in Rex v. St. Margaret's, King's Lynn, post, 516, which was acted upon in Rex v. Combe (infra), that where the substantial object of the parties to a contract is to learn, and not to serve, the contract should be deemed one of apprenticeship, and not one of hiring and service. In this case it is manifest that learning and teaching were solely in the contemplation of the parties at the time when the contract was made. The sessions, therefore, were right in coming to the conclusion that it was an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. If it were a mere question of fact, we ought, before we reverse their decision, to see clearly that there were not sufficient premises to warrant that conclusion." Littledale and Parke, Js. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Combe, 8 B. & C. 82; 2 M. & R. 30; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 283. Order of removal of Joseph Davis from Presteign to Combe confirmed. Case:—The pauper's father, when the pauper was about fourteen years of age, was about to put him out to service, and took him to Presteign with the intention of hiring him, but he did not hire him. Shortly afterwards, one John Cole, a carpenter, residing in Presteign, and the brother of the pauper's mother, suggested that it was better for the pauper to go and learn his, Coles', trade of a carpenter, instead of going to service. At length Cole hired the pauper from his mother to learn his trade. The pauper was to do any other work as well as that of a carpenter. Cole was to find the pauper part of his food and part of his clothing, but he was to be lodged at his father's house. The pauper went to Cole, and served him for five years, lodging in Presteign with his parents, who provided part of his clothing and victuals. During the five years the pauper did any work Cole put him to do, as well as working at the trade of a carpenter. In the second and third year after the pauper had entered upon his service a conversation took place between the parties about indentures being drawn to bind the pauper to Cole until the age of twenty-one, in order to exempt the pauper from the militia. The indenture was to be drawn to bind the pauper till he was twenty-one; but it was understood that he was to be free at the end of five years, to be computed from the time of the original contract. No indenture was drawn nor any thing afterwards said upon the subject. At the expiration of the five years, (that being understood by the parties to be the termination of the original contract, whatever was the nature of it), the pauper agreed to work with his uncle Cole as a journeyman carpenter, under a weekly hiring, and to be paid weekly wages, the pauper boarding and clothing himself, and he was at liberty to go away at the end of any week. He continued with Cole under those terms, except upon one or two occasions varying the amount of the weekly wages, for nine or ten years. Judgment was delivered by Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The question in this case was, whether the pauper served in Presteign as servant or apprentice. It is clearly established, that if an apprenticeship only was contemplated by the parties, and there was an imperfect contract of apprenticeship, the service will not give a settlement. The case of Rex v. King's Lynn was relied on in that case, and the judgment of my brother Holroyd appears to me to apply to this. [He then quoted it, as post, 517]. We are of opinion, that all the circumstances of this case also lead fairly to the conclusion, that the parties intended to constitute the relation of master and apprentice. The parents at first proposed to send the pauper out to service, but the uncle suggested that it would be better that he should go and learn his trade. The object, therefore, clearly, from that moment was to put the pauper with his uncle as a pupil and apprentice, and not as a servant; and his service with his uncle was certainly not under any thing like an express contract of hiring, but under an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. We are, therefore, of opinion that the pauper acquired no settlement in Presteign, and that the order of sessions ought to be confirmed."

Pauper was "hired" by his uncle, a carpenter, "to learn his trade," and "was to do any other work as well as that of a carpenter." His uncle was to find him part of his food and clothing, but he was to lodge with his father. Pauper served his uncle on these terms five years. At the end of two years it was proposed to draw up indentures, to exempt pauper from the militia; but none ever were drawn up: Held, that this was not a contract of hiring and service, but an imperfect contract of apprenticeship, and that service under it conferred no settlement.

Rex v. Nether Knutsford, 1 Bar. & Adol. 726. On an appeal against an order of two justices, whereby George Hamond and his family were removed from Nether Knutsford to Pownall Fee, the sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the court on the following case:—In 1814, the pauper, who was then about fifteen years of age, and his father, Thomas Webb, all residing in Nether Knutsford, agreed that the pauper, who had previously worked for Webb upwards of three weeks, should continue to serve him upon the terms contained in the following memorandum, except as afterwards altered:—"This memorandum, made the 1st day of December, 1814, between Thomas Webb, weaver, of Nether Knutsford, on the one part, and George Hamond, son of Peter Hamond, weaver, of Nether Knutsford, on the other part; viz. the aforesaid G. Hamond, of his own free will, together with the united consent and authority of his father, P. Hamond, aforesaid, doth covenant, promise, and agree to hire himself in the service of Thomas Webb, to labour at the art, mystery, trade, or business of a cotton weaver, for the term of three years, from the date above mentioned unto the first day of December, 1817; his secrets he will keep, all his lawful commands he will strictly observe and obey to the utmost of his power; he will serve him justly, truly, honestly, and faithfully for the term of three years as above named. And the aforesaid Thomas Webb, on his part, doth covenant, promise, and agree with the above-named G. Hamond and P. Hamond his father, that, as a reward for all the honest and faithful labours of his son G. Hamond, in the above business, for the term of three years, he, Thomas Webb, will give him the one half of all his just earnings in the above business, according to the present prices, monthly, be they more or be they less; and, in addition to wages named, he will give him every other fent, (a part of inferior quality, usually cut off the end of a cotton piece,) on condition of having the free use of his father's fire for his son's accommodation the time he may want the same. And the aforesaid T. Webb, weaver, doth covenant, promise, and agree with the aforesaid G. Hamond and his father P. Hamond, that, as a complete compensation for all the industrious services of the aforesaid G. Hamond, he will instruct him (or cause him to be instructed) in all the art, mystery, calling, business, or trade of a cotton weaver, to the utmost of his power and ability so to do in the above term of three years above mentioned. As witness our hands, Thomas Webb, George Hamond, Peter Hamond." The memorandum was read over in the presence of T. Webb, the pauper, and his father, by Peter Bradburn, who had prepared it. Nothing was said about Sundays. At the word "hire" Webb gave the pauper a shilling, but nothing was said by either of them; and at the words "cause to be instructed" the pauper's father objected to them; whereupon Bradburn struck his pen through them, as appeared on the face of the memorandum. The pauper served T. Webb in Nether Knutsford, under this agreement, three years, and never did any other work for his master but weaving. At the expiration of two years, or thereabouts, Webb removed to Manchester, and the pauper remained in Nether Knutsford, and served the remainder of his time out with his father. The pauper lived and lodged with his father in Nether Knutsford during the whole time, and on Sundays he staid at home, and did no work for his master. Bradburn, who prepared the agreement, proved that no premium was given; and he was then stopped, by the court quashing the order. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that this was a defective contract of apprenticeship, and not a hiring. We must look at the substance of the agreement rather than the precise words. The pauper is hired to labour at the art, mystery, trade, or business of a cotton weaver, for three years (and it does not appear from the case that any other duty was expected from, or was ever done by him); he promises the master that 'his secrets he will keep, all his lawful commands he will strictly observe and obey to the utmost of his power,' in the terms usual in an indenture of apprenticeship. The master, on his part, undertakes to give him, as a reward for his honest and faithful labours, one half of his earnings; and he further covenants, as a complete compensation for all the industrious services of the said G. Hamond, to instruct him in all the art, mystery, or business of a cotton weaver, to the utmost of his power and ability. It appears to me, from the whole of the stipulations taken together, that the contract was for apprenticeship, and not merely for service. As to the promise 'to cause to be instructed,' which the father objected to, I should consider that to have been struck out not with a view to giving up any claim to instruction, but to prevent the boy from being handed over to another teacher." Littledale, J. concurred. Taunton, J. "I am of the same opinion. And the parties themselves seem to have put the construction upon the agreement which we now do; for when Webb removed to Manchester the pauper is stated to have served the remainder of his time out with his father." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Tipton, 9 B. & C. 888; 4 M. & R. 703. Order of removal of James Smith, &c., from Birmingham to Tipton, confirmed. Case:—The pauper made a written agreement with James Thompson, glazier, of King's Norton, to this effect. An agreement made in 1822, between the pauper of one part, son of Jacob, and Thompson of the other. Jacob and James severally agreed that James should serve Thompson as an articled servant for four years, to learn his art or trade of glazier, &c., at the wages of 6s. a week in the first year, with a progressive increase. It was agreed that James should be considered as an out apprentice, and James and Jacob were to provide James with food and clothing. James was to do gardening, or any other work his master should set him about. In case James was unable to work, or was absent, no wages for the time were to be paid. James was faithfully to do all his master's business, and Thompson agreed to teach and instruct him in the trade of a glazier, &c. This agreement was signed and attested, but not sealed or stamped. The pauper served under it more than a year. On a subsequent day, Bayley, J. delivered the judgment. "The character in which the pauper was to act is described both as that of an articled servant and of an apprentice. We must therefore look to the whole of the instrument, to see what relation the parties contemplated. Now, first, it was not usual for a father to be a party to a contract, whereby his son (of full age) contracts to serve. The fact of the pauper having contracted to do gardening, or any other work, does not necessarily show that the parties contemplated a mere hiring. In Rex v. Combe, ante, 513, the pauper was to do any other work beside that of a carpenter; and yet that contract was considered to be an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. So the stipulation to pay wages does not necessarily imply that the parties contemplated the relation of master and servant. Then the master undertook to teach his trade to the pauper. Learning the trade, therefore, was one great object of the contract. There is a provision in the instrument, that if the pauper should be ill, the master should not pay him wages. That is not an improper stipulation in a bargain for an apprenticeship: but the law imposes on the master the obligation of providing for a servant during illness: there are some circumstances tending to show that the parties contemplated a contract of apprenticeship, and others that they contemplated a contract of hiring. But on the whole, as it appears that the main object was, that the pauper should learn the trade of a plumber, and as the sessions might have thought the wages too low for a servant, we think, though the case admits of great doubt, that this was an imperfect contract of apprenticeship." Order confirmed.

A., an adult, with his father, agreed to serve B. as an articled servant, to learn his trade, and be considered an out apprentice, to do any work; wages to be deducted during illness or absence. B. agreed to teach him: Held, an imperfect apprenticeship.

Rex v. St. Mary, Kidwelly, 2 B. & C. 750; 4 D. & R. 309; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 291. Williams was removed from Kidwelly to Llandevilog. Order quashed. Case:—When the pauper was about fourteen years of age he lived with his father in St. Ishmael, and being desirous of being apprenticed to a shoemaker, his father agreed with a neighbour, named J. Thomas, a shoemaker in the same parish, to give him a guinea for teaching his son the trade of a shoemaker for twelve months; the father finding the pauper lodging, and every thing else during that time. The pauper served the twelve months under that agreement. There was no indenture or writing, but the pauper considered it as an apprenticeship, and his father and master treated and spoke to him as an apprentice during the twelve months, and both told him there was a guinea paid for teaching him the trade. The pauper's father, at the end of the year, came to an agreement with J. Thomas, that the pauper should work with him for twelve months, making shoes at 3d. per pair the first half year, and at 4d. per pair the remaining half year. The pauper worked with J. Thomas about six months under that agreement, and then went away and worked at several places, until his marriage, which happened in 1785. He soon afterwards went to St. Mary. Bayley, J. "There is in this case a contract of hiring in the second instance, and if the

Where, by a parol contract, the master agreed to teach the pauper the trade of a shoemaker for twelve months, for which the master was to receive a guinea, the pauper's father finding him board and lodging during the time; and at the expiration of the year, the pauper entered into a fresh agreement to work with his master for twelve months, making shoes at three pence per pair the first half year, and at four pence per pair the remaining half year, and at the end of six months he quitted the service altogether: Held, that there was not a connected hiring and service, so as to confer a settlement.

A shoemaker proposed to the mother of a pauper, a boy, to take him to learn his business. The boy was to serve four years, was to board and lodge with his mother, and was to have half what he earned. The mother consented, and the boy served four years upon those terms. No indentures were executed, on account of the poverty of the mother, and no premium was paid. Held, that this was not a contract of hiring and service, but a defective contract of apprenticeship, and that the pauper gained no settlement by service under it.

service under it can be connected with the service of the preceding year, a settlement was gained. In order to gain a settlement by hiring and service, I take it that the service must be under some contract creating the relation of master and servant. Here the first contract created the relation of teacher and scholar, and the service under it cannot be coupled with the subsequent service. Rex v. Bilborough, ante, 509, is an authority in point. There the pauper's father agreed with one Smith that he should teach the pauper to make stockings during the year next ensuing, and should receive the sum of two guineas for such instruction; and it was further agreed that the pauper should have his earnings, and pay Smith for the use of his frame, needles, and other utensils, and for seaming such stockings as the pauper should make. The pauper stayed a year and a half; and therefore if that was a relation of which it could be predicated that there was service performed in the character of servant, it would have been sufficient to confer a settlement: but the sessions thought there was no settlement, and a case being reserved, this court confirmed their decision, on the ground that the relation between the pauper and his master was merely that of teacher and scholar, and not that of master and servant. In this case there was no obligation on the part of the pauper to serve; he was only to be taught; the master could not have punished him for neglecting to serve. Although service under different hirings may be connected, the whole of the several services constituting the year's service must be under a contract creating an obligation to serve. Therefore, inasmuch as in this case there was no relation of servant, and no obligation to serve until the hiring for a year commenced, and there being only a service for half a year under that hiring, no settlement was, in my opinion, gained." Littledale, J. concurred.

Rex v. St. Margaret's, King's Lynn, 6 B. & C. 97; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 260. Order of removal of John Cotton, &c., from St. Margaret's, in King's Lynn, to Wolferton, quashed. Case:—Headley, a shoemaker, a friend of the pauper's mother's family, applied to her, and offered, if she would agree to his proposal, that he would take her son, then a boy, to learn his business; but there were no indentures, on account of her poverty. The pauper was to serve for four years, to board and lodge with his mother in St. Margaret's, and to have half what he earned. The pauper entered upon this service, worked in the shop with the apprentices, did not stay with his master on a Sunday, and was not required to do any work but in the shop. The pauper continued in the service four years, boarding and lodging in St. Margaret's. Some time after entering upon the service, Headley sent the following writing by the pauper to his mother, which was neither stamped nor signed:—"An agreement drawn up between Mrs. Cotton and Thomas Headley, that the said Thomas Headley is to find her son, John Cotton, work for four years, and he is to have half what he earns all the four years; and Mrs. Cotton is to find her son, John Cotton, every thing else during the four years." Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that this was a defective contract of apprenticeship, and not a contract of hiring. Every case of this nature must be determined with reference to its own peculiar circumstances. Where it appears from all the circumstances that the parties at the time of making the contract contemplated the relation of master and apprentice, the contract must be construed as one of apprenticeship; and then if it is a defective apprenticeship, no settlement can be gained by service under it. Where, on the other hand, it appears that the parties contemplated the relation of master and servant, the contract must be construed as one of hiring, and a settlement will be gained by service under it. The payment of a premium is strong evidence to show that an apprenticeship was intended; but it is not decisive: and still less is the absence of a premium evidence to show that a contract of hiring was intended. The written agreement, not having been signed or stamped, must be laid out of consideration, and we must look to the original bargain between the master and the pauper's mother, to ascertain the intention of the parties. The proposal, and consequently the purpose of the master, was to teach the pauper his trade; and the pauper was to serve four years for that purpose, to have half what he earned, and to board and lodge with his mother. In ordinary cases, indentures of apprenticeship are executed, but here they were not executed on account of the poverty of the mother. The fact that the execution of indentures was thought of, though not realized, shows clearly that the parties did not contemplate the mere relation of master and servant, but did contemplate the relation of master and apprentice. Rex v. Little Bolton comes very near the present. There the pauper proposed to the master, who was a weaver, to teach him to work counterpanes; but although the object of the pauper was to be taught a trade, the master agreed to teach him only upon the condition that he should work for a given time. In many cases the object of the party who hires himself is to learn a particular trade, and the instruction which he receives is a partial remuneration for his services. In Rex v. Burbach, ante, 396, it was agreed that the pauper should work for two years, and have what he got, allowing his master so much per week for teaching him. The court held that to be a contract of hiring and service, but there was nothing to show that the parties ever contemplated the relation of master and apprentice. Here a contract of apprenticeship was contemplated, and not completed, only in consequence of the poverty of the pauper's mother. That being so, I think this a defective contract of apprenticeship." Holroyd, J. "I am of opinion that the relation of master and apprentice was contemplated; or, at least, that there is not evidence to justify us in saying that the relation of master and servant was contemplated. The case states that the master, a shoemaker, applied to the pauper's mother, and offered her, if she would agree to his proposal, to take her son, then a boy, to learn his business. The proposal was to teach, and the mother was to consider whether she would accept that proposal. The terms upon which the master proposed to teach the pauper was, that the pauper should serve four years. Now, for what purpose was he to serve four years? To learn the business. I think the sessions were not warranted in finding that the relation of master and servant existed in this case. The fact of the pauper having served, does not warrant the conclusion that he served in the character of servant, and not of apprentice; for mere service does not constitute the relation of master and servant." Littledale, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

9. OF PARISH APPRENTICES. (a)

9. Of Parish Apprentices.

There are some peculiarities respecting parish apprenticeships, which render it expedient to consider them separately.

The authority of the churchwardens and overseers to bind out poor children is derived from the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5 (ante, 452); but various regulations have been established by subsequent statutes, among which is a provision that it shall not be lawful for any parish officers to bind out any child as a parish apprentice until such child have attained the age of nine years. 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 7 (ante, 477); and see the several enactments (ante, 451, 452). See construction of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11; Rex v. St. Peter, Hereford, 1 B. & Adol. 916 (post, 525).

By the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5 (ante, 452), a parish apprentice could be bound only by the greater part of the churchwardens and overseers; and therefore where one of the two overseers was also sole churchwarden, and the indenture was executed by the overseers, the binding was held insufficient, as there ought to be two overseers exclusive of churchwardens (Rex v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 143); but this was remedied by 51 Geo. III. c. 80 (ante, 472), which has a retrospective operation.

Rex v. St. Margaret's, Leicester, 2 B. & Ald. 200. Removal from St. Margaret's, Leicester, to Foxton. Order quashed. Case:—Barker, the husband of the pauper, was bound apprentice by a parish indenture, dated 30th April, 1791, to Warburton, of Great Wigston. The indenture witnessed, that Chapman and Iliffe, churchwardens of Foxton, and Chapman and Coleman, overseers, do put Barker, apprentice, &c. It was duly allowed, but executed by Chapman and Coleman only. The pauper's husband served a sufficient time under it to gain a settlement in Wigston, if the indenture were valid. It was admitted that Chapman and Iliffe were the two churchwardens at the time when Chapman and Coleman were appointed overseers, and that these persons were the officers of the parish in the year comprehending the day on which the indenture was executed. The question was, whether the indenture was valid or not? Abbott, C. J. "This act of parliament was a remedial act, and ought therefore to receive a liberal construction; and I do not think, that in holding that this case is within it, we put any forced construction upon its provisions. This case is clearly within the mischief of the act, and I think within the fair meaning of the words by which it is remedied. I am therefore of opinion, that the 51 Geo. III. c. 80, extends not only to cases where both the parish officers act in a double capacity, but to those also where only one of them is in that situation. The decision of the sessions was therefore right." Bayley, J. "This act was passed almost immediately after the determination in Rex v. All Saints, Derby; there only one of the officers acted in a double capacity. It was to remedy the inconveniences resulting from that decision that the act was passed. I think it is not a forced construction of it (when it is admitted that its provisions include the case of a double defect), to hold that they also extend to a case of a defect in one parish officer only." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Hinckley, 12 East, 361. Where an indenture appeared to be executed by W. S. churchwarden, and J. G. overseer of the hamlet of Atterton, and no other evidence was given respecting it, it was holden by the sessions to be sufficient; but the Court of King's Bench held that there might be one churchwarden only by custom, and that if any intendment could by law be made to support the indenture, they must make that intendment.

Upon this case Mr. Evans, in his collection of statutes, observes, "I have never been able to assent to the correctness of this decision, because the presumption is always to be made according to the general course and operation of the law; and if the appointment of one churchwarden would be prima facie void, the existence of a special custom to support it would seem to require positive proof. But see Rex v. Whitchurch (post); Rex v. Upton Grey (post)."

Rex v. Nantwich, 16 East, 228. Order of removal from Pendleton to Nantwich. Order confirmed. Case:—The parish of Nantwich consists of five townships, of which the township of Nantwich is one. These townships act separately in all matters relative to the management of the poor, and separate overseers are regularly appointed, two for each township. Two churchwardens are appointed for the parish at large, who have not been accustomed to interfere at all in the management of the poor in either of the townships. There are no churchwardens appointed in any of the townships. In 1787 the pauper, then being a poor boy, and settled in the township of Nantwich, was put out for seven years as an apprentice to W. and T. D. cotton machine workers, by an indenture duly stamped and executed by the overseers of the township of Nantwich, and duly allowed by two magistrates, but not executed by either of the churchwardens. Under this indenture the pauper served Messrs. D. for seven years at Pendleton, and resided there during the whole time. The question was, whether it was necessary that the churchwardens of the parish should execute this indenture? The arguments were upon the construction to be given to 43 Eliz. c. 2; 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12; 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30; and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 15; and the cases of Rex v. Clifton (2 East, 168); and Spitalfields v. Bromley (2 Bott, 684), were cited. The court delivered their opinions at great length, and entered very fully into the meaning of these several acts of parliament, as connected with each other. Lord Ellenborough said, "I take it to be clear that the churchwardens do not act as an integral part, but that a majority of the conjoint body would be sufficient; or if there were four overseers and two churchwardens, an indenture executed by all the overseers, without the churchwardens, would be valid;" and it was the opinion of the court, that by the operation of the stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, an indenture of apprenticeship executed by the overseers of a township which has no churchwardens

Indenture signed by one churchwarden and one overseer is sufficient.

Since the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12 (ante, 452), an indenture, executed by the overseers of a township which has no churchwardens, and maintains its own poor, is valid, although neither of the churchwardens of the parish join in the execution.

and maintains its own poor separately, is a valid indenture, though neither of the churchwardens of the parish join in the execution; and that when overseers are appointed under 13 & 14 Car. II. they alone constitute overseers for the township; the township is to be considered as not having churchwardens; and that the words "where no churchwardens," in the certificate act, mean where there are no such churchwardens as, with the overseers, constitute the officers of that place. (See 54 Geo. III. c. 107, s. 2, ante, 473.)

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, does not require absolutely two churchwardens in every parish for the management of the poor; and therefore an indenture binding out a poor apprentice by one churchwarden (where by custom there was but one) and one overseer, was held to be good. (Rex v. Earl Shilton, 1 B. & Ald. 275, reported more fully in Vol. I.)

Rex v. Quainton, 2 M. & Sel. 338. Removal from Quainton to Bicester-Market-End quashed. Case:—The pauper, on the 23d of November, 1811, a poor boy aged thirteen, of Quainton, was, with the consent of the trustees (created by the will of Lady Say and Sele for the purpose of yearly putting out a certain number of poor boys apprentices), bound apprentice to J. Adams, of Bicester, for seven years, for the consideration of 20*l.* stated in the indenture to be paid to Adams by the trustees, who were recited to be parties to the indenture; but it was only executed by the pauper and Adams. This indenture was unstamped, and it appeared that Adams received only 16*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, the residue of the 20*l.* being retained by the agent of the trustees for the expenses of the binding. The pauper served under the indenture at Bicester more than forty days. It was first urged that the "two sums" was the gross sum received; and next, as the trustees had not joined in the execution of the indenture, this was not a placing out at the expense of a charity, but was similar to parish indentures, to which the officers must be parties. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said "Upon the latter point it appeared that the money was paid out of the funds of the public charity, and that it was paid by the trustees in the execution of their trust; and that they acted very wisely not to involve themselves by becoming parties to the covenant; and as to the other point, that the consideration was fully stated. Even if a stamp had been necessary, the consideration would have been sufficiently stated, for it is stated against the party's interest." (See Rex v. Keynsham.) Order of sessions quashed. As to guardian not executing, see ante, 493, (Rex v. Lutterworth, 3 B. & C. 487; 5 D. & R. 343.)

Rex v. Saltern, Cald. 443. The assent of the justices must be given by their signing.

Rex v. Hamstall Ridware, 3 T. R. 380. The pauper was bound a parish apprentice. The indenture was separately assented to by two justices, by signing the same; but the two justices did not assent to or sign the same at the same time, or in the presence of each other. It was contended that this was a ministerial act, and like the allowance of a rate. But Lord Kenyon, C. J. held clearly that this was an act of a judicial nature, and as such that the justices must, when they do it, meet and confer together.

Rex v. Winwick, 8 T. R. 455; 1 Bott, 625. By an indenture dated 18th December, 1789, the pauper was bound an apprentice by the parish officers of Winwick to T. H. of Spratton. It was signed by Dr. Freeman, one of the justices, at the parish where he resided; but the other justice, Dr. Preedy, was not then present. A few days afterwards Dr. Freeman went to the house of Dr. Preedy, where the same was signed by Dr. Preedy, in the presence of all the parties. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This case is clearly distinguishable from Rex v. Hamstall Ridware, supra, because though one of the magistrates first put his signature to this indenture at a time when the other was not present, both the magistrates afterwards met on the subject, and agreed to the propriety of the measure, when the other magistrate also executed the instrument. The principle on which this case is determined was recognized some years ago in a case of murder; a magistrate who kept by him a number of blank warrants ready signed, on being applied to, filled up one of those, and signed and delivered it to the officer, who on endeavouring to arrest the Indenture reciting certain trustees to be parties, and the consideration to be 20*l.*: Held good, though not executed by the trustees, and though only 16*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* of the consideration was paid to the master.

An indenture of a parish apprentice, assented to by two justices separately, is void, and gives no settlement by serving under it.

One justice may sign alone if he be present when the other signs.

9. Of Parish Apprentices.

The binding of a parish apprentice under 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 2, into another county, the indenture must be allowed by four distinct justices, two of one county and two of the other.

Two justices refused to bind a parish apprentice, and he was bound with his own and his mother's consent out of the parish money. The sessions found the binding fraudulent: the Court of King's Bench held the binding independent of the statute, and a settlement gained.

party, was killed; the judges were of opinion that this was murder in the person killing the officer, and he was accordingly executed. And this was not on a new principle then for the first time established; it had always been uniformly acted upon."

The King v. Shipton, 8 B. & C. 772. The statute 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 2, enacts, that in all cases where the residence or establishment of business of the person to whom any child shall be bound, shall be within a different county from that within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situated, and in all other cases where the justices of the peace for the district or place within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situated, and who shall sign the allowance of the indenture by which such child shall be bound, shall not have jurisdiction, every indenture by which such child shall be bound shall be allowed, as well by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place by the officers of which such child shall be bound shall be situated, as by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place shall be situated wherein such child shall be intended to serve: Held, that in such case the indenture must be allowed by four distinct persons, two of them being justices of the county from which the apprentice is to be bound; and the other two being justices of the county into which he is to be bound.

Rex v. Kilby, 2 M. & Sel. 501. Removal from Kilby to Great Wigston. Order discharged. When the pauper was four or five years old, the parish officers wished to put him out apprentice, but the mother, a widow, objected on account of his age. In consequence of her objecting, the officers refused to give her any more relief. When the pauper was about eleven years old, the widow being no longer able to support him, went to the parish officer and told him she would consent that her son should be put apprentice. He bid her choose a master, and she chose Dand, of Great Wigston, to whom the parish officer agreed to give three guineas in money, and other things to the amount in the whole of 4*l*. The parish officer, the pauper, his mother, and Dand met together, proposing to have the boy bound before the justices, and went before them for that purpose, but the justices finding that Dand had as many apprentices as they thought he could do justice to, would not let him have any more. The parish officer then declared, if he could not have him bound there, he would have him bound in another place, and accordingly took all the parties to an inn, procured an indenture stamp, which was regularly filled up and executed, and the pauper, with the consent of his mother, bound himself to Dand for seven years. (a) The premium, three guineas, and the other things making up the 4*l*., were to be delivered to Dand at the expiration of six weeks from the execution of the indenture, at which time Dand went to Kilby, and received them of the parish officer. The duty paid was 1*s*. 6*d*., being 6*d*. in the pound upon the 3*l*., and all expenses of binding were paid by the parish. The sessions found fraud. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said "This does not appear to have been intended to be a binding as a parish apprentice; if it did it might be defective. But it is, independent of the statute, a binding with the consent of the mother, the son, and the master. The justices have indeed found fraud, but there are no circumstances to warrant such a conclusion, except that when the parties could not obtain the binding before the justices, they went elsewhere and perfected it in another way. It is said this was the parish money, and perhaps there has been a misapplication of it; but still there has been a valid binding, for the pauper, with his mother's consent, binds himself. If the mother had been a party to the indenture, and the action had been brought against her upon it, I do not see how she could have effectually pleaded per fraudum or per minas." Le Blanc, J. "It appears that the mother chose the master, and it is not stated that the child was of an age not fit to be bound apprentice." Bayley, J. "After the allowance was withdrawn, the mother might have obtained relief by application to the justices, if she had been entitled to it." Order of sessions quashed. (See Rex v. Arundel (ante, 485), where the master not belonging to the parish, it was not considered a parish binding, though premium paid by overseers.)

Rex v. St. Paul's, Exeter, 10 B. & C. 12; 5 M. & R. 94. Order of removal of Jane Bishop from St. Paul's, Exeter, to Tedburn, St. Mary; quashed. Case:—The pauper, in 1818, was bound apprentice, by the parish officers of St. Mary, to H. B. The indenture was made in pursuance of a previous order of two justices, to which reference was made by its date, and was duly executed by the parish officers and by the master. An allowance of the same was written at the foot thereof, which was signed by two justices, but was not under seal. On occasion of this binding, an expense of 17s. was incurred by the public parochial funds of the parish of St. Mary; viz., 7s. as the costs of preparing the indenture, and 10s. were given to the master with the pauper. The pauper resided in St. Mary under this indenture for four years. On a subsequent day, Bayley, J. "On carefully considering the 56 Geo. III. c. 139 (and after conferring with Lord Tenterden, who concurs in the judgment I am about to pronounce), we are of opinion that the first ten sections apply to cases where the parish officers are parties to the indenture, and the 11th sect. to cases where the parish officers do not join in the indenture, but where some part of the expense attending the indenture is defrayed out of the public parochial funds. That this is the meaning of the 11th sect. appears to us to be manifest, from the use of the word 'clandestinely' in that section. The mischief recited in the preamble of that section is that the premium was clandestinely provided by the parish officers, &c. The first ten sections, which evidently apply to bindings by the parish officers, require that the indenture should be approved by two justices under their hands only. Now parish officers cannot be said to provide the premium clandestinely when they join in the indenture. The 11th section, therefore, can apply to those cases only where they are not parties to the indenture, but where they provide some portion of the premium. The indenture in this case was one (the parish officers being parties to it) contemplated by the first ten sections. The allowance was signed, though not sealed, by the justices. It is therefore a valid indenture." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Mattishall, 8 B. & C. 733; 3 M. & R. 386. Case:—The pauper was bound by indenture for three years. The deed was signed by the master, attested by the parish officers, but not approved by two justices. Before it was executed, the master said the pauper should have some better clothes; and thereupon the pauper applied to the parish officers, who agreed to give the master 2*l.* at the execution of the indenture to buy clothes, and 2*l.* more for the same purpose at the end of a year. The first 2*l.* was paid to the mistress, and the other 2*l.* to the pauper. Bayley, J. "The enacting part of the 11th sect. of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, goes beyond the recital. If it had not, I could not have said that the money was paid as a premium. It has been said that it does not appear that the money was paid out of the parish funds. If that was not so, it might have been easily proved. The sessions have found that it was paid by the parish officers; that prima facie implies that it was paid by them out of funds belonging to them in that character. We may assume, therefore, that the sessions had premises wherefrom to find that the money was contributed by the parish officers, not out of their private but out of the parish funds. Then we must look to the 11th sect. [which he read]. Here the money was paid, because the master objected to take the apprentice unless he had clothes. It was therefore an expense incurred by the parish, within the very words of the statute. The indenture then, not having been approved by two justices, is void, and no settlement is gained by service under it." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "It is perfectly clear that the money advanced to the pauper was an expense incurred by the public parochial funds within the enactment, though it is not a premium within the recital; I think also it is within the mischief contemplated. By 43 Eliz. c. 2, the assent of two justices was required, where the binding was by the

9. Of Parish Apprentices.

An indenture of apprenticeship, to which the parish officers are parties, requires that the allowance should be signed, but not sealed, by the justices.

Justices must allow the indenture, where any expense is incurred by the parish.

9. Of Parish Apprentices.

An indenture, by which a person of twenty-one years of age binds himself an apprentice, does not require the approval or allowance of justices where the premium is paid out of the public parochial funds, under 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 11.

parish officers. But if they secretly advanced the whole or part of the premium (provided they were not the binding parties), the assent was unnecessary. This was the mischief to be remedied. The statute requires the assent in all cases, where the parish officers interfere in the binding out of children, by advancing money for that purpose."

Rex v. St. John, Bedwardine, 2 Nev. & Man. 86; 5 Bar. & Adol. 169. An appeal against an order of removal, whereby Robert Hinton was removed from St. John, Bedwardine, to Hanbury. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, before he was twenty-one years of age, gained a settlement in Hanbury, the appellant parish, by a hiring and service for a year with J. Stain; after the pauper became of age, being lame, he applied for relief to the overseers of the appellant parish, who recommended him to learn some trade, but refused to bind him out; nevertheless they promised that if he could find a master, they would give 4*l*. The pauper then put himself apprentice to one Hatch, living in the respondent parish. The parish officers of Hanbury gave the money to the pauper, who paid it to Hatch. The indenture was by deed, sealed by the master and the apprentice. Whilst under this indenture the pauper slept more than forty nights in the respondent parish, and is settled there, if the indenture be good in law. The question for the consideration of the court is, whether a person apprenticed under the circumstances stated in the case, and after he is twenty-one years of age, is a poor child within the meaning of the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11. Denman, C. J. "It is impossible to say that a person of full age is a poor child within the meaning of the act in question. Although parties may be bound so as to continue apprentices until they are twenty-four years of age, it does not follow that a person of the age of twenty-one may by virtue of this act be bound apprentice. The argument would go to this, that poor persons of seventy years of age might be bound out apprentices. With regard to the 11th section, it is said that no indenture of apprenticeship is valid, where any expense whatever has been incurred by the parish, unless approved of by two justices of the peace, under their hands and seals. Though the enacting words of that section are large, they do not appear to me to extend to this case. The introductory part of the section states what are the mischiefs the legislature intended to remedy. The words of the enacting part of the section ought to have an effect limited to the mischief mentioned in the recital. Besides, the enacting part says that the indenture must be assented to by the justices, according to the provisions of this act, and the act extends to poor infant children only. Nor do I think that the case of Rex v. St. Paul's, Exeter, ante, 521, extends the construction of this act any further." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "It is very clear that the apprentice in this case is not a poor child within the meaning of the act of 56 Geo. III. It appears to me that by the 11th section the legislature contemplated a person under the age of twenty-one years. The first ten sections of the statute clearly relate only to children in the ordinary sense of the term—persons under the age of twenty-one years. In the 11th section the mischief intended to be remedied is in the first place recited, then come the words, 'no indenture of apprenticeship shall be valid, by reason of which any expense whatever shall at any time be incurred by the public parochial funds.' But these words must be controlled by the precedent recital. Then these words follow: 'Unless approved of by two justices of the peace, under their hands and seals, according to the provisions of the said act and of this act.' Looking at the former act and at this act, it is clear that they provide only for the apprenticing of poor children under the age of twenty-one years." Patteson, J. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Halesworth, 3 Bar. & Adol. 717. On appeal against an order for the removal of John Carter, his wife and child, from St. Michael at Thorn to Halesworth, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this court upon the following case:—A prima facie settlement in Halesworth was admitted, but the appellants relied upon a subsequent settlement by apprenticeship in St. Michael. It appeared that in 1652 John Keble devised certain lands in Holton for the relief of the poor of Halesworth, half the revenue to be employed for the relief of widows, and the other half towards binding out apprentices. The rents of these lands were received by the churchwardens of Halesworth, and were kept in a distinct account, and not mixed with the monies arising from the poor's rates. The father of the pauper, who was a settled inhabitant of Halesworth, but residing at Norwich, and not at that time receiving parish relief, being unable from poverty to bind out his son, and having heard of Keble's charity, applied to the churchwardens of Halesworth to provide him with the means of putting his son apprentice. They agreed to do so, and by indenture of apprenticeship duly stamped, the pauper, with the consent of his father, bound himself apprentice to George Hall of Norwich for seven years, at a premium of 10*l.*, which was stated in the indenture to have been paid by the churchwardens of Halesworth. The premium, the costs of the indenture, and the expenses of providing the pauper with proper clothes, were paid by the churchwardens out of the monies of Keble's charity. The indenture was executed by the pauper, his father, and Hall; and the pauper served under it more than forty days in the respondent parish, but none of the directions contained in any section of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, had been complied with, either in the binding of the apprentice or the form or execution of the indenture. The court of quarter sessions were of opinion that Keble's charity must be considered as a public parochial fund, and that the indenture not having been duly approved of under the 11th section of the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, the pauper gained no settlement by serving under it. After hearing counsel on this case, the court then desired to hear the other case argued before giving judgment in this. The appeal in this case was against an order for the removal of William Clarke from Halesworth to Laxfield in Suffolk. The settlement relied upon by the appellants was by apprenticeship under the following circumstances. John Smith, in 1718, devised to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Laxfield, and to their successors for the time being for ever, certain freehold lands in that parish, upon trust that they should apply the rents for a certain period towards erecting a school-house in the said parish, and afterwards towards the payment of a schoolmaster, and towards the teaching and educating twenty poor boys of the said parish in reading, writing, and accounts, to be chosen and approved of by the churchwardens, overseers, and principal inhabitants for the time being; and further, that 40*l.* of the said rents should be by the said churchwardens and overseers yearly applied towards the putting out to apprentice eight of such twenty poor children to some good handicraft trade, to be computed at 5*l.* per head; and the said eight children to be chosen out and allowed likewise by the churchwardens and overseers and principal inhabitants of the said parish. By indenture of apprenticeship, dated 27th March, 1826, the pauper voluntarily bound himself, with the approbation and consent of his father and the churchwardens of Laxfield, to Henry Tillney, of Halesworth, for three years. The consideration to the master was stated to be 15*l.* 15*s.*, gift of John Smith, of Laxfield, gentleman, deceased, one half to be paid by the churchwardens, or one of them, on the 9th of May next ensuing, the remainder on the 11th of October, 1827; and the churchwardens, one of whom executed the indenture, covenanted to pay him the same accordingly. The indenture was not stamped. The pauper served his time under it in Halesworth. He had been educated at Smith's school, and the premium and costs of the indenture were paid to the master out of the monies received by the parish officers as trustees under Smith's will. None of the directions of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, were complied with, either in the binding or in the form and execution of the indenture: it appeared that the parish accounts for Laxfield and the trust accounts were kept distinct, and the court of quarter sessions found that the charity was a public charity. The order was quashed, subject to the opinion of this court upon the case. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "There is some difference in the facts of the two cases, but it will be best to decide both on general principles. In one sense, according to some decisions, the funds in both these cases are funds of public charities, because the bequest is general, and does not designate the individuals to be benefited. In another sense they are parochial rents were received by the churchwardens, and not mixed with the poor rates, but kept in a distinct account. A parishioner of H., not receiving parish relief, applied to the churchwardens to provide him with means of apprenticing his son. The son was apprenticed, and the churchwardens paid the premium, costs of indenture, &c. out of the charity fund: Held, that this was not an indenture by which an expense was incurred by public parochial funds within 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 11, and therefore not void for want of the approval of two justices according to the statute. And in a similar case, where lands were devised to the churchwardens and overseers of H. and their successors, upon trust to apply the rents towards educating twenty poor children, and a part thereof yearly towards apprenticing eight of such children, to be chosen out and allowed by the said churchwardens and overseers, and the principal inhabitants: Held, that this also was not a public parochial fund within the meaning of the act.

9. Of Parish Apprentices.

also, because they are left for the benefit of persons belonging to the respective parishes. Still the question is in each case, whether the money be that of a 'public parochial fund' within the meaning of the statute 56 Geo. III. c. 13, s. 11. The mischief recited by that section is, that the provisions of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, are evaded in the binding out of poor children, and the premium of apprenticeship, or a part thereof, clandestinely provided by parish officers, who are thus enabled to bind out such poor children without the sanction of justices of the peace. It is therefore enacted that no indenture, by reason of which any expense shall be incurred by the public parochial funds, shall be valid, unless approved of by two justices, according to the provisions of this act and the statute of Elizabeth. I think the present case is not within the mischief there contemplated. There is no clandestine appropriation of monies of the parish. The funds in question cannot properly be so called in respect of the purpose for which they are collected, or the manner in which they are raised, since they are not contributed by the inhabitants of the parish. I think a public parochial fund must be one so contributed, or which is applicable to the general purpose of the relief of the poor. Estates devised for the relief of the poor generally would come under this description, but in each of these cases there is a fund left by the bounty of an individual for a certain specified purpose; that is, for the benefit of a particular class of persons. It is not meant to go in relief of the general parish fund, or, if so, only to a moderate extent. It does not appear that the intention was to relieve persons actually burdensome to the parish: there might be persons unable to bind out their own children, and therefore objects of this charity, who yet did not require parochial support; and in such cases the fund would be no relief to the parish. It appears to me also that the donors in these cases never intended the objects of their bounty to be under the control of the justices of peace, but that the charity should be in the one case at the disposal of the churchwardens, in the other (as respects apprentices) at that of the parish officers and principal inhabitants. I am therefore of opinion that these are not public parochial funds within the 11th section of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, and that the order of sessions in the first case must be quashed, and that in the second confirmed." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion; I think the term 'public parochial funds' does not apply where particular individuals or a particular class are pointed out as the objects of their application. The 11th section of the act 56 Geo. III. c. 139, was intended to prevent the clandestine appropriation of parish money by the officers of the parish, in evasion of the statute of Elizabeth; it is an enactment for the general regulation of parish funds, not for that of particular charities. And I also think it was not contemplated in these charities that the application of the monies should be interfered with by justices of the peace." Parke, J. "The words 'public parochial funds' in the 11th section do not mean the poor-rate merely, or else that probably would have been the term used. Other receipts applicable to the relief of the poor, as penalties or funds expressly given in aid of the poor-rate, may also be included. But the denomination of 'public parochial funds' certainly cannot be applied to lands given for such a special and limited purpose as is pointed out in these cases. One material consideration is, that if this construction were to prevail, it would defeat the intentions of the testators, who did not mean to give the justices a power of overruling the discretion of the parish officers in one case, or of the parish officers and principal inhabitants in the other. And it has been very well pointed out in argument that these are not cases within the mischief of the act 56 Geo. III. c. 139." Taunton, J. "This is a question of very great importance, for if revenues like these were held to be public parochial funds, it would be of serious consequence to many excellent institutions established for the purpose of bringing up and apprenticing the children of the poor. Such establishments might be entirely perverted from their proper ends if the children placed out by them were to be considered parish apprentices. But it is not necessary to proceed on grounds of public policy, because, on the strict technical legal application of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11, it is clear that such a construction cannot prevail. That section speaks of indentures by reason of which expense is incurred by the public parochial funds, and certainly those in question are in one sense public and in another parochial; but on looking to the preamble as well as the enacting part of this section, it is clear that the legislature did not mean every fund, which in some sense was public or parochial. They contemplated such funds as before the passing of the statute were applicable to the binding out of poor children according to the directions of the statute of Elizabeth; but if the churchwardens in one of these cases, and the parish officers and principal inhabitants in the other, had applied these monies to the general purposes of the statute of Elizabeth, it is clear they would have misapplied them. There is great force in the observation made by Mr. Andrews, that if it had become necessary the Court of Chancery would, on application, have appointed trustees for the management of this charity, and in that case it could not have been said that these monies came under the denomination in the statute of 'public parochial funds.' Now although that has not been done, the trusts and objects of the devise in each of these cases are still the same, and the churchwardens and overseers are trustees of the same description as private persons would be if appointed by the Court of Chancery. I am therefore of opinion that the proceeds of these charities, though in some sense public funds, must yet, with reference to the enactment in 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11, be considered private." Order of sessions in the first case quashed, that in the second confirmed.

Rex v. Quainton, 1 Adol. & Ellis, 133; 3 Nev. & Man. 289, S.C. Upon an appeal against an order, whereby James Friday Carter and his wife and child were removed from St. James's Clerkenwell to Quainton, the court of quarter sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the court on the following case:—21st October, 1820. By indenture of this date the pauper J. F. Carter, being a poor boy and a settled inhabitant of Quainton, was, by the trustees of a charity established under the will of the late dowager Lady Say and Sele, for placing out poor boys of Swanbourne apprentices, bound as an apprentice with a premium of 20*l.* to Thomas Carter of Swanbourne, Bucks, butcher, for seven years. He served as an apprentice under that indenture so as to gain a settlement in Swanbourne, if the indenture was valid. The whole of the premium was paid out of the charity fund, and no other premium or consideration was paid to the master from any other source. The costs of the indenture were paid by the master out of the premium; but on the 20th October, 1820, the day before the binding, the pauper was provided with a full new suit of clothes by the parish officers of Quainton, which were paid for out of the public parochial funds by one of the churchwardens to the tradesmen from whom the different articles were purchased, which would not have been given to the pauper at that time but in prospect of his being so bound apprentice, though no stipulation to that effect was made by or with the master. The indenture of apprenticeship had not the sanction or signature of any justices of the peace. By 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11, after reciting that the salutary provisions of 43 Eliz. c. 5, were frequently evaded in the binding out of poor children, and the premium of apprenticeship, or a part thereof, was clandestinely provided by parish officers, who were thus enabled to bind out such poor children without the sanction of justices of the peace, it was enacted, "that no indenture of apprenticeship, by reason of which any expense whatever should at any time be incurred by the public parochial funds, should be valid and effectual, unless approved of by two justices of the peace under their hands and seals, according to the provisions of the former act and of that act:" If, therefore, the Court of King's Bench shall be of opinion that there is in this transaction such an incurring of expense by the public parochial funds as was contemplated by the statute, the order of sessions to be confirmed, if otherwise, to be quashed. The court, without calling upon Adolphus, who was to have argued the case against the order of sessions, quashed the order.

Trustees of a charity bound out the pauper and paid the premium. The parish officers gave him clothes, all of which he would not have had at that time except on the occasion of his being bound out; and no stipulation on the subject was made by or with the master: Held, that the supply of clothes was not an expense incurred by the parish within 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, and consequently that the indenture did not require the approval of two justices.

Sect. 11 of 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, applies only where the binding of a pauper apprentice is directly or indirectly procured by the parish officers. Therefore, where a poor person was bound out by money collected in charity by individuals, and amongst others from the overseers of three parishes, it not appearing that her settlement was in either; it was held not to be a case within the statute requiring the assent of two justices. How enacting words of statute to be construed.

to the opinion of this court on the following case:—The pauper, Charlotte Stephens, was in Hereford gaol, and was tried for felony at the August assizes, 1825. At the recommendation of the judge who tried her, Dr. Lye, the mayor of Hereford, undertook to collect a sufficient sum of money to apprentice her. Dr. Lye, conceiving from something the pauper said, that Kingston was her place of settlement, wrote to Mr. Wall, the vicar of that parish. Mr. Wall wrote in answer, that Kingston would not admit that the pauper was a parishioner there; but he sent Dr. Lye 4*l.* Dr. Lye received 5*l.* from Lord Somers, and 1*l.* each from the parishes of St. John Baptist, All Saints, and St. Nicholas, in the city of Hereford, and other sums from other persons, making in the whole 14*l.*; and he agreed to give one Thomas Trotman, with whom the pauper was placed as apprentice, a premium of 10*l.* and to pay him 4*l.* more to furnish her with clothes, and as a recompence for his having supported her some time before she was bound. Dr. Lye advanced the whole 14*l.* for those purposes in September, 1825, and received no part of the subscription till 1826, and upon the whole was at an expense of 3*l.* more than the money collected by him. The monies contributed by the three parishes in Hereford were paid by the acting overseers, and allowed them in their accounts. The indenture of apprenticeship was not produced; but it was proved by the attorney who prepared it, and by his clerk who attested it, that on the 13th of September, 1825, an indenture of apprenticeship was filled up, binding C. Stephens, the pauper, to Trotman, on a 1*l.* stamp, and was witnessed by the clerk, but they did not go before any magistrate. The premium of 10*l.* was paid, and the pauper served under the indenture nearly three years, residing in the appellant parish. It was admitted by the parties that the 4*l.* remitted by Mr. Wall had been received by him from Samuel Wright of Kingston, and a magistrate residing near that place stated that he believed Samuel Wright was overseer of Kingston in 1825, but he could not speak to a certainty, the parish having been under a select vestry. It was contended on behalf of the appellant parish, that the indenture was void for want of the consent of two magistrates, part of the premium having been paid out of the parochial funds; but the court confirmed the order, considering that the indenture was not binding by any overseer or overseers, but by Dr. Lye, who was not overseer of either of the parishes. The court also considered that the payments by the several parishes were voluntary, and not made under any legal obligation; and though they were charged to the parish accounts yet no evidence being produced that the pauper belonged to either parish, there was no occasion to have the consent of magistrates, under the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, to the binding. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether or not the indenture was valid without the consent of magistrates; if it was not so, the pauper was improperly removed to the parish of St. Peter. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "This is a case not within the mischief intended to be remedied by the statute. The only question is, whether the enacting words of the eleventh section should not be construed with some restriction. That this binding is not within the general mischief intended to be remedied by the statute appears manifestly from the preamble, which recites, 'that many grievances have arisen from the binding of poor children as apprentices by parish officers to improper persons and to persons residing at a distance.' This was not a binding by parish officers, but by an individual. The statute then directs, that 'before any child be bound apprentice by the overseers of the poor of any parish, &c. such child shall be carried before two justices, who shall inquire into the propriety of binding such child,' &c. The first ten sections apply to cases where the parish officers are the binding parties; but inasmuch as parish officers intending to bind a child apprentice to an improper person, or to a person not residing or carrying on business within a reasonable distance, might, without being actual parties to the indenture, in order to evade the provisions contained in those sections, advance the public parochial fund to the parents of such child, in order to bind him out; to remedy that mischief and to prevent the parish officers from doing indirectly that which the other sections prevented them from doing directly, the eleventh section was introduced. That section recites, that 'the salutary provisions enacted by the 43rd of Elizabeth are frequently evaded in the binding out of poor children, and the premium of apprenticeship, or a part thereof, is clandestinely provided by parish officers, who are thus enabled to bind out such poor children without the sanction of justices of peace.' The mischief therefore was, that parish officers, by advancing money, without becoming ostensible parties to the indenture, were enabled to bind out poor children without the proper sanction; and to remedy that mischief it is enacted, that 'no indenture of apprenticeship, by reason of which any expense whatever shall be at any time incurred by the public parochial funds, shall be valid and effectual, unless approved of by two justices of the peace under their hands and seals, according to the provisions of the said act and of this act.' The enacting words are certainly very large, but I think we ought to put on them such a construction as may have the effect of preventing the mischief intended to be remedied, yet of not extending them to a case like the present, where a humane and charitable person has bound out a poor apprentice, part of the sum expended in such binding having been voluntarily contributed by parish officers, and afterwards allowed them in their accounts by the parishes for which they act. I think we must construe the enacting part of this statute as applying to cases where the execution of the indenture is directly or indirectly obtained by parish officers, so as in effect to be a binding by them. Here the binding was not procured either directly or indirectly by the parish officers." Littledale, J. "The words of the enacting part of sect. 11 may perhaps be satisfied, if any part of the money expended in binding out the pauper be supplied from public parochial funds. Looking, however, to the object which the legislature had in view by that enactment, I think it does not apply to the present case. First, I think the words 'public parochial funds' mean the funds of some one particular parish which may have an interest in the binding. Here the officers of three parishes contributed, and it does not appear that any one of those parishes was interested in binding out the pauper to another; but, independently of that, this was not a binding, either directly or indirectly, by the parish officers. The great object of the legislature in sect. 11, was to prevent the parish officers from doing indirectly that which they were prohibited from doing directly by the former sections; and that being so, I think the enacting words must be restrained to cases where they are in substance and effect, though not in name, the binding parties, and where the binding takes place at their instance or instigation. The general preamble, as well as the preamble of the eleventh section, shows that the prohibition is intended only to meet those cases where the binding is either formally or substantially by the parish officers." Taunton, J. "I think the order of sessions was right on the ground stated in the case, that there was no binding by the parish officers, but only by Dr. Lye; and that the payment by the parishes was voluntary and not made in consequence of any legal obligation, there being no evidence that the pauper belonged to either of the parishes which contributed money, though it was charged and allowed in the respective parish accounts." Patteson, J. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Stoke Damarel, 7 B. & C. 563; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 155. Jane Coleman removed from Stoke Damarel to Charles, Plymouth. Case:—The pauper, daughter of T. Coleman of Stoke Damarel, was bound apprentice on the 16th October, 1823, to J. Ellis of Charles. The indenture, which was on a one-pound stamp, was executed by the master, the pauper, and her father, and the allowance was written on the margin:—by which the said justices "do consent to, and allow, the putting forth the pauper an apprentice, according to the intent of this indenture." This allowance was signed by two justices, but was not under seal. Upon the binding an expense was incurred by the public parochial funds of Stoke Damarel, i. e. 9*l.* the consideration-money mentioned in the indenture; and a further sum, being charges attending the binding, from the date of the indenture until she was discharged from further service under it on the 3d July, 1826, by two magistrates. Bayley, J. "I do not know how to get rid of the words of this clause of the act of parliament; and where the legislature, in a very modern act, have used words

9. Of Parish Apprentices.

Where an apprentice is bound, and part of the expenses paid out of the parochial funds, the indenture must be approved by two justices, "under their hands and seals," pursuant to 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 11, or it will be void ab initio, and service under it will confer no settlement.

9. Of Parish Apprentices.

of a plain and definite import, it is very dangerous to put a construction on them, which would have the effect of deciding that the legislature did not mean that which they have expressed. The earlier clauses apply to bindings by parish officers, but as there might be instances in which they would not ostensibly be the parties binding, although they furnished the means out of the parochial funds by which the binding was effected, it occurred to the legislature that it might be expedient to make some provision for that class of cases, and for this purpose the 11th sect. was introduced. It begins with a new recital, as if it were altogether a new enactment. Looking at the whole of the clause together, it clearly relates to a subject to which the preceding sections did not apply, and was intended to make provision for other bindings than those to which the parish officers are parties. It mentions indentures by reason of which expense is incurred by the parochial funds; and so far the indenture in question comes within its operation, because the premium was paid by the parish officers. It requires the indenture to be approved by two justices, under their hands and seals. The former sections do not require the allowance of the justices to be under seal; but here the word seals is added. Why should that addition be made, unless it was intended that the regulation thereby enjoined should be enforced? It is said that signing is enough; but how can we reject the words which require the allowance to be sealed? Reddendo singula singulis, and following the ordinary legal rules of construction, it seems to me that the legislature intended by this section to require, that in indentures of apprenticeship of this sort, there should be such an approval as was necessary in cases of parish binding, and something more, namely, that the seals of the magistrates should be affixed to their approval. Why such an additional formality should be required, it is impossible for us to know, and would be idle to inquire; but it is required: and we must suppose that in requiring it, the legislature meant that which they have expressed. Then it is said, that even if the sealing was intended to be required, yet the omission will not render the indenture absolutely void, but only voidable; in other words, that the indenture may be valid for some purposes, and not for others. I think the words 'valid and effectual,' were intended to apply to the indenture ab initio, and that it was the object of the legislature to make it binding ab initio, so that the parties should not be able to avoid it. The adoption of any argument to the contrary would be highly dangerous, for the parties would then be wholly at the mercy of each other during the whole of the apprenticeship; and either might leave the other unjustly shortly before the completion of a period of seven years. For these reasons, I am of opinion that this indenture was void, for want of an allowance by the magistrates under seal, and that no settlement was acquired by service under it." Holroyd, J. "I think this was not a binding by the parish officers, within the early sections of this statute, but that it was a binding within the meaning of the 11th section. That enacts not merely that no parish indenture, but that no indenture shall be valid, unless it has the approbation of two justices under their hands and seals. It seems to me that the true construction of these words is, that the approval shall be such as is required by the 43 of Eliz.; and by the former sections of the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, it shall also be under the hands and seals of the justices. It has been contended that the indenture is voidable only; upon that point I have entertained some doubt. But it is admitted that it was competent to either party to avoid such an indenture before the service expired. Here it was avoided, for the pauper was discharged. Assuming that the indentures were voidable, still as they were avoided, no settlement could be gained. As the indenture was avoided by the parties, it was thereby rendered 'not valid and effectual,' and no settlement was gained by the service under it." Littledale, J. took the same view as Bayley, J. and added, "that if the indenture was void, there was no necessity for a special enactment to prevent the gaining of a settlement."

The 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 1, requiring that the order of justices for the binding

Rex v. Bawbergh, 2 B. & C. 222; 3 D. & R. 338. Order of removal of W. Pease from St. Andrew, to Bawbergh, confirmed. Case:—W. Pease was an illegitimate child, and by an order of two justices of the 11th May, 1819, and made under 65 Geo. III. c. 139, and an indenture, not stamped, was bound an apprentice. The order of justices was set out at length; and the indenture stated, that the churchwardens and overseers, by and with the consent of two justices, whose names were subscribed, bound W. Pease, a poor child, as an apprentice for the term of seven years, &c.; but the indenture did not mention the date of the order of justices, nor did it appear whether they signed the indenture before or after the other parties. The parish officers of Melton paid the master the sum of 10*l*. (the premium stipulated to be paid by the indenture) and the pauper entered upon his apprenticeship, and served his master for a year and a half, when, on his master's failure, he left him. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that this indenture is void, and consequently no settlement gained. The 56 Geo. III. c. 139, has introduced a variety of new regulations as to the mode of binding out parish apprentices. It requires that the child should be carried before two justices, and they are to inquire into the propriety of binding such child apprentice to the person to whom it shall be proposed by the overseers to bind him; and if the justices shall, upon the inquiry, think it proper that the child shall be bound apprentice to such person, the statute then enacts that the justices shall make an order, declaring that such person is a fit person to whom the child may be bound as apprentice, and shall thereupon order that the overseer of the place to which the child shall belong shall be at liberty to bind such child apprentice accordingly; which order shall be delivered to such overseer as the warrant for binding such child, and such order shall be referred to by the date thereof, and the names of the said justices, in the indenture of apprenticeship of such child; and after such order shall have been made, such justices shall sign their allowance of such indenture of apprenticeship, before the same shall be executed by any of the other parties thereto. The statute requires specifically that the order should be referred to by the date; and the object of that might be that the order might be found with facility at any future period. The statute then requires that the justices shall sign the allowance of such indenture. Now, the word 'such' is not immaterial; and the reference to the order by date is either directory only, or it is of the essence of the indenture. I am of opinion that it means such an indenture as was before required, viz. one containing the date of the order of justices. The fifth section then enacts, 'That no settlement shall be gained by any child who shall be bound by the officers of any parish, &c., by reason of such apprenticeship, unless such order shall be made, and such allowance of such indenture shall be signed as thereinbefore directed.' There must, therefore, be an allowance, not of such indenture, but of such indenture as was thereinbefore directed, viz. of one referring to the order of justices by the date thereof. I doubt whether the eleventh section applies to such a case as the present, or whether it applies only to such cases where the binding is by the parents, and not by the overseers; but I am clearly of opinion that, construing the first and fifth sections together, this indenture is void, and that no settlement was gained in Bawbergh by the service under it." Best, J. "The first and fifth sections are to be taken together, and then there can be no doubt that a settlement was not gained in Bawbergh, because in the indenture the order of the justices was not referred to by the date. Such indenture means the indenture before spoken of." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Whiston, 1836. This was an indenture within the meaning of the 1st section of the 56 Geo. III. It recited the order, but the party relying on the indenture gave no evidence that the notices required by the 2nd section had been given. Ibid. It will be presumed that the preliminaries have been complied with, and that the parties have done their duty till the contrary presumption is raised, as in Rex v. Harleyfield (2 M. & S. 558.) MS. of Mr. Bere.

Rex v. Newark upon Trent, 3 B. & C. 59; 4 D. & R. 745. A pauper was, pursuant to an order of two justices of the county, bound apprentice by the churchwardens and overseers of that parish to A. B. of another parish, in a borough situate in the same county, but having justices who had exclusive jurisdiction therein. The indenture was allowed by two county justices, but no notice was given to the overseers of the poor of the parish in the borough of shall be referred to in the indenture by the date thereof, is compulsory; and therefore, if such date be omitted, the indenture is void, and no settlement gained by serving under it.

the intention to bind such apprentice ; nor did they or any of them attend before the county justices who allowed the indenture, and admit such notice. Held by Bayley, Holroyd, and Littledale, Js. Rex v. Threlkeld, 1 Nev. & M. 14; 4 B. & Ad. 229. On appeal against an order of two justices, whereby William Thompson was removed from Keswick to Threlkeld, the sessions confirmed the order of removal subject to the opinion of the court on the following case. The pauper, a poor boy of and then legally settled in Threlkeld, was in February, 1819, pursuant to an order of two justices of that county, bound apprentice by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of Threlkeld to E. Foster, of and residing at Keswick, by indenture for a term therein mentioned. Keswick is within the parish of Crosthwaite, and is about four miles distant from the township of Threlkeld, which is in the parish of Greystoke. Each township maintains its own poor separately, and both parishes are in the same county, and within the jurisdiction of the peace of the two justices who made the order for the binding, and who afterwards signed their allowance of the indenture. No notice was given to the overseers of the poor of Keswick, or to any of them, of the intention to bind out such apprentice : nor did any of the overseers of that township attend the justices who signed their allowance of the indenture or either of them and admit such notice, but the binding as well as the service and residence under it was in all other respects such as would confer a settlement upon the pauper in Keswick. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether such notice was necessary under the circumstances above stated. Denman, C. J. "The pauper gained a settlement in Keswick, unless he was prevented from so doing by the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 5, which enacts 'That no settlement shall be gained by any child who shall be bound by the officers of any parish, &c. by reason of such apprenticeship, unless such order shall be made and such allowances of such indenture of apprenticeship shall be signed as hereinbefore directed.' It is said here that there have not been such an order and such allowances of the indenture signed as by the act directed, and I am of that opinion. The act of parliament contains a proviso (s. 2) that 'notice shall be given to the overseers of the poor of the parish, or place in which such child shall be intended to serve an apprenticeship, before any justice of the peace for the county or district within which such parish or place shall be shall allow such indenture, and such notice shall be proved before such justice shall sign such indenture, unless one of such overseers shall attend such justice and admit such notice.' Now here the sessions have found that no notice was given to the overseers of Keswick, nor did the overseers of that parish attend before the justices and admit such notice. But it is contended that notice is not necessary in a case where the binding parish and that in which the apprentice is to be bound are within the same county and consequently within the jurisdiction of the same magistrates. But the object of the legislature being, as may be collected from the preamble, that every possible precaution should be taken in the binding out of the poor apprentice, it is manifest that the same necessity for notice may exist in either case. It seems to me absurd to say that merely passing the boundary of the county should render that necessary in one case which was not so in another. The provision that 'no settlement shall be gained unless such order shall be made,' &c. is for the advantage of the apprentice, because it then becomes the interest of the officers of the binding parish to take care that the apprentice shall be well bound. With all deference to the opinion of Lord Tenterden, in Rex v. Newark upon Trent (4 D. & R. 745; 3 B. & C. 59; ante, 529), and admitting that the different clauses of this act of parliament are not easily reconcileable with each other, I think that the proviso as to notice, in the second section, is not confined to cases where the two parishes are situate in different counties, but that it extends to all the cases mentioned in the first section as well as the second. There are no words to control or limit that construction; it is beneficial to the apprentice, and by adopting it we do not violate the grammatical sense of the language used by the legislature." Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion.

The doctrine that an act of parliament is to be construed so as to favour settlements has been long and justly exploded. There is no rule of law which calls on us to put a strict construction on this act of parliament; we must endeavour therefore to discover the intention of the legislature and carry it into effect if the language used will warrant us in so doing, and the question is, whether putting a proper grammatical construction on the proviso, it is confined to cases where the two parishes are situate in different counties, and consequently within the jurisdiction of different magistrates, or extends to those where the parishes are in the same county and jurisdiction. The circumstance of its being printed as part of the second section can make no difference in the construction, because on the parliament rolls the acts are not divided into sections. Now the terms of the proviso are, 'and notice shall be given to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which such child shall be intended to serve an apprenticeship, before any justice of the peace for the county or district within which such parish shall be shall allow such indenture, and such notice shall be proved before such justice shall sign such indenture.' The language would be more accurate if it had been said 'before he shall allow, and before he shall make the order for the binding;' but the word allow is used in the statute as common to both. The language therefore of the proviso is sufficiently large to include cases where the parishes are in the same, as well as where they are in different counties, and the sense and reason of the thing seem to require also that it should extend to each class of cases. I thought, also, that reason required that the first part of the proviso should be general; but as a different opinion was expressed by some of the judges on that point in Rex v. Newark upon Trent (3 D. & R. 755, 763; 3 B. & C. 71, 84), I do not wish to give any decisive opinion upon it; if, however, the first part of the proviso extends to all cases, the second undoubtedly does; and if the first does not so apply, no reason can be given why the second should not. Upon the whole, I think the opinion delivered by Holroyd, J., in Rex v. Newark upon Trent, is perfectly correct, that notice was necessary to be given in this case, and that for want of such notice no settlement was gained in Keswick." Taunton, J. "I frankly acknowledge there are some expressions in the second section which I do not perfectly understand, but they are not material to the question before the court: I see enough to convince me that the order of sessions is right. That part of section 2, which begins with the words 'and notice shall be given,' is a general enactment, applicable to all the cases embraced in the first section. As to the part which begins with 'provided always, that no indenture shall be allowed,' &c., I am by no means satisfied that those are not words of general enactment, but however that may be, the words respecting notice are undoubtedly general, and the sense and reason of the thing require that they should be so. There may be as much reason for requiring notice in a case where the two parishes are in the same county, as where they are in different counties. Two parishes in the same county may be at a great distance from each other, and two parishes in different counties may be adjoining each other, and it is manifest that notice may be as necessary in the one case as the other. Where indeed the two parishes are in different counties notice need not be given to the overseers of the master's parish until the parties go before the magistrate having jurisdiction over that parish; but where the two parishes are in the same county, the notice must be given before the indenture be allowed. The order of sessions must be confirmed." Patteson, J. "I am of the same opinion. I see that by sect. 2 notice is required to be given to the overseers in all cases. The early part of sect. 2 requires that the indenture shall be allowed by the magistrates having jurisdiction over the place from which the apprentice is to be bound, as well as by the magistrates of the place into which the apprentice is to be bound. If the parishes are within different jurisdictions, two sets of justices are required; if within the same, only one; but in the latter case they are magistrates for each parish. Where there are two allowances notice need not be given to the overseers of the master's parish till the parties go to the second set of justices, because they are the persons who are to make the order; but where there is only one set of justices, notice must be given to the overseers of the

An indenture stated that the overseers and churchwardens of M., in the county of W., with the consent of justices of the said county, bound a pauper apprentice to T. master's parish before the indenture be allowed by the justices making the order. I am therefore of opinion that the order of sessions was right." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Hinckley, 1 B. & A. 273. Removal from the liberties of Monks Kirby, in Warwickshire, to Hinckley, in Leicester. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice by the churchwardens and overseers of the liberties of Monks Kirby, to J. Wright of Hinckley, by a parish indenture, of the 3rd of August, 1795, which stated that J. B., and E. B., churchwardens of the liberties of Monks Kirby, in the county of Warwick, and S. C., and J. T., overseers of the poor of the said liberties, by and with the consent of the justices of the peace for the said county, had placed W. Sansom, aged eight years, apprentice to J. Wright, of the parish of Hinckley, in the county of Leicester, frame-work knitter, him to serve until the apprentice should be twenty-one. The indenture was executed by all the parties thereto, and in the margin the magistrates stated their consent, but described themselves as justices for the county aforesaid. The pauper served under this indenture in Hinckley during the whole of the period. The magistrates who signed the allowance of the indenture were magistrates of Warwick and also of Leicester. After hearing counsel, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "It is quite clear that the words 'county aforesaid,' can only refer to the county of Warwick. The justices, we must presume, read the indenture before they allowed it; and indeed their very words of reference prove that it must have been so: then if they did read it, they must have known that they had no authority to act, except as justices of the county of Warwick. The question after all really is, whether said county and county aforesaid, mean the same thing. If they do, it is evident from the body of the instrument that the words 'said county,' can only apply to the county of Warwick. It will follow, that the words 'county aforesaid,' must have the same application." Order confirmed.

10. Of the Enrolment of the Indentures.

10. OF THE ENROLMENT OF THE INDENTURES. (a)

The 5th Eliz. c. 5, s. 12, required that the indenture of apprenticeship to masters of ships should be enrolled in the town where the apprentice was inhabiting at the time it was executed, if it be a town corporate; and if it be not a town corporate, then to be enrolled in the next town incorporate to the habitation of such apprentice; and that the officers of every such town corporate shall take for every such enrolment not above twelve pence, (ante, 452). [See also 2 & 3 Anne, c. 6.]

The 6 Geo. IV. c. 107, s. 138, (ante, 483,) enacts, "That no person shall be deemed an apprentice, for the purposes of 4 Geo. IV. c. 25, as to apprentices on board British merchant vessels, (ante, 480,) unless the indenture shall have been enrolled with the collector and comptroller of the port from which the apprentice shall first go to sea, or until the same has been enrolled at some port from which the ship shall afterwards go to sea."

But one bound apprentice to a mariner was held settled by service under his indenture, although not enrolled in the town where the apprentice was then inhabiting, nor in the next incorporate town to his habitation, pursuant to 5 Eliz. c. 5, s. 12, nor with the collector of customs, pursuant to 2 & 3 Anne, c. 6. See Gainsborough v. Westockwith, Burr. S. C. 588; and per Lord Mansfield, "It would be very hard that the apprentice should suffer for the master's neglect. I think the cases have gone too far upon the stamp act. It is summum jus, and has been considered strictly on account of the preservation of the duties payable to the crown.

It is however important, by custom of London and other places, that the indenture should be enrolled, in order to entitle the apprentice to his freedom, and which may be compelled by scire facias or mandamus. (b)

11. OF THE SERVICE AND RESIDENCE. (a)

11. Of the Service and Residence.

An apprentice may have to serve his master in a great number of different parishes or places, and may abide a sufficient length of time in each to establish a settlement in each consecutively; but the right is ultimately fixed in that place where he has last completed a forty days' residence under the indenture.

It may be proper here to remark, that as a forty days' residence is sufficient to give a settlement under a valid binding, it is possible that the apprentice may gain as many settlements as there are spaces of forty days in the term of his apprenticeship; and where he serves the last forty days, there is his last settlement. It thus appears that he may often gain a settlement long before his master gains one; as where the master's settlement is to arise from executing an annual office, or by residence upon a 10*l.* tenement for a year. He may also gain a settlement whilst his master is unable to gain one; as where his master resides upon a tenement of less annual value than 10*l.*, or does not occupy for the whole year where the renting is sufficient in amount. It follows that the master may be removed, when the apprentice is irremovable, by an order of justices under the poor laws; and in such case the master must of necessity apply to the justices to compel the apprentice to go along with him.

Holy Trinity v. Shoreditch, 1 Str. 10. Parker, C. J., delivered the resolution of the court. Ferrer was removed from the parish of Holy Trinity to Shoreditch. He was bound apprentice to one Truby, of Holy Trinity, in Shoreditch, with intent that he should serve Green: which he did for three years. We are of opinion the justices have done right in sending him to Shoreditch, where the service actually was. It is the same thing as if Truby had turned him over to Green; in which case there would have been no question but he had gained a settlement in Green's parish.

If an apprentice be bound to one, with intent to serve another, his settlement is in the parish where he served, though the master had no settlement there.

St. Bride's v. St. Saviour's, 2 Salk. 533. A woman who was settled at St. Saviour's, with her apprentice, by indenture, came and took a lodging in St. Bride's, and there continued above forty days with her apprentice, who served her there. This was held by the court to be a settlement of the apprentice at St. Bride's, though the mistress had no settlement there.

Quære, though master had no settlement there.

St. John Baptist v. St. James's, Bishop Cannings, 2 Raym. 1371; 1 Stra. 594. Binding and serving will not make a settlement, but the settlement must be by inhabiting, which cannot be but where the party lodges.

Residence is where the party lodges.

Rex v. Castleton, Burr. S. C. 569; 2 Bott, 526. The pauper, John Holroid, was bound to a master at Castleton for seven years. He worked, dieted, and lodged with his master in Castleton for four years and a half, and then married. After which marriage he worked and dieted with his master in Castleton in the day time; but lodged at nights with his wife's father in Hundersfield, until the expiration of his apprenticeship, which was about two years and a half from the time of his marriage. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Clearly he gained a settlement in Hundersfield."

An apprentice, working by day in one parish, and sleeping by night in another, obtains a settlement where he lodged, by lodging there at nights.

The contrary had been held in Rex v. St. Olave's Jury, 1 Stra. 51, where the facts were that A. was bound to a cobbler, who kept a stall in D., slept in F., and the boy in E., and it was held that no settlement was gained in either: the stall not being sufficient, the master lying in another parish. The authority of this case is very doubtful.

Rex v. St. Peter's on the Hill, 2 Bott, 524. The pauper was bound an apprentice to a carpenter, and served two years in St. P., during which he lived, ate, and lodged at night with his mother in St. O. Lee, C. J. "There is a distinction in this case between apprentices and servants. The statute is, that apprentices gain a settlement by binding and inhabitation, not by binding and service; but servants gain a settlement by hiring and service, without regard to inhabiting. Rex v. St. John's, Devizes, (T. 10 Geo. I.) seems to me a very odd determination; all the cases I am acquainted with being to the contrary, as St. Mary, Colechurch, v. Radcliffe; Rex v. Graveny." The order of removal to St. O. was confirmed.

Forty days' residence successive. ly not necessary.

An apprentice may gain a settle- ment by residing in a parish during his apprenticeship forty days though not within the compass of any one year.

Rex v. Cirencester, 1 Str. 579. An apprentice bound in the parish, lived there off and on for three quarters of a year. Exception was taken, that he did not inhabit forty days together. But by the court: "That is not necessary."

Rex v. Aldstone, 2 B. & Adol. 207. Upon appeal against an order of two justices, whereby Edward Davison, and his wife and children, were removed from Hexham to Aldstone, the sessions confirmed the order. Case:—The respondent parish of Hexham established a prima facie settlement of the pauper, Edward Davison, by parentage, in the parish of Aldstone. The appellants then proved that the pauper, E. Davison, when about nineteen years of age, bound himself as an apprentice to John Ostle, of North Shields, in the county of Northumberland, ship-owner, by indenture bearing date the 26th of August, 1809, for the term of three years; that in the first year of the pauper's apprenticeship the vessel in which he served was moored for a month in the township of Middleborough, in the county of York, which township separately maintains its own poor, and that in the second year the same ship, in which the pauper still continued to serve, was moored in the same township of Middleborough for five weeks, and that during the said month and five weeks he slept on board the ship. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether the pauper, E. Davison, gained a settle- ment in Middleborough under the indenture of apprenticeship, the forty days of his residence in that township not having been in one and the same year of his apprenticeship. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "This case falls within the decision of Rex v. Gainsborough (Burr. S. C. 586.) There the pauper, while apprentice, resided forty days in the whole in West Stockwith, at many different times during a term of three years and a quarter, and was resident no where else forty days during that period, and he was held to be settled in West Stockwith." Littledale, J. "There is a distinction between contracts for service and for apprenticeship. In the former case there must be a year's service under a yearly hiring to confer a settlement; the forty days' residence must therefore be within the year. But the service under a contract of apprenticeship has no reference to the term of a year." Parke, J., and Patteson, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Brighthelmstone, 5 T. R. 188. J. Humphrey was removed from Wivelsfield to Brighthelmstone. Order confirmed. Case:—J. Humphrey was, at the age of fifteen years, bound an apprentice to J. Soper, of Alfriston, weaver, to serve from 3d November, 1774, for seven years; he served and resided with Soper in Alfriston until 9th July, 1781; from that time until the 21st September following he served and resided, by direction of his master, in a shop hired by his master at Brighthelmstone; he then returned to and served and resided with his master in Alfriston until 22d of October following, when he was sent by his master to the master's father in West Grinstead, to serve out his apprenticeship, where he resided until 3d November following, when his apprenticeship expired. The court said that the decision of this case must be governed by those of former cases, and that the distinc- tion attempted to be made between the cases of servants and apprentices could not be supported; but that they should both fall within the same rule, and that Rex v. Lowess and Rex v. Hulland governed this case, where it was determined that when a servant lives with his master forty days in one parish and then forty days in another, and then returns and stays one day in the former parish, his settlement will be there. Ashhurst, J. "The settlement is shifting until the end of the year, and is at last fixed where the servant sleeps the last night, if there be a residence for forty days in that parish in the whole." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Barmby in the Marsh, 7 East, 381. The pauper was removed from Barmby to Selby, and order quashed. Case:—The pauper, J. Martin- dale, was bound apprentice by indenture, 1st April, 1794, for four years, to J. B., of Hunslet, who was the master of a small vessel trading on the Ouse. The pauper slept more than forty nights during his apprenticeship at Selby, at different times, but slept the last night at Barmby, at his grandmother's, in which latter place he had slept more than forty nights, in consequence of his being ill of a fever. He went to B., with the consent of his master, who received him again as his apprentice; and he never slept there except as above stated. The court were of opinion that the residence of the pauper in B. being on account of illness, was not a residence as an apprentice, and that the inhabitation required by 3 Will. III. c. 11, must be referable in some way to the apprenticeship. But that the residence here with the grandmother was no more referable to the apprenticeship than if the pauper had resided in a hospital or a prison. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Charles, Burr. S. C. 706. J. Hodge was bound apprentice by the parish of Knowstone to John Fisher, of K., for an estate which Fisher rented of Mr. L., who had covenanted with F. to discharge him from any expense that he might incur thereby. On Fisher's application, Mr. L.'s widow and representative (he being then dead) took the boy, received the parish money with him, carried him home with her, and afterwards removed to the parish of Charles, where the boy resided with her about three years, and then became a cripple by losing both his feet. She then returned him to Fisher, who received him, upon her promise to pay him all the expense he should be at in taking care of him, and put him to live with his (the boy's) grandmother in Knowstone, at 8*d.* a week, where he resided above forty days, and then was discharged of his apprenticeship. After which he was removed to Charles, where he served the last part of his apprenticeship before he became disabled. By the court: "The performance of actual service is not the thing material. It is the residence, the inhabitation of an apprentice in a parish for forty days that gains the settlement. And this residence here stated cannot be deemed a casual residence, and therefore is not to be compared to the cases under that head. The boy was bound to F. at K., resided about three years in C., then became a cripple; was sent back to F. at K., received by him, and put by him to live with his grandmother at K., and resided there above forty days, during which time he there gained a settlement." Rex v. Foulness, 6 M. & S. 351. The pauper was bound apprentice as a mariner for three years to James Potter, of Foulness, owner of a barge, in which he made several voyages from London to Foulness. Previous to his last he had slept thirty-five nights in Foulness. On the last voyage, his master quitted the vessel, and was never heard of for the remainder of the three years. The pauper returned to Foulness in the vessel, and continued on board two days. Then being ill, he applied to his master's wife, and was by her direction taken to the poorhouse, because she was unable to afford him accommodation in her own house: but she maintained him at her expense, in expectation of her husband's return, during the three weeks he was in the poorhouse, and only ceased to do so on account of her distressed situation, having nothing for him to do. He was afterwards supported by the parish. Another joint owner took charge of the barge, and another apprentice continued on board, and so would the pauper if he had not been ill. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I consider that the residence of the apprentice in the poorhouse was virtually a residence in the master's house, under a continuance of the contract. The wife maintains him there out of her pittance until it fails, in expectation of her husband's return, and for the purpose of continuing the service until his return." Bayley, J. "In Rex v. Barmby the apprentice was residing at a distance from the master, and with his own friends: here he was maintained at the master's expense. Why was he so maintained, excepting by reason that the master was under a legal obligation,

11. Of the Service and Residence.

An apprentice was turned over to a person in another parish, where he served above forty days, and returned, a cripple, to his original master, who sent him to board with his grandmother: Held, residence with the grandmother would gain a settlement. (a)

If the pauper, being ill, is put by the master, and at his expense, in the workhouse, it is a residence under the indentures.

(a) In Rex v. Banbury (post, 537), Lord Tenterden observed, "It is not easy, if possible, to reconcile these cases."

(b) In Rex v. Stratford-upon-Avon, (post, 541), Le Blanc, J. observed, that "It was not considered in this case that the pauper went to Knowstone for the purpose of cure, but that the original master, who lived in the same parish, and was bound to receive him, did receive and place him there."

11. Of the Service and Residence.

A pauper was duly apprenticed to a farmer residing in parish A., and served him there, but before the expiration of the apprenticeship the farmer having failed in business, placed the pauper with another farmer in parish B., and the pauper served the latter in B. for nine months, when becoming ill and disabled from service, he returned to his first master in parish A.; the latter having no accommodation for him, told him to go to his mother, who lived in that parish. The pauper did so, and his first master, a few days after, promised his mother to remunerate her for taking care of the pauper. The pauper continued to reside with his mother in A. for about eight weeks, his first master also being resident there, but did not perform any actual service for him: it was held that the pauper resided in A. in the character of apprentice, and thereby gained a settlement.

as master, to maintain him in sickness? If the character of an apprentice had ceased, the wife might have abandoned him, and sent him to his own parish."

Rex v. Linkinhorne, 3 B. & Adol. 413. On appeal against an order of two justices, whereby William Wallis and his family were removed from Linkinhorne to St. Cleer, the sessions quashed the order. Case:—The pauper was duly bound apprentice by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. Cleer to John Gadgcombe, of that parish, farmer, and served him in St. Cleer, under the indenture, for about six years, when Gadgcombe having failed in business, agreed to place the pauper with T. Little, of the parish of St. Pinnock, in the said county, farmer. No assignment or transfer of the indenture was made, but the pauper, in March, 1816, went to and served Little in St. Pinnock, with the consent of Gadgcombe, for nine months. The pauper then becoming ill and disabled for service, went back to Gadgcombe, in the parish of St. Cleer, and he having no accommodation for the pauper, told him to go to his mother, who lived in St. Cleer, promising to come and agree with her for his board and maintenance. The pauper went to his mother accordingly, and a few days after, Gadgcombe came and promised the mother to remunerate her for taking care of her son, and took the pauper to a medical man for advice. The pauper continued to reside with his mother in St. Cleer for about eight weeks, Gadgcombe also during that time being resident in St. Cleer, but the pauper did not perform any actual service for Gadgcombe during that period. The sessions were of opinion, that for want of such service the last legal place of settlement of the pauper was in St. Pinnock. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The decisions on this branch of the law run very near to each other, and are hardly reconcilable. I agree that the mere continuance of the contract during the absence of the apprentice from his master is not sufficient; but I do not agree that the performance of some service by the apprentice is absolutely necessary to enable him to gain a settlement in a parish different from that where the master lives. I think less than that will do, and that it will be sufficient if the residence be in pursuance of the contract of apprenticeship, and in a place where but for that contract it would not have been. The word service is not mentioned in the statute 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 8, but binding and inhabitation. Here I think it is evident that the boy's residence with his mother in St. Cleer was in pursuance of the contract of apprenticeship, for during all that time the master was bound to maintain him, and did so in performance of his part of the contract. The pauper was therefore settled in St. Cleer." Littledale, J. "Although no actual service was rendered by the pauper while he resided in St. Cleer the last eight weeks, such residence was in pursuance of the contract of apprenticeship. He returned to his master with the intention to reside with him and to perform service as soon as his health permitted. Illness alone prevented it. He went to his mother's house by desire of his master. His residence there is to be considered as if he had continued in the master's house; and if he had been taken ill while residing there, there could have been no doubt that he would have gained a settlement in St. Cleer, although he performed no service. That the master considered him as residing with his mother in pursuance of the contract of apprenticeship, is shown by the fact of his having agreed to maintain him during that time." Parke, J. "I am also of opinion that a settlement was gained in the parish of St. Cleer. The question arises on the statute 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 8, which enacts that 'if any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture, and inhabit in any parish, such binding and inhabitation shall be adjudged a good settlement.' The statute says nothing of actual service. The true construction, as stated by Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Ilkeston (6 D. & R. 67; 4 B. & C. 67, post, 538), is, that the inhabitation must be in the character of an apprentice, and in some way or other in furtherance of the object of the apprenticeship. Now, applying that rule to the present case, the pauper's residence in St. Cleer was not casual, for he came to that parish because the master was bound to receive and maintain him. The residence there consequently was connected with the apprenticeship. The dictum, that service is one of the essential requisites to confer a settlement, cannot be supported. Service may be material as showing that the residence is in the character of apprentice, but that may be shown by other facts. Here the residence appears undoubtedly to have been in the character of apprentice, and was so considered by the master, for he agreed to maintain the pauper during the time of such residence." Patteson, J. "Service is a criterion, but not the only one whereby to determine the character of the residence, and the facts stated in this case abundantly show that the pauper resided in St. Cleer as an apprentice. Rex v. Charles (Burr. S. C. 706, ante, 535), is in point, and has not been over-ruled. The order of sessions must be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Banbury, 2 Nev. & M. 205; 3 B. & Adol. 706. On appeal against an order of two justices, whereby George Stanton and his wife were removed from Banbury to Kingsutton, the sessions quashed the order. Case:—The pauper George Stanton was by indenture of apprenticeship, dated the 7th April, 1825, bound apprentice to W. Kimbury, of Banbury, cork-cutter, for the term of seven years. The consideration money paid to the master was 21*l.*, and the master covenanted to teach the apprentice his trade, and find him sufficient meat, drink, clothing, lodging, washing, and all other necessaries, during the term. The pauper, upon the execution of the indenture, entered into the service of his master at Banbury, in which service he remained seven weeks, working at cutting corks, after which, the pauper having a weakness in his eyes, his master told him that he must go back to his father, as he could not see to work at his trade. The pauper accordingly went home to his father's house at Kingsutton on the Saturday following, where he stayed till the next Monday morning. The pauper and his father then went again to the master, who refused to receive the pauper, upon which all the parties went before a magistrate, and the father made a complaint against the master for refusing to receive the pauper. The magistrate informed the master that he must return the premium or maintain the apprentice. The master stated that he could do that, and the pauper, his father, and the master then went to the master's house, where it was agreed that the master should give the pauper two gross of corks per week, to be of the value of 2*s.*, per gross to maintain him. The pauper then went home, and lived with his father (who was a labourer and receiving parish relief) at Kingsutton, for two years, during which time the pauper received the corks from his master, according to the agreement between them. He sold the corks, and did any thing he could get to do, working for any one who would employ him. During those two years the pauper did no work for his master, unless hawking the corks so furnished to him could be considered as a service under the indenture. The pauper did not account with his master for the corks so furnished to him, or their proceeds, and the pauper's father sometimes sold the corks. At the expiration of two years, in consequence of the master giving the pauper bad and valueless corks, the pauper was taken back by the father to his master, with whom he (the pauper) lived about ten days, and during that time he went out hawking corks for sale for his master. He slept on the night of the last of those ten days at the master's house in Banbury. At the end of the ten days the master told the pauper that he must go home again, on account of the badness of his sight, and he agreed to let the pauper have a gross of the best corks per week. Accordingly the pauper went back to his father's at Kingsutton, and lived with him again till his indentures were discharged as hereinafter stated, and during such period the master furnished the pauper with the corks according to the last-mentioned agreement, which corks the pauper sold and received the proceeds, doing no work for his master, but getting employment as he could. The pauper during his apprenticeship slept more than forty nights at Banbury, and more than forty nights at Kingsutton, but he slept in his father's house at Kingsutton on the night of Apprentice bound to a cork-cutter in B., for seven years; after seven weeks, owing to weakness of eyes, the master sent him back to his father, and agreed to allow him corks to value of 4*s.* per week for his maintenance: Held, that the apprentice gained a settlement in K., residing and being maintained there as an apprentice. (a)

(a) In this case the judges speak of residence only in another parish, as if residence in the same parish, without reference to the indenture, would be sufficient. But this is not so. See Rex v. Charles (ante, 535); and Rex v. Smarden, (post, 544).

11. Of the Service and Residence.

the 5th July, 1829, and on the 6th July, 1829, he was discharged from his apprenticeship by an order of two justices. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of Kingsutton under the circumstances stated in this case. It is not easy, and perhaps not possible, to reconcile all the cases on this subject. But this principle may be collected from them all, that where the residence in a parish different from that of the master is unconnected with the apprenticeship no settlement is gained. The cases where paupers have removed to other parishes on account of illness, or for the purpose of visiting friends, neither receiving maintenance nor performing service, are illustrations of this part of the rule. On the other hand, if during the residence in a parish different from that of the master, the apprentice performs service for his master there, his residence is then considered referable to and connected with the apprenticeship, and he gains a settlement. There is also a third case, where the master assents to the residence of his apprentice in a different parish, and maintains him there, though no service be performed. The master covenants by the indenture to teach the pauper, and also to maintain him. Here he certainly did not teach the apprentice while he resided in Kingsutton, but he did maintain him. That was one of the objects of the apprenticeship, and it was satisfied; and I think it is sufficient to connect the residence of the apprentice in Kingsutton with the indenture, and that the safer course will be to hold that such residence was referable to the apprenticeship, by reason of the maintenance of the pauper in that parish." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. The master here, in consequence of what passed before the justice, agreed to allow the pauper, while residing at his father's house, a quantity of corks per week to maintain him. The residence of the apprentice in his father's parish of Kingsutton is therefore accounted for by his master's maintaining him there according to that agreement. The cases upon this subject turn upon very refined distinctions; but I think here the residence in Kingsutton is referable to the apprenticeship by reason of the maintenance." Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion. It may be collected from the decisions, that the residence in a parish different from that of the master must be connected with the indenture, or as it is laid down in Rex v. Ilkeston (6 D. & R. 64; 4 B. & C. 64, infra), in furtherance of the object of the apprenticeship. Now that object is twofold, maintenance and instruction. The one is as much the object of the indenture as the other. Rex v. Charles (Burr. S. C. 708, ante, 535), and Rex v. Linkinghorne (3 B. & Ad. 413; ante, 536), show that actual service in the parish where the apprentice resides is not necessary to give a settlement. If the pauper be permanently maintained by the master during the residence, one of the objects of the apprenticeship is attained, and it is immaterial in what parish the maintenance is afforded. The cases run very near to each other. Rex v. Brotton (4 B. & A. 84, post, 544), is like this case in some respects; but there an express stipulation was made in the indenture, by which the master dispensed with the services of the apprentice during the winter, the time of the residence upon which the question of settlement arose." Taunton, J. "In the cases which have been referred to, and in which the residence was held not to have taken place under the apprenticeship, the pauper was not under the control of the master, and there was no other circumstance from which it could be said that the residence was in pursuance of the contract. But here the relation of master and apprentice clearly continued until the indenture was discharged. The agreement of the master to allow the apprentice corks, by the sale of which he was to maintain himself in Kingsutton, shows that the residence there was in pursuance of the contract of apprenticeship; and therefore, without breaking in upon any decided case, I think we may hold here that the settlement was in Kingsutton. The order of sessions must be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

indulgence is not sufficient.

Rex v. Ilkestone, 4 B. & C. 64; 6 D. & R. 64. Ann Whingates was removed from Radford to Ilkestone. Order confirmed. Case:—John W., the pauper's husband, was bound apprentice by indenture 22d December, 1818, for seven years, to B. Roberts, a boat-builder, of Ilkestone. He lodged and worked with his master in Ilkestone, but regularly and with the consent of his master went to his father's at Radford on the Saturday night, slept there on the Saturday and Sunday nights, and returned to his master on the Monday morning. On the Saturday before the Nottingham fair, in October, 1822, the pauper's husband went to his father's as usual, slept there on the Saturday and Sunday nights, and returned to his master on the Monday, and worked for him that day, and in the evening asked and obtained his master's permission to go home again, for the purpose of being at the fair at Nottingham on the two following days. He left his master's that evening accordingly, and never returned, having enlisted for a soldier a few days afterwards. The pauper's husband did no work for his master on Saturday nights or Sundays, or at any other time while he was at his father's. The indenture was retained by the master till applied for some days after the pauper's husband had enlisted, when he gave it up. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that the husband of the pauper did not gain a settlement in Radford, the place of his father's residence, but at Ilkestone, the place of his master's residence. The true construction of sect. 8 of 3 W. & M. c. 11, appears to be, that the inhabitation must be in the character of an apprentice, and in some way or other in furtherance of the object of the apprenticeship. An inhabitation by indulgence is not then within the statute. Here the residence in Radford was by indulgence only. There may be cases, and some such have arisen, where an inhabitation in a parish, different from that in which the master resides, may be in furtherance of the service; as where a master cannot take an apprentice into his own house, and appoints and allows him to choose a residence in another parish, so that he may return to his work every morning. But here the sleeping in Radford was merely for recreation, and had no connection with the service." Bayley, J. "Where the master appoints no place for the pauper to sleep, or appoints a place out of the parish where the service is performed, I agree that a settlement is gained where the apprentice sleeps, and this was the ground on which Rex v. Castleton (ants, 533), and Rex v. Stratford-upon-Avon (post, 541), proceeded. Le Blanc, J. expressly puts it on the ground that the pauper slept in Old Stratford as an apprentice. But if he in general resides with his master, and is allowed once a week as an indulgence to visit his parents, he does not lodge there as an apprentice; and the case is not varied if the indulgence is for days or months."

Rex v. Warden, 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 277. Order of removal of Susanna, wife of George Kirsopp, &c. from Warden to Whickham quashed. Case:—George was bound apprentice to his uncle, George Elliott, a stone-mason, about the 25th December, 1803, for seven years, to learn the art of a stone-mason; and John, the father of the apprentice, was a party to the indenture. The apprentice went on May-day, 1809, with his master to reside in Whickham. The master worked as a journeyman mason at Ravensworth Castle, Lamesly, and the apprentice worked there with him, sleeping at a lodging in Lamesly five nights in each week, and Saturday and Sunday nights in his master's house at Whickham, to which he went every Saturday, and returned to his work every Monday. The apprentice slept above forty nights in Lamesly, and also above forty nights at Whickham, during his service under the indenture, previous to the 25th March, 1810. On the 24th March, 1810, on a Saturday afternoon, as the apprentice and his master were returning from their work at Ravensworth Castle to Whickham, they mutually agreed that the master, upon being paid 3*l.* should set the apprentice at liberty, and give him up his indenture of apprenticeship. After this agreement the apprentice went home with his master to Whickham, and slept there that night. He had slept the previous night in Lamesly. The next morning the apprentice went to his father, and his father gave him 3*l.* to pay to his master for giving up his indenture of apprenticeship, and setting him at liberty. The apprentice returned in the evening to Whickham, and paid his master the 3*l.* This agreement on unstamped paper was then drawn up: "This is to certify that a mutual agreement has taken place between G. E. and G. K. as to delivering up to the apprentice his indenture, this 26th day of March, 1810, his seven years being expired at 25th December, 1810; for which time he, at this period, pays to his master 3*l.* for the time unexpired. Signed, George Elliott." The indenture was not then delivered up, it having from the time it was executed remained in the possession of Mr. L., who prepared it. G. K. was nearly, but not quite, twenty-one years of age. He slept in Whickham that Sunday night, and the following day began to work, entirely on his own account, at Ravensworth Castle, where he continued to work about a month, unconnected with his master, and receiving the whole of his own wages; and during that time he slept at Lamesly, not in the lodging which he had previously occupied with his master, but in a distinct lodging taken by himself. The master also continued to work at Ravensworth during the same month that the apprentice remained working there. G. K., after leaving Ravensworth, went to Newcastle, where he worked on his own account, and soon after he delivered the before-mentioned agreement to his father, who giving it to Mr. L., received the indenture from him, and sent it to his son. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The case of Rex v. Ilkestone (ante, 538), is very distinguishable from the present. There the apprentice was allowed by his master, as a matter of indulgence, to go to his father's every Saturday, and to sleep there every Saturday and Sunday night; and it was expressly found there that the apprentice during those periods of absence did no work for his master. Here the apprentice returns with his master from their work and goes to his master's house, where he passes the Saturday and Sunday nights, and on the Monday again accompanies his master to work, having been in the interval under the eye and control of his master, and for ought that appears, performing all his biddings. He therefore slept at Whickham in his character of apprentice, and was an inhabitant of that parish under his indentures. The verbal agreement made on the Saturday between the apprentice and his master certainly could not operate as a discharge of the indentures, so as to transfer the settlement to Lamesly; therefore the settlement was rightly decided in the first instance by the justices who ordered the pauper to be removed to Whickham." The other judges concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

11. Of the Service and Residence.

An apprentice, working with his master during the week in one parish, and sleeping on Saturday and Sunday nights at his master's house in another, may gain a settlement in the latter parish by inhabitation under his indenture. A verbal agreement by a master, "upon being paid 3*l.* to set his apprentice at liberty, and to give him up his indenture," does not discharge the indenture so as to fix the settlement of the apprentice in the parish where he slept last before the making of such agreement.

11. Of the Service and Residence.

Where an apprentice, who worked and slept at his masters', in C., at weekly wages, went, with their knowledge, on Saturdays and Sundays to R., and slept there, and returned to his work on Mondays, and was received by them; and on the Saturday before Shrove Tuesday (having the night before slept at C.) received his pay, and never returned again to the service, and slept that and the following evening at R., but on quitting the works on Saturday had not formed any intention not to return: Held, that his settlement was at C., his service having ended on his quitting.

Rex v. Ribchester, 2 M. & Sel. 135. Removal from Ribchester to Church. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, R. Salthouse, when about the age of seventeen, was bound apprentice by indenture, dated the 2d of November, 1790, to Messrs. Peel and Co. calico print-cutters, for six years; P. and Co. covenanted to pay the pauper 6*s.* weekly during the term. These indentures were executed by the pauper and his mother, but no evidence was given of their having been executed by P. and Co. The pauper during the first two years served P. and Co. and slept in Ribchester. After that period he was sent by his masters to work for them in Church, and he worked in the works of his masters in Church, and slept there, except on Saturday and Sunday nights, when he went to sleep at his mother's in Ribchester, and returned on the Monday. Eleven other apprentices left the works at Church on Saturday, and returned on Monday, which the masters knew, and it was the usual custom for the apprentices to do so. The pauper continued to work and sleep in this manner for two years longer, when he entered into an agreement with Walmley, of Ribchester, for five meals in each week; and he accordingly went every Saturday night to Walmley's house in Ribchester, and returned to the works in Church, and slept there, except upon the Saturday and Sunday nights as before. The pauper continued to reside and sleep in the manner last mentioned for a quarter of a year, until the Saturday before Shrove Tuesday, 1795, when he received his pay, and never returned again to the service of his masters, having on the night before this Saturday slept in the works at Church. The pauper, when asked whether when he quitted the works on the Saturday he had determined not to return again, said, that he could not say that he did determine not to return, but that it seemed he did not return. When asked whether on quitting Messrs. Peel's works in Church for the last time on the Saturday afternoon he had formed any intention not to return, he answered that he had not; being asked the question as to Sunday, he made the same answer; and further said, that he could not fix upon any particular point of time when he determined not to return. The pauper slept at Walmley's in Ribchester on the Saturday night, and for the whole of the succeeding week, and then hired himself into another employment. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This is a case in which there was not any express leave of absence given by the masters, but they had been in the habit of receiving back their apprentices after they had gone home and returned, and by so receiving them they showed that it was not their purpose to renounce them on that account. In pursuance of this indulgence the pauper went as usual on the Saturday night, and it does not appear what his intention was at that time, or that he had formed any upon the subject either of returning or staying away. He did not, however, return on the Monday; the end and conclusion, therefore, gives a character and denomination to the original act of departure, finis nomen operi imponit. From what was finally done we must collect what was his determination when he first went away on the Saturday. We find that he did not return, and that he did not on this occasion, as formerly, avail himself of the absence from Saturday to Monday as an indulgence. In Rex v. Stratford-upon-Avon (infra), the apprentice continued to perform a species of service with his master while he lodged with his mother, which was a circumstance to cover what might otherwise have been an interruption of the service; it was therefore held that he gained a settlement where he lodged. But here it appears that the apprentice by not returning to his service on the Monday, had not left it on the Saturday under the usual indulgence; and therefore he must be considered as having broken the contract on the Saturday when he quitted his masters' works; and consequently Friday night was the last night of his residence as an apprentice. The settlement therefore was at Church, where he slept on that night, and not at Ribchester." Bayley, J. "It is almost impossible to say that this apprentice was serving under the indentures of apprenticeship after the afternoon of the Saturday, when he received his pay and never afterwards returned. The court cannot look to what was passing in the mind of the apprentice, but to his acts. From the nature of the service he was only employed locally at the manufactory during the ordinary working days; but from Saturday to Monday he was free from his master. If then he was to have that interval entirely to himself, and never returned after its expiration, at what time did he leave his master's service? It must be taken that he left it at the time that interval commenced, for he was not in a condition to do any act of service for his master after the Saturday afternoon." Dampier, J. "Rex v. Undermilbeck (5 T. R. 387), is the only case like the present; but in that case the master recognized the departure of the servant, for he paid him his wages for the time of his absence. That, therefore, affords a distinction. Here the apprentice was at weekly wages, and was paid on the Saturday; and the Friday night was the last night of his being in the actual service of his masters under the indentures."

Rex v. Stratford-upon-Avon, 11 East, 176. Removal from Stratford-upon-Avon to Old Stratford quashed. Case:—The pauper, T. Barnett, was bound apprentice by the parish of Old Stratford to H. H., of Stratford-upon-Avon, cordwainer. There was a covenant for the pauper "faithfully to serve his master in all lawful business." He lived with his master twelve months, and then, his thumb being affected with scrofula, he left his master, and went to his mother's, in the adjoining parish of Old Stratford, where he continued till his master went away from Stratford-upon-Avon, which was about two months afterwards. He slept at his mother's house more than forty days, and he never afterwards slept in Stratford-upon-Avon, nor in any other place, for forty days, during the apprenticeship. During the time he so slept at his mother's he went almost every day to his master's, and was on some days employed for three or four hours in each day by his master in errands, and was always ready at his master's house whenever wanted by him, but was unable to work at his trade in consequence of the complaint in his thumb. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The facts stated leave no doubt that there was a service of the master by the apprentice while he lodged at his mother's in the adjoining parish. He went to lodge there, indeed, in order to get cured, in consequence of an arrangement between the master and the mother; but he continued to serve his master every day; and though he could not work at the trade himself, yet he performed other service, and he might attend the work and learn the trade of his master; he must, therefore, be considered as still in the service of his master as an apprentice while he lodged with his mother. If the mother had lived more remote from the master's house, so that he could not have served his master while he resided at his mother's for the purpose of cure, that would have altered the case, and likened it to Rex v. Barmby in the Marsh (ante, 534); there was no service of the master; but here, the service to the master continued, and therefore the apprentice gained a settlement by the last forty days' residence in the parish where he lodged with his mother." Le Blanc, J. "The question is whether he was resident at his mother's as an apprentice. The facts put an end to the argument, for during all the time he was serving his master, not to the extent required by the indenture, but to the extent of his ability. In the case where the apprentice gained no settlement, whilst resident in a different parish from his master for the purpose of cure, he was not serving his master during such residence. While an apprentice continues serving, all the cases agree his settlement is in the parish where he lodges, and not where the service is performed."

A parish apprentice and his master were both on the permanent staff of the local militia, in consequence of which they resided together in the parish of B. for forty days, where the apprentice also served his master: The court of K. B. held that this residence was sufficient to give a settlement, notwithstanding they were both under the control of their superior officers during the whole time.

Rex v. Chelmsford, 3 B. & A. 411. Removal from Braintree to Chelmsford. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was bound a parish apprentice to S. Spurgeon, of Halstead, to learn the art of a cordwainer, and to serve him until the pauper should attain the age of twenty-one. The pauper served the first four years in Halstead, when the master and the pauper went to Chelmsford, and the pauper served his master there for nearly a year. When about two years of the apprenticeship were unexpired, the master and apprentice having been appointed on the permanent staff of the Essex local militia, of which the head-quarters were at Braintree, went from Chelmsford to reside there. The master had been appointed a serjeant; and the apprentice, a drummer, served the master, and inhabited forty days in Braintree. The pauper received his soldier's pay whilst working for his master at Braintree, but not full wages; and the master refused to give up the indentures till the expiration of the term expressed therein. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement by his residence in Braintree. It is not necessary for the court to consider what would have been the effect, if the residence had been separate from that of his master, in consequence of his being in the local militia. Here he continued to reside in the same place with his master, and continued to serve him during the whole period. That is expressly stated as a fact by the sessions; and it is not impossible that, during a great part of the time, he might be actually serving his master. It is not necessary that the party should reside in a place because he is an apprentice, so as to give him a settlement there; for Rex v. Stratford-upon-Avon (ante, 541), is a distinct authority to the contrary." Bayley, J. "The best rule is to abide by the words of the statute. Those are, 'If any person shall be bound an apprentice and inhabit, such binding and inhabitation shall give a settlement.' Now here was a valid binding, and the pauper resided where his master was at the time, and continued to do acts of service whilst so resident. His residence was, therefore, not wholly foreign to the purposes of the indenture, and sufficient to confer a settlement." Holroyd, J. "I see nothing to show that the obligation to serve under the indenture was put an end to. His service might lawfully continue, and, in fact, did continue during all this time. It is said that the ground of his residence was because he was a soldier; and so in Stratford-upon-Avon the residence was in order that he might be cured of sickness. Yet as he continued to do service for his master, notwithstanding his sickness, the residence conferred a settlement. That case governs the present." Order of sessions quashed.

Residence of seafaring persons.

St. Mary, Colechurch, v. Radcliffe, 1 Stra. 60. Removal to St. Mary, and order quashed. A boy was bound apprentice to a sea-faring man, and served him for a quarter of a year in the day time on land in St. Mary, Colechurch, but lay every night on shipboard in Radcliffe. This was likened to the case of the cobbler. By Parker, C. J. "A man properly inhabits where he lies; as where the house is in two leets, he is to be summoned to that in which his bed is."

Rex v. Burton Bradstock, Burr. S. C. 531. Removal from Bothenhamp-ton to Burton Bradstock. The pauper was bound in March 28, 1754, to J. Miller, of Bridport, owner of a ship, an apprentice, and to learn navigation, and the art of a sailor, and immediately he entered on board the ship, and did there serve John Miller for seven years as an apprentice. The ship was during that time employed in a coasting trade from Bridport harbour to other ports, and that harbour was considered by the captain and sailors as the ship's proper home. During that time the ship was often in the harbour, but never for more than a month at a time. On December 7, 1760, she arrived, and continued there till January 22, 1761, being more than forty days; the apprentice, during those forty days, lodging, boarding, and serving his master on board the ship: and the ship was never in any other port forty days after that. On March 11, 1761, the ship returned to Bridport, and there remained till after the 28th of that month, on which day the apprenticeship expired: and during that time the pauper lodged, boarded, and served on board the ship as before. Bridport harbour is a basin within the parish of Burton Bradstock, and communicates with the sea by a cut made from it to the sea, and through this cut ships enter. Per Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Lybng in a parish is the same whether it be on board a ship or on land. Casual residences, or accidental inhabitances, are out of the present case. The harbour is stated to be within Burton Bradstock, and the service was bonâ fide performed there. Yates, J. said, "That this was not like the case of a vagabond strolling from parish to parish." Aston, J. said, "He thought mere watching on board a ship was not a residence within 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. Nor would a vessel in transitu, accidentally stopping at a port to repair a leak, or any such casual occasion, gain a settlement to the sailors on board; but this was the proper home of the ship." [See, however, the following case.]

Rex v. Topsham, 7 East, 466; 1 Bott, 722. The pauper, when twelve years of age, was bound apprentice as a mariner to D. S., of Topsham, ship-owner and coal-merchant. He served his master for three years, during which he made several voyages, and returned to Topsham, residing there in the intervals between the voyages, sometimes for two months. His last voyage was in the Reward of Topsham, which sailed to Shields, and from thence to Poole, with a cargo of coals. The pauper remained at P. upwards of forty days, and slept every night during that time on board the vessel, alongside the quay. He knew whilst there that his master was become a bankrupt, and gone from Topsham; in consequence of which he applied to Mr. Penny, the agent and consignee of the vessel, for money, to enable him to return to Topsham, who supplied him with half a guinea for that purpose. On his arrival at Topsham he resided with his uncle, not being able to find his master, whom he had never seen or served since. It was contended that the residence at Poole was accidental; that in Rex v. Burton Bradstock (supra), the fact relied on was that Bridport harbour was the home of the ship; that the pauper's return to Topsham, by the assistance of his master's agent, and his subsequent continuance there, fixed his settlement in that parish. But the court agreed, that the residence at P. was not casual, but that he was there in the actual employ of his master in his trade, which in its nature required a shifting residence. That the principal doubt in Rex v. Burton Bradstock was, whether the residence of an apprentice on ship-board were equivalent to a residence on shore in the same parish, and what was thrown out there in respect of Bridport harbour being the home of the ship, was principally in answer to that objection. And that the doctrine of casual residence, as applied to places of public resort, which had been thrown out in the Scarborough case, had been pretty much shaken in Rex v. Bath Easton. That at any rate, however, the doctrine did not apply to a case like the present, where the apprentice was in the actual service of his master at the time. And that it was clear an apprentice might gain a settlement by serving his master in another parish, where his master's business called him. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Saint Mary Breeding, Canterbury, 2 B. & Ald. 382. A master-mariner, having no immediate occasion for his apprentice's service, the vessel being then in dock, offered either to turn him over to another master for a time, or to let him go back to school, and the apprentice said he would go back to school and learn navigation; he did so, and resided above forty days there: the master paid no part of the expense of the school, nor gave him any wages. He never returned to the ship or his master. Bayley, J. said, "This is a case new in its circumstances, and we are called upon now to lay down a rule which is to govern in future. It has been truly stated that the words of the statute are only 'such binding and inhabitation.' But I apprehend that the service of the apprentice is one of the essential requisites to confer a settlement of this sort. This service must either actually or constructively be going on during the absence of the apprentice from his master; and the cases say, that where the absence is occasioned by illness, which negatives the existence of such service, no settlement is gained by such a residence, nor had the master any control over the apprentice during this period. This case is like that of a master who allows his apprentice to return to his friends, having no occasion for his service. That is a suspension of the apprenticeship for the time, and no settlement can be gained by such residence. Here the service did not continue while the apprentice was at school."

The indenture stipulated that the master should provide meat, &c., during the term, except in the winter, when the ship to which the apprentice belonged should be laid by unrigged; at which time the apprentice was maintained by himself or friends, the master paying a compensation. The apprentice accordingly during the winter, resided with his parents in the township of B. for more than forty days, doing no work for his master: Held, not a residence under the indentures and conferred no settlement.

Rex v. Brotton, 4 B. & Ald. 84. Removal from Whitby to Brotton. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, S. Marshall, was bound apprentice for four years, by indenture of 11th of March, 1813, made between S. Marshall, the elder, and S. Marshall, the younger, of the one part, and Addison Brown, ship owner, of the other part. The master was to provide for his apprentice meat, washing, and lodging during the term, except in the winter seasons, when the ship to which he should belong should be laid by unrigged, during which time it was agreed that the apprentice should maintain himself, or be maintained by his friends, and in lieu thereof, the master should pay the apprentice 6s. a week, during such time as the apprentice should not be maintained by his master, and the master should pay the apprentice for wages 75*l.*, in certain yearly proportions. The pauper, while the ship was laid up at Whitby, in which he served his master as an apprentice, resided occasionally during the winter with his parents in Brotton, and in the whole for more than forty days, and he slept the last night of the apprenticeship at Brotton. Brotton is twenty miles from Whitby; and the pauper did not do any work for his master while he resided there, but was liable to have been recalled by his master at any time, if he had been wanted at the ship. Abbott, C. J. "This appears to me to be a stronger case than the one which has been cited (Rex v. St. Mary, Breeding, supra), and that on the very ground on which it has been attempted to be distinguished from it. Here there was a distinct stipulation in the indenture, by which the master dispensed with the service of his apprentice during the winter season, the period when this residence at Brotton took place. The residence, therefore, is not at all connected with a service; but is by the very words of the indenture disconnected from it. Then the case cited is an express authority to show that an apprentice, by such a residence, does not acquire a settlement."

Casual residence. Where an apprentice, at his master's desire, left the parish in which his master lived, returns and sleeps in that parish without his master's knowledge, it is not a

Rex v. Smarden, 13 East, 453. Removal of R. Gilbert, from Great Chart to Smarden, confirmed. Case:—On the 28th November, 1795, the pauper was bound to J. Gurr, of Smarden, shoemaker, as an apprentice for seven years; only one deed was executed, which, by consent, was deposited with Mr. Large, for the benefit of both parties. The pauper served and lived with his master in Smarden till within four months of the end of his term, when his master agreed with one Olloway, of Hedcom, shoemaker, that the pauper should go to work for him during the remainder of his apprenticeship. O. was to board and lodge the pauper, and to pay Gurr 3s. weekly for his services. This agreement was made by Gurr without consulting the pauper. No part of the 3s. was reserved for the benefit of the apprentice. The pauper worked with O. in H. till within three weeks of the end of his apprenticeship, boarding and sleeping at O.'s house in H. during the whole time. At this period, as the pauper was told by O., the parish officer of H. called on O., and in consequence of a conversation between the officer and O., which was not heard by the pauper, O. told the pauper that he did not wish to affront the parish, and that he, the pauper, must therefore leave him and seek work elsewhere. The pauper left O. on that day, and went to Smarden, where he slept, but did not return to Gurr, nor had he any intention of doing so, as Gurr had not used him well, and he knew Gurr had no work to employ him upon. Gurr did not see the pauper on the night of his sleeping at Smarden, nor did it appear that he was acquainted with the pauper's being there. The pauper went the following day to Great Chart, where he continued to work for his own maintenance until the expiration of his apprenticeship; when that day arrived, he returned to Smarden, and his master and he went to the person who had the indenture. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. (after stating the facts): "Upon dismissal, in consequence of the interference of the parish officers, the apprentice returned to Smarden for one night, but not to his master, nor into his service, not having any intention so to do, but merely to get a bed there, as he would have done any where else. Then can this be called a returning into the service of the first master, who was even ignorant of the fact of the pauper's being there? But it is said that the master afterwards recognised the continuance of the relation between them at that time, by going with the pauper, when the term of apprenticeship expired, to take up the indenture; but how can that vary the question whether the pauper returned into his services on the night when he slept in Smarden, against the conclusion to be drawn from all the other facts of the case? There being then no residence of the pauper in Smarden under the indenture for any part of the last forty days of the apprenticeship, except by coupling the night when he slept there on his return from Hedcom with his previous residence in Smarden, and that having been a mere casual residence, and not under the indenture, the settlement acquired in H. continued there."

Rex v. Iddesleigh, 4 D. & R. 332; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 245. The pauper's indenture as a parish apprentice expired 24th June, 1813. He resided in Iddesleigh with his master till Lady-day, 1813, when he left him, and agreed with Thomas Weeks, of Dowland, to serve him for a month, at 2s. 6d. per week. After this agreement, and before the pauper went into Weeks's service, Arnold saw Weeks, and consented to the pauper's service with him; and the pauper then went for the first time to reside with Weeks. At the expiration of the first month, the pauper agreed for a second month, at 3s. 6d. a week, and continued to work with Weeks at the same wages, and to reside at Dowland till the 7th June, when he left Weeks in consequence of being called out to serve in the local militia in a third parish. Having served a fortnight in the militia, he returned, on the 21st June, to Weeks, and agreed to serve him in the same capacity as before at 6d. a-day; and while in Weeks's service, from the 21st June, including that day, the pauper slept continually for two or three months at his mother's in Iddesleigh. Marryatt urged that this was like Rex v. Smarden (ante, 544). [Abbott, C. J. "That case is distinguishable from the present in two particulars; first, the second service was entered upon with the consent of the first master; and second, the fact of the apprentice sleeping one night in the parish of the first master was unknown to him, and was a casual act, not done with the intention of resuming the service under the indenture."] Marryatt then said, "there is a general consent of the first master here to the pauper's entering into the second service, and that is sufficient." [Abbott, C. J. "Still the pauper sleeping the last three nights of his term in Iddesleigh removes the settlement to that parish, because he was then serving under the indenture."] After further argument, Abbott, C. J., said, "The pauper had agreed to serve Weeks in Dowland for a month, at 2s. 6d. per week. The latter communicated this circumstance to the former master, who consents to the service, and for that purpose the pauper goes into, and resides in the appellant parish under that contract. At the expiration of that month, the pauper was at liberty to quit, and Weeks was at liberty to part with him. Then they agreed for another month, at 3s. 6d. per week, and the pauper remains in Dowland parish until he goes into the militia. At the end of a fortnight he returns to Weeks, and enters into a third agreement at 6d. a day; but it does not appear that the agreement was for any specific length of time. The sessions seem to have been of opinion that there was either a consent of the former master, specially or generally, for the pauper to serve Weeks. If it was a special consent, then it must be a consent to the terms of service for which the parties had agreed previously to the return of the pauper to Weeks' service; and if it be so considered, then there would be only one service, with the assent of the original master. But on the other hand, if it was a general assent that the pauper should serve Weeks during the remainder of the term, then, though the service during the last three days was in Dowland, still that would not confer a settlement, for during the nights of those three days he slept in Iddesleigh, and therefore whatever view is taken of the case, whether we consider it as a special or general assent, it seems to me that no settlement was gained in Dowland." Bayley, J. "I think the sessions did right in forming the conclusion to which they came. It was for them to decide whether the first consent was general or definite. On whatever ground they decided, their decision is correct, the pauper having slept during the last three nights in Iddesleigh. It is said that the sleeping must be connected with the service. To that I accede; but it must be a sleeping in the parish in which the service is. It has been decided over and over again in the case of a hired servant, that sleeping the last night in the parish in which the pauper is hired will determine the settlement, though there is no work done in that parish. Though the pauper in this case slept the last three nights in Iddesleigh without the first master's knowledge, that will make no difference." Holroyd and Littledale, Js., concurred.

12. Of Serving different Masters.

12. OF SERVING DIFFERENT MASTERS. (a)

It is not necessary that the apprentice should serve out the term with the same master to whom he was bound. He may gain a settlement under the indenture, although the master relinquishes his right over his service for a time, to be resumed at a future day, or permanently for the whole remaining period of the apprenticeship.

It has been observed, that much subtlety and refinement has been introduced into this particular branch of settlement law; and Lord Tenterden (2 D. & R. 845; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 452,) is reported to have said, in Rex v. Whitchurch, that it was time that some plain and broad rule should be adopted; and that he then added, "there must be an express consent on the part of the first master, to which the second must be privy, and an employment by the latter of the servant in the same capacity." (See 1 B. & C. 574, S.C.)

It will be found that several of the following cases cannot be reconciled with this principle, and particularly that in Rex v. Banbury it was observed that the rule, that the second master must be privy to the facts of the apprenticeship, is much shaken, if not altogether decried.

It is also to be observed that the original master cannot give his consent, unless the indentures continue in force, therefore it is important to see what amounts to a dissolution of the apprenticeship. (See post, 561.)

There are certain conditions, however, to be observed in this transfer of the apprentice, the nature of which will appear more clearly by arranging the cases upon the subject according to the following divisions:—

1. There must be an express Consent to the transfer of the Service; mere knowledge is not sufficient.

(a) See division of this subject, ante, 451.

2. By whom the Consent to the Change of Master may be given.
3. The Consent may be given either by Parol, or by Assignment of the Indenture.
4. Cases in which it has been held that the Second Master must be privy to the Consent.
5. The Apprentice must be employed in the capacity of an Apprentice, under the original Indenture.

12. Of Serving different Masters.

1. There must be an express Consent to the Transfer of the Service; mere Knowledge is not sufficient.

St. Olave's v. All Hallows, Sett. & Rem. 153; 1 Stra. 554. A person is bound apprentice to a master who lives in St. Olave's. Afterwards, the apprentice, by his master's verbal consent, lived with and served another person in All Hallows. By the court: "He gains a settlement in the last place; for a person may serve his master in another parish or place: and although he serves another man, yet it is by consent of his master, and the benefit accrues to his master."

Rex v. St. George's, Hanover Square, 2 Sess. Ca. 138; 2 Stra. 1001. A. Wheeler was bound a parish apprentice to G. Leicester in St. George's, where she lived above forty days. Afterwards she was by parol agreement hired out by her master to Hall in St. Mary-le-Bone, and there lived for one year and upwards, the apprenticeship continuing; Leicester received her wages, and found her clothes. By the court: "The apprentice is well settled in St. Mary-le-Bone."

Rex v. Fremington, Burr. S. C. 416; 2 Bott, 560. M. Bevans, the pauper, was bound a parish apprentice to one Richards, in Fremington, who, after some time, declared that he had no business for her, and gave her permission to go and work elsewhere, where she would, for her own benefit; and on his recommendation she was hired to one Mr. Nott, at Sherwell, from the first day of June till Lady-day, and served him there for the wages of 32s.; and then went back to her master, with whom she stayed eight days, and then her apprenticeship expired. This was held to be a good settlement at Sherwell, for she was not discharged from her apprenticeship, nor intended to be so. Her master only gave her leave to go elsewhere and serve another person for her own benefit. She did so, and afterwards she returned to her master, and was received by him, and stayed with him to the end of her term. And, consequently, the service with Nott was a continuation of the apprenticeship, and performed under it.

Rex v. Ideford, Burr. S. C. 821; 2 Bott, 413. Mary Street, the pauper, was bound apprentice by the parish of Chudleigh to Philip Matthews of that place, till twenty-one, or day of marriage, and lived with him there four years, when he assigned her by parol to J. Stelliford of Ideford, with whom she lived seven months, when she ran away from Stelliford and returned to Chudleigh, and resided there for nine months as a servant to John Hayes, at a public house, with the knowledge, but without any express consent, of Matthews or Stelliford; and John Hayes did not know that the pauper was an apprentice. Matthews resided in Chudleigh during the time that the pauper lived with Hayes, and frequently saw her there, and applied to Stelliford to take her back to Ideford, and threatened to put him to trouble if he did not. During the time that she was at Chudleigh, she was taken ill, and part of the time so ill in the workhouse, that she could not be removed, and was there relieved by Stelliford. She never returned to Ideford; but continued for the last two years of her apprenticeship in Chudleigh in good health, where the apprenticeship expired. It was argued, that the pauper's service at Chudleigh, after her return from Ideford, was a service under the apprenticeship, being by consent of her master, Stelliford, who manifestly considered her as his apprentice whilst she resided there. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Here is no consent of the master, either express or implied; his mere knowledge of it doth not imply his consent." And the whole court were unanimous that the pauper obtained no settlement at Chudleigh, after her return from Ideford.

1. There must be an express Consent to the Transfer of the Service; mere Knowledge is not sufficient.

An apprentice, who, by a verbal consent of his original master, serves another, gains a settlement by such service.

The pauper was hired to a second by the recommendation of her first master, to whom she returned for the last eight days: Held, this was a service under the apprenticeship.

After a parol assignment of a parish apprentice, and part service under that assignment, the apprentice ran away from her second master, and lived with a third nine months in the original parish, without the consent of her former master, and remained afterwards two years in that parish in good health, and the indentures then expired: Held, that no settlement was gained at such original parish.

12. Of Serving different Masters.

Apprentice to a freeman in Colchester worked for whom he chose, and sometimes for his master: Held, not a service under the indentures.

An apprentice offered his master a guinea to "let him off;" to which the master agreed, and also to give him a suit of clothes when the guinea was paid; but the indentures were not given up or cancelled. The guinea not being paid, the indentures still subsisted in law, and a settlement was gained by serving another master with the consent of the first.

Express consent given to the second master

Rex v. Inman, 4 B. & Ald. 55. Quo warranto for exercising the franchise of a burgess in Colchester. The custom was, that every person who served an apprenticeship by indenture for seven years to a burgess was entitled to the franchise. The boy was regularly bound, and served his master five or six years, living in his house. His master's business falling off, he then went to reside with his mother, during which time his master permitted him to work for whom he chose, he having agreed to pay his master 2s. a-week. His master occasionally gave him work to do, for which he was not paid. During all this time the indentures remained with the master. Abbott, C. J. "It is quite clear that to entitle this party to his freedom, there must not only be a continuance of the binding under the indentures to a free burgess, but also a continuance of the service under the indentures to a free burgess during the whole period of seven years. I am of opinion that the service under the indentures to the first master did not continue so long, and the consequence is, that the party is not entitled to his freedom."

Rex v. Shebbear, 1 East, 13. John Bassett was removed from Shebbear to Bradford. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was bound at seven years of age, by a parish indenture, to Trick of Bradford, till the age of twenty-four. Trick assigned the apprentice to J. Sleeman, with whom he lived till Lady-day, 1780, within two months of the expiration of the apprenticeship. He then proposed to Sleeman to let him off the remainder, which he at first refused to do. The pauper then offered to give Sleeman a guinea if he would let him off, which Sleeman agreed to do, and to give him a new suit of clothes when the guinea was paid; the guinea was not paid to Sleeman, nor did Sleeman give the pauper the clothes: nor were the indentures given up or cancelled. On the Lady-day the pauper offered to serve Brent, who refused to employ him, conceiving him to be an apprentice. The same day he went to Battishill, a blacksmith in Shebbear, who said he would not take him without Sleeman's consent. The pauper went to Sleeman and told him what Battishill said; Sleeman replied, "You may go with all my heart. I think it will be a good thing for you to learn the trade." On his telling Battishill what Sleeman had said, Battishill agreed with him; and he lived with him in Shebbear for the last forty days before he attained the age of twenty-four. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This case is very distinguishable from Rex v. Crediton, (post, 549) which we decided a few days ago: and upon the same ground on which we there held that no settlement had been gained as an apprentice by the subsequent service, I think it as clear that the sessions have drawn the right conclusion in this case, in adjudging that a settlement was gained by the service with the second master. There is no doubt but that the indentures still subsisted in point of law, not having been delivered up or cancelled, nor any consideration paid for doing so. In the former case we were satisfied that the master did not really mean to give a particular assent to the second service; he had there told the apprentice to go where he pleased, having no further occasion for him, and when the apprentice told him where he was going, he answered that he might go there or any where else. But here the master was applied to for his consent to the particular person named; and he expressed his approbation of the apprentice going there, telling him that it would be advantageous to him to learn the trade. This, then, was not an indiscriminate leave to serve any person, but a particular consent to a particular service; and this is the plain line of distinction between all the cases, which, it is to be hoped, will make an end of all such questions in future. Perhaps it would have been more correct for the sessions to have found the fact of such particular consent, instead of only finding the evidence of it, as they have done; and if any thing were likely to turn upon it in this case, it should be sent down to them again to find that fact. But I do not know what advantage could accrue from thence to the respondents, for in effect the sessions have drawn that conclusion, and upon these premises I do not see how they could have drawn any other."

Rex v. Bradstone, 2 Bott, 573. Removal of the pauper from Llandulph to Bradstone. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice by the parish of Petherwynn to Mr. Lawrence of Launceston. Lawrence duly assigned him by indenture to W. Weeks, of Bradstone, with whom he continued till he was twenty years of age. At this period, Weeks and the pauper having some dispute, agreed to part, and W. gave the pauper a permission in writing, signifying that he was at liberty and had his consent to serve any other master. The pauper then left Weeks, and hired himself to R. T. of Beerferris for one year. He served the year and received his wages, and then married, and went to live in Llandulph, where he has since resided. During the time that he lived in Beerferris with R. T., he frequently saw W., who knew that he was in the service of T.; but W. had never given any particular consent to this service with T., or to his serving any particular person, but he told him at parting he would think no more of him. It also appeared on the examination of T., that the pauper had hired himself to him for one year for 6*l.* 10*s.* per year, and served out his year; that he was then twenty-one years of age, and the time of his apprenticeship not expired; that when the pauper had been in his service eight months, he (T.) met W. by accident, who said, "I find you have an apprentice of mine;" to which T. answered, "I do not know I have;" and that Weeks then said, "J. Dingle is my apprentice, but you are welcome to keep him as long as you please, for I shall think no more of him." The pauper continued in his service with T. four months after this conversation had passed, and at the expiration of his year he received the full year's wages. The court, without argument, were of opinion that this conversation was a sufficient consent on the part of W. to the service of his apprentice with T. under the indentures.

Rex v. St. Mary, Lambeth, Cald. 533; 2 Bott, 419. The pauper was bound apprentice by indenture for five years to J. Cooke, of St. Botolph, with whom she continued a year and a half, when having staid out all night, on her return, Cook and his wife told her she was no longer their apprentice, and might go and look for another place, and gave her money to go to a register office to look for a place. After this she continued a week with her master, when hearing of a place, she agreed to hire herself as a servant to Mr. Harvey, of St. Saviour's, at 40*s.* a-year. Mr. H. came to Cooke and inquired her character, which turning out satisfactory, he hired her on the above terms: in this service she continued to live nine months in St. S. The pauper at this time was under twenty-one years of age; but when she left Mr. C. the indentures were not delivered up nor cancelled, but Mrs. C. told her the indentures were destroyed; this was not true as to both parts, one of them having been read in evidence. The pauper went afterwards to a friend's house at Lambeth, where she lived on charity; from thence she hired herself as a yearly servant to Mr. L. of Walbrook, without the knowledge of Cooke, where she lived three months. During this service she visited Mrs. C., her first mistress, and acquainted her where she was, who said she was glad of it. The removal was to St. Saviour's, Southwark. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The indentures still subsist, and the power over the servant continues: then the question is whether the master consented? The character was as servant." Buller, J. (a) "Rex v. Ideford (ante, 547) is directly in point." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Crediton, 1 East, 59. W. Milton, &c., was removed from North Tawton to Crediton. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice to Andrew Matthews, whom he served above forty days in Crediton. Matthews failing in business, told the pauper that he had no further employment for him, and he might go where he pleased. Afterwards, and before leaving his master, Haydon came to inform the pauper that Underhill, who wanted a boy, was in the neighbourhood, and that he should go to him. As the pauper was going out of the house, his master asked him where he was going? The pauper told him he was going down to Underhill. Matthews said, "he might go there, or where he pleased." Thereupon with a general leave to the apprentice, is sufficient, though the consent were not given till the apprentice had been in his second service for some time, but more than forty days before he quitted it.

Giving a character to an apprentice is a constructive assent to his service with the party applying for it.

General leave is not sufficient, though the master knows in whose service the pauper is.

the pauper left Matthews's house, and went and hired himself and lived with Underhill above forty days in Sampford Courtenay, but no communication appeared to have taken place between Matthews and Underhill. The question submitted was, whether this were such an assent as enabled the apprentice to gain a settlement in Sampford Courtenay. Rex v. Tavistock (post, 552), was cited. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The service with Underhill was not a prosecution of the service of the original master. Some of the cases upon this subject have been carried to a greater degree of refinement than might be desirable, if they were to be decided again de novo; but we are to be governed by the general principle resulting from them, and not by particular expressions, which vary in every case: it would have been better perhaps to have confined the power of gaining a settlement to a service with the original master. Rex v. St. George's, Hanover-square (ante, 547), first broke in upon that line, and determined that an apprentice serving another by the consent of the original master might thereby gain a settlement: from thence has issued such a train of decisions as it is difficult to follow; however, the general principle of them all is to be found in Rex v. Austrey (post, 569), where Lord Mansfield said, 'that in order to gain a settlement by the apprentice serving another master, there must be an express and implicit leave and consent given by the master to the particular service, so as to be considered as a service of his master under the indenture,' and not, as he observed in that case, 'a leave intended to be quite general;' or, as here, a general quitting of the service, and leave to go where the pauper pleased. Here the master first tells the pauper he had no longer any employment for him, and he might go where he pleased; and then, somebody having sent for the pauper, he tells his master, on being asked where he is going, that he is going to Underhill; on which the master repeats in effect what he had before said, that he might go there or where he pleased, meaning that he no longer looked for his service, or took any concern how he disposed of himself." Grose, J. "There must be a particular consent of the original master to the service with another, in order to give a settlement. In Rex v. The Holy Trinity in the Minories (post, 561,) there was a particular recommendation to a particular service, which the court held sufficient for that purpose. Whether there be such a particular assent of the original master to the subsequent service is more a question of fact than of law; and here the sessions have in effect negatived that fact, by finding that the pauper gained no settlement by the service with the second master." Order of sessions confirmed.

Where the master tells the apprentice he may do the best he can for himself, and afterwards, upon hearing from the second master that the apprentice had procured a place, expressed his satisfaction at it, it is not such a consent as will give a settlement.

Rex v. St. Helen, Stonegate, 1 East, 285. Removal from All Saints, Peaseholme, to St. Helen, Stonegate, confirmed. The pauper, on the 1st of January, 1786, was bound for seven years to T. Mawman, of Thirsk, bricklayer, with the consent of his brother, W. Chapman, his father and mother being then both dead. At the end of three years and a half the pauper ran away, and afterwards his master assigned him by parol to W. C., with whom he afterwards lodged for about three years, and during the last two years of that time he slept in St. Helen, Stonegate. About March, 1792, the pauper being about to marry, applied to W. C. and told him he wished to work and provide for himself; to which C. consented, and said he might do the best he could for himself; he did not afterwards consider him as his apprentice, but the indentures were neither given up nor cancelled, nor any thing said about them. In the same month the pauper applied to T. Penneystone (with whom the pauper and C. had worked together before) for work, who employed him and paid him weekly wages. About a month after, T. P. met W. C., and told him he had got his brother at work; to which W. C. replied, "I am glad of it, he was a bad lad, and I could make nothing of him." The pauper continued to work for five months after this with T. P., and during the last three months of that time slept in St. John Delpike in York. The indenture was not given up by W. C. to the pauper till after the time expired. The court said that Rex v. Crediton (ante, 549) was expressly in point, and they confirmed the order of sessions.

Rex v. St. Martin's, Exeter, 4 Nev. & M. 388; 1 Har. & W. 69, S. C. An order for the removal of John Snell and Ann his wife, from Puddington to St.

Martin's, Exeter, was confirmed, subject to the opinion of this court upon the following case:—8th February, 1807, Snell was bound apprentice for seven years to J. and W. Mildrum, linen-draper in St. Martin's. He resided in their house in that parish in service under his indenture fifteen months, when the partnership being dissolved, W. Mildrum left Exeter and set up business at Totness. Snell continued to serve and reside with J. Mildrum, who soon after entered into a new partnership with Procter. Some time after this, J. Mildrum and Procter having opened a linen-draper's shop at Tiverton also, J. Mildrum went to reside there with his family, but continued to carry on business with Procter in St. Martin's. Snell's usual place of residence and employment was still in St. Martin's, but he was frequently sent over to assist in the shop at Tiverton, where he sometimes remained one, two, or several nights in succession, and he slept more than forty nights in Tiverton before the death of J. Mildrum. When the shop at Tiverton had been opened nine months, J. Mildrum being taken ill, removed to Exeter and died. At the time of his death Snell was at Tiverton, having gone there a few days before. He remained there till the Sunday following, and then returned to Exeter, where having attended his master's funeral, he served in the shop as usual and slept on the premises. Shortly after the funeral Snell entered into an engagement with Procter, and he never afterwards resided with or had any communication with W. Mildrum. The question for the opinion of the court is whether Snell was last settled in Tiverton or St. Martin's. Lord Denman, C. J. "I think that we cannot say that Snell is settled in the parish of St. Martin's, Exeter. It is quite clear that, in order to make a residence by an apprentice with a second master a residence under the apprenticeship, it must be shown that the party to whom the apprentice was bound consented to the particular service of the apprentice with the second master. No consent is stated, and from the case submitted to us we cannot infer that fact. The sessions were at liberty to draw such an inference from the facts stated, but we cannot do so." Littledale, J. "I also am of opinion that no settlement was gained in St. Martin's. It is not necessary to consider the effect of the death of the master. Undoubtedly the cases have established that the executor of the master stands in his place, and it is competent to the executor to create a new contract by actual assignment or by word of mouth. But I do not think that the question as to the death of the master arises at all. The binding being to both, the apprentice continued, after the death of J. Mildrum, bound to W. Mildrum. The executor, therefore, of J. Mildrum had no right to interfere, and had no power to transfer the apprentice. If the apprentice had continued with Procter with the assent of W. Mildrum, that would have been a different thing. But W. Mildrum has in no way interfered, and appears not to have known any thing about the apprentice from the period of the dissolution of the partnership with his brother; it is the same thing as if the binding had originally been to W. Mildrum (vide Co. Litt. 185 (a)), and nothing had been said by him as to the service of the apprentice under the second master." Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion. The case does not warrant our inferring that the residence in St. Martin's subsequent to the death of the master was a residence under the indenture; and unless that fact appear the residence can confer no settlement. The cases which have been referred to do not apply." Order of sessions quashed.

2. By whom the Consent to the Change of Master may be given.

Rex v. East Bridgeford, Burr. S. C. 133; 2 Bott, 557. Thomas Alt was bound apprentice to William Henston, of Orston, webster, for nine years, and served him the first four years at O. H. then dying intestate and insolvent, his widow, without any administration taken out, assigned him over to Edward George, of Staunton, webster, a certificate man, for the remainder of partnership being dissolved, B. removes, and A. serves C. and C.'s new partner D. After the death of C., A. continues to serve D. It not being found by the sessions that the service under D. was with the consent of B., this court will not refer the service to the apprenticeship. No settlement is therefore gained by A. in the parish in which he served and resided with D.

2. By whom the Consent to the Change of Master may be given.

The consent of the widow of the master is sufficient, though she had not administered to her husband. (a)

(a) This case is recognised as an authority in Rex v. Barleston (post, 553).

12. Of Serving different Masters.

The pauper was bound for three years, and served forty days in W., when his master died, and being dismissed by the widow, who had not taken out administration, went and served his father in C. two or three years: His settlement was held to be in W.

An apprentice may continue to serve under an indenture by leave of the executor, and will gain a settlement thereby. (a) the term, in consideration of 3*l*. He served George about a year and a half at S.; and then G., in consideration of 40*s*., did, with the consent of Alt, assign him over, by verbal agreement, to Baggaley, webster, for the remainder of the term; and he served the remainder of the term with B. at East Bridgeford. The removal was from O. to East B. The objection was, that the widow had not taken out letters of administration, and had no authority to make such assignment. The court were unanimous that this was a settlement in E. B. Since to this assignment, though only a verbal one, there was the consent of all the parties concerned, and he lived and inhabited at E. B. under the terms of the apprenticeship, as an apprentice bound according to the act of parliament. And they observed that an assignment of an apprentice is not considered a strictly legal transaction (because the person of a man is not strictly and legally assignable); but it has been an equitable construction, that where an apprentice has lived forty days under an assignment, he shall thereby gain a settlement, because of the consent.

Rex v. Chirk, Burr. S. C. 782; 2 Bott, 782. An apprentice, bound for three years, without any consideration, to a slater at Wrexham, served under the indenture for nine months: then his master died, and he continued a fortnight with the widow, to complete the work unfinished by his master. Then his mistress, having no employment for him, told him that he must not stay with her, and that he was at liberty to go where he thought proper. On his going away, he told his mistress that he was going to his father, who was a slater. There was no particular agreement between his father and his mistress, nor were the indentures delivered up. His father then lived in Chirk, and he continued with him there two or three years. The court held the settlement to be in Wrexham, for it sufficiently appears that the pauper served forty days as an apprentice in W., and that his settlement remained there. The widow doth not appear to have had any interest; and no administration appears to have been taken out.

Rex v. Stockland, Doug. 70. The pauper was bound apprentice by the parish of Stockland to John Davis till twenty-four years of age. He lived with him four years under the indenture, when his master died. He continued with his master's son, who was his executor, and had proved the will, for about seven years, when being desirous of living with his uncle in Otterton, to learn the trade of a miller, his uncle and he applied to the executor for his consent, who gave it. The pauper went to his uncle in Otterton, and continued there with him two years and a half, at the end of the first four months of which time the pauper attained his age of twenty-four. Rex v. East Bridgeford (ante, 551,) was relied on as having gone much farther than this, because there the assignment was by a person who had only the right to the administration, but had not administered. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Though an apprentice is not strictly assignable, nor transmissible, yet if he continue with the consent of all parties and his own, it is a continuation of the apprenticeship. Rex v. East Bridgeford is much stronger than this."

Rex v. Tavistock, Burr. S. C. 578; 2 Bott, 412. The pauper was bound an apprentice by the parish of Lamerton to R. Rundle, with whom he lived several years; Rundle transferred him by assignment to J. Prout of Milton Abbot, with whom he lived till he was twenty years and a half old, at which time he offered his service to T. M. of Kelly. M. apprehending that he was an apprentice to P., sent his sons to P. to know whether it was with his consent that the pauper should live with him. To which P. answered, "With all my heart; he may live with M. or any body else, provided he performs his agreement with me." Accordingly he lived with M. in K. for a year

(a) But an apprenticeship is a personal trust, and is determined by the death of either master or apprentice, and therefore no assignee of an apprentice, after the death of the first master, can give consent, unless he is an appointee within the meaning of 32 Geo. III. c. 57. (See Rex v. Eakring and Rex v. Sheepsh-head, post, 571.) and upwards. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The only question is, whether Prout consented? It is clear that he did consent, and his consent included that of the first master." Aston, J. said, "that a second assignment was good." (Rex v. East Bridgeford, ante, 551; Rex v. Clapham, infra; and see Rex v. St. Martin's, Exeter, 4 Nev. & M. 388; 1 Har. & W. 69; and ante, 550.)

St. Olave's v. All Hallows, 2 Sess. Ca. 215. If a master assign over his apprentice, and the apprentice serve in pursuance of that assignment, he thereby gains a settlement; and it differs not whether he serve with one master or another, for he still serves by virtue of the first indenture.

Rex v. Clapham, Burr. S. C. 266; Bott, 559. Michael Wilson, the pauper, was bound a parish apprentice to T. J., of Austwick, tenant to Mr. Jackson of Clapham, who had covenanted to indemnify his tenant against all parish charges. T. J. carried him to his landlord together with the indenture, who accepted, received, and provided for him. He desired the mother to provide for the boy, who did so for three years in Austwick, and Jackson paid her 20s. a year. Then he lived with him in Clapham eight weeks, and then ran away to his mother, and remained a quarter of a year with her in Austwick, and Jackson consented to his being there. Then the pauper was placed with his brother, a mason in Austwick, as an apprentice, by Jackson, who gave him a new suit of clothes. And he served his brother as an apprentice, a twelvemonth or two in Austwick, who took him as an apprentice and quitted Jackson of him. But the representatives of the first master (who was then dead) knew nothing of this, or even assented to it, nor any thing of his living with his mother. By Lee, C. J. and the court: "The statute only requires a binding by indenture, and gives a settlement where the last forty days are served. Here is a binding by indenture; and the first master delivers over the apprentice and indenture to his landlord, who receives him. This therefore must be looked upon as receiving him under the terms of the indenture. If there had been no inhabitancy elsewhere, after the boy's living eight weeks with Jackson at Clapham, the settlement had been there. But a settlement is fixed at Austwick by the boy's living there a quarter of a year, with the consent of his master, and after that, by his service to the mason. There is no ground for the distinction, that a second master cannot assign to a third, that is, so far as to gain a settlement by the service under it. This was not a new binding to the mason, for a new contract could not be made whilst the former subsisted; but the service with the mason was a service under the first binding."

If an apprentice be delivered to a second master, and by him placed with a third master, he gains a settlement

Rex v. Barleston, 5 B. & Ald. 780; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 103. Removal from Heather to Barleston. Order confirmed. Case:—A settlement by apprenticeship under a parish indenture to J. Greasley, in the appellant parish, was proved. To show a subsequent settlement, a paper was proved purporting to be an assignment of the pauper, in February, 1812, by Greasley to T. Dalby. The pauper resided more than forty days in Leicester under that assignment; a premium of 5*l.* was paid by Greasley to the new master; it was the sum which Greasley had received with the pauper on the original binding. The assignment was executed by Greasley, Dalby, and the pauper, and after reciting that the apprentice had about eight years of his term unexpired, stated that Greasley did absolutely give, grant, assign, and set over unto Dalby, all term of years to come and service which Greasley had in pauper. Greasley covenanted with Dalby that the pauper should truly serve Dalby as his master, &c. Provided that Dalby should well entreat him, and learn him the craft of a frame-work knitter, and should allow him meat, &c. which Dalby agreed to do. Abbott, C. J. "We are of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement in Leicester. The assignment of the apprentice, and the service to his new master, were prior to the prohibitory stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 139, and therefore are not affected by it. The 32 Geo. III. c. 57, s. 7 (ante, 465,) is not a prohibitory but an enabling statute. Before that statute a master could not discharge himself from the obligation to maintain a parish apprentice by assigning him to another person, nor were the apprentice and

An invalid assignment under 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 7, is sufficient to show the consent of the first master, and to render such service good as a service under the original indenture.

The consent of the master implied from an assignment.

the new master subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of the justices with respect to masters and parish apprentices. This appears by the preamble to the section, and then the act proceeds with certain enactments, whereby, if the terms are complied with, these inconveniences are remedied. If the terms are not complied with, (and in the present instance they were not), the case is not within that statute; but it is to be considered with regard to the law as it stood before that act was passed. And so considered, although the assignment may be for many purposes inoperative, yet it manifests consent of the first master to a service with the second, and renders that service a service under the original binding. This is established by Rex v. East Bridgeford (ante, 551,) and St. Petrox v. Stoke Fleming (post, 560). In the first, the widow of the first master, without taking out administration to her husband, assigned the apprentice to George at Staunton, and George afterwards by parol assigned him to Baggaley at East Bridgeford; and it was held, that he gained a settlement by the service at East Bridgeford by reason of the consent. In the last of those cases the service under the original binding was in St. Petrox; and the first mistress indorsed the indenture, and delivered it up together with the interest in the apprentice to Foale, of Stoke Fleming, and the apprentice, by a new indenture, to which the mistress was not a party, voluntarily bound herself to Foale, and served him at Stoke Fleming, and the court held, that though an assignment of an apprentice (except by custom in London) cannot strictly be made; yet as this assignment was with the assent of the mistress, the service under it would be good, for the purpose of conferring a settlement; for the servitude continued under the first binding. And these cases and some others determined upon the same principle appear to have been recognized by the court in Rex v. Christowe (post, 559), in which case the first master had not assigned the apprentice, but had taken upon himself to bind her out anew, with her consent, to another person, by a new indenture of apprenticeship; and the court on that account thought that the service to the second master could not be considered as a service under the original indenture." Order of sessions quashed.

Forty days' service under an unstamped assignment by a widow, not stated to be the executrix or administratrix of her husband, confers a settlement.

Rex v. Barnsley, 1 M. & S. 377. Order of removal of Robert Gill, &c. from Barnsley to Killinghall, discharged. Case:—John Gill, the father of the pauper, was bound apprentice on 1st December, 1764, to Thomas Harrison, in Clint, for seven years, and served five years, until his master died, when in consideration of three guineas paid by William Bradfield, he was assigned by Elizabeth (widow of Thomas Harrison), by an unstamped indorsement on the indenture, for the remainder of his term, in words to this effect: "April 14th, 1769. I, E. H., do assign over my apprentice, J. G., for the remainder of his apprenticeship, unto W. B. (Signed) E. H., W. B." No evidence was offered to show that E. H. was either the executrix or the administratrix of Thomas Harrison. J. G. served Bradfield as his apprentice, in Killinghall, till the expiration of his indenture. Lord Ellenborough, after adverting to the effect of the relief given (for which see S. C. post), said, "The assignment (which, it is admitted, was not at the time required to be stamped), is in its form an assignment by the widow, 'as my apprentice,' and at this distance of time we will presume, if necessary, that she was lawful executrix: or even if she were executrix of her own wrong, still according to Rex v. East Bridgeford (ante, 551), if the pauper lived forty days under that assignment, we should hold him settled in the parish: and one case is enough on such a subject." Bayley, J. said, "St. Petrox v. Fleming (post, 560), shows that similar assignments need not be by deed."

Where the master agreed in writing that the apprentice should serve his father for the residue of the term in consideration of 8s., this requires no stamp, as it is under the value of 20*l.* (Rex v. Enderby, 2 B. & Ad. 205.)

Rex v. Ashby-de-la-Zouch, 1 B. & Ald. 116. Removal of Anne Sutton from Burton-upon-Trent to Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Order confirmed. Case:—By indenture, (June 16, 1804,) the pauper, being ten years of age, was bound apprentice by the parish of Stretton-in-the-Fields until she was twenty-one, to Messrs. Pilkington and Webster, of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, cotton manufacturers, and continued to work with them in that parish until November, 1813, when they relinquished the manufactory, and gave up business, having at that time a considerable number of female parish apprentices, who wore a particular dress in their manufactory. Previously to their relinquishing the business, Webster went over to Peel, one of the partners in a cotton manufactory at Burton-upon-Trent, and proposed assigning to him the apprentices, but did not mention the names or number. Peel having agreed to take them, an application was made to two magistrates to get the assignment completed, but they objected that it could not be done without the consent of the parish officers. Webster then told Peel that he was willing to execute as far as he had promised, but nothing further could be done than the verbal agreement before made, which was, that he (Peel) should have all their apprentices. The pauper was at that time with Pilkington and Webster. About eighteen of these apprentices were sent in the care of a servant to Peel at different times; with some their indentures were sent over, with some they were not. Many did not go to Peel's, but went where they pleased, and procured places for themselves. After it was found that the parish apprentices could not be formally transferred, the mother of the pauper applied to Webster to have her discharged, as she wished to get her a place elsewhere, and she went home to her mother with Webster's consent, and with his permission to get a place where she pleased. When she had been at her mother's about five weeks, Webster called at her mother's house, and finding that she had not got into service, he recommended to the mother that she should take her to Peel's, where she could get employment. After she had been at home about two months, the pauper went over to Peel's with another girl; no other person accompanied them, and they were not in the dress of P. and W.'s manufactory, and their indentures were not taken with them. They were both hired as servants for fifty-one weeks by the clerk of Peel's works, who did not know that they were apprentices, and who told them at the time that they might come into the service; but if they did, they should be hired for only fifty-one weeks. Shortly afterwards Webster met the mother and asked if the pauper was gone to Peel's, and was pleased at hearing she was; and afterwards meeting the pauper, he asked her where she was, and on being told that she was at Peel's, he said that it was the best thing she could do. In October last, Webster being applied to by one of his apprentice girls, who was at Peel's, for her indentures, gave them to her, and at the same time sent to the pauper at Peel's her indentures, which were then expired, saying, "take them to Ann Sutton, for they are of no use to me." He also sent over at the same time the indentures of another girl who had been his apprentice. The pauper continued in the service of Peel until she was removed, in consequence of being then with child. The court were of opinion that the facts proved did not amount to any particular assent on the part of the original masters to the second service, and consequently that the relation of master and apprentice between Peel and the pauper never existed. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, during the argument, "If we do not take all jurisdiction from the sessions, their finding on this point must be conclusive. The new service was for fifty-one weeks, a different period from that for which the old service was to endure. It cannot therefore be considered as a continuance of the old service. It is a discrepant service in all its particulars." And afterwards added, "it has been expressly found by the sessions that this pauper was not an apprentice, and it appears to us most clearly that the prior service was not continued; for when the apprentice applied to come into the service, she was told that she should be hired only for fifty-one weeks, which shows that this was not a continuance of the old service. I think the facts of the case warrant the sessions in the conclusion at which they have arrived." Bayley, J. "It was for the sessions to draw the conclusion. They have concluded that the relation of master and apprentice did not exist, and I think they have drawn a right conclusion. The master to whom the pauper went to be hired was never apprised of the relation of master and apprentice having subsisted; he hired her as a servant, which constituted a new and different relation: it seems to me, therefore, that the sessions were well warranted in drawing the conclusion, that the relation between these parties was not that of master and apprentice; and if it were not, then the service of the pauper could not confer a settlement." Abbott, J. "The sessions have drawn the only conclusion which persons of a sound understanding could have drawn from the facts stated." Holroyd, J. concurred.

The apprentice asked leave to go into another service, without mentioning where. The mistress said that she was not against it. The apprentice then hired himself to A. B. for a year. He then returned to his mistress and told her what he had done, and she said that she was not against it: Held, there was not a particular assent of the mistress to that service, and that the service with A. B. was not as an apprentice, but as a servant under a contract of hiring.

Rex v. Whitchurch, 1 B. & C. 574; 2 D. & R. 845; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 452. Joseph Pierce, &c., was removed from Drayton in Hales to Whitchurch. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, by indenture (7th April, 1798), was bound a parish apprentice, till twenty-one years of age, to Margaret Dutton, under which he served her, in Whitchurch, for six years, when the indenture having still three years to run, and the pauper not agreeing with Mrs. Dutton's foreman, asked his mistress leave to go into another service, to which she consented, saying, "she was not against it if he could better himself." He did not mention where he was going. The pauper went to Jenkinson's, and hired himself to him for a year at 3*l.* 16*s.* wages. He returned and told his mistress, who said, "Very well: she was not against it." In a few days he went to his new place, and in about a fortnight returned to his old mistress for his clothes, who said, "she hoped he liked his new place;" and he said "he did." Under these circumstances he lived with Jenkinson, in Rees, three months. Rex v. Crediton (ante, 549) was cited, and Rex v. Shebbear, (ante, 548). Abbott, C. J. "There the new master took the pauper as the apprentice of the former master." Per curiam: "The question in this case is, whether the service with Jenkinson was a service under the indenture. It is clear that the justices have thought that it was not; because they have confirmed the order. They have not said so in express terms, for then there could be no argument upon the subject before us; but they have left it to us to say whether the conclusion they have come to was right or wrong. We are clearly of opinion that their decision was right. Much subtlety has been introduced into this branch of the law, of which some of the cases cited furnish examples. Of late the courts have inclined to decide these questions upon plain principles. In this case it is impossible to say that the pauper served Jenkinson as an apprentice under the indenture. It does not appear that Jenkinson even knew that the pauper was an apprentice. It appears that Mrs. Dutton had consented to the pauper's going into another service generally; but then he had not mentioned to her where he was going. Afterwards, when he had hired himself to Jenkinson, he returned and told his mistress: but Jenkinson's name was not even then mentioned. She did not dissent from it; but there was no express consent to that particular service. It has been urged, that the subsequent assent of the first master is sufficient to make the second service a service under the indenture; but the contrary is established by Rex v. St. Helen's, Stone Gate (ante, 550). Besides, under these circumstances, the service to Jenkinson was under a contract of yearly hiring. The pauper served under that contract as a servant, and not under the indenture as an apprentice; and very different duties result on both sides from these different descriptions of service. Rex v. Ashby-de-la-Zouch (ante, 554,) is strongly in point with the present. The want of knowledge in the second master, and the hiring of the pauper as a servant, are common to both cases; and those facts distinguish this from most of the cases cited in argument. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the service with the second master was not a service under the indenture, and consequently that the order of sessions is right."

Rex v. Shipton, 8 B. & C. 88; 1 M. & R. 394, S. C. William Partridge was removed from Dudley to Shipton. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, at the age of thirteen, was, by indentures of 3rd September, 1816, put out an apprentice until twenty-one, by the parish of Stanton Long, to John Taylor. After the pauper had been some months at his master's farm, Taylor not having sufficient work for him, asked him if he would go over to a farm, called the Moorhouse, in Shipton, to drive the plough. The pauper said he had no objection, and immediately packed up his clothes and went. The Moorhouse was in the occupation of a Mrs. Corser, the sister of Taylor. Taylor occasionally went over from his residence, and gave his advice to his sister respecting the management of her farm. He gave orders to her servants, but does not know that he ever gave orders to the pauper after he had been sent to Moorhouse. Taylor never told the pauper that he might hire himself or make any engagement with Mrs. Corser, but retained possession of the indentures. No agreement was made between Taylor and his sister respecting the pauper. On the pauper's arrival at the Moorhouse, Mrs. Corser asked if he would stay and drive the plough for his meat and drink for a twelvemonth. He replied that he would, and she sent him to drive the plough. For his services at the Moorhouse for the first and second year the pauper was not paid any money, but was found in clothing (except a pair of shoes and some stockings) and in meat and drink by Mrs. Corser. At the end of the second year, he hired himself for a year to Mrs. Corser for 5*l.*, and served that year, and received his wages. When that had expired, he hired himself for a year for 6*l.*, and received that sum on the completion of the year. During the time that the pauper was in the service of Mrs. Corser, which was four years and four months, he never received any orders from Taylor, nor did he ever return to Taylor's farm after he first quitted it. No assignment of the indentures was made, nor was the consent of any magistrate obtained for placing the pauper with Mrs. Corser. When he had been two years at Mrs. Corser's, Taylor became insolvent, and quitted his farm, after which he ceased to have any thing to do with the Moorhouse, and saw no more of the pauper. Before Taylor's insolvency, and whilst the pauper worked at the Moorhouse, Taylor, on the application of the pauper's mother, furnished him with some shoes, and on another occasion supplied him with some wool to make stockings for him. He also employed a surgeon to attend him whilst labouring under a complaint, and paid his bill. When the pauper left the Moorhouse, his apprenticeship had not expired. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "Upon both (a) grounds I think the justices were wrong in their conclusion. In order to gain a settlement by apprenticeship, there must be a continued service under the indenture. If, during the term of apprenticeship, the apprentice hires himself to a stranger to the indenture, the service is not referable to the indenture, but to the contract of hiring; and, consequently, no settlement is gained by apprenticeship. Here the pauper hired himself to Mrs. C. He might, therefore, have gained a settlement by hiring, if he had not been an apprentice. The service was not under the indenture, but under the contract of hiring." Bayley, J. "Rex v. Whitchurch (ante, 556) is expressly in point to show that no settlement was gained by apprenticeship, upon the ground that the service in Shipton was not referable to the indenture, but to the contract of hiring."

Rex v. Christowe, 11 East, 95. Elizabeth Pain was removed from Moretonhamstead to Christowe. At the age of seven years the pauper was bound an apprentice by the parish of Christowe to William Ponsford, with whom she lived till she was eleven years old. During the apprenticeship, by a written paper legally stamped and called an indenture, Pain, with her consent, was bound by Ponsford to Smith, as an apprentice, till she attained the age of twenty-one. Smith covenanted with Ponsford to teach and feed Pain. The consideration was 5*l.* 5*s.*, and the indenture was signed and sealed by all three. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This instrument purports to be a new and original binding of an apprentice by indenture by Ponsford to Smith; it does not recognize or refer to the original indenture of apprenticeship as being an assignment of the apprentice under that indenture; nor does Pons-gestion of his master, B., goes to work for C., and, without the knowledge of his master, agrees to work with C. by the year, and serves C. a year under that agreement. He gains no settlement by apprenticeship, because the service is not referable to the indenture.

A parish apprentice, bound by her original master to another master by a new indenture, without recognition of the original indenture, which still subsisted in law, does not gain a settlement by serving her new master as upon a constructive service of the original master under the first indenture, this being only evidence of the first master's consent to the service with the second, under a new contract of apprenticeship.

But an apprentice was assigned by her master to a second master by indorsement on the indenture; she then bound herself by a new indenture to the second master, and gained a settlement, as the service continued under the first binding.

Service under a second indenture is not sufficient, though the pauper had been previously serving under express consent.

ford thereby assume to have any right to assent to the apprentice serving another master under any former indenture, but only to bind her de novo. How then can I say that this was a consent on his part that she should serve Smith as a continuation of the relation of apprenticeship which she had contracted before with him, Ponsford? This would be to intend a consent contrary to what appears upon the face of the instrument to have been the intention of the contracting parties. I should be sorry to overturn the decided cases, but it appears to me that this is distinguishable from them: and that there is no case where the first master affected to bind his apprentice to another de novo by an original indenture, in which his consent to a service as under the former binding has been inferred: and therefore, without disturbing those cases, but leaving them as we find them, I do not think that this instrument proved the consent of Ponsford to the service with Smith under the original binding." Le Blanc, J. "The leaning of the former decisions was to support every case of settlement, by implying the assent of the first master to the service with the subsequent master; but then it must be a consent to the service with the new master under a recognition of the original binding; and there is no case (a) where the settlement has been held to be gained under an entirely new binding by an indenture of apprenticeship: and if we were to hold this to be sufficient, we should be carrying the doctrine of constructive assent to a service under the original binding farther than any of the former cases." Bayley, J. "In this case the apprentice never undertook to serve the second master upon the terms of the original indenture of apprenticeship to the first master, nor did the first master consent to any such service." See also Rex v. St. Mary, Hallenday, (post).

St. Petrox v. Stoke Fleming, Burr. S. C. 248; 2 Bott, 558. Anne Giles, the pauper, was bound a parish apprentice to Rebecca Gregory of St. Petrox till her age of twenty-one. She served five years; when Gregory, by indorsement on the indenture, delivered it up, together with all her right, interest, and term of years then to come of the apprentice, to Philip Foale of Stoke Fleming; and on the same day Anne Giles, being then fourteen years old, did voluntarily bind herself apprentice by indenture to Foale, and served him under the said indenture at Stoke Fleming for several years. The question was, whether a settlement hereby was gained at Stoke Fleming? It was objected that here was no regular assignment of the first indenture to Foale, it being only delivered up, but not assigned, and the term was not expired when she bound herself to Foale. By the court: "Though an assignment of an apprentice (except in London, by custom) cannot strictly be made; yet as this assignment was with the assent of the mistress, the service under it will be good for the purpose of gaining a settlement, for the service continued under the first binding."

Rex v. Ecclesfield, 6 M. & Sel. 174. Order of removal of J. Wostenholm, &c. from Brightside, Bierlow, to Ecclesfield, confirmed. Case:—The pauper, at nine years of age, was bound in May, 1803, as a parish apprentice to S. Carr. He served him eight years, when, in consequence of some disagreement, it was agreed that he should serve P. Cadman for the remainder of the term. Cadman agreed to pay Carr 1s. 6d. per week during that period. The pauper went to Cadman on trial, and then served him with Carr's express consent. After three weeks the original indenture was given up, and another executed; to which the pauper, his father-in-law, Carr, and Cadman were parties. The pauper of his own liking bound himself to Cadman for seven years, to learn the trade of a scissors-maker, and Cadman agreed to take him; there were the usual covenants, and the master agreed to pay the pauper 2s. a week during the last year and a half of the term. No premium was paid to Cadman, but he continued to pay Carr the 1s. 6d. under the agreement. The pauper continued to serve Cadman during the greater part of the remainder of the original term. It was urged that this case was distinguishable from Rex v. Christowe (ante, 557), where, if the second indenture failed, there was nothing to show consent; but that here there was a previous agreement, which continued after the second indenture was made, and if it was void it could not affect the original binding. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The second indenture is not to be rejected as an entire nullity: although it be not capable of the legal effect intended, that is, to constitute an apprenticeship, it may serve to indicate an intention that the service should not be continued under the original indenture, but should begin de novo. I think this case is concluded by Rex v. Christowe, which was decided on a review of all the cases." Bayley, J. "In Rex v. Christowe, it was settled, that unless there be a consent to the second service under a recognition of the original binding, an instrument purporting to be a new binding is not a consent. Is it possible in this case to say that the second service was a service of the nature above stated, when the time and manner of service are different from those under the original binding? The second master had not the same rights with respect to service as the first, neither had the apprentice the same rights with respect to his employment. In truth, the second indenture was made with another view, and shows that it was never intended that the service should be continued under the first on the same terms as ejusdem generis." Abbott, J. said, "That he considered the parol agreement as entirely done away with by the subsequent instrument." Holroyd, J. "The second service being inconsistent with and in a different character from the first, must be referable to the engagement with the second, and not with the first master."

13. OF VACATING THE APPRENTICESHIP. (a)

If the apprenticeship be prematurely determined, the apprentice is then in a capacity to enter into a new contract, either as a servant or as an apprentice to some one else, by which he may gain a settlement, although a small portion only of the term for which he was bound in the first instance has actually expired. Of course, when he is legally discharged from his indenture, the assent of his original master to his entering upon any other service is immaterial and nugatory; it is important, therefore, to see what amounts to a discharge of the original indenture, and what is insufficient for that purpose. And it will appear that however the parties may intend to relinquish the connection of master and apprentice, and that intention is followed by an actual separation, the indenture will be still considered as in force, as far as the question of settlement is concerned, unless it be formally cancelled, or determined by one of those events which the law has said shall have that effect. There are exceptions to this rule in favour of infants, as will be seen in some of the subsequent cases.

Rex v. Holy Trinity in the Minories, 3 T. R. 605. F. Whitfield, wife of Joshua W. (a patient in Guy's Hospital), removed from Bermondsey to Holy Trinity in the Minories. Order confirmed. Case:—Joshua was bound apprentice to J. Grimes, of Tower Hill, London, tailor, for seven years. He served his master about six years, when his master declined business, and informed the pauper that he wished him to get another master for his good. He then went home to his father who lived in Southwark, with whom he stayed three or four weeks, and if he could have got a service in that time he would have taken it; but not meeting with any, he returned to Grimes, who thereupon told him that he heard Mr. Edwards (who was a taylor, and lived in Holy Trinity,) wanted a man; and told him to go to Edwards, and make an agreement with him for his good; and that he understood Edwards would take him for twelve months. He accordingly went to Edwards and entered into an agreement under seal, covenanting to serve him for twelve months in his business as a taylor: and Edwards covenanted to instruct him, and find him in victuals and lodging, and at the end of the term to pay him 12*l.* for his service. The agreement was not stamped. He was nineteen years of age when he left Grimes; and the indentures were not assigned or cancelled; but after he had served Edwards two months, Grimes gave him up his indentures, and he continued to serve Edwards to the end of the year, and then received his wages and applied them to his own use. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is extremely clear, that while the indentures of apprenticeship continue in force, the apprentice is not sui juris, and cannot gain a settlement as a servant. But it has been settled in Rex v. St. George, Hanover Square (ante, 547), that the apprentice need not continue in the actual service of the first master during the whole term, but that if he be assigned over by the first master, or continue with his privity and consent in the service of another person, he may gain a settlement by serving the second master forty days. The cases which have been decided upon this subject have been determined upon nice distinctions; but still these distinctions ought to be adhered to, as they have settled the boundaries on this point. The one is Rex v. Fremington (ante, 547), where it was held that the apprentice gained a settlement by serving the second master with the consent of the first. The case on the other side is Rex v. St. Luke's, Middlesex (post, 564), where a general license given by the master to the apprentice to serve whom he would, without any consent to serve any person in particular, was held not sufficient to gain a settlement. Now this case falls within the principle of the former of these; for the apprentice went not only with the consent, but with the express recommendation, of the first master to serve the second, and he went there to follow the same trade which his first master had exercised. It has been said that this case must be governed by Rex v. Sandford (post, 565); but there is a solid distinction between them. There the master gave up the indentures previous to the pauper's entering into the second service; but here the indentures were not given up till more than forty days had elapsed after the apprentice had served the second master: and that is sufficient to give him a settlement in that parish." Buller, J. "The pauper could gain no settlement by living as a hired servant with Edwards, because the indentures of apprenticeship still existed; and the only question is, whether the master did expressly consent to that service or not? For all the cases show that mere knowledge is not sufficient; knowledge does not imply consent. Now here was an express consent and recommendation of the first master to serve the second; and then the case comes precisely within Rex v. Fremington. If, indeed, the apprentice had not gone into Edwards's service, he would not have gained a settlement by serving any other person, because a general license to serve whom the apprentice chooses is not sufficient. By going into the service of any other person, the apprentice would have gone without the express consent of the first master, and therefore might have been recalled by such master; but he could not have been recalled by the first master from the service of Edwards, because of the express consent to serve Edwards. This is distinguishable from Rex v. Sandford; for there the master had given up the indentures, and he had no longer any power over the servant; but here the indentures were in force during the first two months of the pauper's service with Edwards." The other judges concurred.

A general license to serve whom the apprentice chooses is not sufficient.

The master may consent to the apprentice serving a second master, as turned over to him, though he at the time gives up the indenture.

Rex v. Langham, Cald. 120; 2 Bott, 540. Removal of William Ellingworth from Deanshold to Langham confirmed. Case:—The pauper was bound an apprentice by the parish of Deanshold to Benjamin Stimson, of Langham, weaver, to serve till the age of twenty-four years; under which indenture he served four years, when his master failed, and having no longer employment for him, told his apprentice he might go to his father at Oakham. Upon the apprentice's coming home, his father applied to one Beecroft, of Deanshold, weaver, to take the apprentice for the remainder of the term; the father of the apprentice then went to Stimson, who was at home under confinement, and told his wife that he had got a new master for his son: whereupon Stimson's wife went up to her husband's chamber, and informed him that the father of the apprentice was come, and said he had got a new master for his son, and desired the indentures might be given up; upon which Stimson gave the indenture to his wife, who delivered it up to the apprentice's father, Stimson having first made crosses upon it, as a token that he had resigned up the indenture and apprentice: the apprentice was under age. Soon after, Beecroft went to Stimson, to ask him whether he was willing to resign up his apprentice and to turn him over, as he was going to take him, if Stimson was willing, and his father would clothe him: Beecroft further said (if things came about) he hoped Stimson would not fetch him again; to which Stimson replied he never would. Beecroft then said there was no occasion for a deal of trouble in turning him over, if Stimson would be honest; and upon this, Stimson assured him he would never fetch his apprentice away; and Beecroft then declared, that if we have an agreement drawn to our satisfaction, it will be better than having so much trouble about it, and immediately went away satisfied that he might keep the apprentice as a turn-over. The apprentice stayed with Beecroft three years and a half by virtue of the above transaction, and an agreement was entered into between the father of the apprentice and Beecroft, in the presence of the apprentice, but he was no party to it, and the parish officers of Deanshold were perfect strangers to it. Beecroft kept the agreement and the original indenture. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. and the court: "There is no difficulty in this case; the indenture continues in force; and the only question is, whether the service of the second was with the consent of the first master? for if so, it is a service under the indenture: of this there can be no doubt, for he consents expressly; he cancels the indenture, and directs it to be delivered to the father of the infant apprentice, who came to him for the purpose of this assignment, and he undertakes to the second master that he would not reclaim him." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Offerton, Burr. S. C. 802; 2 Bott, 566. The pauper, when twelve years of age, was by indenture bound an apprentice by the overseers for seven years. The pauper was a party to the indenture. Nearly six years after, the pauper and his master entered into an agreement, that the pauper, upon paying his master 12*d.* a-week and providing for himself, should be at liberty to work for his own benefit during the remainder of his term; and the master should find him a loom for the remainder of his apprenticeship; and the master to receive the 12*d.* a-week as a satisfaction for his service. The indenture was not cancelled or delivered up. The pauper married and removed to Offerton, and there worked during the last forty days before the justices removed him from thence, with the same tradesman who employed his master; and the master provided him a loom, and knew with whom he was working; but did not give any particular direction or consent. The pauper received the profits to his own use. The master demanded of him the 12*d.* a-week; but the pauper was not able to pay him. The court held, "that the apprenticeship continued; there was no dissolution or intention to dissolve it as between the original master and apprentice. The master knew that the apprentice worked in Offerton, and demanded the 12*d.* a-week for it. An apprentice may work in any parish with the consent of his master; and it is probable the tradesman knew that he was an apprentice."

Rex v. Bradninch, Cald. 461; 2 Bott, 418. The pauper was bound apprentice by the parish to C. Hill, till twenty-four years of age; he continued to live with his master till twenty-two, when his master agreed that if he would give him one guinea in hand, and two guineas more, (being one guinea a year during the residue of his apprenticeship,) the pauper should go, and serve where he pleased; but the master said that he would not deliver the indenture, nor discharge him from his apprenticeship, for he considered him as his apprentice still: the pauper agreed to this, and paid his master a guinea in hand, and went into Gittisham and lived with his father, and paid him 6*d.* a-week for his lodging. He hired himself as a labourer to Miss S. by the day, and continued to lodge with his father at Gittisham, and serve Miss S. till the expiration of his apprenticeship. At the end of the first year of his serving Miss S. he went to his master, Hill, and paid him one guinea for that year, according to the agreement; his master said, "You continue to work for Miss S.; I think it a very good place, and hope you will continue in it." At the end of the second year he went and paid his master the other guinea, who said, you still continue to work with Miss S.; he replied, he did; when his master said, he would look out for the indenture and give it him. The pauper did not know there was any conversation between the master and Miss S. respecting the ap-

The master agreed that the apprentice should work for his own benefit, but did not give up the indenture; he provided him a loom and knew for whom he worked: Held, service under the indenture.

The continuance of indenture inferred from payments made by apprentice to his first master.

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

The bankruptcy of the master of an apprentice did not discharge the indentures, but 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, enacts that it shall.

Where an apprentice agrees with his master for his discharge, and quits his service, but leaves the indentures till the money agreed for is paid, the indentures are not thereby discharged; and service under a second master, by the express consent of the first master, is a service under the indentures.

prentice, but Miss S. knew the pauper was an apprentice. The removal was from Gittisham to Bradninch. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "There can be no doubt in this case. The pauper was certainly not sui juris; for, if he had been, he would not have paid a guinea a-year."

In the report of this case in Cald. it is stated that the court were clearly of opinion that there was, in this case, with knowledge of the particular service, a consent; and more, a very strong approbation of it.

By 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 49, (ante, 482,) it was enacted, that where any person shall be an apprentice to a bankrupt at the time of issuing the commission, the issuing of such commission shall be and enure as a complete discharge of the indenture or indentures, whereby such apprentice was bound to such bankrupt. A contrary doctrine had been held before this statute (which took effect from 1st September, 1825.) Thus in Rex v. Buckingham (2 Bott, 630), Richard Allen was bound apprentice at twelve years of age to John Cary, whom he served for two years, when J. C. became a bankrupt, upon which Allen, without the consent of Cary, hired himself as a servant for a year to Joshua Glover, of Shepton Bechamp, and served him accordingly for two years. During this service his apprenticeship expired, and Cary delivered up the indenture to Glover. The court were of opinion that Allen gained no settlement in Shepton Bechamp, for that the bankruptcy of the master did not discharge the apprentice from his indentures.

Rex v. Chipping Warden, 8 T. R. 108. R. Lymath, &c., were removed from Chipping Warden to Great Robright. Order quashed. Case:—R. Lymath, in 1776, was bound apprentice by indenture to W. Goodwin, blacksmith, for five years: he served G. for two and a half years under the indentures, when his master left off business, and went to reside in Marston. At that time the pauper agreed verbally with his master to give him 7*l.* for the rest of his time, his master not wishing to turn him over to any one, and it was agreed that the master should keep the indentures till the 7*l.* was paid, which was to be from time to time as the pauper could earn it, and was convenient to him to pay it. The pauper considered himself at liberty to work with any master he pleased, and did work with different masters till the harvest of 1779, when, at the request of Goodwin, he came to serve him as a labourer for about a month, and received his wages according to the rate usually given to labourers in harvest, the amount being deducted from the 7*l.* which the pauper had agreed to pay G. Goodwin afterwards recommended the pauper to serve one Cherry, a blacksmith at Marston, into whose service he went with the knowledge of G., and continued there about twelve months. The indentures were not delivered up till five or six years after the apprenticeship had expired. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is clear that in general an apprentice is not capable of contracting the relation of servant to any other master until the end of the term for which he was bound; but it is equally clear, that if the master and apprentice put an end to the apprenticeship by mutual consent, it is the same as if the indentures had never been executed, and the latter may gain a settlement by hiring and service with any other master before the expiration of the term for which he was bound; then there is a third case, that where the apprentice leaves his master, and enters into the service of another. If the indentures still subsist, he is not sui juris, but is incapable of gaining a settlement by serving another master, unless he serve with the consent of his former master, and in such case he gains a settlement, not as a hired servant, but as an apprentice. These are axioms in this branch of settlement law, and cannot now be called in question. Now what are the facts of this case? The pauper was bound an apprentice to a master residing in Great Robright, who two years afterwards discontinued business: at this time the parties did not put an end to the apprenticeship: but, on the contrary, the apprentice agreed to pay 7*l.* to the master, who was to keep the indentures until that sum was paid, the master all this time keeping a control over the apprentice; the pauper then went into different situations, and among the rest he served a person of the name of Cherry, into whose service he went at the recommendation and with the knowledge of his first master, the indentures still continuing in force: then, according to all the authorities, this must be deemed a service under the indentures. My opinion, in this case, does not proceed on the ground that the pauper served Cherry a year as a hired servant, but that he served him under the indentures of apprenticeship with the consent of his original master." Order of sessions affirmed.

Rex v. Gwinear, 3 Nev. & M. 297; 1 Adol. & El. 152; 2 Nev. & M. Mag. Ca. 216. Appeal from an order of removal from Gwinear to Camborne. Case:—Rule the elder, the father of Philip, was on 1st June, 1789, bound by the parish officers of St. Erth to Richard Tredinnick, of the same parish, farmer, till twenty-one, as an apprentice in husbandry. The apprentice lived with his master some years in St. Erth, and served him in husbandry until he became reduced in circumstances and worked at the mines, employing his apprentice in the same work. The master then removed to the parish of Phillack, taking the apprentice with him. Whilst there, and about two years before the expiration of the apprenticeship, a dispute having arisen between the mistress and the apprentice, the latter left his place without the consent of his master, and never returned, but went to live with his parents in Camborne, his father working as a labouring miner in Hirland mine. While the apprentice lived in Phillack, his master worked at this mine, and the apprentice with him; after he had left his master he continued to work at the same mine under his father. Tredinnick, a few days after the apprentice had left him, found him working for his father in Hirland mine, and told his father that if he kept the apprentice, he (Tredinnick) would take up his wages. The father replied that he did not wish to keep the boy, but that he would not go back. It was then agreed that the boy should be given up to the father in consideration of four guineas, to be paid on the next mine pay day, for the ores on which the father and son were then working. The agreement was made in May, and the money was accordingly paid on the next mine pay day, the 16th of August following, when the indenture was delivered up by Tredinnick to the father. From the time when the apprentice left Tredinnick, he, with his master's knowledge, lived in Camborne with his father, who received his wages, supplying him with meat and clothes and other necessaries. After the apprentice became of age his father delivered up the indenture to him. The question is, whether the pauper was settled in Camborne. Littledale, J. "There was no dissolution of the contract of apprenticeship, at all events, before the month of August. All that occurred before is merely agreement. If the four pounds had not been paid, it was not the intention that the indenture should be given up. Rex v. Chipping Warden (ante, 562) is in point. It is not very material to consider whether there was a dissolution afterwards. I have no doubt that in May the pauper was working with his father under the apprenticeship. He was originally bound to work in husbandry, but afterwards, the master's circumstances being reduced, he worked as a miner, and the apprentice worked with his master as such. His father worked at the same business. It appears to me, therefore, that up to the 16th August the son was working with the father under the indenture." Parke, J. "I doubt very much whether the parties ever contemplated any dissolution, and whether it was not intended that there should be a mere transfer. Supposing a dissolution to have been intended, I question very much whether it was competent to the son and father to put an end to the indenture. It rather appears to me that it was not competent to them; and if that be so, the indenture could not have been put an end to. But, supposing that it was competent to them to do so, I am quite clear that the indenture was not put an end to till the money was paid according to the agreement. Until then I think the agreement was only executory. It was clearly not considered as operating on the indenture till the money was paid. Upon the first supposition, it is perfectly clear there was a residence up to August under the indenture; and supposing that there was a dissolution in August, there was sufficient residence to gain a settlement before that time. The pauper had worked at the mine for his master, and then proceeded to work there for his father. It seems to be implied in the agreement that he is to continue to work in the same way as he had done for his master. A settle-

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

A mere agreement to discharge the indentures on payment of a sum of money, does not operate in discharge before actual payment, and a residence of forty days before payment gives a settlement.

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

A parish apprentice, bound till twenty-four served till twenty-one, when his master, being about to leave the parish, told him that he might leave him and shift for himself, but if he could not provide for himself, he might return to him: he quitted, and when about four months past twenty-one, bound himself by indenture as apprentice to another master for three years, and served with him the full term: Held, not to have acquired a settlement by service under the second indenture.

Telling an apprentice to go about his business and work for himself, where the indenture was not given up, is no dissolution of the apprenticeship. See S. P. Rex v. Offerton, Burr. S. C. 802, ante, 561.

ment, I therefore think, was gained." Patteson, J. "I am of opinion that there was a service between May and August under the indenture, whilst the boy was living with his father. If the money had not been paid, the master might have compelled the boy to return. I do not think it was the intention to put an end to the indentures. Rex v. Harberton (post, 570) would appear at first sight to favour the supposition that an infant parish apprentice may put an end to the apprenticeship; but upon looking into the case, it appears that the apprentice left his master within a month of twenty-one, and returned seven months after, and then procured the receipt; so that he was of age when the agreement was made. In this case, when the agreement was made the apprentice was not of age." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Bow, otherwise Nymett Tracy, 4 M. & Sel. 383. Order of removal of John Hawkins from Bow to Okehampton quashed. Case:—The pauper, on the 24th of January, 1767, when he was nearly eight years old, was bound as a parish apprentice to Sillifant of Norththawton, to serve till he attained the age of twenty-four. He served until within a short time of his attaining the age of twenty-one, when his master being about to leave Norththawton, and no longer wanting the pauper's service, told him he might leave him and go where he liked, and shift for himself, but that if he could not provide for himself he might return to him. Upon this the pauper quitted Sillifant, but his indentures were not given up to him, nor cancelled, nor was any thing said about them. Upon quitting Sillifant he hired himself to another person in Norththawton, and served until nearly four months after his being of age, when, without any communication with Sillifant, he bound himself as an apprentice by indenture to Webber at Okehampton, for three years, to learn the business of a tanner, to which indenture his father was a party as a security for his service. Under this indenture he served Webber for the three years. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If the pauper was not in a condition to convey to Webber a present right to his service at the time when he bound himself by indenture to him, I am at a loss to discover how it could enure as a valid binding afterwards. Now, at the time when the second indenture was made, the first master had not parted absolutely with the apprentice, though I agree that he had done that which might be an answer to any action by him on the indenture, or for harbouring his apprentice. Still this being but a parol agreement on his part that the apprentice might go whither he would, the master might by parol resume what he had granted by parol, the relation which had been created by deed not being capable of being dissolved by parol. The original indenture therefore still subsisted both as to master and apprentice: as to the master, because he might revoke his license and resume his authority: and as to the apprentice, because if he was unable to provide for himself, he was at liberty to return. Le Blanc, J., said "The difficulty of maintaining that here was a good binding to Webber is, that there does not appear to have been any dissolution of the first contract; on the contrary, both parties contemplated that it still subsisted; for the license given to the apprentice was to go and see if he could shift for himself, and if he could not, he was to return under the indenture. There was a sufficient reason for not giving up the indenture, in order that the parties might have the benefit of it." Bayley, J. "Unless the first indenture was at an end when the pauper entered into the second, he was not at that time sui juris to contract, which I take to be the question, and that to say the second indenture was only voidable is no answer to it." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Luke's, Middlesex, 1 Bla. Rep. 553. W. Hutchins was bound a parish apprentice to Frost, a shoemaker in Southwark, till his age of twenty-four, and served him there three years. The master then removed to St. Luke's, taking the apprentice with him, where he served four years. The master then told him to go about his business, and work for himself; but the indentures were not cancelled, nor given up. The pauper hired himself as a journeyman to several masters of the same trade in different parishes: and F. did not know what master he worked with after he left him, nor ever called upon him to account for what money he earned, nor ever made any provision for him. He worked and lodged the last forty days of his apprenticeship in St. Leonard, Shoreditch. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The whole turns upon the indenture of apprenticeship continuing. It is agreed that it did continue. In 1 Mod. 190, there is a strong case: A father, to whom the son was apprenticed, gives up the indenture: Held, not to destroy the apprenticeship, because the indentures were not cancelled. This case is not so strong as that. This is no service to the master, nor an assignment of the apprentice. The indenture continues, and disables him from gaining another settlement." Wilmot, J. "I think the pauper continued an apprentice and was incapable of gaining a fresh settlement by service, as not being sui juris. The only question that could be made is, whether such a general consent can operate as an assignment of the apprentice to another particular master? But this general dismissal is a total dissolution of the apprenticeship, so far as it entitles the master to any future service. It is not carrying on the business of the master." Yates, J. "The master might have revoked his consent, and called him back at any time. There is no privity between the first and second master." Aston, J. "The difficulty has arisen from the apprentice happening to have hired himself to one of the same trade. Had it been another trade, no man could have entertained a doubt."

Rex v. Hindringham, 6 T. R. 557. H. Beck removed from Hindringham to Blakeney. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, in March, 1780, aged seventeen, bound himself an apprentice to F. Wells, of Blakeney, mariner, for four years, and resided there under his indentures above forty days. When he had been an apprentice about thirteen or fourteen months, he went on shore at Burlington Bay, and meeting with a press-gang, entered as a sailor with the consent of his master, but the indentures were neither delivered up nor cancelled during the apprenticeship. He continued in the king's service about two years, and was then discharged, when he went to his father's house at Bale in Norfolk, and continued there for some weeks. At Whitsuntide, 1783, he hired himself to A. Wilson, of Hindringham, till the Michaelmas following, when he hired himself again to Wilson for a year, which he also served in H., and on the second of March in that year the apprenticeship expired. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "There is no ground for saying that the apprentice did any act to put an end to the indentures when he entered into the king's service. But I desire it may not be taken for granted, that an infant who binds himself apprentice,—a contract so notoriously for his own benefit,—may put an end to that contract at any time during his minority. I enter my protest against discussing that question now: it will be sufficient to determine it when it necessarily arises. In this case the pauper bound himself to Wells by indenture, under which he served in Blakeney more than forty days; afterwards, when he was pressed into the king's service, he agreed to go as a volunteer with the consent of his master, evidently implying that he did not then put an end to the indentures. It appears to me that the indentures still continued in force, and consequently that the pauper could not enter into a legal contract of hiring with Wilson at the time he engaged with him, he not being at that time sui juris." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Sandford, 2 Bott, 391. William Webber was removed from Sandford to Bishopstawton. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was bound an apprentice by the parish of Bishopstawton, at the age of eleven, to Edmund Sage, till twenty-four: he lived with Sage for five years, when his master gave him up his indenture, and recommended him to live with William Verney, of Chittlehampton, thatcher, with whom the apprentice made an agreement as a servant for three years: while he was with Verney, Sage had a conversation with Verney, and desired him to keep back some of the pauper's wages to provide him with clothes, apprehending that otherwise he would come upon him: about the expiration of that time he returned to Bishopstawton (where Sage then resided), and lived with one Toyte there, with his master's knowledge, who frequently conversed with Toyte while the pauper lived with him, but not upon the subject of his apprenticeship: after the pauper had lived with Toyte three months, he came back to Sage's house, and lived with him for a month, paying his master 6d. a-week for his lodging. By

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

If an apprentice enter the king's service with the consent of his master it does not avoid the indentures.

Delivering up the indentures to a parish apprentice, when he is under age, does not discharge the apprenticeship.

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

Nor when of full age. See post, 568, Rex v. Austrey, and Rex v. Eccleshall.

The mother of an apprentice, before the expiration of his apprenticeship, applied to his master to give him up to her, to which he assented, and the apprentice left him; but the indentures remained in the hands of the overseers, and was never applied for or given up: Held, that the apprenticeship was not put an end to by this agreement, although the master refused to take back the apprentice.

Lord Mansfield, C. J. "It seems to me clear that the pauper could not gain a settlement after the first five years under the indenture as an apprentice, because neither party in fact considered the service as such: they considered the indenture as given up and put an end to for ever, so that the service was not, nor was intended to be, in the capacity of an apprentice; neither did the pauper gain a settlement as a servant, because there could not be such a service in point of law during the existence of the indenture: so that though in reality there was a service in point of fact, yet it cannot be applied to the purpose of gaining a settlement, because, in point of law, the indenture still subsisted." The other judges concurred.

Rex v. Notton, Burr. S. C. 629; 1 Bott, 712. In this case Benjamin Watson, the pauper, when an infant, was bound out a parish apprentice to Hannah Cuttle, of South Hundley, widow, until he should attain the age of twenty-four years. After he had served about six years she quitted her farm to her son Stephen, and left the apprentice there with him. The apprentice lived with Stephen several years. Afterwards, being desirous to leave the service, he applied to his master, who told him he might go where he pleased. Whereupon he hired himself at several places, and received the wages to his own use. In May, 1766, Stephen gave up his indentures to him. In February, 1767, he hired himself to John Baildon, of Notton; and Stephen being told of it in conversation, said he thought it a good place for him. He served Baildon at Notton above forty days, and then attained his age of twenty-four years. The court were clearly of opinion, that the service with Baildon in Notton was not a service under the indenture of apprenticeship, consequently his residence in that parish upwards of forty days was not sufficient to gain the apprentice a settlement there.

Rex v. Skeffington, 3 B. & Ald. 382. Removal from Halstead to Skeffington. Order confirmed. Case:—The respondents proved a hiring and service by the pauper in 1812. The appellants then gave in evidence an indenture of apprenticeship, dated 1805, by which the pauper bound himself apprentice to William Dudgeon for ten years. (a) A premium of 12*l.* was stated in the indenture to have been paid to Dudgeon with him by the parish of Tugby, which was also stated to have been paid by them out of a charitable donation fund belonging to that parish. No evidence, however, was given of the premium having been paid out of a charitable fund, except the above statement on the face of the deed, and the declaration of the parish officers at the time they paid it, that it was charity money. The deed was objected to as not having any stamp, but the objection was overruled. The pauper served under the indenture for four years in St. Mary, Leicester, when his mother applied to Dudgeon to give him up to her, she saying she had procured another master. The master said she might have him and welcome. They all agreed to part, and the boy went away with his mother. The indenture remained in the hands of the overseers of Tugby, and was never delivered either to the boy or his mother, nor applied for by any of the parties; but the master said he would have given it up if it had been at the time in his possession. The overseers of Tugby afterwards applied to Dudgeon to take the boy again; but he said he would not, adding, unless the magistrates make me take him again, I have done with him; and he never heard any thing more on the subject. Abbott, C. J. "If it had been shown in the present case that this apprenticeship had ever been well constituted, I should have been of opinion, upon the authority of Rex v. Bow (ante, 564), that the agreement between the parties in this case was not sufficient to put an end to the indenture. I think, also, that the fund out of which the premium is said to have been paid was a public charity within the meaning of the exception in the stamp act. But I think that there is no sufficient evidence in this case to show that the premium was in fact paid out of such a fund. It is stated in the case, as a fact proved by the master, that a premium of 12*l.* was paid with the apprentice. That being so, it would be very dangerous to say that the declaration of the parish officers should be admitted to prove the nature of the fund out of which it was paid, more especially when those persons might have been called to prove the fact. The case is not precisely the same as if a declaration of the parish officers had been offered as the only proof of payment. In that case the whole declaration would have been receivable. But here the fact of payment was itself proved. Upon that ground, I am of opinion that the indenture ought not to have been received in evidence; and, therefore, that the sessions had nothing before them to show that the pauper was not sui juris at the time when he served for a year in Skeffington. The order of sessions must, however, be confirmed, because their ultimate decision, although founded on wrong grounds, was correct.

Rex v. Great Wigston, 3 B. & C. 484; 5 D. & R. 339; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 445. John Samson was removed from St. Margaret, Leicester, to Great Wigston. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, when eleven years old, was bound apprentice to John Humberston for seven years. The indenture was executed by the master, the pauper, and the grandfather of the pauper; the pauper's father being a soldier abroad. The grandfather paid a premium of 7*l*. The pauper served H. under this indenture between three and four years at Great Wigston, when some disagreement taking place between them, H. agreed to sell the pauper the remainder of his time for sixpence. The pauper paid H. the sixpence, and left him the same day. The indenture had never been in the possession of any of the parties, but had been kept for all the parties by the person who prepared it, and no application was made for it to be delivered up. The grandfather was not even privy to the agreement for parting. A few days after the pauper left H. he bound himself apprentice to Thomas Wain, of St. Mary, for seven years, and served him under the indenture for five years, and resided during that time in that parish. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that the order of sessions was right. It is a general rule of law that an infant cannot do any act to bind himself, unless it be evidently for his benefit. Binding himself an apprentice has been considered such an act, and therefore it has been held that an infant may be a party to an indenture of apprenticeship. But if the act of binding himself an apprentice is for the benefit of the infant, it is impossible to say generally that it is for his benefit to dissolve such a connection, for such a proposition involves a contradiction. That being the general rule of law, we must inquire whether the dissolution of the apprenticeship here was for the benefit of the infant. In Rex v. Mountsorrel, 3 M. & Sel. 497, (infra,) the master had run away and deserted the apprentice; the latter, therefore, could no longer derive instruction or support from him. Upon that ground the court thought that it was for the benefit of the apprentice to be released from the indenture, and in my opinion rightly, because otherwise he must have remained unemployed and unsustained. Here there are no facts stated from which we can infer that the dissolution of the apprenticeship was beneficial to the infant, and therefore this comes within the general rule; and the first binding never having been dissolved, the second is a nullity, and no settlement could have been gained by service under it." Bayley, J. "The sessions were clearly right in the decision to which they came upon this case; the only error they have committed is, that they have sent a case for our opinion upon which no reasonable mind could entertain a doubt." Holroyd, J. concurred.

Rex v. Mountsorrel, 3 M. & Sel. 497. Removal from Burton Lazars to Mountsorrel. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, Henry Henfrey, in 1807, being under age, bound himself apprentice by indenture for seven years, to a person residing in Mountsorrel, the pauper and the master being the only parties to the indenture. When the pauper had served about a year, the master left his house and ran away for debt; in consequence of which the pauper applied to him by letter to give up the indenture, and with the master's consent the indenture was given up to the pauper by the person who had the custody of it; the term of seven years not having then expired, and the pauper being still under age. The consent of the pauper's mother, who was his only surviving parent, was not asked at the time of making the indenture, or when it was given up. The pauper, after the

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

As a general rule, it is for the benefit of an infant not to dissolve an apprenticeship. Some evidence must therefore be given to show that it is for his benefit, for the court will not infer it.

Where an infant was bound apprentice by an indenture, he and his master being the only parties, and after serving some time, the master having run away, he procured the indenture to be given up to him with his master's consent, and afterwards served a year: Held, that it was for his benefit, under the circumstances, that he and his master should be at liberty to put an end to the indenture.

indenture was given up, and during the term for which the indenture was made, and while he was under age, hired himself as a yearly servant. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Is not this a case in which it was clearly for the benefit of both parties that the indenture should be put an end to? The master had run away, and was no longer in a situation to afford instruction or maintenance to his apprentice; therefore, if the indenture had continued, the consequence must have been that the apprentice would have remained in a state of ignorance and starvation. If that were a state for the benefit of the infant, there would be something in the argument. But as it is, the parties have done that for themselves which the magistrates, upon application to them, would have ordered to be done; they have discharged themselves of the indenture, which was burdensome to both parties. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that it was competent to them to discharge themselves of each other, since the continuance of the contract would certainly have been of no benefit to the master, and as certainly would have been prejudicial to the apprentice. The benefit of the infant is to be regarded, and in looking to that, one cannot but see that idleness, and the probability of extreme indigence, were the necessary consequences of continuing the indenture, from which the magistrates would have interposed to relieve him. I therefore think that we do not indulge any mischievous discretion in the infant, when we permit him to redeem himself from such a probable state of indigence and idleness. Then if this be so, the pauper was no longer precluded from entering into another service than while his indenture continued." Le Blanc, J. "In Rex v. Hindringham (ante, 565), the master and apprentice did not consent to the indentures being delivered up or cancelled." Bayley, J. "I consider Rex v. Hindringham as having proceeded upon the ground that it was for the infant's benefit that the indenture should continue. Here we are in a case where it was notoriously to the prejudice of the infant that the indenture should continue; therefore I think it was in the power of the master and infant together, by vacating the indenture, to dissolve the contract.

A parish apprentice, when under age, cannot consent to his discharge.

Rex v. Austrey, Burr. S. C. 441; 2 Bott, 542. F. Orton, at ten years of age, was, in April, 1744, bound a parish apprentice to S. Lythall, of Grendon, till his age of twenty-four. He served with his master there till Michaelmas, 1754, at which time the master, in consideration of 40s. then paid to him by the apprentice, agreed to discharge him; which receipt and discharge were indorsed by the master on the indenture, which he then delivered up to the apprentice. The apprentice then hired for a year, and served that year in Higham. At Michaelmas, 1755, he hired for a year, and served that year in Austrey. He was then upwards of twenty-three, but not twenty-four years of age. The removal was to Grendon, and the sessions quashed the order. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The whole depends upon the question whether he was of age, or under age, at the time of his consenting to the discharge? And by comparing the dates as above, it appears that he was under age; and then his consent signifies nothing, for the consent of an infant apprentice is as if he had given no consent at all. And if so, his subsequent services can never be considered as performed by the master's leave and consent, and so as being a service of his master under the indenture; because this is no express and explicit leave and consent given by the master to the particular service, but was intended to be altogether general, and is even founded in a mistaken apprehension that the apprentice could consent to his being discharged, which he, being an infant, was not capable of doing." The other judges were of the same opinion.

But when of full age he may consent to his discharge, and the consent of the parish officers is not necessary.

Rex v. Ecclesal Bierlow, Burr. S. C. 562; 1 Bla. Rep. 592. The pauper, S. Wilshaw, being a parish apprentice, after he had attained the age of twenty-one years, agreed with his master to cancel the indentures, and the same were accordingly cancelled. Afterwards he hired and served a year in Warslow, which was within the term comprehended in the indenture. It was objected, that as the binding was by the parish he could not cancel the indentures without the approbation of the overseers. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "There seems to be no necessity of the parish officers joining to the consent to discharge this apprentice. There is no authority for it. And I see no inconvenience to the parish, or to any one else, in its being done without their concurrence. The act empowers them to bind the man-child out apprentice till he comes to the age of twenty-four. And the act was necessary to make valid the binding of the male parish apprentice till his age of twenty-four, for he could not be bound longer than till twenty-one without the aid of the act; and two justices are to assent to this. But the same reason doth not hold as to the discharge of the apprentice, this concerns the master and the apprentice only. The latter part of the apprentice's time is of most service to the master; therefore the apprentice, being of age, if the master and he agree to it, they two may dissolve the contract; if so, then this person was sui juris when he hired himself at Warslow; and consequently he gained a settlement there by a hiring and service for a year."

Rex v. Weddington, Burr. S. C. 766; 2 Bott, 545. The pauper, T. Lawrence, was born in Chilvers Cotton, where his father then resided under a certificate from Weddington. When the pauper was of the age of eight years and a half, he bound himself apprentice by indenture, with his father's consent, (who was party to the indenture,) to W. Meigh, of Chilvers Cotton, for seven years, and served him there one year and a half, and then the indenture was destroyed, by consent of the master, the father, and the apprentice. The pauper, within half a year afterwards, bound himself apprentice by indenture, with his father's consent, to T. Maydlin, of Bulkington, for seven years, and served him in Bulkington for four years, and then this indenture was destroyed by consent of Maydlin, the father, and the apprentice. The pauper after this bound himself apprentice to Shaw, in Chilvers Cotton, and served him there two years. About three years after, he hired himself for a year to Smith, of Chilvers Cotton, and served him in that said parish for the year. He was removed to Weddington. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The single question is, whether the indenture of the apprenticeship in Bulkington was void or not, there having been a former indenture, but such former indenture having been cancelled by agreement between the master, and the father, and the apprentice? The case of Austrey (ante, 568) was determined on particular circumstances. The question was, whether the parish officers who bound out the apprentice under a special authority ought not to have been consulted about discharging him, and to have given their consent to it? The whole policy of the 43 Eliz. might be defeated, if the master and parish infant apprentice could, by their joint consent alone, without the consent of the parish officers, discharge such a contract, and set the apprentice free from it. That case, therefore, is not applicable to the present. Here, the original contract was only between the father, the master, and the apprentice; and all of them consent to the discharge. An infant may make his condition better, though he cannot make it worse. The reason why an infant may bind himself apprentice is because it is for his benefit. If he was discharged of the former indenture, he was at liberty to execute another.

Rex v. St. Mary, Kalendar, Burr. S. C. 274; 2 Bott, 540. J. Miles, the pauper, was bound by indenture an apprentice for seven years to J. Gregory, of St. Michael's, and under that indenture served him in St. Michael's for five years; when he left his master, the indentures were exchanged between the master and the apprentice's father, by consent of the apprentice. About a year afterwards the father of the pauper contracted with W. Stockdale, of Twyford, for binding pauper apprentice to Stockdale for four years; and in consequence of that agreement the pauper went to Stockdale on trial, and lived with him in Twyford for one year and three quarters; but no indenture was executed, nor any other agreement made. While the pauper lived with Stockdale, Gregory knew of his being in the service of Stockdale. But no other proof was made that Gregory consented to the contract made between pauper's father and Stockdale. By Lee, C. J. and the court: "There can be no ground to consider this as a settlement at Twyford, but upon supposing the first indentures to have subsisted, and that the service at Twyford was under them. But that could not be; because the exchange of the indentures certainly amounted, either in law or in equity, (and they are the same thing in this case,) to a cancelling of them, and a determination of the apprenticeship under them. Besides, there is no consent of the original

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

An apprentice, bound with his father's consent may be discharged, although under age, by agreement of all the parties to the indentures.

Indentures being exchanged between the master and apprentice, amounts, in law or equity, to a cancelling of them.

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

Exchanging is virtually a cancelling of indentures.

A parish apprentice, under age, paid money for his discharge, but the indentures were not delivered up, though offered to the apprentice's father, who did not take them, because he thought it not material. The indenture is considered as not existing from the time the money was paid.

master, but the contrary is apparent; his knowledge of the fact doth not at all imply his consent to the transaction. The apprentice's living at Twyford was not under, but contrary to, the first indenture; it was in consequence of a fresh agreement, and for a new term.

Rex v. Titchfield, Burr. S. C. 511; 2 Bott, 630. P. Warfield bound himself apprentice by indenture to W. F., and inhabited with his master above forty days at M., but falling sick, he on account thereof, and with the consent of his master, went to his father in Bewley, and there continued forty days, and was sick all that time, and to the time the order was made. On his going to his father the indentures were mutually given up, but not cancelled. The court held that an inhabitancy by reason of sickness shall not gain a settlement, and also that there is no difference between the indentures being given up, and being cancelled. They amount to the same thing.

Rex v. Harberton, 1 T. R. 139. Order of removal of J. Egbert from Harberton to Ashpreington quashed. Case:—The pauper was bound by the parish of Harberton as an apprentice to W. Soper, until twenty-four years of age; he continued with his master until he was within one month of twenty-one years of age, when he deserted his service, and was absent seven months, and then he returned to his father at Harberton, where he staid a few weeks, and then offered himself as a servant to one Edmonds, of Ashpreington, who refused to take him until he showed a receipt from his master, Soper, for buying off his time: the receipt was "Feb. 24th, 1783. Received of J. Egbert 4*l.* 4*s.* for the remainder of his time, by me, W. Soper." The receipt was obtained by the pauper's father, at the request of the pauper. At the time the receipt was signed and the money was paid Soper offered to give up the indenture, which the father did not take, not thinking it material, and the pauper himself was not present; the master continued to keep the indentures uncanceled until after the pauper was twenty-four years of age, when he delivered them up to him: after signing the receipt, the pauper, being then in his twenty-second year, hired himself for a year to serve Edmonds, and also another year, both of which he served at Ashpreington: at the time of the pauper's hiring himself to Edmonds he showed him the receipt. Lord Mansfield, C. J. delivered the judgment: "As I have often said, it is of more consequence in most cases that the law should be certain than what the law is: it is particularly so in questions relative to settlements. And perhaps if this court had never gone farther on the present subject than to inquire whether the indentures were in fact cancelled or delivered up, it would have been more convenient than to have decided on the particular circumstances of each case, and to have examined whether they amounted to a relinquishment or cancelling of the indentures or not. But the cases have gone beyond that line; and therefore it might now be attended with more inconvenience to the public to overturn, than to adhere to them; even though we may not perhaps approve of the principles on which they have been determined. Where the facts stated are such that upon an action of covenant brought by the master against the apprentice, the pauper could plead the matter in bar, it seems to be settled that the indentures should be considered as cancelled. And to that extent the rule may be carried without much mischief; but if extended to every possible case in which a court of equity would give relief, it would be productive of great inconvenience and uncertainty: it would increase the litigation of the poor laws, which are already a disgrace to the country; and would leave every case so much upon its own circumstances, that it must necessarily travel through every stage which the law allows, before the parties are to know what they are to expect. If the justices at their sessions, or even out of sessions, are to be erected into chancellors, it cannot but happen, but that on the same facts very different decisions must be made. Honest and good men when left to decide secundum discretionem boni viri, must and will vary in their sentiments. Such a rule, therefore, would be highly inconvenient, and indeed would amount to say there was no rule at all. The question then is whether the facts stated here are such as put an end to the indentures in law, or could be pleaded in bar to an action of covenant on them? In that light I shall consider it. The master received four guineas as a satisfaction for the remainder of the time:

he gave a receipt for the money as such, and offered them to deliver up the indentures: if it was not done in fact, it was owing to the pauper's father not thinking it material; and on the pauper's attaining the age of twenty-four years, the master did in fact deliver up the indentures. After paying the money, if an action had been brought by the master on the indentures, the pauper might have pleaded accord and satisfaction in bar; or if the master had refused to deliver them up upon demand, the apprentice might have brought trover or detinue for them. The indentures must be considered as not existing from the time the money was paid, and then the pauper gained a settlement by hiring and service at Ashpreington."

Rex v. Eakring, Burr. S. C. 320; 2 Bott, 541. Order of removal of G. Witworth from Eakring to Selson discharged. Case:—Witworth was put out a parish apprentice to R. Tomlinson, of Eakring, till his age of twenty years. He served his master under this indenture for several years at Eakring. About three years before he attained twenty years of age he ran away from his master, and loitered for some time about the country. In the mean time his master died. And at Martinmas after, Witworth hired himself as a servant to W. Flint, of Selson, for a year, and served him that year at Selson, and received all his wages to his own use, the executors of Tomlinson taking no notice of him. But he had not at the expiration of the said service attained his age of twenty years. It was contended that after the master's death the apprentice was at liberty to hire himself. Apprenticeship is a personal trust between the master and servant, and is determined by the death of either master or apprentice. The counsel on the other side owned that it was not defensible. And the court was of the same opinion. (See Barter v. Burfield, 2 Str. 1267.)

Rex v. Sheepshead, 15 East, 59. Removal of T. Lees from Sheepshead, in Leicestershire, to Uttoxeter, quashed. Case:—The pauper was put out apprentice by a parish indenture, dated 19th of April, 1788, by the parish of Uttoxeter, to Mary Rawlins, of Uttoxeter, and served her there from that time for three or four years, till March, 1791, when she gave up the farm to her son, who agreed to take the apprentice into his service and keep him, and Mrs. Rawlins was to have nothing more to do with him. This was previous to 32 Geo. III. c. 57. During the time he lived with the son, Mrs. Rawlins died; the pauper continued some time longer with the son in Uttoxeter, serving him, when John Rawlins told the pauper he might do what he could for himself, and if he could not get a good place he would get one for him. The pauper then went and hired himself for fifty-one weeks to Mrs. Phillips, in the parish of Field. John Rawlins, on being informed by the pauper that he had so hired himself, asked the pauper what sort of a place it was that he had got; and on the pauper's describing it as a good place, John Rawlins said he was glad it was a good place, and he might go thither. The pauper went into Mrs. Phillips's service, stayed above forty days with her, and Rawlins gave him a suit of clothes at that time. When the pauper left Mrs. Phillips, he sent his wife to Rawlins for his indentures, and they were delivered to her. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said "That there was no need to cite cases to show that after one assignment of the apprentice, every assignee may go on assigning ad infinitum; that there were cases enough to that effect. But the question here was, how far the statute had altered the law?" His lordship asked if there were any cases since the statute. To which it was answered that there were none; but that the provisions of that statute did not affect the present case. It enacts "that upon the death of any master or mistress of a parish apprentice during the apprenticeship, the covenant in the indenture for maintenance of the apprentice shall not continue in force longer than three months after the death of the master or mistress." (See Vol. I. tit. Apprentice.) But by sect. 5 there is a proviso that the act shall not extend to any parish apprentice, but to such only as shall be living with and make part of the family, or be in the actual employment of such original master or mistress, or of any subsequent master or mistress appointed under that act, at the time of the death of such masters or mistresses respectively. That here the pauper was neither living with nor part of the family of Mrs.

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

Rex v. Foulness, ante, 535, the master deserted the apprentice, but as the master could not plead this as a bar to an action, K. B. held, that the indentures continued.

Before 32 Geo. 3, c. 37, all apprenticeships determined by death of either master or apprentice.

Apprenticeship a personal trust.

A parish apprentice, not living, at the time of his mistress's death, with her appointee, under the provisions of 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, cannot gain a settlement by service with another during the three months, though with the express consent of such appointee.

13. Of Vacating the Apprenticeship.

R. at the time of her death, nor of any subsequent master or mistress appointed under that act. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The words 'subsequent master or mistress' mean such as become so by the provision of the statute; it is the service under the authorized substitution that the act applies to. But how is the substitution by the party a substitution under the act? If it had not been for the act, I should have been with the appellants."

The manner in which apprenticeships are affected by certificates will be explained under the head Certificates.

14. Evidence in Settlements by Apprenticeship.

14. EVIDENCE IN SETTLEMENTS BY APPRENTICESHIP.

As an apprenticeship can only be constituted by deed, the deed must be proved, or if it is lost or destroyed, secondary evidence of its contents may be given.

The register secondary evidence.

By 42 Geo. III. c. 46 (ante, 469), overseers of the poor are directed to keep a book for entering the name of every apprentice bound out by them, and each entry is to be signed by two justices, according to a form given in a schedule; and by section 3 (ante, 470) it is enacted "that every such book shall be deemed to be sufficient evidence in all courts of law whatsoever in proof of the existence of such indentures, and also of the several particulars specified in the said register respecting such indentures, in case it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court that the said indentures have been lost or destroyed."

By sect. 2 a penalty is attached to the not providing such books.

By sect. 5 a like entry shall be made when an apprentice is assigned, under 32 Geo. III. c. 57. (See the act, ante, 469.)

If an indenture be lost, other evidence may be received of its contents and existence.

Rex v. East Knoyle, Burr. S. C. 151; 2 Bott, 644. The special case from the sessions in the part relating to this point, was as follows: "And it appears to this court, upon the evidence now given, that J. B. was bound apprentice to W. W., of East Knoyle, cordwainer, and that he served," &c. &c. "But the indentures were not produced, neither did it appear to this court whether the duty of 6d. in the pound, directed to be paid by the 8 Ann. c. 9, was paid, or whether the indentures were stamped." It was objected that evidence not legal had been received, for parol evidence of an indenture had been received which they state not to have been produced, and they give no reason for not producing it. And also that it did not appear that the duty was paid or the indentures duly stamped. But the court over-ruled the objection, for it is stated "that it appeared to them that he was bound, and that it is not necessary that this evidence should appear to us. Perhaps the indenture was lost, and in that case could the justices receive no other evidence of the binding? And as to the duty and the stamp, they do not say the duty was not paid, or that the indenture was not stamped."

In 1806 a question arose on an indenture made in 1774 or 1775, which was lost. The presumption that all was rightly done after the lapse of so many years is right, notwithstanding negative evidence of stamp officers that such indenture had been stamped, &c. during the above period.

Rex v. Long Buckby, 7 East, 45. Removal of the pauper from Long Buckby to Newport Pagnell quashed. Case:—The pauper, in 1774 or 1775, was bound apprentice to J. D., of Long Buckby, shoemaker, for seven years, for a premium of 12*l.*, which was paid, and the indenture executed by the pauper, his mother, and Dickens, the master, with whom the pauper served his full time, in Long Buckby. Only one indenture was executed, which after seven years was given to the pauper, and was proved to have been lost. For twelve years past the pauper had resided at Long Buckby, during which time he had been often relieved by that parish, and had received town's money from it, which town's money is given away at Christmas to parishioners. No further evidence was given by the appellants: but the respondents proved, by the deputy registrar and comptroller of the apprentice duties, that it did not appear that any such indenture had been stamped with the premium stamp or enrolled, from 1773 to 1805. But the sessions presumed that all had been rightly done. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The question before the justices was, whether the presumption that all was rightly done, after the lapse of so many years, were sufficiently rebutted by the negative evidence of the officer; they thought not, and we cannot say they have done wrong, for the presumption of law is to be favoured; and against the negative evidence they may have set the possibility of an irregularity in the returns made to the office." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Helen's, Abingdon, Burr. S. C. 292, 735; 2 Bott, 600. The evidence relating to the indenture was, J. Hudson, the mother of Joseph Hutt, the father of the children, removed (who had absconded), gave in evidence that Joseph, her son, in 1733, "was bound apprentice to his grandfather for seven years; and that the indenture was delivered into the custody of W. H., his grandfather, as she had been informed by Joseph; she never saw the indenture, and knew nothing of it, but from the information of Joseph; it was reputed in the family that Joseph was his apprentice; and he was so described in the grandfather's will." Joseph served the grandfather five years in St. Helen's under the indenture. The grandfather provided for Joseph during those five years in clothes and necessaries; the grandfather died in 1738, leaving M. H. his widow, and John H. his son; application was made by the parish of St. Saviour, in December, 1748, to John, who then lived with his mother in the house where the grandfather died, and where his goods and effects were, to know whether he had in his custody any indenture of apprenticeship between William and Joseph, and Joseph said he could not find it. And here the inquiry stopped as to him and all other persons. And this was the only evidence that the indenture of apprenticeship was lost. John Hutt gave in evidence that he was employed by his father, William Hutt, to draw an indenture between his father and Joseph, which he did, but not on stamped paper; and that after the death of William Hutt, Joseph refused to serve his widow, because the paper writing was not stamped. The removal was of Joseph's wife from St. Saviour's to St. Helen's, and was confirmed by the sessions. And per curiam: "There is not stated enough to show that this is a binding within the act." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Castleton, 6 T. R. 236. Martha Pedley was removed from Castleton to Bomford. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was alleged to have been bound an apprentice to N. Timms, of Castleton, by indentures, about 1780. There were two parts of the indenture, one of which remained with the parish of Castleton, and was destroyed; the other was given to Timms, who delivered the same to Miss Taylor, of Bomford, at the time of the assignment hereafter mentioned. Application was made to Miss Taylor, not then nor now residing at Bomford, for that part of the indenture so delivered to her, who said she could not find the same, nor did she know where it was. Miss Taylor is living, but was not subpœnaed to the sessions. Timms afterwards, by parol, assigned the pauper to Miss Taylor, in Bomford, and the pauper, with his consent, served her in Bomford upwards of forty days. The sessions were of opinion that the above was not sufficient evidence of the indenture. The only question is, whether that part of the indenture which was delivered to Miss Taylor is properly accounted for? The court thought the case too clear for argument; that if the indenture could not be produced, evidence must be adduced to show that it was lost or destroyed. Here it was traced to the hands of Miss Taylor, and no further evidence was given to show what was become of it. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Denio, 7 B. & C. 620; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 91. The pauper was bound by the overseers of Llanbeblig apprentice to John Connell, a hatter, residing at Pwllhely, in Denio, about twenty-three years ago, by an indenture for seven years, on which the pauper said he believed there was a stamp, that it was signed and sealed, but that there were no justices present at the time of the signing and sealing of the indenture, nor did the pauper recollect being at any other time before any justice respecting it; there was no evidence that the assent of two justices had been given, or that the parish officers were parties to the indenture; the indenture was kept by Connell, and the pauper never saw it afterwards; the pauper served in Denio, under the indenture, for the seven years; when the apprenticeship expired, the pauper asked Connell, who was then a rated inhabitant of Denio, but did not reside or pay taxes there when the appeal was tried, for the indenture, who said that he had not got it, but that it was with the overseers of Llanbeblig. No other witnesses were called, nor any further evidence given re-

14. Evidence in Settlements by Apprenticeship.

The loss of the indenture must be proved.

Stamp not always presumed.

The loss of the indenture and counterpart must be proved.

Proof by an apprentice, that when his apprenticeship expired he asked his master for the indenture, who said it was with the overseers; and that their successors had searched for the indenture, but could not find it; is not sufficient, the master being alive, and not subpœnaed.

14. Evidence in Settlements by Apprenticeship.

Declarations of deceased apprentice respecting loss of indentures and their contents inadmissible, where it did not appear they had ever been in his possession, and the court refused to send the case back to be re-stated.

To prove that an indenture of apprenticeship had been signed only by one overseer, before parol evidence of only one having been appointed could be allowed, the officers of that year themselves must be subpoenaed.

specting it, except that the present parish officers of Llanbeblig proved at the trial that they had searched among the papers belonging to that parish for the indenture, and that it could not be found; and that all the parish books and papers of about that time were missing. Bayley, J. "The decision in that case (Rex v. Morton, post 575) did not proceed on the ground that the declaration of the executrix was admissible, but that of the declaration of the pauper was admissible, so as to show a possession of the indentures by him; it showed also that further search or inquiry was necessary, because he stated that it had been given up to him, and that he had burnt it. In this case the master was living, and might have been called as a witness to prove either that he had delivered his copy of the indenture to the parish officer, or had destroyed it. His declarations were clearly not admissible in evidence. There was not sufficient evidence to show that a bona fide and diligent search was made for the instrument, where it was likely to be found, so as to let in parol evidence of its contents. Rex v. Castleton (ante, 573) is precisely in point."

Rex v. Rawden, 4 Nev. & M. 97; 2 Ad. & Ell. 156. On appeal against an order for the removal of Mary Oldfield, the widow of Thomas Oldfield, from Golcar to Rawden, order confirmed. Case:—The respondents relied upon a settlement by apprenticeship alleged to have been gained by Thomas Oldfield in the appellant township. The indentures were not produced, but it was proved that they had been executed by Thomas Oldfield and his father and the master; and to prove the loss of the indentures, so as to let in parol evidence of the contents, the pauper Mary Oldfield was called by the respondents. The pauper stated, that a short time before her husband died, and during the illness which terminated in his death, she had some conversation with him about the indenture. She was then asked by the respondent's counsel what that conversation was. This was objected to on behalf of the appellants, but after argument the court decided that the evidence was admissible. She then stated that she had asked her husband what had become of his indentures, and he said that he had got them away from his master after the end of his apprenticeship, and had worn them in his pocket till they were all to pieces. Parol evidence was afterwards admitted of the contents. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the above conversation was admissible in evidence or not. Lord Denman, C. J. "If the statement of the case was incorrect, it should have been set right before. This is at any rate a dangerous kind of evidence, and to be received with caution; and unless the requisite proof had been first given as to the possession of this indenture, the pauper's conversation on the subject was clearly not admissible. In Rex v. Morton (4 M. & S. 48, post, 575), inquiry had been made of the master's executrix for the indenture in question; here no such fact appears. The order of sessions must be quashed." Taunton, Patteson, and Williams, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Stoke Golding, 1 B. & Ald. 173. On an appeal against an order, the question was, whether one person only, or more than one, had been appointed overseer in a particular year? the respondents, who in order to vacate an indenture of apprenticeship, had to prove that only one overseer had been appointed in that year, had given notice to the appellants to produce all books and writings in their custody and power relating to the appointments of overseers; the appellants being called upon to produce under this notice, produced one parish book, which was the only one in existence, and the parish officer who produced it, proved that no appointments were kept by the parish: the respondents then proceeded to inquire of a witness as to there having been in the particular year one or more overseers; but on an objection being taken, the sessions held, and K. B. confirmed their opinion, that as the appointments had been in writing, parol evidence could not be admitted. "The question," said Lord Ellenborough, "is, whether the justices below have done wrong in rejecting the parol evidence? This is clear that the parol evidence could not be admitted until the case was ripe for the admission of secondary evidence; now it could not be considered as ripe for that purpose until the respondent parish had exhausted all the proper means of procuring the primary evidence. Have they done this? First, as to the appointment itself, they gave a notice to the parish; and supposing the parish had the actual custody, that notice would have been sufficient, but this does not appear. Have they then the legal custody? Certainly not, for the legal custody is in the officer who is the person most interested in the instrument, and who requires its production as a sanction for those acts which he may be called upon to do under its authority. Now here there has not been any notice to the overseer himself. I think therefore that as in this case there has been omission of the means of exhausting the primary evidence, recourse could not be had to that of a secondary nature." Holroyd, J. "The law presumes the appointment to be in the custody of some of the overseers, who are responsible for the acts done under it. Notice therefore should have been given to him."

Rex v. Morton, 4 M. & Sel. 48. It appeared that only one part of an indenture had been executed, that the pauper and master were both dead at the time of the trial, and that an inquiry for it had been made of the pauper shortly before his death, who said that the indenture had been given up to him after the expiration of the apprenticeship, and that he had burnt it, and an inquiry had also been made of the daughter and sole executrix of the master, who said she knew nothing about it; no evidence was given of any search made by any one, either amongst the papers of the master, or of the pauper. The Court of K. B. were of opinion, that a sufficient inquiry had been made to render parol evidence of the contents admissible; and the distinction made between this case and Rex v. Castleton (ante, 573) was, that in that case there was evidence of a fact which made a further search necessary; but that in this case the same information which traced the instrument into the pauper's possession, plainly showed that any further search would have been nugatory. Here there was no proof that the instrument ever existed in the possession of the pauper, unless his declaration could be taken as evidence; and if it could, he declared in the same breath that it existed no longer. When therefore the pauper, by whose information alone the parties were acquainted with the fact of his having had the instrument in his possession, at the very same time declared that it was destroyed, it became unnecessary to search among his papers.

Rex v. Piddlehinton, 3 Bar. & Adol. 460. On appeal against an order for the removal of John Northover from the parish of Piddlehinton to the parish of Charminster the sessions quashed the order. Case:—The respondents proved that the pauper thirty years ago was apprenticed to John Fowle of Charminster by a deed of only one part, which, on being executed, was carried away by Fowle. The pauper served as apprentice to Fowle in Charminster about a year, when Fowle failed in business, gave up his premises, and passed the remaining years of his life in a lodging at Charminster supported by his friends. Upon the failure of Fowle, Mr. Sabine, an attorney of Dorchester, had the management of all his affairs and the custody of all his books and papers. He looked over the books and papers relating to Fowle's accounts shortly after his failure, and did not find any indenture. Fowle left no child. His widow quitted the neighbourhood of Charminster about 1821. A witness had called upon and seen her in London about a year before the trial of the appeal, and did not know that she was not still resident there. It was objected, that this proof was not sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the indenture; but the sessions were of a different opinion: and parol testimony was then given that the pauper was duly bound apprentice to Fowle. The appellants then gave the following evidence to show a subsequent settlement in Stratton. On the 13th October, 1813, J. Browne and his wife, in consideration of 40*l.*, demised to William Northover, the pauper's father, a cottage in the parish of Stratton, Dorsetshire, for sixty years. The pauper, by a verbal agreement with his father, who owed him 24*l.*, was put into the possession of and received the rents of the cottage for three years, 3*l.* for the first year and 5*l.* for the two next years. At the end of which term, by indenture dated the 4th of November, 1816, between the said W. Northover of the first part, the pauper of the second part, and one Thomas Bowring of the third part, reciting the deed of October, 1813, and Proof of loss of indenture.

Search for indentures after master's death when secondary evidence admitted. A father, in consideration of natural affection and of 24*l.* which he owed his son, made over to him premises in the parish of S. by verbal agreement only, and the son received the rents for three years, residing in S.: It was held, that the son was a purchaser for less than 30*l.* within 9 G. 1, c. 7, s. 5, and gained no settlement.

that the father, since the delivery and execution thereof, had, in consideration of his natural love and affection to his son (the pauper), and also in liquidation of a certain debt due to him, verbally, and without any assignment or conveyance, given to his son the said cottage, and put him in possession of the rents, and that the pauper had contracted to sell the premises to the said J. Bowring; the father, by the direction, approbation, and consent of the pauper, in consideration of 25*l.*, assigned and conveyed the said cottage to Bowring, and the pauper ratified and confirmed the conveyance. The father and the pauper joined in the usual covenants to the purchaser. The pauper received the 25*l.* purchase money from Bowring. During the three years above mentioned, the pauper resided in the parish of Stratton; and upon this evidence the sessions were of opinion that he had gained a settlement there. Per curiam (Lord Tenterden, C. J., Littledale, Parke and Patteson, Js.), "That is where there has been an actual conveyance. Here there was none, and the pauper could not ground an equitable interest on natural love and affection; such interest, if he had any, must have rested on the pecuniary consideration, and that was below 30*l.*" Order of sessions quashed.

It has been observed, that parol evidence of an indenture ought to be admitted with great caution, and not without sufficient proof that the original could not be come at. And in case of parol evidence, it seemeth that all those circumstances, without which the indenture would not be good if produced, ought to be proved satisfactorily to the court; as that the indenture was written upon stamped paper or parchment; that it was executed by the parties; what sum (if any) was given with the apprentice; and that an additional stamp upon the account of such sum of money or other valuable thing was also impressed. Otherwise, where the indenture upon the face of it would be bad, it may possibly be secreted by those whose interest it is that it should not appear.

If it appear by cross-examination, or otherwise, that the lost or destroyed indenture was never legally stamped, then, although the fault was attributable to the party making the objections, it cannot be proved (Rex v. Castle Morton, 3 B. & Ald. 588; Rippiner v. Wright, 2 Bar. & Ald. 478), unless the loss or destruction was within the time allowed for stamping; (Bousfield v. Godfrey, 5 Bing. 418.)

In Gordon v. Secretan, 8 East, 548, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "that Rex v. Middlezoy(a), which was much questioned at the time, had been since over-ruled; and that it was not enough to give notice to the opposite party in a cause to produce an instrument in his hands, in order to dispense with any further proof of it by the party giving the notice; but that the production of it at the trial, in pursuance of such notice, did not supersede the necessity of proving it by one of the subscribing witnesses, if any, as in ordinary cases." And Lawrence, J. said, "that it had been so decided by Lord Kenyon in case of a will, which the adverse party, in whose hands it was, had notice to produce and did produce, that the party calling for it was bound to prove it by calling one of the subscribing witnesses."

Rex v. Stourbridge, 8 B. & C. 96; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 297. George Layton removed from Bromsgrove to Stourbridge. Order confirmed. Case:—The mother of the pauper proved that about twenty-four years ago she received some money from the overseers of Stourbridge to put her son out apprentice, and that she accordingly put the pauper, at the age of about seven years, apprentice to William Clay, of Bromsgrove, who was her brother-in-law; that the indenture was signed by her, the pauper, and the master, who had it filled up; that she gave the indenture to Nanny Badger, to take to Stourbridge to the overseers who had given her the money to pay for the stamp for it; that it was directed to the overseers of Stourbridge; that N. B.'s husband was a market gardener, and used to attend Stourbridge market; that sometimes he and sometimes his wife went to the market;

Execution of an indenture must be proved by the party calling for it, though it come out of the hands of the adverse party.

Where it appeared that an indenture of apprenticeship, twenty-four years old, the expenses of which the overseers had paid, was sent to those overseers, and was not to be found in the parish chest: Held, that it might be presumed to be lost, and the indenture was to be carried to the overseers either by the husband or the wife, when they went to the market; that both N. B. and her husband were since dead, but that she had survived her husband; that she did not know whether N. B. had left any will, but she had heard that she had. It was further proved by an overseer of Stourbridge, that he had searched diligently in the chest where the papers of the township are kept for the indenture, but had not been able to find it; and that he had applied to the executor of the husband of N. B., who had informed him that the indenture had never come to his hands, and that he was certain that no such paper was in the husband's possession when he died. Secondary evidence was then offered of the due execution and contents of the indenture; but the evidence was disallowed. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The question is, whether there was such reasonable evidence of the indenture having been lost as entitled the appellants to give parol evidence of its contents? Considering the nature of the instrument, and the circumstances of the case, I am of opinion that there was. It seems to me, that if care had been taken to preserve the indenture, it would have been deposited in the parish chest, and there found; and that not being found there, the fair presumption is that it was lost. If we were to hold otherwise, and were to require the sort of proof which it has been contended ought to have been adduced, it would be necessary, in such a case, to produce not only the parish officers themselves for the year in which the binding took place, if living, or their representatives if dead, but the parish officers or their representatives for every year, no matter how many, between the date of the indenture and that of the inquiry. Such evidence would be endless and impracticable, and it would be unjust and absurd to require it. Upon this short ground, I am of opinion that the order of sessions is wrong." Bayley, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion. The parish chest was the natural and probable place for this indenture to be found in. Search has been made for it there, and it cannot be found. The only reasonable inference is that it is lost. Then parol evidence of its contents ought to be received. The case must be re-heard."

(a) Where a contrary doctrine had been held.

Rex v. St. Mary-le-Bone, 4 D. & R. 475; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 325. John Pearce was removed from St. Paul, in Norwich, to St. Mary-le-Bone, Middlesex. Order confirmed. Case:—Pearce, when a boy, lived with one Benson, a shoemaker, in St. Mary-le-Bone, three years, and then ran away from him. To prove that the pauper resided as an apprentice, and to account for the non-production of the indentures, it was proved that a fire happened about twenty years ago in the apartment in which the pauper then resided, and burnt every thing he had; that the father and mother of the pauper were dead; that Benson and his wife are also dead; that Benson left no property at his decease; and that no relatives of his are to be found. T. Nash proved that he was apprentice to Benson at the same time with the pauper and another apprentice, and that he saw in his master's hand an indenture, which he understood to be the indenture of apprenticeship of the pauper; that the pauper, as well as the witness and the other apprentice, boarded and lodged in the master's house in St. Mary-le-Bone. Another witness stated, that he knew Benson at the time the pauper lived with him; that Benson had then two other apprentices, and called his apprentices lazy rascals. It further appeared that the pauper afterwards married, and that while living in St. Mary-le-Bone his wife was admitted into the workhouse of St. Mary-le-Bone, in a state of illness, and there died. Rex v. St. Michael, Bath (2 Bott, 459), was quoted, where, upon a question of the settlement of the family of a militia-man, it appeared by his examination, taken under the mutiny act, that he served J. M. as an apprentice five years and a half. His wife proved that he had run away, and she knew nothing of him. J. M. was dead. This was held reasonable evidence of a binding, and this point was not overruled in Rex v. Clayton Le Moors. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion, that the parol testimony admitted in this case was properly received, and that it was sufficient to found the presumption that an indenture was executed, and that the pauper's husband served and acquired a settlement under it. The general rule applicable to the doctrine of presumption is, that we are to and that secondary evidence of its contents was admissible.

After twenty years an apprenticeship presumed from the treatment of the pauper as an apprentice like the others, aided by the fact that his wife died in the parish workhouse. The loss of indenture presumed from circumstances.

14. Evidence in Settlements by Apprenticeship.

What is a diligent search for an indenture executed forty years since.

presume that which reasonably accounts for the actual existing state of things, and I think the presumption drawn by the sessions satisfies that rule. The facts in this case, unrefuted, appear to me conclusive. The pauper's husband lived with his master in the character of an apprentice, doing the same work, and receiving the same treatment, as his other apprentices did; and surely, after an interval of twenty years, it is not too much to presume that he really was an apprentice. With respect to proof of the destruction of the indenture, I think enough was given to let in the secondary evidence, and that the search at the stamp-office was quite unnecessary. It must not be forgotten, that the fact of the first wife of the pauper having been received into the workhouse of St. Mary-le-Bone, shows that that parish believed her husband to have been their parishioner, and that fact, coupled with the others I have alluded to, is, I think, decisive to show that he had acquired a settlement as an apprentice in that parish." Holroyd, J. concurred.

Rex v. East Farleigh, 6 D. & R. 147; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 71. The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment delivered by Bayley, J. "In this case there had been two parts to the indentures, which were executed so long since as 1788. The first part has been satisfactorily accounted for by Mrs. Buckley, the widow of Buckley, with whom the apprentice's father left it to be enrolled. She proved that after diligent search it was not to be found. The other part was originally in the possession of the second master, who said he had either delivered it to Buckley, or to his solicitors, Messrs. R. and T. Mrs. B.'s evidence satisfactorily shows that it was not amongst her husband's papers. The question then arises, whether, supposing it had been left with Messrs. R. and T., it has been satisfactorily accounted for. Messrs. R. and T. were in partnership until 1803, and if it was delivered to them, it must have been shortly after Tanner, the second master, received it from Ständen (the first master), which would be in 1793. The indenture would expire in 1795; and supposing it to remain in R. and T.'s possession after that, it would be no more than waste parchment. No beneficial object, either to the master or the apprentice, could be gained by preserving it. However, there is a possibility that it was preserved, though it is not easy to divine for what purpose. At the dissolution of the partnership between R. and T., the presumption is, that being an useless instrument, it would be destroyed, for no sensible reason can be suggested for its preservation. But assuming it to have been preserved by Mr. T., the question is, whether there has been any essential defect in the search made afterwards? Upon the death of Mr. T., Mr. Cutts, at that time clerk to Mr. H., the executor of Mr. T. received two boxes of papers belonging to the latter, amongst which this indenture was not to be found. It is suggested, that these were not all the papers of which he died possessed. There is certainly a possibility that there were others, but no question was put to Cutts upon the subject. If, however, there were none others, and the probability is that the fact was so, then it would have been useless to call Mr. H. to prove the same fact, which was established by Cutts. It seems to me, therefore, that considering the lapse of time which has occurred since the indentures were executed, and that every person has been called, in whose possession they might reasonably be expected to be found, such due diligence had been used to obtain the primary evidence without success, as ought to have let in the secondary evidence." Littledale, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

An assignment by indorsement on the indenture must be stamped, or cannot be received in evidence, nor can parol evidence be received if the agreement was reduced to writing.

Rex v. St. Paul's, Bedford, 6 T. R. 452. C. Page removed from St. Paul's to Kempston. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was bound an apprentice for seven years to W. Robinson, of Kempston, cordwainer; he served Robinson in Kempston near five years, when they removed together to Biddenham, where the apprentice continued with his master near a year, when his master died. About six weeks after, an agreement was entered into between S. Negus, executrix of W. Robinson, with J. Robinson, which was indorsed on the indenture, by which Negus assigned over the apprentice to J. Robinson for the remainder of the term, and J. Robinson agreed to teach the apprentice the same trade, and to provide for him to the end of the term. This agreement was signed by Negus and J. Robinson, but not stamped. Immediately after the assignment the pauper went into the service of J. Robinson, in Kempston, and continued there near a year. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It has been settled ever since Rex v. St. George, Hanover Square, that if an apprentice serve a second master forty days with the express consent of the first, he gains a settlement in the parish where that service is performed; the first master has not indeed the absolute controul over the apprentice, so as to compel him to go to any part of the kingdom, and serve another master, but if he do serve a second with the consent of the first, it is sufficient; it must be with the consent of the first master, for it has been decided that his mere knowledge of such service will not answer the purpose. The question here is a question on evidence, whether the executrix of the master did or did not consent to the service with the second master? The sessions were of opinion, that the instrument which was produced to prove that consent could not be received in evidence, because it was not stamped, and therefore it becomes necessary to consider how far stat. 23 Geo. III. c. 58, affects this case. By that act all agreements are to be stamped, except they fall within the exceptions in the 4th clause. It is said that this person comes within some one of them; but he was not a servant; he had acquired another specific denomination, well known in the law, an apprentice. The exception clearly refers to cases where there is a hiring; but that was not the present case: 'hiring' is not applicable with any propriety to the case of an apprentice. Apprentices and servants are characters perfectly distinct; the one receives instruction, the other a stipulated price for his labour. I think therefore that we should be doing violence to this act to determine that an apprentice comes within the terms in this clause of exception, and consequently the sessions did right to reject this instrument. And when an attempt was made to give parol evidence of the agreement, they also did right in refusing to receive it, because the agreement was reduced to writing. Without canvassing the other point, I am satisfied that the sessions were warranted in rejecting the agreement, and if so, there was no evidence to show any consent that the apprentice served the second master with the consent of the executrix of the first." Grose and Lawrence, Js. of the same opinion. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Skeffington, 3 B. & A. 382. In this case it was stated in the indenture that a premium had been paid out of a charitable donation to the parish: at the time of payment, the parish officers said it was charity-money. Abbott, C. J. "I think that the fund out of which the premium is said to have been paid was a public charity within the exception in the stamp act. But I think there is no sufficient evidence to show that the premium was in fact paid out of such a fund. It is stated, as a fact proved by the master, that a premium of 12*l.* was paid with the apprentice. That being so, it would be very dangerous to say that the declaration of the parish officers should be admitted to prove the nature of the fund out of which it was paid, more especially when those persons might have been called to prove the fact. The case is not precisely the same as if a declaration of the parish officers had been offered as the only proof of payment. In that case the whole declaration would have been receivable. But here the fact of payment was itself proved. Upon that ground, I am of opinion that the indenture ought not to have been received in evidence." Bayley, J. "The respondents having proved a case of hiring and service, it became the duty of the appellants to show that there was at the time a subsisting valid apprenticeship. To do that, they produce an indenture which on the face of it purports that a premium has been paid, and which is not stamped. If that premium was paid out of a public charity, it was the duty of the appellants to prove that fact, which was within their knowledge, and of which the respondents could know nothing. An indenture of apprenticeship is no evidence of the facts recited in it; if it were, the party might always recite that a premium was paid out of a public charity, whether it were the fact or not. But it is said, that if the payment of the premium be proved by the indenture, the recital also becomes evidence. This answer is not sufficient, for independently of the indenture, there is direct evidence of the fact of payment." Holroyd, J. "If the recital and the decla-

Recital in indenture is no evidence that the premium was paid out of charity money. The fact of payment must be proved aliunde.

14. Evidence in Settlements by Apprenticeship.

A married woman, on binding her son, an illegitimate child, an apprentice, agreed with the intended master that ten pounds should be the premium inserted in the indenture, but that he should receive something more. The husband of the mother of the apprentice paid the 10*l.*, and the mother, without the husband's knowledge, paid the master a further sum of two guineas and a half: Held, that there being no valid contract to pay more than the sum of 10*l.* the full sum received, given, paid, secured, or contracted for at the time of the execution of the indenture, was inserted in the indenture within the meaning of 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 39, that it was valid, and that a settlement was gained by service under it.

tion of the officers had been the only evidence of the fact of payment, I should have been of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence also that it was paid out of a public charity; but on looking at this case, it is clear to me that the fact was proved substantially by the master."

Rex v. Bourton-upon-Dunsmore, 9 B. & C. 872. H. Webb, &c. were removed from Stretton-upon-Dunsmore to Bourton-upon-Dunsmore. Order confirmed. The appellants admitted a prima facie settlement by birth in their parish, and then proved that the pauper had served more than forty days in a third parish, under an indenture of apprenticeship, bearing date the 26th of April, 1813. This indenture the respondents contended was void upon the following evidence. The mother of the pauper, who was an illegitimate child, was directed by her husband, who was not the father of the child, to give a premium of 10*l.* and no more. The master required 20*l.* This amount the mother refused to give, but came to a private understanding with the master that he should receive something in addition to the 10*l.*, but what particular sum did not appear. It was also agreed that the sum of 10*l.* only should be inserted in the indenture, which was accordingly done. The stepfather paid the premium of 10*l.* and the mother paid the further sum of two guineas and a half. Neither the apprentice nor stepfather was privy to the undertaking above mentioned, and never knew that a greater sum than 10*l.* had been paid, but the master was not aware that the agreement by the mother to give more than the 10*l.* was without the authority or privity of her husband. The indenture bore the proper stamp for any sum not exceeding 30*l.* Bayley, J. "The sum really and bona fide paid and contracted for was inserted in this indenture. There was no binding agreement for the payment of any sum beyond that amount. The promise made by the feme covert did not bind her." Littledale, J. "There was no valid contract by any person to pay more than the sum mentioned in the indenture. And assuming that the contract by the feme covert to pay a further sum was binding upon her, there was no contract by her to pay any specific sum. So that it was impossible to insert in the indenture the sum to be paid." Parke, J. "There was no contract to pay any specific sum beyond that mentioned in the indenture." Order of sessions quashed.

The other matters which may require to be proved under particular circumstances, will be found in the cases collected under this class of settlements, (ante, 506 to 519.)

An indenture not duly stamped is inadmissible (ante, 504), unless in some cases, as where it was lost before the time for stamping had expired. (Bousfield v. Godfrey, 5 Bing, 418; 3 M. & P. 771; ante, 496.)

Treatment by a party of a person as an apprentice, may be presumptive evidence of apprenticeship (ante, 514, 515.)

Introductory observations, and division of the subject.

7. Of Settlement by Renting a Tenement.

The legislature considered that a person who was able bona fide to contract to pay 10*l.* a year as rent for an interest in real property, and resided in the parish for upwards of forty days, was a fit person to acquire a settlement in that parish, and that he ought not to be removeable therefrom; this was the foundation of this description of settlement. The law relating to this branch of settlements has within these few years undergone some very material alterations, as to the nature of the tenement, the contract of renting, and the performance of that contract by the party in respect of whose renting the settlement is claimed.

"Whereas the necessity, number, and continual increase of the poor, not only within the cities of London and Westminster, with the liberties of each of them, but also through the whole kingdom of England, and the dominion of Wales, is very great and exceeding burthensome, being occasioned by reason of some defects in the law concerning the settling of the poor, and for want of a due provision of the regulations of relief and employment in such parishes or places where they are legally settled, which doth enforce many to turn incorrigible rogues, and others to perish for want, together with the neglect of the faithful execution of such laws and statutes as have formerly been made for the apprehending of rogues and vagabonds, and for the good of the poor: For remedy whereof, and for the preventing the perishing of any of the poor, whether young or old, for want of such supplies as are necessary, may it please your most excellent majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the king's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that whereas by reason of some defects in the law, poor people are not restrained from going from one parish to another, and therefore do endeavour to settle themselves in those parishes where there is the best stock, the largest commons or wastes to build cottages, and the most woods for them to burn and destroy, and when they have consumed it, then to another parish, and at last become rogues and vagabonds, to the great discouragement of parishes to provide stocks where it is liable to be devoured by strangers; be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish to any justice of peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming so to settle as aforesaid in any tenement under the yearly value of ten pounds, for any two justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons that are

The 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11. "Whereas in and by a certain act made in the last session of this present parliament, intituled, 'An Act for supplying some Defects in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor of this Kingdom,' it was, amongst other things therein contained, enacted, 'That if any person or persons whatsoever, from and after the first day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and ninety-seven, shall come into any parish or place, there to inhabit and reside, should at the same time procure, bring, and deliver to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish or place where any such person should come to inhabit, or to any or either of them, a certificate under the hands and seals of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any other parish, township, or place, or the major part of them, or under the hands and seals of the overseers of the poor of any other place where there are no churchwardens, to be attested respectively by two or more credible witnesses, thereby owning and acknowledging the person or persons mentioned in the said certificate to be an inhabitant or inhabitants legally settled in that parish, township, or place; every such certificate, having been allowed of and subscribed by two or more of the justices of the peace of the county, city, liberty, borough, or town corporate, wherein the parish or place from whence any such certificate shall come doth lie, shall oblige the said parish or place to receive and provide for the person mentioned in the certificate, with his or her family, as inhabitants of that parish, whenever he, she, or they shall happen to become chargeable to, or be forced to ask relief of the parish, township, or place to which such certificate was given; and that then, and not before, it should and might be lawful for any such person, and his or her children, though born in that parish, not having otherwise acquired a legal settlement there, to be removed, conveyed, and settled in the parish or place from whence such certificate was brought: and whereas some doubts have arisen upon the construction of the said act, by what acts any person coming to inhabit or reside within any parish, by virtue of any such certificate as aforesaid, may procure a legal settlement in such parish, and whether such certificate did not amount to a notice in writing, in order to gain a settlement: for explaining thereof, and of the said act, be it therefore enacted, that no person or persons whatsoever, who shall come into any parish by any such certificate as aforesaid, shall be adjudged by any act whatsoever to have procured a legal settlement in such parish, unless he or they shall really and bonâ fide take a lease of a tenement of the value of ten pounds, or shall execute some annual office in such parish, being legally placed in such office."

The 23 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 1, enacts, "That no person or persons whomsoever, now a prisoner or prisoners, or who shall hereafter become a prisoner or prisoners in the King's Bench prison, or the rules thereof, shall gain or be adjudged or deemed to gain a settlement in the said parish of St. George the Martyr, in the borough of Southwark, in the county of Surrey, by renting a house, part of a house, lodging, furnished or unfurnished, or any other premises whatsoever within the said parish, or by being rated to and paying any rates or taxes for the same, whilst he, she, or they shall be such prisoner or prisoners: nor shall any person or persons gain, or be adjudged or deemed to gain, a settlement within the said parish, by, or by reason or on account of living, or having lived or resided with any prisoner or prisoners within the said prison or the rules thereof, as or in the capacity of a hired servant; any law, statute, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

The 52 Geo. III. c. 72, s. 8, enacts, "That no person or persons shall, by residence in any house, lodge, or other building erected or to be erected within the said forest of Alice Holt, in the county of Southampton, or by hiring and service, either for the preservation of the said woods or plantations, or the game in the said forest, gain thereby any settlement in the parish of Binstead, in the said county in which the said forest is situated."

The 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 5, enacts, "That no gate-keeper or toll-keeper of any turnpike road or navigation, or persons renting the tolls and residing in any toll-house of any turnpike road or navigation, shall thereby gain any settlement in any district, parish, township, or hamlet."

The 59 Geo. III. c. 50, which received the royal assent on the 2nd of July, 1819, recites, "Whereas many disputes and controversies have arisen respecting the settling of poor people in parishes in England by the renting of tenements," and enacts "that no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor in England, by or by reason of his or her dwelling for forty days in any tenement rented by such person, unless such tenement shall consist of a house or building within such parish or township, being a separate and distinct dwelling house or building, or of land within such parish or township, or of both, bonâ fide hired by such person at and for the sum of ten pounds a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building shall be held, and such land occupied, and the rent for the same actually paid, for the term of one whole year at the least, by the person hiring the same; nor unless the whole of such land shall be situate within the same parish or township as the house wherein the person hiring such land shall dwell and inhabit; any thing in any act or acts, or any construction of or implication from any act or acts, or any usage or custom to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."

The 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 51, enacts, "That no collector or person renting such tolls, or residing in such toll-house as aforesaid, and no apprentice or servant of any such collector or person shall thereby gain a settlement in any parish or place whatsoever; and that no tolls to be taken at any gate erected or to be erected by the trustees or commissioners of any turnpike road, nor toll-house erected or to be erected for the purpose of collecting the same, nor any person in respect of such tolls or toll-house, shall be rated or assessed

The 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 31, enacts, "That no collector or receiver of any tolls or penalties for overweight, residing in any house or building erected or used by the trustees of any turnpike road for the residence or accommodation of persons appointed for weighing any waggons or other carriages, and no apprentice or servant of any such collector or receiver shall thereby gain a settlement in any parish or place; and that no tolls or penalties for overweight to be taken at any house or weighing machine erected or to be erected, or adjoining to any turnpike road, nor any person whatsoever in respect of such tolls or penalties, or any house or building as aforesaid, shall be rated or assessed towards the payment of any poor's rates or any other public or parochial rate or levy whatsoever."

The 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 1, which received the royal assent on 22 June, 1825, recites, "Whereas the settlement of the poor has been made in some instances to depend upon the annual value of tenements which they may have rented, or upon the annual value of tenements in virtue of which they have paid parochial rates: and whereas the ascertaining such value in such respective cases has given rise to very expensive litigation: and whereas doubts have been entertained whether an act made in the fifty-ninth year of King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act to amend the Laws respecting the Settlement of the Poor, as far as regards renting Tenements,' has been effectual for the purpose of altering the law in respect of the necessity of proving the annual value of tenements so rented: and it is expedient that further provision be made relating thereto; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this act, the said recited act of the fifty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act to amend the Laws respecting the Settlement of the Poor, so far as regards renting Tenements,' shall be and the same is hereby repealed."

Sect. 2. "That no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor, by or by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement not being his or her own property, unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person, in such parish or township, at and for the sum of ten pounds a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same, to the amount of ten pounds, actually paid, for the term of one whole year at the least: provided always, that it shall not be necessary to prove the actual value of such tenement; any thing in any act or acts, or any construction of or implication from any act or acts, or any usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

The 1 Will. IV. c. 18, which received the royal assent on the 30th March, 1831, recites, "Whereas by an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for the amendment of the Law respecting the Settlement of the Poor, as far as regards renting Tenements and paying Parochial Taxes,' it was among other things enacted, 'That no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor, by or by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement not being his or her own property, unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person in such parish or township, at and for the sum of ten pounds a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of ten pounds actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least: provided always, that it shall not be necessary to prove the actual values of such tenements; any thing in any act or acts, or any construction of or implication from any act or acts, or any usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding: and whereas doubts have arisen with respect to the intentions of the legislature concerning the occupation of such house, building, or land by the person hiring the same, and concerning the amount of the rent to be paid and the person paying the same: and whereas it is expedient that such doubts should be removed; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor, by or by reason of such yearly hiring of a dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, as in the said act expressed, unless such house or building, or land, shall be actually occupied under such yearly hiring, in the same parish or township, by the person hiring the same, for the term of one whole year at the least, and unless the rent for the same, to the amount of ten pounds at the least, shall be paid by the person hiring the same."

Sect. 2. "That where the yearly rent shall exceed ten pounds, payment to the amount of ten pounds shall be deemed sufficient for the purpose of gaining a settlement under the said recited act."

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 66. "That from and after the passing of this act no settlement shall be acquired or completed by occupying a tenement, unless the person occupying the same shall have been assessed to the poor rate, and shall have paid the same in respect of such tenement for one year." (a)

Rex v. Streatham, 2 M. & Sel. 468. By an act for regulating the parish of Clapham, a clause was introduced which Lord Ellenborough characterized as being a fraud upon all other parishes, viz. that no settlement could be gained in any house of less yearly value than 20*l.*, let for any shorter period than quarterly, where the landlord compounded for, or refused to compound for his rate. It was held, on the construction of this statute, that this must be strictly confined to the cases mentioned, and did not apply to all houses under 20*l.*

There are some cases which explain the general effect of these statutes upon each other.

Rex v. St. Mary-le-Bone, 4 B. & Ald. 681. Removal from St. Mary-le-Bone to St. Pancras. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper hired an unfurnished shop in St. Pancras, of the yearly value of 10*l.*, and lived therein eight months. He afterwards hired an unfurnished shop and parlour, part of a house in St. Mary-le-Bone, at 26*l.* a-year, which he took possession of on the 25th May, 1819, and resided in and occupied the last mentioned premises upwards of forty days, but only thirty-eight days of such residence and occupancy had elapsed on the 2nd July, 1819. Bayley, J. "The question in this case turns entirely upon the construction of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, which took effect from the 2nd July, 1819. The pauper had on that day resided in and occupied, for a period of thirty-eight days, part of a dwelling-house in Mary-le-Bone parish, at 26*l.* a-year; so that, if the statute had not been passed, he would undoubtedly have acquired a settlement in Mary-le-bone by his subsequent residence and occupation, which in the whole considerably exceeded forty days. But he had not on the 2nd of July acquired such settlement. It was contended, that the statute, being wholly expressed in the future tense, did not apply to such a case, but must be considered as wholly and absolutely prospective, and confined to tenements hired after the day on which the statute took effect. If this be the true construction, then a residence of one day prior to the statute, connected with a continued residence in pursuance of the original hiring for thirty-nine days after the statute, will confer a settlement. The statute, however, had in view, as appears by the preamble, the preventing of the disputes and controversies which had arisen respecting the settlement of poor people by the renting of tenements. And we think this object will be best attained by giving to the words of the enacting part their full and absolute effect, and by considering the statute as applicable to every case

1. Statutes relating to Settlement by Renting a Tenement.

No person shall acquire a settlement by reason of a yearly hiring of a tenement, or of land, unless he shall actually occupy the same.

Payment to the amount of 10*l.* shall gain a settlement.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 66, requires a rating to and payment of poor rate by pauper.

Construction of the acts.

Construction of local act, as to tenements of twenty pounds a-year.

To gain a settlement under 13 & 14 Car. 2, the residence must be complete before July 2, 1819, the date of 59 Geo. 3.

(a) By s. 68 of the same statute, no person can retain a settlement gained by possession of any estate or interest in any parish longer than he inhabits within ten miles thereof. The legislature probably did not intend that this section should apply to this class of settlement, although the settlement is gained by virtue of an interest in his parish.

1. Statutes relating to Settlement by Renting a Tenement.

The taking, if consistent with 6 Geo. 4, may be made before it.

No settlement will be gained where a pauper rented a tenement partly before and partly after the passing of 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, unless the provisions of 59 Geo. 3, are complied with, nor will a settlement be gained where the pauper rented land from Michaelmas, 1824, to Michaelmas, 1825, if during part of the time the land is in the occupation of another person.

within its scope, wherein a previous settlement had not been completely gained and established before the statute was passed. A contrary construction might open the door to many disputes and controversies as to the nature and effect of inchoate titles. Whereas, according to the construction which we adopt, the only enquiry hereafter will be, whether a settlement had been acquired before the 2nd July, and the case will be considered as if the pauper had died or removed from the tenement on the first day of that month, and as if he had resided on, but not after that first day of July." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Ditchet, 9 B. & C. 981; 4 M. & R. 151. Bayley, J., said, "As to the question whether the holding before the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and the holding subsequent to that period, can be connected, I am of opinion they may, provided the occupation before be such as will satisfy the 6 Geo. IV.; and therefore if a party, before 6 Geo. IV. began to operate, was in possession of a yearly tenement, and held it under such circumstances as that statute says shall be requisite to gain a settlement, a settlement will be gained. There are no words in 6 Geo. IV. which import that the taking shall be subsequent to the time at which that statute came into operation."

Rex v. Ockley, 1 Bar. & Adol. 818. Appeal against an order of removal. Case:—In the year 1824 the pauper rented a dwelling-house, garden, and meadow, in the parish of Dorking, at 7*l.* per annum, and continued to occupy the premises till Michaelmas, 1826. At Michaelmas, 1824, the pauper took four fields of meadow or pasture land, situate in the same parish, of Mr. Arthur Dendy, under an agreement, whereby Dendy covenanted, &c. with Wonham, to let him have the grass growing on ten acres of meadow land situate at Coldharbour, Surrey, from Michaelmas, 1824, to Michaelmas, 1825, in consideration of the sum of 8*l.* 10*s.* payable by Wonham to Dendy on or before Lady-day, 1825, and a further sum of 8*l.* 10*s.* payable in like manner on or before Michaelmas-day, 1825. In pursuance of this agreement, the pauper entered into possession of the fields at Michaelmas, 1824, dressed them, and turned his cattle upon them; but in April, 1825, having been compelled to sell his stock, and having none from that time to put in the fields, he agreed with his brother-in-law, Hills, to let him take the grass for the remainder of the term, upon payment of the rent from that time by Hills to Dendy; but Dendy was not aware of this agreement. In pursuance of such agreement, Hills stocked the fields, cut and carried away the crops, and enjoyed them until Michaelmas, 1825, when he went to Dendy and offered to pay him the rent; but Dendy refused to take it unless the pauper was present, and accordingly the pauper and Hills afterwards went together to Dendy, and Hills paid the rent in the presence of the pauper, and Dendy gave the pauper a receipt for the same. The whole rent stipulated for by the agreement in August, 1825, was paid. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether, under the above circumstances, the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of Dorking, by renting a tenement under the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, and the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We are not called upon to say what would be the effect of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, as connected with the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, if the pauper had continued until the repeal of the last mentioned statute, doing all the things thereby required. Here, the pauper had not only not gained a settlement by complying with the provisions of that act, when the new statute passed, but he was not in progress of gaining one, for he had ceased to occupy before the expiration of the year's tenancy. Unless therefore the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, had passed he never could have gained any settlement. Now that statute cannot have the effect of making that a good settlement which would not have been good within the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, if that act had continued in force. Besides, I must say, I do not think the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, can be retrospective in part, but not so for all purposes. The order of sessions must be confirmed." Littledale, J. "We are not called upon to say whether the pauper would have gained a settlement if he had continued until the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, to do every thing which the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, required to be done; because, here, the pauper was not in progress towards gaining a settlement at the time when the last statute passed. That being so, I think that that which would not have been a good settlement if the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, had continued in force, is not rendered good by the subsequent statute." Taunton, J. "It is conceded that the pauper in this case did not comply with the provisions of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, so as to gain a settlement under that statute. The provisions of that statute continued to be the law till the passing of 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. If no settlement therefore could be gained within that statute, I cannot understand how the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, can govern the gaining of a settlement under hiring and renting which began at Michaelmas, 1824. To say that a settlement was gained by virtue of a statute which had not begun to operate, would extend the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, over a period governed by another statute, and would give it not only a retrospective, but a suspending operation. But as there had ceased to be even an inchoate settlement, before the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, was repealed, I think it is impossible to maintain that a settlement was gained by virtue of the provisions of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, which did not begin to operate till the pauper's occupation had been discontinued." Patteson, J. "There was an interval between Michaelmas, 1824, and June, 1825, when there was not an occupation by the pauper sufficient to satisfy the existing law; and that defect cannot be supplied by a subsequent statute. The order of sessions, therefore, must be confirmed." Order of sessions confirmed.

1. Statutes relating to Settlement by Renting a Tenement.

In Rex v. Carshalton, 6 B. & C. 93; 9 D. & R. 132; it was urged, that as the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, recited the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, and then repealed that statute, without making any provision for such cases as might arise in the interval between the passing of the two acts, the 59 Geo. III. operated pro tanto as a repeal of the 13 & 14 Car. II., which conferred a settlement by a residence of forty days on a 10*l.* tenement. Then, as the pauper resided for forty days on a 10*l.* tenement in the interval between the two statutes alluded to, he gained a settlement under the 12 & 13 Car. II. which thus became revived. Bayley, J. "See the extent to which that argument might be pushed. Suppose, by a statute of Elizabeth, it was made felony without benefit of clergy to steal to the value of 40*s.* in a shop; that by the 10th Geo. III. the same offence was made clergyable, and that by the 20th Geo. III. the 10th Geo. III. was repealed; then, according to your argument, an offence of that description, which was committed between the passing of the two latter acts, but not brought to trial till after the repealing act passed, would be an offence not clergyable."

The repeal of 59 Geo. 3, does not operate as a reviver of 13 & 14 Car. 2.

2. What is a Tenement under 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12.(a)

It is necessary to retain the old cases relating to this act, because the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, did not affect the acquisition of settlements by the payment of parochial taxes in respect of a tenement of the value of 10*l.*

2. What is a Tenement, &c.

An incorporeal hereditament is a tenement within the meaning of the statute, Rex v. Piddletrenthide, 3 T. R. 772; Rex v. Hollington, 3 East, 113; Rex v. Chipping Norton, 5 East, 239.

Incorporeal hereditaments.

Kinver v. Stone, 2 Stra. 678. A special order of sessions stated, that the pauper rented a coney warren and a cottage upon it at 10*l.* a year. By the court: "A mill hath been hld to be a tenement within the statute, and why not this? It is his ability to pay 10*l.* a year, that is the foundation of the settlement; and whether he pay it for a house of habitation, or for a warren which brings him in a profit, is not material." [See also S. P. Rex v. Piddletrenthide, post, 593.]

A coney warren is a tenement.

Rex v. Old Alresford, 1 T. R. 358. Removal from Old Alresford to Chilton Candover quashed. Case:—The pauper and his father resided in Old Alresford, under a certificate from Chilton Candover; the father rented a house and piece of land for several years at 3*l.* a year in Old Alresford, and during two years he held under a parol agreement the fishery of

A fishery is a tenement, and will confer a settlement.

(a) See the division of the subject, ante, 580, 581, and the note in Chitty's Col. Stat. vol. i. p. 776.

2. What is a Tenement.

*Alresford pond, with the grates, &c., containing about sixty acres, and also the spearsedge, flags, and rushes growing in and about the said pond, and the right of cutting the sedge growing on a piece of rough meadow, containing seven acres, not part of the pond, for which the father paid Mr. Edwards 10*l.* a year, and supplied his house with fish. During the time the father held the premises of E. he rented under a parol demise the fishery of Causeway river in New Alresford, with the grates to a fish-house there, at 3*l.* a year. The house and piece of land first mentioned, and the right of cutting sedge, &c., on the seven acres of rough meadow ground, and the fishery, &c., last mentioned, were together of the annual value of 10*l., without taking the pond, or any thing thereto belonging, into the account. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Upon this state of the case, the court will consider that the fishery and the soil passed together; therefore the pauper took a tenement within the statute." Ashhurst, J. "There is no doubt but a fishery is a tenement. Trespass will lie for an injury to it, and it may be recovered in ejectment." Buller, J. "The fact of letting a fishery is sufficient, and we must presume that the soil passed along with it; though I am by no means ready to allow that if it had been any other kind of fishery, it would not have given a settlement."

Liberty granted by a corporation to take sand and gravel from the bed of a river, was held a tenement, and a settlement conferred.

Rex v. All Saints, Derby, 5 M. & Sel. 90. A pauper, by order of a corporation, made at a common hall, was allowed the liberty to take sand and gravel from the bed of a river, (of which the corporation were entitled to the soil), with a condition that he sold the sand to the inhabitants of the town at a certain rate; for which liberty he paid to the corporation at the rate of 10*l.* per annum. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "This was a tenement as it subsisted in the corporation, and the pauper is, by their permission, let into the enjoyment of it. I do not know that we are obliged to go into the title; certainly a corporation cannot demise, except by deed; but we find the pauper in the occupation of the land by their permission, and this occupation must, by fair intendment, be taken to have been an exclusive one, for otherwise it would have been reduced to a thing of no value; the corporation could not have used the land without interfering with the pauper's right. (a) The pauper seems to have been in the pernancy of the whole profits of the land; he took all which covered the surface of the land. It is, therefore, as much a tenement as prima tonsura. If the question turned upon the demise, I should feel difficulty; but I think, that in point of pernancy and enjoyment, this must be considered as a tenement."

A cattle-gate is a tenement.

Rex v. Whixley, 1 T. R. 137. Removal from Whixley to Healough quashed. Case:—The pauper served an apprenticeship to R. P., in Whixley, residing there under a certificate. In the two last years of his apprenticeship his master rented a dwelling-house, &c., of the value of 1*l.* 1*l.* 6*d.* a year, and a meadow of 7*l.* 10*s.* a year; and at the same time (viz. for those two years) he occupied two cattle-gates of the value of 1*l.* 4*s.* a year, in a stinted pasture, on consideration that he should keep in repair the common highway-gates, which the persons having a right to the cattle-gates were bound to sustain. It was urged that these cattle-gates are not like commons. They are conveyed by lease and release. The owners of them are tenants in common, they have a joint possession and several inheritance, and are as much demisable as any several tenement whatsoever. It was answered, that he occupied those cattle-gates on condition of keeping the highway-gates in repair, and that this was only a license to depasture his cattle, in consideration of his keeping the said gates in repair. Lord Mansfield, C. J. said, "these cattle-gates pass by lease and release, and cannot be devised but according to the statute of frauds, they are therefore to be considered as a tenement within the statute."

Renting a right of common in gross is a tenement.

Rex v. Dersingham, 7 T. R. 671. Removal from Ingoldesthorpe to Dersingham confirmed. Case:—The pauper, in June, 1795, went to reside at Dersingham, in a house with half an acre of land, and the going of two cattle on D. common, which he hired of one Pretty, at the rent of 6*l.*, till the Michaelmas following: he continued to occupy the same till the succeeding Michaelmas, at 8*l.* a year. In June, 1795, he hired of one Smith the going for three other cattle upon the same common till the Candlemas following, at the rent of 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, and of one Chadwick the going for one other cattle on the said common for the same time, at the rent of 10*s.* 6*d.* The common rights in question were rights of common in gross. The whole rent paid was 10*l.* 2*s.* for the year. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It appears that the rights of common were rights of common in gross, and that puts an end to the question. A common in gross is a matter of tenure. Lord Coke says that a præcipe will lie for it. And there is no doubt but that the pauper rented those rights of common." Order of sessions confirmed.

Evelyn v. Rentcombe, 2 Salk. 536. Case was drawn up for the opinion of the court, whether renting of a water-mill of 10*l.* a year would make a settlement? And by the whole court, "Clearly a mill is a tenement, and the renting therefore must gain a settlement within the statute; that is, if the party live therein, or within the parish."

Rex v. Butley, 1 Sess. Ca. 320; Burr. S. C. 107; 2 Bott, 125. The question was, whether renting a wind-mill at 14*l.* a year gained a settlement, it having been determined that a water-mill did. By the court. "It is the same as if he had rented land of that value."

Rex v. Minchin-Hampton, 2 Bott, 128; 2 Sess. Ca. 320; 2 Stra. 874; Burr. S. C. 316. The pauper rented, in the parish of Bisley, lands of the yearly value of 8*l.*, from his father; a house, of the yearly rent of 1*l.* 10*s.*, from his uncle; and the same year took the pasture of a piece of land, in the said parish, from All Saints day to Candlemas, and paid 12*s.* for the same, which piece of land was worth 6*l.* a year. It was urged, that this was a good settlement. But the Court of King's Bench held, that taking the pasture of a piece of land was not more than taking the herbage, or than taking the common, which could not be esteemed part of a tenement within the meaning of the statute; but seemed to think, that if the words had been, that he had taken a pasture ground for three months, that would have made a good settlement. But the case went off upon another point. viz. for want of an adjudication.

Rex v. Stoke, 2 T. R. 451. Case:—The pauper, in addition to a house and land in Barlaston, took the hay-grass and aftermath of a meadow for 2*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* for ten months, in the same parish. He paid no taxes, but he fenced the meadow and spread the hillocks. It was said, that the agreement for the hay-grass and aftermath conveyed no interest in the soil, so as to give the pauper a settlement; that he derived from the contract a mere personal right to take the hay-grass and aftermath; that he was to take, not the general, but only the particular profits of the land; that Co. Litt. 4 b. took the distinction between pasturam and pascuum; by the former the ground itself passes, but the latter conveys no interest in the soil. Ashhurst, J. "It is clear, from the stating of the case, that the land was intended to pass; it states, 'that for ten months the pauper took the hay-grass and aftermath of the meadow.' Now why should he have taken it for ten months if the soil was not intended to be conveyed? there could be no other profits of this ground but the hay-grass and aftermath; and if a man grant all the profits of the ground, he grants the land itself." Buller, J. "This is like the case put in Co. Litt. where pastura carries the land itself. The pauper was to have the hay and aftermath, which was all the produce of the soil. This is not like taking hay-grass after severance, for that is only a chattel; but here the contract was, that the pauper should take all the grass which should grow; he was to cut it, and make it into hay himself; and after that he was to have every thing that grew on the land for ten months."

Rex v. All Saints, Cambridge, 1 B. & C. 23; 2 D. & R. 47. Removal of Lydia Fowler from Holy Trinity to All Saints, Cambridge. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, in 1793, married William Fowler, a maker of chair-bottoms and mats. In 1807 Fowler hired a house in St. Peter's, Cambridge, of the value of 9*l.* 10*s.* per annum, and resided there above a year; during the same time he had two separate parol contracts for two ponds, or for the rushes and flags growing therein; one of the ponds was of the extent of three acres, in which he was to have the exclusive right of cutting the rushes and flags at his pleasure, but not of draining off the water; the owner had the right to use the water, or to drain it off, as he thought proper. For this W. F. was to pay 5s. a year to the occupier of the farm in which it was situated. The pond was not fenced off from the rest of the field, and the occupier's cattle, when depasturing there, used the pond for drinking at; but the rushes and flags were not such herbs as the cattle would eat. The other pond was only about a quarter of an acre, and was occupied under similar circumstances, at the yearly rent of 5s. and two doormats of the value of 2s. The next year W. F. agreed to pay 10s. for the same, but died before the rushes were all gathered. The contracts for the ponds subsisted during all the time that W. F. occupied the house in St. Peter's. Per Curiam, "There is no valid distinction between a lease of grass and one of rushes growing upon the land. This case is, therefore, similar to Rex v. Stoke (ante, 589.) If this had been a bargain for any thing in a state to be severed, as in Warwick v. Bruce (2 M. & Sel. 205), it would have been a personal contract: but here, the pauper's husband had a right to all the rushes which might grow in the ponds during the year. That gave him a continuing interest in the soil for the whole year; and by renting those ponds, together with the house in St. Peter's, he held a tenement of greater value than 10*l. per annum*. It is found as a fact, that he resided in that house for more than a year; he therefore gained a settlement in that parish. The consequence is, that the pauper was improperly removed to All Saints." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Brampton, 4 T. R. 348. The pauper, T. Caile, rented premises in Brampton in Cumberland, of the yearly value of 9*l.*, and during part of the time took the fogg or after-grass of two fields, the one for 30s., the other for a guinea a year; the whole of which he occupied for more than forty days. The court of K. B. were clearly of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement in Brampton; and that this could not be distinguished from Rex v. Stoke (ante, 589). They added, that taking land for a particular purpose, such as that of setting potatoes, was sufficient to confer a settlement.

Rex v. Chipping Norton, 5 East, 239; 2 Bott, 112. Removal from Chipping Norton to Over Norton. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper went to live at Chipping Norton, where he rented a house at 8*l.* 10s. per annum. The corporation of Chipping Norton is possessed of the fairs and markets within the borough, and of the toll for all cattle actually sold at the same. The pauper at a court-leet took the said toll by a verbal agreement of the corporation at 12*l.* a year, and continued to collect it under that agreement for two years, when it was agreed that he should have it for ten guineas, under which last agreement he collected it for several years more. Co. Litt. 19 b. 20, c. 2, was quoted in favour of the settlement. "The word tenements includes not only all inheritances which are or may be holden, but also all inheritances issuing out of any of those inheritances, or concerning or annexed to, or exerciseable within the same, though they lie not in tenure; therefore these may, without question, be entailed as rents, estovers, commons, or other profits whatsoever, granted out of land; or uses, offices, dignities, which concern lands or certain places, &c. because all these savour of the realty." And it was added, that the renting of tolls had been so much considered as the taking of a tenement, that by sect. 56 of the general turnpike act, 13 Geo. III. c. 84, it is provided, that no toll-gate keeper shall gain a settlement by renting the tolls. On the other side it was said, that this was a mere personal contract; and it was objected that a corporation could only demise under seal, and here the tolls were stated to have been taken by a verbal agreement. And Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "that as no interest passed to the pauper by such parol demise, the question could not be raised. It was a mere license to him to collect the tolls, the right to which still remained in the corporation; though it might be a ground on which to apply to a court of equity. But if this difficulty (as to the mode of agreement) could be got rid of, the other point, as to the taking of the tolls being a taking of a tenement within the construction which had been put upon that statute, might be disposed of in favour of the settlement, upon the authority of Lord Coke, in his comment upon the statutes of Westminster, 2; and on Webb's case, 8 Rep.; and on the opinion of Lord Kenyon in the case referred to, that a taking of an incorporeal tenement will confer a settlement." The court directed inquiry to be made if any interest in the tolls had passed from the corporation to the pauper, or any person under whom he claimed. But it was found that no other instrument had been executed, except a bond given by the pauper to the corporation, with sureties for the rent, and the court said that could convey nothing from the corporation; and the order of sessions was quashed.

Rex v. North Duffield, 3 M. & Sel. 247. Removal from Spaldington to North Duffield confirmed. Case:—By 33 Geo. III. "for building a bridge over the river Derwent," &c. certain persons are constituted a corporation, by the name of the Company of Proprietors of the Derwent Bridge, and are empowered to have a common seal, &c. In pursuance of this act a bridge was built over the Derwent called Bubwith Bridge, and a house erected where the tolls are collected. In February, 1811, the pauper entered into the occupation of his toll-house, and the tolls there received, in pursuance of an instrument, by which five persons therein described as five members of a committee appointed for managing the affairs of the company of proprietors of Derwent Bridge, demised to the pauper the toll-house and toll-bar, together with the pontage and tolls, to hold for one year, at the rent of 126*l.* by monthly payments: and the pauper, together with one Holtby his surety, covenanted with the five persons to pay to the company the yearly rent; and in default thereof, it should be lawful for the company to enter upon the toll-house, &c. and receive the tolls, &c. This instrument was signed and sealed by the respective parties, but the seals of the five persons were only their private seals, and the corporation seal was not affixed to this instrument. The pauper continued in the occupation of the toll-house and the tolls above forty days, and paid rent for the same. The toll-house is situate, and the tolls receivable, in North Duffield. The annual value of the toll-house did not exceed 5*l.* but the annual value of the tolls greatly exceeded 10*l.*, and they were let for 70*l.* After argument, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "the residence in the toll-house, if it had been of sufficient value, might have answered the purpose of a settlement, but there the value fails; and the tolls are not things which lie in tenure, but only in grant; therefore, without a deed, an interest in them could not pass." (a) Le Blanc, J. "In Wood v. Tate the plaintiff in replevin was the party distrained on, and paid rent to the party by whom the distress was made; he was, therefore, stopped from denying that he held under them. He had acknowledged a holding by the payment of rent." Bayley, J. "That case shows the distinction between land and an incorporeal hereditament." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Denbigh, 5 East, 333. R. Hughes agreed with the toll-keeper in H. to go and receive the tolls in the turnpike house in H. as the servant, and for the use of the toll-taker, for which he (Hughes) was to be paid 3*s.* 6*d.* per week. Hughes went, and whilst there he took a field in H. of the value of 12*l.* a Occupation of a toll-house and tolls of a bridge demised for a year by five members of a managing committee under their own seals, but not under the corporation seal, was held not to confer a settlement, the annual value of the toll-house alone not exceeding five pounds.

A toll-keeper gains a settlement by renting a tenement in the parish in which he keeps the toll.

(a) In Rex v. Chipping Norton (ante, 590), Lord Ellenborough said, "that as no interest passed in the tolls by the parol demise to the pauper, no question of settlement could arise. This parol demise was a mere license to him to collect the tolls, the right to which still remained in the corporation."

In Rex v. Old Alresford (ante, 587), it was urged, that the right to the fishery was a right to an incorporeal hereditament, and could only pass by deed, and then it was stated to be by parol.

Buller, J. "The court go upon this ground, that the sessions have no occasion to go into the title of the lessor at all. The fact of letting the fishery is sufficient, and we must presume the soil passed with it."

Rex v. All Saints, Derby (ante, 589). There was a demise by corporation, but not by deed; and the court held, that as the pauper was let into the enjoyment by permission of the corporation, it was sufficient, and that they were not obliged to go into the title.

2. What is a Tenement.

A person renting the tolls and residing in the turnpike house erected by order of the commissioners appointed by statute for paving, lighting, and regulating the streets of Durham, cannot gain a settlement in the parish by the general turnpike act, 13 G. 3, c. 84, s. 56.

Renting the tolls of a bridge, vested by act of parliament in a company of proprietors, confers a settlement, although the tolls are made personal estate, and the renting is not stated to be by deed.

The renting of tolls and a toll-house will not year. During this time he, his wife, and family, continued residing in the toll-house. The 13 Geo. III. c. 84, s. 56, (a) enacts, "that no gate-keeper residing in a toll-house shall thereby gain a settlement in any parish," &c. It was argued that the word thereby included the "residence in the toll-house;" and that such residence should not be contributable to the settlement. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The act only meant that a settlement should not be gained by keeping the gate or renting the tolls, and residing in the toll-house. But that does not prevent him from gaining a settlement aliunde in the same parish where the toll-house is situated; that here a close worth above 10*l.* was rented in the parish, and there was residence in the parish. He did not even rent the tolls: he was merely the servant of another." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Elvet, 11 East, 93. Removal of Frances, the widow of John Taylor, from West Rainton to Elvet. Order confirmed. By 30 Geo. III. c. 67, intituled "An Act for paving, lighting, watching, and regulating the streets, &c. of Durham," authorizing the commissioners to take tolls and appoint persons to collect them in the streets of Durham; it is provided that if instead of collecting the tolls in this manner it should appear to the commissioners more expedient to collect the same at toll-houses or turnpikes, it should be lawful for them to erect two turnpikes for the purpose of collecting the tolls, and the property of all such turnpikes and toll-houses should be vested in the commissioners: the commissioners might lease the tolls: the commissioners erected a turnpike gate and house for collecting the tolls within Elvet, and in 1796 demised the same, with the tolls, to one Reather for three years, who on the 23d August, 1796, leased the same by indenture to Elizabeth and John Taylor for three years, at the yearly rent of 202*l.*: under this lease John Taylor alone entered into the toll-gate and house, and continued to reside there with his family, collecting the tolls for the said term. The tolls were collected and appropriated to the general purposes of the act; neither the tolls nor the gate-houses, nor the respective lessees, were assessed to the poor's rate. Per curiam: "There is no difference in effect, though the appellation of turnpike road does not occur in the local act; the one is a stone road and the other a gravel road, and every character belonging to a turnpike road belongs as well to this: the commissioners are trustees for the repair of the roads, and this case is within the prohibition of the 56th clause in the general turnpike act." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Bibworth, 1 M. & Sel. 514. An order for the removal of John Massey, &c. from Bubwith to Foggathorpe, discharged. Case:—Massey rented for one year the tolls and toll-house of Bubwith bridge in Duffield. These tolls were collected by virtue of 33 Geo. III. intituled "An Act for building a Bridge over the River Derwent at Bubwith Ferry, and making proper Approaches thereto." The tolls and toll-house were of the annual value of 70*l.* The value of the toll-house alone was less than 10*l.* per annum. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It is true the words 'turnpike road,' did not occur in the act upon which Rex v. Elvet (supra) was decided. But the commissioners under that act were trustees of the road; and it was to all intents considered as a turnpike road. As to the renting, it is enough for us to decide on the doubts which the sessions actually entertained; and they have not stated any doubts upon that subject; for they have stated simply that the pauper rented the tolls, which must be understood a legal renting. Then the only question remaining is, whether tolls are a tenement. There is no doubt that they are so generally; but it is said that here they cannot be so, because the act has made the shares of the proprietors personal estate. That however does not make them less a tenement in the hands of the persons to whom demised: suppose the act had vested the shares in the proprietors for a term of years, they would still have been a tenement." Le Blanc, J. "In Rex v. Elvet the court deemed it a turnpike road; the act enabled the commissioners to erect turnpikes on the high road." Order of sessions confirmed.

tolls and a toll-house of a navigation underlet the same for the remainder of a term of three years at the annual value of 42*l.*, and the under-lessee occupied them for upwards of a year, and paid a year's rent, and it was found as a fact that the toll-house had always been used as a public-house as well as for the collection of tolls, and was worth 25*l.* a year if let as a public-house without the tolls, and 4*l.* a year if not so let, it was held that the under-lessee did not gain any settlement by the renting of a tenement, inasmuch as he was a person renting the tolls and residing in a toll-house of a navigation within the 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 5.

confer a settlement under 54 Geo. 3, c. 170.

Rex v. Piddletrenthide, 3 T. R. 772. John Belly removed from Chaldon Herring to Piddletrenthide. Order confirmed. Case:—For two or three years, while the pauper lived in Chaldon Herring, he rented in that parish a dairy of thirty cows, some at 5*l.* 10*s.* and others at 5*l.* per cow, with liberty to cut furze on Grange Warren, and on other parts of the farm, for the use of the dairy only; and a warren to kill rabbits for his profit, called Grange Warren, with a small house on it to keep nets, in the same parish, of the same man, at 30*l.* per annum; and also another rabbit warren in the neighbourhood, for the same purpose, at 15*l.* per annum. The cows were to feed in particular grounds at particular seasons of the year, as is usual in the letting of dairies. The pauper and his man sometimes slept in the house in Grange Warren. The pauper had no right in the soil of either of the said warrens, except that of entering upon and killing rabbits there; the persons of whom he rented the warrens constantly depasturing the same and ploughing some part thereof. Lord Kenyon, C. J. “If we were now called upon for the first time to make a decision on this statute, perhaps I should have some difficulty on the subject; but the courts have put a liberal construction on it. I cannot quite agree with Rex v. Lockerly; because after it had been decided in so many cases that an incorporeal hereditament would give a settlement, I should have thought that that case would have received a different determination. But without considering that case, I think that the pauper took a tenement in Chaldon Herring both by renting the dairy and the warren. Lord Coke says that prima tonsura is a tenement; then the dairy was a tenement. The other taking was also sufficient; for it was, if I may use the expression, a pernancy of the profits of the land by the mouths of the rabbits. A free warren is the subject of a family settlement; a præcipe will lie for it; and the renting of it is sufficient to give a settlement. If this case had been precisely similar to Rex v. Lockerly, (a) perhaps I

Renting a dairy or a rabbit warren, is such a tenement as confers a settlement.

So also is renting a warren to kill rabbits, though the soil be not taken, but merely a right to enter and take the rabbits. (a)

(a) The case of Rex v. Lockerly, which by Rex v. Tolpuddle (post, 594), is now overruled, was as follows:—(Burr. S. C. 315; Bott, 137 n.) Removal from Lockerly to Shirefield English quashed. The pauper went to Lockerly, and there entered into articles of agreement with one J. M. as follows:—M. covenanted with the pauper to demise to him a dairy of sixteen cows, with a messuage and dwelling-house, and feeding for the cows on twenty-one acres of clover ground, and thirteen of meadow land, with the after-lease of a meadow, all in Lockerly; “also the run of the yard and the arshes of the farm (of which the dairy, &c. were part) for pigs; and the run of one horse with the cows for one year; M. to allow E. all the shew wheat arising from the corn growing on the farm; and also provide for the use of the cattle, when wanted, five tons of hay; and for the feed of the cattle, cause the above-mentioned lands to be laid up at certain times; and fetch the necessaries and fuel of E. home to the messuage. And if the cows shall not be delivered of their calves by the 1st of May, M. shall deduct out of the rent 2*s.* per week for every cow until she shall be delivered, and also what may be reasonable for every calf wanting to each cow. E. to pay to M. 3*l.* 5*s.* for every cow, payable quarterly.” E. entered and occupied; the cows were fed on the lands mentioned; and during some time sheep belonging to M. were fed with them on a part of them; but the thirteen acres of meadow were never fed but by the said cows. After argument, Wright, J. said, “that the land seemed to have remained to M. for he was to lay it up at such a time. That a tenement must lie in tenure, and must relate to land, whereas this contract related to cows. The pasture of the ground generally is not let, but only the feeding of sixteen cows. That the value of the meadow was not stated.

2. What is a Tenement.

should have hesitated before I agreed to overturn that decision; but as this is distinguishable from that case (though the distinction is nice), I think that the pauper gained a settlement in Chaldon Herring." Ashhurst, J. "It seems difficult to reconcile all the cases on this subject. If Rex v. Lockerly be law, I do not see how this pauper can have gained a settlement in Chaldon Herring; but as there are authorities both ways I am inclined to think that a settlement was gained in Chaldon Herring; the criterion, by which the question is to be decided, being the ability of the person taking the tenement." Buller, J. "In all doubtful cases one leading ground is, the ability of the pauper to pay the 10*l.* per annum. But on the facts here stated, I think this person rented a tenement within the statute of Car. II. I cannot agree with the determination of Rex v. Lockerly. That was considered as a personal contract; but all contracts are in all respects personal. The question in such cases really ought to be, whether or not it be a contract to receive the profits out of land? The present I consider as such; and so was that in Rex v. Lockerly. I am therefore of opinion that the conclusion drawn in that case was wrong. As to the other point I do not consider this merely as a privilege to kill rabbits when the pauper could find them, and that the landlord might take them all if he chose it; but the warren was to be kept in the same state as it was when it was let; otherwise the contract between the landlord and the tenant would be destroyed. In that respect then the pauper had an interest in the land. Besides, he took a house with the warren." Grose, J. "It is impossible to reconcile all the cases on the subject; and I do not understand the ground on which Rex v. Lockerly was decided. In these cases, I think, that if the pauper had credit to rent 10*l.* per annum, he gained a settlement. Kinver v. Stone (ante, 587,) decides the present." Both orders quashed.

Renting cows by the year, to be fed in particular grounds belonging to the owner, exclusively of any other cattle, is a tenement, and confers a settlement.

Rex v. Tolpuddle, 4 T. R. 671. G. Hill removed from Puddletown to Tolpuddle, in Dorsetshire. Order confirmed. Case:—J. Chapman was the tenant and occupier of a farm in Tolpuddle, part of the stock of which farm consisted of cows, which, according to the usual course of husbandry in that county, had been constantly let to some dairy-men. The pauper rented, under a verbal agreement, those cows of Chapman, at 3*l.* 10*s.* per cow per annum; it was also agreed between them (as is usual there), that the owner of the cows should feed and support them, and that they should depasture in the Cow-leaze Grounds from May-day till the 18th September, and afterwards in certain meadow grounds, which are kept for that purpose, from the time the same are mowed; both which grounds were part of the farm then in the occupation of Chapman; and when the pasture of the meadow grounds was consumed, that the cows should be kept by Chapman in some other of the farm grounds with his other cattle, or be foddered in the farm yard with hay by him. The Cow-leaze was not to be fed upon by any cattle from Lady-day till May-day, nor was he to feed any other cattle either in the Cow-leaze or meadow ground whilst the same were fed by the cows so rented. But the hay of the meadow ground was cut and taken away by Chapman, and the Cow-leaze was fed by him after the cows had quitted it, and he was to repair the fences. In case any cow did not calve before May-day, or afterwards if any of them died or become barren, an allowance was to be made to the pauper; and in case of sickness amongst the cattle Chapman was to defray all expenses. The pauper was also to have a dwelling-house, and a right of feeding a mare on the farm, and keeping his pigs in the yard, and of cutting fuel for the use of his dairy; but he had no other right whatever. This contract continued for five years, and the pauper resided during the whole time in the house in Tolpuddle. The above are the usual terms of letting such farms in that county, and is called a letting of a dairy. Bear-

That it was only an agreement for the use of the cows, and the feeding of them; and was merely personal. That no interest in the land passed or was intended to pass." (And he said, "that if in the

croft supported the order. (a) Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is certainly very much to be wished that the decisions of the magistrates below should, on examination here, be found to be consonant to the laws of the land. And I am happy to find that we are relieved from the supposed inconvenience of sending down a new code of laws to the county where this question arose; because our opinion concurs with that formed by the justices in their sessions, as well as that of the justices who made the original order. From the passing of the statute of Car. II. to the present time, the construction put on it has been (what is called) a liberal construction, in order to confer a settlement on those persons who have the ability to take a tenement which the statute has established as the criterion. I confess it seems to me impossible to reconcile the decision of Rex v. Lockerly with our determination in this case, that the pauper gained a settlement in Tolpuddle; but if we are of opinion that that case cannot be supported, it will be more manly to say so in express terms, than by endeavouring to make nice distinctions, to induce the magistrates below to consider it as an authority hereafter. When the case of Rex v. Piddletrenthide (ante, 593,) came before us we all doubted of the decision of Rex v. Lockerly; but there being other distinct ground upon which we were warranted in supporting the settlement, we were not directly called upon to overrule that case. But now it being impossible to distinguish between this case and that, I think we are bound to deny the authority of that case, and to substitute in its room a better exposition of the statute of Car. II. It has been argued, that if we decide this to be a tenement, we shall depart from the words of the statute, but in this case the pauper took a tenement, emphatically a tenement. Any thing is a tenement which is a profit out of land. In order to make a tenement it is not necessary the party should have the fee simple or fee tail, any minute interest in land is parcel of a tenement; such minute interest indeed cannot be entailed, but all the parcels when consolidated together may. A beast-gate has been held to be a tenement, and yet that is not the whole land, but the profits of the land to a certain amount. So here the profits of those lands are to be taken exclusively by the cows which the pauper rented. If the cattle had been his own, and he had rented the feeding of them, that would have been unquestionably a tenement, like the taking of a pasture, the hay and aftermath. And I think that these cows were the pauper's for a certain period; they were not so far his own that he could have sold them, but they were his that he might use them under the contract for a limited time. And this was not the less the taking of a tenement, because the pauper could only enjoy the land in a particular mode, for in many farms the tenant stipulates that he will not depasture sheep or horses on particular grounds. I do not see, therefore, why this is not strictly speaking a tenement, for the pauper had for a certain part of the year the exclusive right to the pasturage of these grounds, to be taken by the mouths of the cattle." The other judges delivered opinions to the same effect. Both orders confirmed. (b)

Rex v. Minworth, 2 East, 198. Removal from Minworth to Worley Wigorne quashed. Case:—The pauper, by a verbal contract, rented from Lady-day till six weeks after Michaelmas two cows, at 5s. a cow per week, of J. G., the tenant of certain lands in Minworth. It was agreed that the owner of the cows should feed and support them: they were to be fed on certain lands specified, but which lands were not of the annual value of 10l. G. was not to feed any other cattle in any of the lands whilst they were depastured by the cows rented by the pauper. It was contended, that it was enough if the annual value of 10l. had arisen from something connected with the realty, though no part thereof. Grose, J. "This case is very plain. Unless the pauper occupied a tenement of 10l. a year value, he could gain no settlement. And that fact is expressly negatived; for it is stated that he rented two cows, which were to be fed on particular lands, and that those

But the land on which the cows are depastured must be of the annual value of ten pounds.

(a) It was admitted that the annual value of the land was more than 10l. See 2 East, 199, n. (c).

The value of the cows can form no part of the annual value.

If the pauper have not an exclusive right to the pasture where the cows are fed, and the cows be his own, it is a common in gross.

The contract as to the feeding must be specific to gain a settlement.

If the cows be not the pauper's own, and the contract be only for the privilege of milking them, they being to be depastured on a certain farm, that will confer a settlement.

lands were not of the annual value of 10*l.* That makes an end of the question. The principle on which the renting of dairies has been holden to confer a settlement is, that in truth it is a contract for a certain interest in the land, to be enjoyed in a particular manner, that alone constitutes it the taking of a tenement; and in each of these cases which have been decided on that ground, it was understood that the land itself was of the requisite value. The pauper, then, did not gain a settlement by the renting and occupation in question." Lawrence, J. "In Rex v. Tolpuddle (ante, 594), the value of the cows was never taken into consideration as forming part of the value of the tenement. The produce of a warren is the rabbits, as much as the produce of the fishery is the fish."

Rex v. Hollington, 3 East, 113. Removal from Breadsall to Hollington confirmed. Case:—The pauper went to reside in St. Werburgh, in Derby, and occupied a house there of the annual value of 5*l.* During the time he occupied this house he rented the ley of two (of his own) cows from May-day to Michaelmas, at six guineas, in a large pasture containing 100 acres, and of the annual value of 250*l.*, belonging to Mr. Mundy. Mundy was under no restriction as to what number of cows he kept in it. It was insisted that the circumstance of the pauper's having no exclusive right to the pasturage differed this from the preceding cases. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This is nothing more than a common in gross, which has been holden to be a tenement within the statute. If Mr. M. overstocked the land, the tenant might recover in damages." Lawrence, J. "Mr. J. Buller states that the question in cases like the present is this, Whether or not it be a contract to receive profits out of land? If that be so, it determines this case, for here the cows were the pauper's own, and the contract, which was for the pasturage of them, was, to use the words of Lord Kenyon in the same case, a contract for the pernaney of the profits of the land by the mouths of the cattle." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Tisbury, 2 Nol. P. L. 19. Per Lawrence, J. "A contract to feed cows generally, under which they might be fed with green tares bought in the market, would not be a tenement within the act."

Rex v. Stoke-upon-Trent, 10 East, 496. Removal from Stoke-upon-Trent to Norton-on-the-Moors quashed. Case:—The pauper, under a verbal agreement, rented and paid for the hire and privilege of milking two cows, belonging to a Mr. Repton, 5*s.* 6*d.* per week each cow for forty successive weeks. The cows were by the agreement to be depastured by Repton on his farm in common with his other cows; and were in fact depastured on such lands of the farm as Repton thought proper: the pauper never went to fetch them, but they were brought up with Repton's other cows to the fold-yard, and there milked by the pauper. During the time the pauper rented the cows he resided in a cottage in the parish, for which he paid 50*s.* a year. The depasturing of the two cows, together with the cottage, was worth more than 10*l.* a year. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "There is no solid distinction between Rex v. Hollington (supra) and this. There the pauper had only hired the depasturing of his own cows in common with the cattle of the owner in certain land; here he hired the cows themselves, which for this purpose are the same as his own, together with their depasturing in common with the owner's other cattle upon a certain farm; all included in one contract. If the cows had been the pauper's own, this case would have been identically the same as the former; but that fact was no material ingredient in the former case; for the cows are his own for the time he hires them, and in some of the cases where a settlement was gained the cows were hired as well as their feeding." Grose, J. "This is a contract to take the milk of cows to be depastured on a certain farm; which is purchasing pro tanto the interest in those pastures in which the cows were to be fed." Le Blanc, J. "The only difference between this case and Rex v. Piddletrenthide (ante, 593) is, that there it was stated to be the renting of a dairy, which is only a contract for the hire and privilege of milking cows, which during the time are to be depastured on the owner's lands. But there the cows were to feed in particular grounds at particular seasons of the year; and here they were to be depastured on the farm in common with the owner's other cattle. In Rex v. Tolpuddle (ante, 594), the agreement was as here, for the owner's cows at so much a-head, and though they were to have the exclusive pasturage of certain grounds during part of the year, yet that has since been held to make no difference. The reasoning of Lord Kenyon in that case will apply to this case. In Rex v. Minworth (ante, 595), there was no doubt but that the contract was for the taking of a tenement; but the value of the land on which the two cows were to be depastured did not amount to 10*l.* a year, and therefore no settlement was gained. Now here the pauper contracted for the milking of two specific cows (not any cows) which were to be depastured on the farm of the owner, together with his other cattle, the value of which pasturage, together with the cottage rented by the pauper during the same time, amounted to more than 10*l.* a year. Then it was decided in Rex v. Hollington (ante, 596), that hiring the feeding of cows for a certain time, in common with the cattle of the owner of the pasture in which they are to be fed, is a taking of a tenement. This then is the same as if the pauper had hired the cows at so much, and the pasture for feeding them at so much more, though the two sums are compounded in one." Bayley, J. "The agreement here is that the owner should depasture the cows upon his farm in the parish, which must mean that they were to be fed on the pasture grown on the land; if, therefore, he had fed them in any other way it would have been a breach of his contract." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Darley Abbey, 14 East, 280. Removal of W. Bainbridge, &c. from Duffield to Darley Abbey, in Derbyshire. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper for two years resided in a house and occupied a garden in Darley Abbey, of the annual value of 8*l.* 18*s.*, and during the whole of that time he and one John Meyer jointly hired the milking of a cow in the following manner. The pauper applied to Mr. Evans, at whose factory he and Meyer worked, for the milking of a cow betwixt them; Evans referred the pauper to his agent, Mr. Harvey, to agree for the cow; Harvey agreed they should have a cow for the season for 9*l.* The particular cow was pointed out; the cow was at that time upon a farm of Evans's, which he occupied. Nothing was said as to how or where the cow should be fed, more than that Harvey said that Jerom, Evans's farming man, would inform the pauper in what pasture the cow would be first milked, and he did inform him, and so from time to time when the pasture was changed, that he might know where to go to milk her. The cow was grazed in Evans's pastures in the same farm for the whole of the two seasons with other cows, which were let in the same way to other workmen of Evans's, and with other cattle belonging to Evans. The pauper and his partner always milked the cow during the whole time. They hired the same cow four successive seasons, and the cow was always grazed in the same way on Evans's farm. The summer pasturage of the cow alone was admitted to be of the value of 5*l.* each season. After hearing counsel, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It has been too long ago decided to be now shaken, that the hiring of the feeding of cows is a sufficient taking of a tenement to confer a settlement within the statute, if the tenement be of sufficient value; and here the necessary value is made up by the contract which the pauper entered into for hiring the milking of a cow in the manner stated in the case. A contract for the mere milking of a cow is indeed no more than a contract for a personal thing; and, therefore, unless through the medium of the cow, he contracted for the permanency of the profit of land, there could be no settlement gained. But the question is whether by this contract, explained as it is by the subject matter and the circumstances, the owner was not to furnish the pauper with a cow to be fed upon the land. Where parties understand the subject of their contract a few words are sufficient for the terms of it, and sometimes it may be collected from their acts, without words. Here the contract was made by the pauper with a man who had a farm, and cows then feeding on it; to him the pauper applied for the milking of a cow, and Harvey agreed that the pauper should have a cow for the season for 9*l.*, and the particular cow was pointed out. The term season would import, according to the subject-matter, during the time that the grass grew on the land to feed the cow. [During the argument, Lord Ellenborough said, "Does not 'season' mean pasture season? Can the word season be construed without reference to pasture?"] The cow was then fed upon the owner's farm, but nothing was said how or where the cow should be fed, that is, the particular land on which the cow was to be fed was not mentioned; but the pauper was told in what pasture the cow would be first milked; and whenever the pasture was changed he was informed of it. Then is it not to be fairly understood that when the cow was to be milked on pasture ground, she was also to be fed there? What could be meant by changing the pasture, but for the purpose of her being fed on fresh pasture? If, then, the owner had fed the cow on dry food, as grains, instead of pasture, it would have been a breach of the contract. The parties meant to contract for a pasture-fed cow for the purpose of milking. The principle established by the former cases cannot now be questioned, and this case is governed by it." Grose, J. "The permanency of profits of land must be established, in order to confer a settlement by this kind of contract; here I think it was established." In answer to the observation, that the pasture was pointed out, that the pauper might know where the cow was to be milked, Grose, J. said, "Then, must it not be understood that the cow was to be fed on the pasture where she was to be milked?" Le Blanc, J. "Nobody who reads this case can doubt that this was a hiring by the pauper of a cow to be fed on the pasture of him who let it. The facts are, that the pauper applied to Mr. Evans, the owner of the farm on which there were cows, for the milking of a cow; the owner referred him to his agent Harvey, with whom the pauper agreed for a cow for the season at 9*l.*, and a particular cow was pointed out; and though nothing was said as to how or where the cow was to be fed, yet Harvey told him then that the owner's farming man would inform him in what pasture the cow was to be first milked; that is, on what particular pasture she was then fed: is it not evident from this that it was a contract for the hire of a pasture-fed cow? It is objected, that no specific land was pointed out on which the cow was to be fed; but that need not be agreed upon, nor need it have been fed upon the same land on which the owner was residing. It is clear, however, that this cow was to be fed upon the farm in the occupation of Evans, or upon land that he was to provide for her, and in fact she was depastured upon the farm all the season." Bayley, J. "Here there can be no doubt that the contract was for the milking of a cow which should be pasture-fed during the season, either upon land of the farm in the parish where the parties contracted, and were residing, or at least within a reasonable distance of it, in order that the pauper might have a convenient opportunity of coming to milk the cow. And if the owner had fed the cow otherwise than upon pasture, an action by the pauper would have lain for a breach of the contract." (a) Order of sessions confirmed.

A contract for a pasture-fed cow for the season is a sufficient tenement to confer a settlement.

2. What is a Tenement.

The contract must be to feed the cattle with the growing produce of the land.

Rex v. Sutton St. Edmunds, 1 B. & C. 536; 2 D. & R. 800. Removal of T. Watson from Leverington to Sutton St. Edmunds. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, at Lady-day, 1793, agreed with J. Ulyatt, a farmer in Leverington, to serve him as a confined labourer in husbandry (that is, to work for him and no other person) for a year. The agreement was, the pauper to have 18*l.* a year wages. His master either to find him two cows, or the pauper was to be at liberty to provide himself with two and feed them on his master's farm during the same year. The pauper went into the service of Ulyatt, under the agreement, at Lady-day, 1793, and continued therein till Lady-day, 1797, under contracts to the same effect. During the first three years of such servitude, the pauper lived in a house on his master's farm in Wisbeach High Fen, and the last year of such service in a cottage at Leverington. The occupation of the cottage was incidental to the service of the pauper, who was discharged from it at the same time that he left his service. The pauper bought one cow, and his master found him another, both of which were fed during the summer in the pasture of his master, and in the winter were kept in the straw yard of his master, and fed with hay grown upon the master's lands. The pauper had the exclusive use and advantage of such cows. If the pauper had not had such cows kept for him on his master's farm, he would have had more wages; and at the time he left Ulyatt's service in 1797, he took his cow with him. Evidence was given that the keep of the two cows during the summer months would require two acres and a half of land, on which they were fed, and that such acres were worth together annually 5*l.* 5*s.*; and that to cut hay sufficient for the winter keep would require two acres and a half more of such land of the annual value of 5*l.* 5*s.*; and that the summer feed and winter keep with hay for the two cows on such farm were of the annual value of 10*l.* 10*s.* The sessions were of opinion that the keeping and feeding of the cows under the above circumstances did not constitute such a tenement as gained the pauper a settlement. Puller supported the order of session, in the course of whose argument, Bayley, J. referred to Rex v. Oswald Twissell, M. T. 1818, in which case the pauper rented, inter alia, the milk of a cow to be kept by the owner; her keep made up the necessary value 10*l.*, and she was in fact pasture-fed; but it was held, that as it did not appear to have been made matter of bargain that she should be pasture-fed, hiring her milk was not necessarily taking a tenement, and the order of sessions allowing the settlement was quashed. Holroyd, J. "The sessions have not found that the right of feeding the two cows on the land was of the annual value of 10*l.*" Abbott, C. J. "It has been settled in several cases that the liberty to take the profits of land by the mouths of cattle is a tenement within the 13 & 14 Car. II.; but Rex v. Oswald Twissell is an authority to show that the contract must apply to growing produce, and that a contract partly for growing produce and partly for hay is insufficient to give a settlement. The contract in this case is not very distinguishable from that in Rex v. Minster, although it is to be observed, however, that no question was raised in that case as to the manner in which the cattle were to be fed. The question was treated both by the bar and the bench as if they were to feed upon the growing produce, and that the pauper acquired a right to the profits of the land itself. Le Blanc, J. says 'the liberty of taking the profits out of land is found to be of greater value than 10*l.*' It was a point conceded in that case that the mode of feeding was sufficient to give a settlement. Here the distinction is pointed out, and according to Rex v. Oswald Twissell the contract must be to feed the cattle with the growing produce of the land. Now in this case the master was only bound by the contract to feed the cattle during the year upon the farm, according to the usual mode, that is, to feed them during the summer upon the pasture, and during the winter in the straw-yard. The summer keep upon the pasture is found to be of no greater value than five guineas, and the winter keep, for the reasons already given, cannot be taken into consideration; and that being so, I am of opinion that the pauper did not gain any settlement in Leverington." Bayley, J. "The party, in order to gain a settlement, must come to settle upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* The right to take the herbage and produce of the soil is a right to the profits of the land, and constitutes a tenement. But the contract must be for taking the growing produce of the land. Now here it is stated that by the contract the pauper was to be at liberty to feed the cows on his master's farm during the year. By that contract the master would be bound to feed the cows during the whole year in the usual mode, viz. to feed them on the pastures during the summer, and in the straw yard during the winter. The right to feed cattle for a period of the year when they are usually pasture-fed, by eating the growing produce of the land, is a tenement; but the right to feed cattle by dry food, not necessarily a part of the produce of any particular land, is not a tenement. That point was not taken in Rex v. Minster (post, 614). Rex v. Oswald Twissell is an authority expressly to show that the value of the pasturage can alone be taken into consideration in estimating the value of the tenement occupied by a pauper under such a contract as this. Here the value of the pasturage alone amounted only to 5*l.* 5*s.*, and consequently the pauper had not a tenement of the annual value of 10*l.*" Holroyd, J.

(a) So also in Rex v. Minster (post, 614), the liberty to feed two cows on his master's farm was held a tenement.

2. What is a Tenement.

"I am of opinion that the pauper gained no settlement by this contract. Agreements for liberty to take the growing produce of land by the mouths of cattle, have been considered as equivalent to a demise of the land at a rent equal to the profits of the land, and to constitute an incorporeal tenement. The party entitled to the privilege is considered for this purpose as the occupier of land of that value. The authorities establish that where such a contract confers a right of pasturage of the annual value of 10*l.*, a settlement is gained. But a contract to feed cattle with hay in a straw yard gives no right to the occupation of land from which the hay is cut. It is rather a personal contract for the sale of so much hay as shall be necessary for the sustenance of the cattle. Here then the pauper had an interest in that land alone on which his cows were depastured during the summer, and the annual value of that was only 5*l.* 5*s.*, and insufficient." Order affirmed.

Rex v. Bardwell, 2 B. & C. 161; 3 D. & R. 369. Peter Firman was removed from Bardwell to Ixworth. Order quashed. Case:—About twenty-four years ago the pauper, a married man, was hired for a year by S., of Ixworth, as his shepherd; he was to have a house and garden rent free, 7*s.* a week, and the going of thirty sheep with his master's flock as wages. The pauper lived for two years with S. in Ixworth at these wages, during all which time the thirty sheep went with his master's flock on the farm, the whole of which was situated in that parish. The feed of the thirty sheep was worth 16*l.* a year, exclusive of the house and garden. If the pauper had not been allowed to keep the sheep, he must have had more wages. During the argument, Bayley, J. asked "Is there any case except Rex v. Minster (post, 614), where the pauper gained a settlement by renting a tenement without (a) residing upon any part of it?" (Rex v. Houghton-le-Spring, 1 East, 247, and Rex v. Sowton, Burr. S. C. 125.) Bayley, J. "This case certainly comes very near to Rex v. Minster, but that is open to much observation. It was there conceded that the right to have the cows fed upon the master's farm was a tenement, and the only question discussed and decided was, the nature of the consideration given for that tenement. In Rex v. Oswald Twissell it was held, that unless it was stipulated in the original bargain that the cows should be pasture-fed, a settlement would not be gained, and that decision was recognized and acted upon in Rex v. Sutton St Edmunds. (b) In the present case it is probable that the sheep were fed upon the growing produce to the value of 10*l.* per annum, but as it was not any part of the original bargain that they should be so fed, it falls expressly within those two cases, and is not sufficient to confer a settlement." Best, J. "As there was not any agreement here that the sheep should be fed on growing produce, the case fell within Rex v. Sutton St. Edmunds." (c)

Rex v. Thornham, 9 D. & R. 752; 6 B. & C. 733. Case:—The pauper was hired as shepherd, at 12*s.* a week, &c. and to have twenty-one ewes going. The pauper lived under this agreement, and brought with him his ewes and lambs. The "going" of the ewes was worth 10*l.* a year. During a part of the first year the ewes were fed off the master's farm on the turnips of a neighbouring farmer, and during a part of the second winter they were fed on straw. Bayley, J. "I think the fair meaning of the expression is, that his twenty-one ewes were to be with and to go with his master's flock, and were to be fed from time to time upon growing produce, or on hay, as his master's flock was. If the term 'going' in that country has acquired a peculiar meaning, the sessions should have found that fact; but without such explanation we must understand the word in its usual sense; and so construing it, the meaning of the bargain is, that the servant was to have the ewes fed either on growing produce or on hay and straw, as his master's flock was, and then it is quite clear that no settlement was gained. For the authorities establish that in order to confer a settlement it must be part of the bargain itself that the cattle should be pasture fed, and that it is not sufficient that they are in fact

so fed." His lordship then referred to Rex v. Darley Abbey (15 East, 281, ante, 597) and Rex v. Oswald Twissel, as authorities for that position, and said "In all the cases cited in argument there was a right of turning the cattle on a particular piece of land. A cattle-gate imports a right of pasture on particular ground. Considering therefore the terms of the contract, and believing that neither of them had any very accurate idea of the meaning of the term 'going,' I think they must be taken to have used it in its ordinary sense. Consequently no settlement was gained." Holroyd, J. "The word 'going' has no technical meaning. I think that in its ordinary sense, and when used in relation to the subject-matter of such a contract as this, it imports that which was explained by the other words used in the contract in Rex v. Bardwell (ante, 600) to be its meaning there, viz. that the servant's cattle should go with his master's flock. The contract therefore in this case gave the servant no right to have his ewes pasture-fed; and that being so, the authorities referred to establish that no settlement was gained in Thornham." Littledale, J. "This case depends entirely upon the meaning of the term 'going.' I am not aware that that word is used in the country in the sense attributed to it in the course of the argument. If the court of quarter sessions had found that the word 'going' had that particular meaning in the part of the country where the bargain was made, we should have been bound by it. But there being no such finding, we ought to understand that word in its ordinary sense, and so understanding it, I think the meaning of the contract was, that the twenty-one ewes were to go as the other ewes went, viz. to be fed on growing produce or on dry food as his master's cattle were; and if that be so, then it is quite clear that the going of twenty-one ewes did not constitute a tenement, and therefore no settlement was gained in the parish of Thornham." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Nacton, 3 B. & Adol. 543. Upon appeal against an order of two justices for the removal of Mary Gibson, widow, and her children, from the parish of Nacton, Suffolk, to the parish of Croxton, Norfolk, the sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this court on the following case:—The paupers were removed to the parish of Croxton, as the last place of legal settlement of John Gibson, the deceased husband of the said Mary. The settlement of the deceased was in Croxton till Midsummer, 1804; he then went under a yearly hiring into the service of R. Stubbings, at Barnham, as shepherd's page, where he lived one whole year. Stubbings had been hired by J. Chambers, a farmer at Barnham, as his shepherd, to go into his service at that same Midsummer, and brought with him to Barnham a certificate dated 1st of June, 1804, acknowledging him, his wife and children, to belong to St. Peter, Thetford, without which certificate Chambers would not hire him. Stubbing's agreement with Chambers was, that he should have a cottage in Barnham to live in rent free, the going of 105 sheep with his master's flock, ten coombs of barley, ten coombs of rye, and firing, in lieu of wages. The occupation of the cottages was necessary for the due performance of the shepherd's service, and out of his allowance he had to lodge and maintain his pages. The appellants contended that this "going" was a tenement sufficient to determine the certificate. The sessions found that the term "going" meant, in the county where the contract was made, that the sheep should be pasture-fed, but that in bad weather the sheep were to be fed on turnips or hay with the master's; and that the actual feeding of the sheep in pasture in Barnham was worth more than 10*l.* a year. The question for the opinion of the court was stated as follows: Whether there was a sufficient coming to settle by Stubbing on a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and if the living in the cottage and the going of the sheep constituted a sufficient tenement? If the court hold in the affirmative, the decision of the sessions is right, but otherwise the paupers were properly removed to the parish of Croxton. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It is now too late to contend that if the remuneration of a person hired to serve in husbandry be by the pasture of cattle on his master's land, that that is not the taking of a tenement sufficient to confer a settlement, if it be of the value of 10*l.* Here the sessions have found that the term 'going' meant in the county where the contract

2. What is a Tenement.

A., a certificated man, was hired by a farmer residing in parish B. as his shepherd, to go into his service at Midsummer. It was agreed between them that A. should have a cottage in B. rent free, and the going of 105 sheep with his master's flock. The term "going" in the county where the contract was made, meant that the sheep should be pasture-fed, and the feeding on pasture in B. was worth 10*l.* per annum. At the same Midsummer A. hired C. to serve him for a year as shepherd's page, and he did so serve in parish B. till the following Midsummer. It was held upon a special case, stating these facts as found by the sessions, first, that it was to be inferred from the case that the feeding of the cattle was to be in parish B., and therefore that there was the taking of a tenement of 10*l.* per annum in that parish by A. Secondly, that C. gained a settlement by hiring and service with A., because the latter never resided in parish B. by virtue of the certificate, for having come there to settle on a tenement of 10*l.* per annum, he was irremovable as soon as he came into the parish, although he could not gain any settlement there until he had resided forty days.

was made, pasture feeding; and that although in bad weather the sheep were to be fed on hay or turnips, the actual feeding on pasture in Barnham was worth more than 10*l.* a year. It is said that this 'going' does not constitute a tenement, because there is no locality. There is none certainly expressed in the words of the contract between Stubbings and Chambers; but it may be abundantly collected from the other parts of the case, that the feeding of the sheep was to be in Barnham; for first, Stubbings was to have a cottage in Barnham, the occupation of which was necessary to the performance of his duty as shepherd, and the 'actual feeding of the sheep in pasture in Barnham' is found to be worth more than 10*l.* a year. The only doubt on my mind is as to the effect of the certificate. Upon that point we will take time to consider." Littledale, J. "It is perfectly well established, that if a party takes a tenement of 10*l.* a year value, whether he pays for it by money or services, he gains a settlement. Here the sessions have found that Stubbings was to have the going of 105 sheep with his master's flock, but it is not to be inferred from thence that the sheep were to be fed out of the parish. The meaning of the term 'going' is, that they should be pasture-fed. I think from the facts found in this case, it may be inferred that the feeding of the sheep was to be in Barnham; and that being so, then according to Rex v. Benneworth (2 B. & C. 775; 4 D. & R. 355; post, 603), the husband of the pauper would gain a settlement in Barnham, unless he was prevented by the certificate. That question deserves further consideration." Parke, J. "I am of opinion that in this case there was a taking of a tenement within the statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, and that Stubbings, by having made an agreement with his master for the 'going' of the 105 sheep, and residing in the parish forty days, gained a settlement. It is too late now to question the propriety of the rules, that the perception of the profits of land by the mouths of cattle is a tenement within the statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, and that the occupation of a tenement of the value of 10*l.* will give a settlement, whether the rent be paid in money or in labour. The law upon that subject was finally settled in Rex v. Benneworth. That being so, the question is then, whether it sufficiently appears that the pasture feeding was to be in Barnham? and the case resolves itself into the question, what was the meaning of the contract between the parties? I take it to be clear that the feeding on pasture was to be in the parish of Barnham, for the cottage which was necessary for the due performance of Stubbing's duty as shepherd was in that parish, and the actual feeding of the sheep on pasture in Barnham is found to be worth more than 10*l.* a year. The pauper's husband therefore came to settle on a tenement of 10*l.* per annum in Barnham. On the other question as to the effect of the certificate, I agree that it should be further considered." Patteson, J. "I think that in this case there was a taking of a tenement by Stubbings; the only difficulty is as to its locality. Rex v. Darley Abbey (14 East, 281, ante, 597,) shows that the meaning of the parties as to the place where cattle are to be pasture-fed, may be collected from the subject-matter of the contract, and the other circumstances of the case. That being so, I infer from the facts found by the sessions, that the going was to be in the parish of Barnham, for the cottage was in that parish, and the value of the pasture feeding there is found to be of the value of 10*l.* As to the question on the certificate, that may admit of some doubt." Cur. adv. vult. Lord Tenterden, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court: "We have already decided that the agreement between Chambers and Stubbings, that the latter should have the going of 105 sheep with his master's flock, was a taking of a tenement in Barnham parish within the meaning of the statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12. The point reserved for consideration was, whether Stubbings was to be looked upon as having resided in that parish under a certificate, so as to prevent the husband of the pauper from gaining a settlement by hiring and service with him. It was urged that as Stubbings could not acquire a settlement by the taking of a tenement until he had resided forty days in the parish, he must at all events be considered as having resided for those forty days under the certificate, and consequently that the pauper had not served him for a year after the certificate was discharged. It appears to us, however, that Stubbings is not to be considered as having resided in Barnham under the certificate during any part of the year; for he came to settle on a tenement of the value of 10*l.*, and was therefore irremovable as soon as he came into the parish. He never resided there under the certificate. The pauper's husband, therefore, was not serving a person residing under a certificate. If there had been no certificate whatever, the case would have been just the same. Stubbings was irremovable as soon as he came to settle on the tenement, and gained a settlement when he had resided forty days." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex. v. Benneworth, 4 D. & R. 355; 2 B. & C. 775. Removal of James Fletcher from Benneworth to Calcethorpe. Order quashed. Case:—In 1803, the pauper (a married man) was hired by yearly hiring as a confined labourer in husbandry, with Day, of Calcethorpe, farmer. The pauper had, according to agreement, a house and garden, and a rood of potatoe land, and the keep of a cow on his master's land. The cow was instead of so much money for wages. The pauper remained in Day's service eleven years, during which time, namely, in 1813, the pauper's cow failed in milk, on which account, through the kindness of his master, and not in consequence of any bargain, the pauper had in the place of the former cow two heifers kept for him by his master on his master's land for about eleven months. The potatoe land and keep of the two heifers were together of the value of 10*l. per annum*. But the potatoe land and keep of one cow were below that value. On leaving Day, the pauper went to live as a confined labourer with Briggs at Scamblesby, with whom he remained five years. For the last three years of the pauper's service with Briggs, the pauper was relieved in Scamblesby by the parish of Donnington. At the expiration of the pauper's service with Briggs, Donnington took him and his family to their parish, and put them into a cottage in Benneworth, where they continued to relieve them till 1822. Cur. adv. vult. Abbott, C. J. delivered the judgment. "We are all strongly impressed with the inconvenience of considering a settlement to be gained under circumstances like the present; and under that impression, we thought it right to consider the subject before we delivered our judgment. We have done so; but we find the law so firmly established,—that a perception of the profits of land by the mouths of cattle, is a tenement within the meaning of stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, and that an occupation of a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* will give a settlement, whether the rent be paid in money or in labour, and even if the occupation be gratuitous and no rent paid,—that we do not think ourselves at liberty to unsettle this doctrine; and consequently we are of opinion that a settlement was gained in Calcethorpe. The inconvenience is retrospective only: the law, so far as it regards a case of this kind being altered by the 59 Geo. III. c. 50. So that no person need now abstain from such an act as is disclosed in this case, through the fear of bringing a burthen upon his parish." Order of sessions quashed.

In this last case, the keep of the heifers is found not to have been in consequence of any bargain, and was therefore supposed to be inconsistent with the previous doctrine, that the perception of the profits of the land by cattle would not be a tenement, unless it was a part of the contract that they should be pasture-fed.

Rex v. Langrville, 10 B. & C. 899. Upon appeal against an order of two justices whereby E. Ewerby and his wife were removed from Langrville to Stickney. The sessions quashed the order. Case:—In the year 1800, the pauper became a confined labourer to a Mr. Dickenson, in the parish of Langrville. He was to have thirty guineas a year, a house, two gardens, and a rood of potatoes. After the bargain was made, his master said he might have the milk of a cow, and shortly after going into the service he had a cow, which was fed upon a close of his master's during that season of the year when cattle are pasture-fed. The value of the house, gardens, and the rood of potatoes, was under 10*l.* a year, but with the addition of the keep of the cow upon the land amounted to more than that sum. The court of quarter sessions were of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement in Langrville by residing there more than forty days, and occupying as above stated.

2. What is a Tenement.

A pauper was hired for a year, and had by agreement a house and garden, a rood of potatoe land, and the keep of a cow on his master's land. After the pauper had served ten years, his cow failing in milk, the pauper had in lieu of the cow two heifers kept for him, through the kindness of his master, and not in consequence of any bargain. The potatoe land, and the keep of two heifers, were of the annual value of ten pounds; but the potatoe land, and the keep of the one cow, were of less annual value than ten pounds: Held, that the keep of the two heifers was a tenement.

No settlement will be gained by the having the milk and feed of a cow, unless the person having it has an interest as tenant or occupier therein, and not by mere license, nor unless it is part of the contract that the cow should be pasture-fed.

2. What is a Tenement.

Lord Tenterden, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court. "The question in this case is, whether a settlement was gained by the occupation of a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* in the parish of Langrville. In order to constitute this species of settlement under the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, it is necessary that the pauper should have an interest in the subject of the occupation (such subject being of the requisite yearly value) as tenant or occupier, though it is not necessary that he should be under an obligation to pay rent, or that he should have more than an estate at will, (Rex v. Fillongley 1 T. R. 458, post, 629.) It has also been established by a series of cases, which were considered and confirmed in that of Rex v. Benneworth (2 B. & C. 775; 4 D. & R. 355, ante, 603), that it was a sufficient occupation of a tenement, if a pauper had an interest in a part of the profits of the land by perception by the mouths of his cattle. But it is essential, whether the subject of occupation be the land itself or a part of its profits, that the pauper should have an interest as tenant or occupier; a possession by mere license without that interest is not enough. If a person were permitted by the owner of a pasture to feed his cow or sheep upon it for a time without any valuable consideration, and without any reference to any contract between them, but by a mere act of charity or favour, no settlement would be gained by such a permissive enjoyment of the produce of the land. But if there had been a contract with the owner for a sufficient consideration, by which the pauper had a right to part of the profits of the soil to be taken by his cattle, he would have an interest, and his occupation with that interest (if those profits were of the requisite annual value) would confer a settlement after a residence of forty days. In the case of Rex v. Benneworth, which was so much relied upon in the argument of this case by the counsel for the appellants, as an authority that a gratuitous occupation was sufficient, it appeared that two heifers were substituted by the consent of the master for the cow which the pauper had a right by his contract to feed on the master's land. The pauper therefore may be considered as having had, by the act of the owner of the soil, as much interest in the land by the feeding of the heifers, as he had before by the feeding of the cow. The perception of the larger portion of the profits by the former was equally referable to an interest in the land, as that of the smaller portion by the latter. In the present case, however, the sessions find that the master gave permission to the pauper to have the milk of a cow after the bargain was completed; and though it be taken that the cow was fed on the land, and that he meant at the time that the cow should be fed on the land, (which however does not distinctly appear, nor is there any thing to show that he would not have kept his promise, and even performed his contract, if the milk formed part of the bargain, by allowing the milk of a cow fed otherwise than on the land,) we think this must be considered as having been done in consequence of a mere act of kindness or favour of the master, not referable to any contract, and that no interest was thereby acquired by the pauper in the profits of the land, consequently no settlement was gained by him in the respondent parish of Langrville. The order of sessions must therefore be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

Renting pointing places in a mill, not fixed in the floor, is not a tenement.

Rex v. Dodderhill, 8 T. R. 449. Removal from Ipsley to Dodderhill confirmed. Case:—The pauper Barnet went in 1791 to reside at Dodderhill, where he continued three years: during that time, being by trade a needle-maker, he worked for W. Webb in that trade at six pointing places in his mill, and afterwards W. not having in general use for more than four of them, B. rented of W. two of the said pointing places for more than one year, at the yearly rent of 16*l.*, but Barnet was to do all W.'s work in preference to that of any other person, although to do it it might be necessary to use all the six pointing places; and B. was paid by the piece for all the work he did for Webb. No particular places were let to B., but by his contract with W. he might have the use of any two he pleased; but work or no work, W. was entitled to his rent of 16*l.* a year for the two places. The mill belonged to W. The pointing places are frames of wood, which support the spindles on which grinding stones turn, which are moved by means of leathern straps communicating with the great wheel of the mill, which is turned by water.

The pointing places are placed on the floor of the room, and at each end of them a man sits; and the needles are pointed by being pressed against the grinding stones. The court were of opinion that there was no pretence for calling this agreement to work in the mill, the taking of a tenement. (a)

Rex v. Tardebigg, 1 East, 528. Removal from Tardebigg to Alvechurch quashed. Case:—The pauper's husband took three runners for scouring needles in a mill belonging to Milward in Tardebigg, and a packeting room, at 1s. a packet for every packet scoured thereat. He took afterwards at different times other runners and another packeting room of another person. The runners were a part of the machinery, fixed to the floor of the mill with screws. The pauper's husband and his family slept in this mill for two years. One floor of a mill will contain several runners. He had the exclusive right to the use of these runners and the packeting rooms. He also took a cottage of Milward, and the rent altogether amounted to more than 10*l.* per ann. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "There is no distinguishing this case from Rex v. Dodderhill. A runner is no more a tenement than a pointing place is so. It might as well be said to be a taking of a tenement if a man contracted to pound in a certain mortar, or to use a particular grinding stone in a mill. It is not in effect a taking of a part of the mill as a tenant, but a license to use a particular part of the machinery of it for the purpose of manufacture, and for no other purpose." Lawrence, J. said, that "Rex v. Whitechapel (post) did not apply here, for here the particular value of the runner is found, which is necessary to be taken into the account to make up the 10*l.* a year, and that not being a tenement, cannot confer a settlement; besides, it is not even stated that the runner was in the packeting room which was appropriated to the pauper's use."

2. What is a Tenement.

Nor runners for scouring needles, though they be screwed to the floor of the mill and of the annual value of ten pounds.

Rex v. Mellor, 2 East, 189. Removal from Bramhall to Mellor confirmed. The pauper took a house at Stockport, of the value of 5*l.* a year: and he also took from the owner of a mill in S., worked by a steam engine, a standing place in a room for a carding machine of his own, which was worked by the machinery of the engine, and fastened to the floor and the roof of the room. He was to pay his landlord 20*l.* a year, and agreed that each should give the other three months' notice to quit. He had a key to the room, (as had other persons using the room in a similar way,) and the owner had a master key. It was urged against the order of sessions, that the only thing let was the place in the room where the machine was to be fixed: and that therefore the taking was of that part of the tenement itself, and not of the machinery itself, as in former cases. Grose, J. "This was a contract for nothing more than a liberty for the pauper to stand and work his machine in a room of the mill." Lawrence, J. said, that "this was only a license to use the machinery of the mill, and not a letting of any part of the mill itself, and that therefore no settlement could be gained by it." (a)

Nor standing place in a mill for a carding machine.

Rex v. Caversham, 4 B. & C. 683; 7 D. & R. 160. The pauper, a butcher, agreed to occupy one of the several stalls in Reading market at 2*s.* 6*d.* per week. The stall was a permanent building, furnished with a door capable of being locked, and the key was in pauper's possession; but he had a right of access to the stall only on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Bayley, J. "I incline to think that this was a tenement within the statute of Car. II." The case was decided on another point. (See post.)

Butcher's stall.

(a) Rex v. Hammersmith, 8 T. R. 450, n. The pauper's father, Rogers, covenanted with B., the owner of a corn-mill, that he would with his horses and carts deliver and grind at the corn-mill a certain quantity of corn weekly, and pay B. per load. B. agreed, that during the time, Rogers should have the use and liberty of running and grazing fifteen horses in a named meadow, and the use of the stable and cart-house gratis. B. agreed at the expiration of the time to take the utensils of the corn-mill at an appraisement, and pay Rogers the amount. Rogers ground at the mill for two or three years, and resided in the parish. The court were clearly of opinion that there was no colour for construing this agreement into the taking of a tenement. Order confirmed.

In Rex v. Iken, post, 619, Patteson, J. observed on this case, that if it was properly decided, the only ground is, that the meadow was ancillary to the grinding, and not a letting of the land.

3. *What is a Tenement.*3. What is a Tenement, &c.

The pauper took a house consisting of a house-place, a chamber over it, and above that a garret, which extended over the lower rooms in the adjoining house. He afterwards took the adjoining house, in addition to the rest of the premises, from the same landlord, for a year, at 10*l.* rent. The whole was under the same roof, though there was no internal communication. He dwelt in that part which he first hired, and put a journeyman to work in the other. It was held that he gained a settlement under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, by renting a tenement consisting of a distinct building.

3. WHAT IS A TENEMENT UNDER 59 GEO. III. c. 50; 6 GEO. IV. c. 57; AND 1 WILL. IV. c. 18.

By these statutes (ante, 583), which in this respect are the same, the tenement must consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both. In Rex v. St. Andrew's, Cambridge (ante, 592), there was a demise of a house and tolls at an entire rent; and Bayley, J. thought that this was not a tenement within the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. The case was decided on another point.

Rex v. Macclesfield, 2 Bar. & Adol. 870. Upon appeal against an order of two justices, whereby W. Hooley and his wife and son were removed from Adlington to Macclesfield. The sessions confirmed the order. Case:—The pauper, who was a silk weaver, and used to employ journeymen and had looms of his own, about September, 1826, took a house in Compton-row, Macclesfield, at 2*s.* 6*d.* per week. The house consisted of a house-place, a chamber over the house-place, and over that there was a garret, which extended over the lower rooms in the adjoining house. About six months after the first taking, the pauper took the adjoining house under his garret, and under the same roof, from the same landlady, and paid 4*s.* per week for the whole together. In a week or two the pauper called on his landlady, and agreed with her for the whole premises at the same rate for a year. He occupied the premises for nearly two years, paying the rent sometimes once a fortnight and sometimes once a month, as he found it convenient, and the whole rent was paid. He furnished the new part and put into it a journeyman who worked for him, and who paid the pauper 1*s.* 6*d.* per week for it. At one time pauper's step-son, a married man with a family, slept in the new part, the pauper having put a bed in it. The step-son paid the same rent which the pauper did. This was before the pauper let it to the journeyman. There was a passage under the chamber floor and betwixt the two houses, which went from the public street to other houses, and there was no internal communication betwixt the two houses. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I should have been better satisfied if the justices in sessions had themselves found that these premises formed one distinct building. But it seems to me that they have found so in effect, for it is stated that the whole was under the same roof; that being so, it is a distinct building, which satisfies the words of the act." Parke, J. "We must take it from the facts stated in the case that this was one distinct building. I am by no means satisfied that the occupation of a dwelling-house and another distinct building in the same parish may not be sufficient to confer a settlement. The object of the act was to exclude all questions about the occupation of rooms. It appears to me not to be less a tenement within the meaning of the act where one detached house is occupied with another. It is not, however, necessary to decide that point here. That there was a sufficient occupation by the under-tenant is settled by Rex v. Great Bently (10 B. & C. 520), though that will not be sufficient since the new statute 1 Will. IV. c. 18, which requires an occupation by the person hiring the premises." Taunton, J. "To prevent any misconstruction, it must be understood that the court decides on the statement of the facts in this case. It is stated that one garret went over both houses and they were under one roof. It may be too much to say that two dwelling-houses can constitute one distinct dwelling-house, but this is a separate and distinct building. Then there has been an occupation within the words of the act, which does not say by whom the tenement is to be occupied." Patteson, J. "It is not necessary now to decide whether the occupation of two distinct dwelling-houses or buildings in different parts of a parish will be sufficient or not. This was one distinct building under one roof." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Tadcaster, 4 Bar. & Adol. 703; 1 Nev. & Man. 466, S. C. Appeal against an order of removal from Leeds to Tadcaster. Case:—William Silversides, the late husband of the pauper, being settled by apprenticeship in Tadcaster, went to reside in Leeds, and in November, 1827 (subsequently to the passing of the act of 6 Geo. IV. c. 57), took a dwelling-house within the latter township as tenant to W. W., and occupied the same until September, 1830, at the yearly rent of 6*l.* 10*s.*, which rent was duly paid for all that period. In May, 1828, he also took a building used as a shed, where he carried on his business of a bricklayer, situate in Leeds, as tenant to R. M., and occupied the same until September, 1830, at the yearly rent of 5*l.*, which rent was also duly paid for that period. The dwelling-house was wholly separate and distinct from and unconnected with the other building, there being a separate and distinct tenement between them belonging to and occupied by another person. The question for the opinion of the court is whether, under these circumstances, W. Silversides gained a settlement in Leeds. Lord Denman, C. J. "It has often been observed that under the statute of 12 & 13 Car. 2, the word 'tenement' has received a wider construction than the legislature intended to give to it; still we must be bound by the cases which have been decided upon the subject, unless it clearly appears that by some of the later acts an alteration has been made in this respect by the legislature. Now it appears to me that the legislature has not, by any of the more recent enactments, hit this precise case. The same construction has been put upon similar words in the 59 Geo. III. In Rex v. Stowe, Abbott, C. J. says, 'It has been contended that the legislature must have meant the having occupation and payment to be for the same year. If that had been their intention, it would have been easy to say that the occupation and payment should be for such term.' Holroyd, J. says, 'If it had been intended that the occupation should be for the same term as the hiring, the legislature would probably have introduced the words for the said term.' It seems to me that the words 'nor unless' have been used in order to divide the sentence, and to elude the construction now contended for on behalf of the appellants. The 6 Geo. IV. makes an alteration, but, as it appears to me, not an alteration which affects this case. That act says, 'unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both.' I think it would be too much to say that the collocation of the words in this sentence will prevent the acquisition of a settlement by the occupation of any two of the three things there enumerated." Littledale, J. "I am also of opinion that a settlement was gained by renting the house and shed in this case. There has been a discussion as to the meaning of the word 'tenement.' A tenement means that which a man holds, and it is immaterial whether he holds it of one man or of two, or more. The object of the statute was that a man, to gain a settlement, should hold premises to a certain amount, whether they were taken jointly or by distinct takings. Suppose three fields are taken by different hirings, this would not be, as is contended, a tenement. Or suppose a man to take half a field of one person, and half a year afterwards hires the remainder of another landlord, this would not, according to the argument, be an entire tenement. But I think that the meaning of the word 'tenement' is not confined to what a man takes at one time. Then it is said that under the words 'shall consist of a dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both,' it is not competent to join a dwelling-house and building. The language of the legislature is incorrect, but I think that a house and building may be connected; and I will even go further, I think that the word 'both' may mean all three put together." Parke, J. "I am not sure that by our decision we are giving effect to the intention of the legislature, but that intention is most obscurely expressed. In Rex v. Macclesfield (ante, 606,) I inclined to think that the occupation of a dwelling-house and another distinct building might confer a settlement. If they cannot be connected together, then a distinct house and a pigstye, taken at an entire rent of 100*l.* would not confer a settlement. Or suppose a house and detached building of the value of 19*l.* a year, or a house and pigstye of the value of 11*l.*, if they cannot be connected together, then in each case a question as to the apportionment of the rent might arise. I cannot think that the legislature meant that all these questions as to value should be raised. A great deal of litigation will be prevented by the construction which we are putting upon the act. Rex v. North Collingham (post, 611,) has decided that a tenement may be held under two distinct hirings.

rate shed at a rent of 5*l.* He occupied both until September, 1830: Held, that he gained a settlement under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 57.

3. What is a Tenement.

A person rented two houses under one continuous roof, having distinct outer doors and no internal communication: he took the whole at one hiring, but paid distinct rents for them of 6*l.* each per annum; occupied one house himself, and allowed his son exclusive possession of the other. It was held, that by such renting and occupation for a year he acquired a settlement under 6 G. 4, c. 57, s. 2.

A person hiring a house and stable for a year in a parish under different landlords, at rents amounting together to 10*l.*, holding such house and stable, and residing in the house for the year, and paying the whole rent, acquired a settlement in such parish under the act 59 G. 3, c. 50, though the house and stable were entirely separate from each other.

A shop held jointly with an adjoining house, with which it has an internal

For these reasons I am of opinion that the order of sessions ought to be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Iver, 3 Nev. & M. 28; 2 Adol. & Ellis, 228. On appeal against an order of justices removing Edward Ewer from Iver to Rickmansworth. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper never gained a settlement in his own right. His father, Henry Ewer, in 1823 took a house in Iver of Mr. Franklin, for which he paid 6*l.* per annum, and also 1*l.* per annum for a piece of land. In the adjoining house, also belonging to Mr. Franklin, lived another tenant of the name of Dean. No other building adjoined either of the two houses; there was no internal communication between them, and there was a separate outer door to each. Each house had a chimney running up back to back in the partition wall between the houses, and there was one continuous roof over the two houses. A few days previous to January, 1830, Dean quitted, and Henry Ewer proposed to Mr. Franklin to take Dean's house instead of his own. Mr. Franklin agreed, if Henry Ewer could find a tenant for the other. Henry Ewer brought his son William Ewer to Franklin, who refused to take him as tenant. Henry Ewer then agreed with Franklin to become tenant for the whole, and to pay 6*l.* for each house, and 1*l.* for the land; that is, 13*l.* a year; and thereupon Henry Ewer went into the occupation of Dean's house, and let his son into the possession of the other, and the son with his family continued in the occupation thereof till Michaelmas, 1831, when he quitted, and Henry Ewer thereupon gave up that house to Mr. Franklin, who put in another tenant. Henry Ewer paid the 13*l.* rent to Michaelmas, 1831, and Mr. Franklin gave him at each Michaelmas a separate receipt for the rent of each house. From 1823 to Michaelmas, 1831, no alteration was made in the two houses. While the two houses were occupied by Dean and Henry Ewer, and subsequently while they were occupied by Henry Ewer and his son, the occupier of each house was separately assessed to the poor-rate. Henry Ewer did not pay his son's poor-rate, nor did he use any part of his son's house. The question for the opinion of the court was whether Henry Ewer gained a settlement in Iver by renting a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building. Lord Denman, C. J. "It is obvious that in this act the legislature had something in view which it is very doubtful if they have effected. We will take time to look into the statutes." Cur. ad. vult. On a subsequent day in the same term Lord Denman, C. J. said, "In Rex v. Iver we are of opinion, on reference to the statutes, that the renting of the two houses did confer a settlement under 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. The order of sessions will therefore be confirmed." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Gosforth, 3 Nev. & M. 303; 1 Ad. & El. 226. On appeal against an order removing Ann Burkett from Whitehaven to Gosforth, both in Cumberland, the order confirmed. By the case it appeared that the pauper's alleged settlement in Whitehaven was derived from her father. The father, while the act 59 Geo. III. c. 50, was in force, namely, in 1823, hired for a year, of a Mr. Falcon, a dwelling-house in the township of Whitehaven, at the yearly rent and of the yearly value of 8*l.* He also hired for the same year a stable in the same township, of a Mr. Grayson, at the yearly rent and of the yearly value of 6*l.* 6*s.* The stable was not under the same roof with the dwelling-house, nor immediately contiguous or appurtenant thereto, but stood in a different street upwards of two hundred yards off. He held and occupied both the dwelling-house and stable, and dwelt in the dwelling-house for the whole year, and paid the whole year's rent for them. The question was whether, by the occupation of a dwelling-house and stable under these circumstances, the father acquired a settlement in Whitehaven. Lord Denman, C. J. "That observation strengthens the authority, since the court, notwithstanding the opinion so expressed, felt themselves bound by the decision. The order must be quashed." Patteson and Williams, Js. concurred. (Littledale, J. was absent.) Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Rickinghall Superior, 1 Nev. & M. 47. Thomas Churchyard, his wife and eight children, were removed from Rickinghall Superior to Wortham. Upon appeal the court of quarter sessions quashed the order. Case:—The respondents proved a prima facie settlement in the appellant parish, upon which the appellants proved that at Lady-day, 1828, the pauper, who was a cordwainer, hired a dwelling-house in the respondent parish at the yearly rent of 9*l.* 9*s.* from the ensuing Michaelmas, but he immediately entered into the occupation, and at the Michaelmas paid half-a-year's rent. He continued to occupy the dwelling-house under such hiring from Michaelmas, 1828, to Michaelmas, 1829, and paid rent for the same at Michaelmas, 1828; he likewise hired of the same landlord and occupied from the same Michaelmas, 1828, to Michaelmas, 1829, at the rent of 1*l.* 5*s.*, a room which he used as a shop, the room being part of another dwelling-house in the same parish, and distant about four yards from the house in which the pauper lived, and he duly paid rent for the same. This room had an internal communication with such dwelling-house by a door, which door was locked on the pauper's going into occupation. It had also an external communication with the street by a door, by which the pauper entered it. The sessions have found the room to be a separate and distinct building. The question for the consideration of the court is, whether since the passing of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, a settlement can be gained by renting a dwelling-house at the rent of nine guineas, and a separate and distinct building in the same parish at the rent of 1*l.* 5*s.* The court said, "It is very clear the finding is not warranted by the premises as stated in this special case. We cannot send this case back to the sessions to be re-stated. If the case were sent back and the facts only were stated, we should not find this to be a separate building; and if the finding were the same, namely, that the room is a distinct and separate building, and the facts from which that conclusion is drawn were not stated, injustice would be worked." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Wootton, 3 Nev. & M. 312; 1 Ad. & E. 232. On appeal against an order removing Robert Hall and his family from Wootton to St. Mary in Wallingford, the sessions quashed the order. Case:—The pauper Robert Hall being legally settled in the parish of St. Mary, about the year 1800 became tenant of a cottage in the parish of Wootton at the yearly rent of 8*l.*, and resided in it with his wife and family until February, 1832. In April, 1827, a son-in-law of the pauper Robert Hall applied to Hall's landlord, Mr. Harris, and wished to become his tenant of another of his cottages in a different part of the parish of Wootton. Harris declined taking the son-in-law as his tenant, but agreed to let the cottage to the pauper at 5*l.* a year. The pauper never occupied this last-mentioned cottage, but on the same day he let it at the same rent to his son-in-law, who immediately took possession of it and resided in it for about three years and a half, when he quitted it, and the possession thereof was forthwith given to and accepted by Mr. Harris. The rent for the cottage occupied by the son-in-law was paid by him to the pauper, who paid the rent for both the cottages to Mr. Harris, and Harris gave a receipt for the same, amounting to 13*l.*, stating that such sum was paid by the pauper for one year's rent of the two cottages. Littledale, J. (Lord Denman, C. J. was attending the Privy Council.) "I think that in this case a settlement was gained. It is nearly the same in its circumstances as Rex v. Iver (3 Nev. & M. 28; 1 Ad. & E. 228; ante, 608), but independently of that decision, I think the sense of the words in question is not confined to a single dwelling-house. The tenement, by renting which a settlement may be gained, is described in nearly the same words in the three statutes 59 Geo. III. c. 50, 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and 1 W. IV. c. 18; and I take the meaning to have been that the tenement should consist of something in the nature of land; not, for instance, tithes, but something capable of a regular occupation. If such a case as this be not included, the language of the act so far fails to operate according to the intention. Looking at the words, 'a separate and distinct dwelling-house, or building, or land, or both,' I think it makes no difference whether two or more of these descriptions of tenement be held, or one distinct and separate one of either kind. All that is requisite is, that the tenement, in respect of which a settlement is claimed, shall be either one or another of those three, or several of any. The meaning of the word 'tenement' has been narrowed by these acts, but not to the extent contended for." Patteson, J.

communication, is not to be considered as a distinct and separate building. Where upon a special case facts are stated which warrant the judgment of the court below, but that court has drawn an inference which is not warranted by the statement, the order will be confirmed without sending the case back to be re-stated.

A settlement was gained under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, by renting under distinct hirings of the same owner, for the same year, two dwelling-houses, (one of which the tenant underlet, and never personally occupied) at the rents of 8*l.* and 5*l.* a year, in different parts of a parish.

3. What is a Tenement.

"Rex v. Macclesfield (2 B. & Ad. 870; ante, 606) does not go so far as this case; the decision, if it had gone to that extent, would have been extra-judicial. But I am of opinion that the renting here also was within the act. I have always thought that the words, 'a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building,' in these statutes, meant separate and distinct as to any other person, that the tenant should not hold part of a house. But the renting to give a settlement may be of more than 'a dwelling-house, or building, or land, or both, in the limited sense contended for.'" Williams, J. "The act 59 Geo. III. c. 50, was introduced to avoid those perplexing discussions which had arisen as to the kinds of tenement which had before that time been held to confer a settlement, and which being sometimes made up of small items, as for instance, a cow, tenement, and potatoe land (see Rex v. Benneworth, 4 D. & R. 355; 2 B. & C. 775; ante, 603), were very litigious and vexatious. That statute therefore was introduced, confining the description of the tenement in question to land and houses and buildings. But then it became necessary to provide against the joining together portions of different houses to make up a tenement, which would still have left great room for dispute, and therefore it was enacted in 59 Geo. III. c. 50, (and the enactment was continued in the subsequent statutes,) that the dwelling-house or building must be separate and distinct, and I agree that if they be not so a settlement cannot be gained. But the meaning of the legislature in using the words, 'a separate and distinct dwelling-house and building,' no doubt was, that there should be entire holdings, and that settlements should not be gained by a split or subdivided tenement. In this case two things were held by the tenant, both of which are within the express language of the act, he therefore gained a settlement." Order of sessions confirmed.

4. The Tenement need not be entire.

4. THE TENEMENT NEED NOT BE ENTIRE UNDER ANY OF THE STATUTES.

North Nibley v. Wootton-under-Edge, 1 Sess. Ca. 73; 2 Bott, 163. A person rented an ale-house from Lady-day to Lady-day for 6*l.* a year; and in May following rented a piece of land, of the yearly value of 8*l.*, to the following Lady-day, at 5*l.* 10*s.*; after holding the same about two months, he ran away. The Chief Justice: "I do not see why this should not gain a settlement, for he rented a house of 6*l.* a-year, and land at 5*l.* 10*s.* a-year, which does gain a settlement; and he might have come again if you had not sent away his wife and family. Indeed, had he taken the meadow but for a month, I think he would not have gained a settlement, though he paid a rent proportionable to the whole year; for then it would have appeared that he was not thought of sufficient ability to be trusted with it for a whole year. The other judges said, this was a renting of a tenement of 10*l.* per annum, within the meaning of the statute, and that the settlement arose from the value of the lands and tenements that he rented; for by reason of that he was not likely to become chargeable." Both orders quashed.

A house of six pounds a-year, rented of one man, and a stable of two pounds ten shillings a quarter, of another man, is an entire tenement, and gains a settlement, although he is not rated for the stable.

Rex v. St. Margaret, Fish-street-hill, Burr. S. C. 677; 2 Bott, 118. S., residing at Clapham, at his own house, contracted and employed the pauper's father to supply him with a pair of coach-horses for a quarter of a year, at 22*l.*; and the pauper's father contracted with the said S. for a stable belonging to the said S., and was to pay 2*l.* 10*s.* a quarter for it; and the said S. reserved a separate stable for his own use. This contract was performed between the parties for two years and upwards. About the latter end of the fourth or fifth quarter, S. threatened to discharge him, but on the importunity of his friends, he agreed that he should continue to furnish him with a pair of horses; and that S. should pay him only 20*l.* a quarter, and have the like quarterly allowance for the use of his stables as before. Under and in pursuance of this contract, they agreed and acted for several years until the pauper's father died, who during the whole of the time rented and lived in a tenement of 6*l.* a year in Clapham, but he was never rated either for his house or the stables. The justices removed the pauper from Clapham to St. M., and the sessions confirmed the order. In support of this removal it was contended, that this was not an independent contract for the stables, but a mere deduction from the price of the job-horses, on account of their standing in S.'s own stables, and that no rent would be payable when the job was at an end. But the court, after taking time to consider, thought the agreement, though awkwardly pursued, was a contract for the stable. Aston, J. "There can be no doubt but it is a good renting. Suppose the master had paid the servant his whole wages, might not he have brought an action for the occupation and use of the stable?"

Rex v. North Collingham, 1 B. & C. 578; 2 D. & R. 743. Mary Barks, the widow of William Barks, was removed from North Collingham to Fulbeck. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper's husband came to reside at North Collingham in 1812, where he hired a house, (being a separate and distinct dwelling-house,) with a garden for a year, and from year to year, at the annual rent of 6*l.* 6*s.*; and he continued to hold and occupy such house and garden, and paid the rent for the same from 1812, to his death in December, 1821; but during the last four years of his holding the house, he let to a lodger, at thirty shillings a year, one of the rooms on the ground floor. The room communicated with the yard appurtenant to the house by an outer door, and with the adjoining rooms of the house by an inner door, of which doors the lodger kept the keys. As there was another outer door to the house, no alteration was made in the house or doors during any part of the period for which Barks was tenant. The room was let unfurnished, and the lodger occupied nothing but the room, and Barks was assessed and rated for the entire house to the poor, the highways, and king's taxes, and paid such assessments during his tenancy. In 1819, (a) the pauper, bonâ fide, hired a piece of garden ground in North Collingham, for a year, at the rent of 3*l.* 15*s.*, which ground he occupied for a year, and paid the rent, and continued in the occupation thereof up to the time of his death.—Abbott, C. J. "The question arises on the construction of the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, which was made for the purpose of restraining the acquisition of settlements by renting tenements. It is a general rule, that acts in pari materiâ shall receive a similar construction. Before the passing of the act, a party might gain a settlement by taking various tenements at different times. The question is, whether, since the passing of the act, the tenement must be taken at one rent, and at the same time? [He then read the statute, which see ante, 583.] Now by this act it is not sufficient that the hiring should be of a tenement of the value of 10*l.* per annum, but the house must be held, and the land occupied, and the rent paid for one whole year; the first question is, whether the pauper held a tenement within the meaning of the statute. Under the former acts a tenement might consist of various parcels taken at different times, and there is nothing in this act to alter the old law in that respect." Bayley and Best, Js. concurred. Holroyd, J. "The word tenement in this statute must receive the same construction as it has in former acts, made in pari materiâ. The statute was only intended to alter the law in the particulars distinctly pointed out; and nothing is said to make it necessary that the whole of the tenement should be taken at one time." (See also Rex v. Tadcaster, ante, 606.)

4. The Tenement need not be entire.

After the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, the pauper held together, for a year, a house and garden, and paid rent for the same during that period. They were taken of different persons at different times. The rent of the house was six guineas: Held, that although there was a separate taking of the house and land, that this was a tenement within the meaning of 59 Geo. 3, c. 50.

5. THE NATURE AND NECESSITY OF A TENANCY.

Rex v. St. Mary, Newington, 1 Nev. & M. 357; 5 B. & Ad. 540. Appeal against an order of removal, whereby E. J. Sanders, his wife and child, were removed from St. Mary, Newington, to St. Mary, Islington. Case:—The pauper's primâ facie settlement derived from his father was admitted to be in the parish of Islington, and the question was, whether his father had acquired a subsequent settlement under the following circumstances. In the month of October, 1818, the pauper's father, the Rev. J. B. Sanders, entered into an engagement with the Rev. J. Mitchell, the rector of St. Nicolas Cole Abbey, Old Fish Street, London, to officiate as curate of that parish; and it was agreed that he should have 80*l.* per annum, and the rectory house to reside in free

A licensed curate according to the 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, and residing in the rectory house pursuant to the same statute, and which was above the value of 10*l.* a year, for more than forty days before the passing of 59 Geo. 3, c. 50. It was held that this was a "coming to settle" within the statute 13 & 14 Car 2. c. 12, and that a settlement was thereby gained.

of rent and taxes; and about that time he commenced his duties as a curate. On the 12th of December following the Rev. J. Mitchell nominated and appointed the pauper's father to be curate of the said parish, but the latter did not go to reside at the rectory house until a week after Christmas, 1818; and on the 2nd of February, 1819, a license was granted him by the Bishop of London, pursuant to the provisions of the stat. 57 Geo. III. c. 99, to perform the office of stipendiary curate in reading the common prayer and performing other ecclesiastical duties belonging to the said office, according to the form prescribed in the book of Common Prayer; and the yearly stipend of 80*l.* was assigned to him, to be paid quarterly, for serving the said cure, with the rectory house, wherein he was directed to reside, and offices, free of rent, repairs, and taxes. The pauper's father did all the duties of curate from October, 1818, till his death in the year 1829; and from a week after Christmas, 1818, till his death, he resided at the rectory house, which was a separate and distinct dwelling-house, worth more than 10*l.* a year, free of rent, repairs and taxes, and receiving the yearly stipend. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the pauper's father, by occupying the rectory house in the manner stated gained a settlement in the parish of St. Nicolas Cole Abbey, Old Fish Street, London. Denman, C. J. "The kind of settlement relied upon in this case has grown out of the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, which confines the power of removal to cases where persons come to settle on any tenement under the yearly value of 10*l.* and by implication has been held to confer a settlement on a person who comes to settle on a tenement of that value; and the lawful occupation of a tenement of that annual value by a party in his own right, has been held to satisfy the words coming to settle. The word 'renting' is not to be found in the statute. It is true that this settlement is most generally considered to be acquired by renting, because the renting shows the occupation to be independent and for the convenience of the occupier, and not for that of the landlord; and on this principle many of the cases where a distinction has been taken between an occupation as tenant and an occupation as servant proceed: the statute however does not require that there should be an occupation as tenant, but a mere coming to settle; and here I think it quite clear that the pauper's father came to settle in the parish of St. Nicolas Cole Abbey." Parke, J. "It is not clear that the curate is not tenant to the rector; but it is not necessary for the purpose of gaining a settlement that he should be so. It is sufficient if he comes to occupy as having an interest of his own, and not as servant to another." Taunton, J. "The statute 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, which makes the taking a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l.* per annum confer a settlement, is confined to persons residing under a certificate. To satisfy that statute, there must undoubtedly be a contract for renting; but this is a case within the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, which has been held to give a settlement to any person coming to settle on a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* The case of occupation is usually founded on the renting of a tenement of 10*l.* a year, yet it is not necessary that it should be under a renting, or in the character of tenant. Here the pauper's father had a lawful possession of a tenement of the required value, and an interest therein sufficiently permanent to denote a coming to settle; and that is sufficient to satisfy the 13 & 14 Car. II. even though the occupier is exempt from payment of rent, or has not the character of tenant. The case comes within the doctrine of the passage cited in the argument from Mr. Nolan's Poor Law, which, though not strictly authority, is entitled to respect." Patteson, J. "There was clearly a coming to settle by the pauper's father, unless the occupation of the curate is in all cases to be considered the occupation of the rector, which, it clearly is not. I do not see any analogy between this case and the cases of master and servant referred to in this argument." Order of sessions confirmed.

Pauper, in 1813, rented a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* The bargain with the owner was, that the pauper should live a month in it

Rex v. Helsham 2 B. & Ad. 620. Appeal against an order of removal of R. Wray and his wife from Market Weighton to Helsham. Case:—On the 1st November, 1813, the pauper Richard, being then legally settled in the parish of Helsham, came to reside on a tenement in the parish of Sculcoates of more than the yearly value of ten pounds. He entered upon it a fortnight after Michaelmas. The bargain with the owner of the tenement was, that the pauper should live a month in it for nothing on trial; and that if he liked it he should take it at Martinmas, at the yearly rent of 14*l*. The pauper resided upon it for a month on trial, and then, according to the agreement above mentioned, took it at Martinmas, at the yearly rent of 14*l*., and without any interruption in the residence continued on it for the following month. He then quitted the parish altogether, and did not subsequently acquire any settlement elsewhere. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement in Sculcoates. It is clear that he actually resided there more than forty days on a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l*. Then it is said that when he first came there he had not an absolute intention to settle for so long a time as forty days, but that it was his intention to try whether the premises would suit him; and if they did, then to stay for a year. There is no authority to show that the original intent of the party must be absolute and unqualified to continue for forty days, and I am unwilling to introduce a new term or condition to the gaining of a settlement by coming to settle on a tenement. Here the intention of the pauper was to stay for one month certain, and perhaps for a year; and it has been properly observed that the recital in the statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, does not import a permanent intent, but applies only to persons coming to settle for a short time." Littledale, J. "The statute 13 & 14 Car II. c. 12, does not require that the party should come to settle permanently, or should make a contract to occupy for a year. The time for which the tenement is taken is unimportant, provided there be an occupation for forty days. Accordingly, taking land from June till Lady-day following, or a house for five months, or a room for a week, has been held sufficient. (Staunton-under-Barndon v. Ulescoft, Burr. S. C. 558; St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, v. St. Botolph's, Burr. S. C. 574; post, 632; and Rex v. Whitechapel, 2 Bott, 132, pl. 187; post, 641.) The question really is, whether the party, after he came to the tenement, was irremovable, and whether he resided there forty days? Here it depended on himself whether or not he would remove during that time. If he chose to continue after the first month he might do so by the terms of his contract, and he elected to continue and did reside forty days. He therefore gained a settlement, having an interest as tenant during the whole of that term. In Rex v. Netherseal (4 T. R. 258; post, 628), Ashhurst, J. says, 'that in order to acquire a settlement by taking a tenement of 10*l*. a year, it is not absolutely necessary that there should be an express contract for the tenement: it is sufficient if the tenant reside forty days on a tenement of such a value with the permission and consent of the landlord, for in such case the law implies a contract. Here the pauper resided during forty days with the consent of the landlord, and therefore gained a settlement.' Parke, J. "My first impression upon reading this case was that no settlement was gained by the pauper in Sculcoates; that in order to gain a settlement by coming to settle, there must be an intention to reside permanently; but I am now satisfied that I was wrong. The question turns upon the meaning of the words 'coming to settle,' and some light may be thrown on that point by the resolution of the judges of assize in 1633. One of them was, 'that the law unsettleth none who are lawfully settled, nor permits it to be done by practice or compulsion; and every one who is settled as a native, householder, sojourner, an apprentice, or servant for a month at the least, without a just complaint made to remove him or her, shall be held to be settled.' It would appear therefore from that resolution, that the word settle did not import any thing permanent. Here it is clear that the pauper's original intention was to reside for a month at least; and in fact he resided for two months, and in the character of tenant. He had an interest during the first month, though no rent was to be paid, and he afterwards had an interest in the premises for a year, and he resided during forty days, having during that time an interest as tenant. A person coming into a parish casually for some temporary purpose will not thereby acquire a settlement; but a person coming to reside in a house with a purpose of making it his home and continuing there for forty days, does by that residence become settled." Taunton, J. "The statement in the case, that the pauper was to live in the house a month on trial, created an impression in my mind that he for nothing on trial, and that if he liked it he should take it for a year at the rent of 14*l*. He resided on it for a month on trial, and then took it at the rent agreed upon, and without any interruption in the residence continued on it for the following month, and then went away. It was held that he thereby gained a settlement.

had no interest in the premises during the first month sufficient to confer a settlement, but I am now satisfied that in that respect I was wrong. It appears from the case, that the bargain was that the pauper should live a month in the house for nothing on trial; and if on that trial he liked it, he should take it at Martinmas at the yearly rent of 14*l.* The intention was to ascertain whether the house would suit him, but at all events he was to have it for a month. The occupation during that month was by leave and license of the owner, who could not lawfully disturb him; he then took it for a year at a certain rent and occupied for a month, and the two occupations may be coupled together so as to make up the forty days. There are many cases to show that a tenant at will or by sufferance, not paying any rent, may gain a settlement by residing on a tenement." Order of sessions quashed.

A purchase of a crop of growing oats at an auction, is not a holding as tenant.

Rex v. Bowness, 4 M. & Sel. 210. Where a person rented and resided on a tenement of 4*l.* a year, and in the same year bought at a public auction, on 12th August, four lots of oats growing on the field, for 12*l.* 14*s.*, which oats were of different kinds, that ripened at different periods, and he began to reap them on the 14th September, and continued reaping them as they ripened, and carted them away at intervals between the 14th September and 3rd November, on which day he carted off the last load; the court held that he did not thereby acquire a settlement; and Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "It appears to me that it has been uniformly adopted as the rule for construing the statute of Car. II. as much as if the word itself had been inserted in the statute, that the coming to settle in, means by renting or holding in the character of tenant. It is true this word renting is not in the statute, but what is found in the subsequent statute, 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, shows pretty well how the statute of Car. II. was understood; for the subsequent statute enacts, 'that no person who shall come into a parish by certificate shall gain a settlement therein, unless he shall take a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l.*' &c. Therefore, certainly this enactment was framed upon an understanding that the coming to settle in the stat. of Car. II. meant a taking under a letting or renting. Upon a subject like this, one is afraid to enlarge, lest what may be said should lay the foundation of future discussions. What has been said already upon the subject has, according to my understanding of it, reached the extreme limits of common sense. It is therefore sufficient to say upon the present occasion, that this was a purchase and not a renting, or in any way a holding as tenant, and upon that construction this person did not gain a settlement. I feel no inclination to extend the decisions upon this subject; indeed I hardly go with them to the extent that they have gone already, and think it much better in this case to abide by the statute." Le Blanc and Bayley, Js. were also of opinion that no settlement was gained, upon the ground that the pauper had not a tenement of the value of 10*l.* by the year for forty days, because his interest diminished in value de die in diem, as he cleared the land, and it was consistent with the statement, that before forty days from the 12th August he had cleared so much as would reduce the tenement below the yearly value of 10*l.*

A servant may be a tenant.

Rex v. Melkridge, 1 T. R. 598. Case:—The pauper's father was appointed herd to several persons having a right of common on an extensive waste. He entered on his employment, and removed to a house situate on the common, where he resided several years. As a reward for his services, he was allowed the exclusive enjoyment of the house and some meadow ground adjoining. The house and ground were worth 20*l.* It was contended that he did not occupy the tenement as his own, but as servant of the commoners, who had no power to grant such license. But the court thought no doubt could be entertained on the question: the service of the pauper was equivalent to paying his rent, and that the commoners, instead of giving him wages, had permitted him to occupy this house. The pauper had the exclusive enjoyment of it, and possession could not be stated in stronger terms.

The pauper was hired as bailiff, at confirmed. Case:—The pauper, a few days before Michaelmas, 1808, was hired as bailiff by Parker, who had a farm at Bishopsbourne, and resided great part of the year about three miles distant. The agreement made between the pauper and his master was, the pauper was to have 10s. per week for wages; was to be allowed by his master pork at 5s. per score, and grist at 4s. per bushel, for the use of his family, these prices being lower than the general prices. His master was to find him a house, and was either to furnish him with two cows, or the pauper was to be at liberty to hire two, and feed them on his master's farm. The pauper went into the service of Parker under the agreement at Michaelmas, 1808, and continued until Michaelmas, 1811, and he lived in the house of his master at Bishopsbourne, and occupied the kitchen and two rooms up-stairs, and his wife took care of the house. The pauper hired two cows, which fed during the summer in the pastures of his master, and in the winter in his master's straw yard with straw that was grown upon his master's lands. The rooms occupied by the pauper in the house of his master were not of the yearly value of 10*l.*, but the pasturage and keep of the cows upon the lands of his master were above that yearly value. After argument, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "Here the pauper had a profit issuing out of the land to be taken in loco certo, which has been adjudged by the cases to be a tenement. The distinction between the occupation of a servant in the house of his master and this has been adverted to, and the argument, as it seemed to me, has been properly answered, that the apartments of the servant are only as an appendage of the service; they are allotted to him for the more convenient performance of the service, which is the principal thing. Here it is stated that the pauper hired two cows, and that they were kept on the land of the master during the summer months; and it does not appear that this was connected with the service, or that it was necessary, for the convenient performance of it, that he should have the two cows. In this respect, therefore, this case may be distinguished from that of servants having apartments in the houses of their master for the better discharge of their duties to their masters. The case now before the court falls within those which have been decided, particularly Rex v. Melkridge (1 T. R. 598; ante, 614), the only difference being, that there he was the servant of many persons, here he is the servant of one only; still the compensation for the tenement in both is the same, namely, the service of the pauper, which the court held to be equivalent to his paying rent." Le Blanc, J. "If this case depended upon any consideration involving the value of the apartments or lodging which the pauper occupied in the house of the master, I should not think the case of Rex v. Melkridge an authority that called upon us to decide in favour of the settlement; but it is stated that the yearly value of the pasturage, independently of the house in which the pauper resided, was upwards of 10*l.* That being so, the cases which have been determined have held, that whether the pauper pay in service or in money it shall be a coming to settle on a tenement. In this case, if the pauper's occupation of the tenement was necessarily connected with the service of the master, as in the case of occupying apartments in the house of the master, I should have no hesitation in saying that that would not have conferred a settlement, although of a greater yearly value than 10*l.*, because the occupation would have been necessary for the performance of the service, for which the master might allot what apartments he pleased. In like manner, if the master had allotted to the pauper so much milk a day, I should have thought the pauper would not have gained a settlement. But in the present case the pauper has a distinct interest in the pasturage of the two cows, unconnected with his service to the master's dairy, and this liberty of taking the profits out of land is found to be of greater value than 10*l.* I do not know therefore how to distinguish this from the cases already decided." Bayley, J. "A clear and particular distinction enabling us to decide this case has been pointed out. Here something is given to the servant unconnected with the service. It is the same thing as if the servant had stipulated that as he had a family he must have certain land for his own occupation, and that the master should allow him to become a distinct occupier of land to the value of 10*l.* a-year. If that had weekly wages, and allowed the feed of two cows in the pastures of his master. It was held that the feeding of the cows, being above the yearly value of ten pounds, gave the pauper a settlement.

By one entire contract a master agreed to give his servant 20*l.* a year, a cottage to live in, and the agistment of one cow for his own services; and 28*l.* and the agistment of another cow in consideration of his lodging and maintaining in the cottage two of the master's labourers. The yearly value of the lands on which the two cows were depastured exceeded 10*l.*, but the yearly value of land sufficient to depasture one cow only would have been less than 10*l.*: Held, that the pauper gained a settlement by the right to agist the two cows.

been so, there are not wanting cases to show that it is not necessary that a rent should be paid in money, or indeed that there should be any rent at all, in order to constitute him the occupier of a tenement, but a service is quite sufficient. The case of the herdsman (Rex v. Melkridge) is full to that point. If that be so, what is the present case but that of a servant who stipulates for a profit out of land of more than the yearly value of 10*l.* for which he is to pay in service." Orders quashed. (See Rex v. Nacton, 3 B. & Ad. 543, ante, 601.)

Rex v. Cherry Willingham, 1 B. & C. 626; 3 D. & R. 13. Removal of Matthew Bolding from Hougham to Cherry Willingham. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, at May-day, 1817, contracted to become the ground-keeper of John Hill, in respect of his farm at Hougham. The master, by one entire contract, agreed to give the pauper 20*l.* a year, a cottage to live in, and the agistment and whole profits of one cow for his own services; and the sum of 28*l.* and the agistment of and whole profits of another cow in consideration of his lodging and maintaining in the cottage two of his (Hill's) labourers. The pauper resided under these terms in Hougham, during the year, taking the whole profits of the cows, receiving his wages, the allowance of 28*l.* and maintaining the two servants. The annual value of the lands on which the two cows were depastured exceeded 10*l.*; but the land necessary for one cow only would not be of that value, that is to say, the annual value of the agistment of two cows upon the land in question would be worth 10*l.* a year; but of one cow would not be 10*l.* a year. Abbott, C. J. delivered the judgment of the court: "We have considered this case, and are of opinion that the pauper acquired a settlement in Hougham. The tenement in question is the pasturage of two cows. It is found that the annual value of the land whereon the two were depastured exceeded 10*l.*; that the annual value of the agistment of the two would be worth 10*l.*; but of one, then not 10*l.* It was therefore contended, in support of the orders, that although the pasturage of one of the cows must be considered as a tenement upon the authority of decided cases, yet that the pasturage of the other was not a tenement, and this upon a difference in the terms of the contract. It is found that the contract was an entire contract, that the master agreed to give the pauper 20*l.* a year, a cottage to live in, and the agistment and whole profits of one cow for his own services; and the sum of 28*l.* and the agistment and whole profits of another cow, in consideration of the pauper's lodging and maintaining at the cottage two of the master's labourers. The question arose upon the cow thus last mentioned. Now, by this contract, the pauper does not engage to employ the milk of the latter cow in the maintenance of the labourers: he might, if milk formed a part of their diet, as it may be presumed to have done, have given the milk of the other cow, or he might have procured milk for them elsewhere, and might have sold or otherwise disposed of the milk of both the cows provided by his master. So that we cannot say the milk was given or appropriated for the maintenance of the labourers; but must say that it was given in consideration of the maintenance of the labourers. And the consideration given or paid for a tenement is wholly immaterial on a question of settlement, if the yearly value be 10*l.* Whether the consideration be paid in money, or by services rendered, or by any other matter beneficial to the party receiving, was of no importance at the time in question, which was before the 59 Geo. III. c. 50. We therefore think that the difference, as it was called in this contract, does not lead to any legal distinction which can justify us in saying, that the agistment of the latter cow was not a tenement." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Bardwell. (See case, ante, 600.) Bayley, J. to his judgment there reported, added, "There is another point also which makes it extremely doubtful whether the pauper could have gained a settlement, had the going of the sheep constituted a tenement of 10*l.* annual value. The house and garden being merely for the more convenient performance of the pauper's service as shepherd, must be laid out of consideration; he did not occupy them as a tenant, but as a servant. The stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, requires that the party should come to settle on the tenement; now that means to reside. In all the cases determined on this part of the act, the pauper resided upon some part of that which constituted the tenement. There are cases where a party, from kindness, was allowed to reside in a house rent free, that was held to be a tenement. But here the pauper had no residence but in the character of a servant, the house continued the master's, and the pauper was, with respect to this point, in the same situation as if he had lived in a room in his master's house. The two cases referred to differ from this, for in each of them the pauper had property of his own in the parish, and was on that ground held to be irremovable. Rex v. Denbigh (ante, 591) also is distinguishable, for there the pauper lived in the toll-house as his own residence; and it would have been such a tenement as would confer a settlement, but for an act of parliament, which says, that no gatekeeper shall gain a settlement by renting the tolls and residing in the toll-house. For these reasons I think that the pauper did not gain a settlement in Ixworth." Best, J. "In Rex v. Minster (ante, 614) the principal point was given up, viz. whether the feeding of the cows constituted a tenement; but the court there thought that a house occupied by the pauper merely as a servant did not constitute a tenement. The legislature could not have intended mere residence as a servant, but that the party should gain credit and reside as a tenant. If that be so, the pauper, on this ground also, gained no settlement in Ixworth.

Rex v. Shipdham, 3 D. & R. 384; 2 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 89. Order of removal of John Hall, &c. from Shipdham to Thursford quashed. Case:—In March, 1818, Sir Charles Chadd, leaving his mansion-house and estate at Thursford, agreed with the pauper to take care of his garden; and for his so doing the pauper was allowed to take the profits of part of the garden, and to live in a cottage contiguous, belonging to Sir Charles, of the yearly value of 4*l.*, to which a small common right was attached. The pauper was to continue in the premises for a year before any further agreement was to take place between him and Sir Charles, unless some other person should before that time occupy the mansion, &c. in which case the gardens, &c. were to be delivered up by the pauper. The pauper continued in the occupation of the garden under the above terms for a year and a quarter. The produce of the garden was worth 70*l.* a year to the pauper, and the expense of keeping up the pleasure grounds, &c. together with the value of the pauper's labour, would amount to as much as the profits which the pauper was allowed to take." Bayley, J. "Where did the pauper reside? Not upon a tenement of his own. He resided in a cottage of Sir Charles Chadd's, and we were of opinion yesterday, (a) that in order to confer a settlement by renting a tenement, the party must have a residence which might be called his own home, as tenant; and that where he resides in the character of servant merely, that would not be sufficient to satisfy the words of the statute, 'coming to settle.' This pauper had the garden merely as servant." Holroyd and Best, Js. concurred.

Rex v. Seacroft, 2 M. & Sel. 472. Removal from Leeds to Seacroft. Order confirmed. Case:—The husband of the pauper while renting and occupying a house in Leeds of the yearly value of 6*l.* engaged himself as waiter at the hotel in Leeds, and at the same time had the tap, that is, the privilege of selling malt liquors there; and for the convenience of holding his liquors, had the use of the cellar belonging to the hotel, which had a distinct and separate entrance, and of which he kept the key. He paid in the whole for his situation as waiter, and for the tap and cellar, the yearly sum of 60*l.* The annual value of the cellar, independently of the privilege of the tap, was upwards of 6*l.* The court said, "That there did not appear to be any taking of the cellar as a tenant, but the use of it was only a privilege allowed him in respect of the principal thing, which was the hiring himself as a waiter. That before a party can be said to come to settle in a tenement there must be something like a taking of it as a tenant." Order confirmed.

A waiter at an hotel had the tap or privilege of selling malt liquors there, and the use of the cellar for holding the liquors, which had a separate entrance, and of which he kept the key; he paid for his situation of waiter and for the tap and cellar the yearly sum of 60*l.*: Held, not such an occupation of the cellar as to confer a settlement.

(a) See Rex v. Bardwell, ante, 600, 616.

5. The Tenancy.

The pauper agreed to serve as a labourer for 20*l.* a year, a house and garden, a piece of land for potatoes, the milk of a cow, and feeding a pig; under this agreement he served, and had the exclusive occupation of the house for himself and family: Held, not a coming to settle on a tenement to confer a settlement.

Rex v. Kelstern, 5 M. & Sel. 136. The pauper, a married man, agreed to serve S. for a year as a labourer, and was to have 20*l.* a year, a house and garden, a piece of land for potatoes, the milk of a cow, and feeding of a pig, which were to run on a neighbouring field: the pauper had the exclusive occupation of the house, the house was about 100 yards from the house of S., a house was necessary for the performance of his service, and if he had not had it he would have had more wages. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I own I have no doubt in this case that the only occupation of this house was the occupation of the master and not of the servant, whom the master placed there for the mutual convenience of both parties. The master's house was about 100 yards distant from it, and the servant had it thrown into the bargain in cumulation of wages. This may be compared to rooms allotted to a coachman over the stables of his master, or to an out-house, where, being a family-man, it is more convenient that he should be out of the dwelling-house; but that is nothing more than the occupation of the master. So here I cannot see that the occupation goes farther. In Rex v. Melkridge (ante, 614) the question did not turn upon whether it was an occupation by the herdsman or the commoners who employed him, for it did not appear that the commoners ever had an occupation in any way, but the herdsman had it exclusively. At present it seems to me to be incontestably plain that this was nothing more than the occupation of the master by the servant. Therefore the house cannot go to form a part of the tenement so as to make up the value of 10*l.* a year." Bayley, J. "I take the distinction as laid down in Rex v. Minster (ante, 614) to be this, that if the occupation be unconnected with the service it will confer a settlement; but if it be necessarily connected with the service, as if it be necessary for the due performance of the service, it shall not confer a settlement. Now from this case I collect that the occupation of the house was necessary for the performance of the service; therefore it must be taken as the occupation of the master, and not of the servant." Abbott, J. "I am glad that the court is not called on to decide that this is a coming to settle on a tenement, for it would tend to deprive labourers in husbandry of many comforts accruing from this species of agreement. If it contained a settlement farmers would be unwilling to grant those advantages, for the loss of which no probable addition of wages would afford an adequate compensation in point of comfort."

A pauper, employed as a labourer by the board of ordnance, having previously occupied a house at an annual rent of 7*l.*, which was then purchased by the board, still continued to reside in part of the premises, at a weekly rent of 2*s.*, which was deducted out of his wages, and during such last occupation he also occupied a shop (the shop and house together being of the annual value of 10*l.*), and upon his dismissal from his employment he gave up possession of the house as required: Held, that his last occupation of the house was not as a tenant, but as a servant, and that no settlement was thereby gained.

Rex v. Cheshunt, 1 B. & Ald. 473. A pauper employed as a labourer by the board of ordnance, having previously occupied a house at an annual rent of 7*l.*, which was then purchased by the board, still continued to reside in part of the premises at a weekly rent of 2*s.*, which was deducted out of his wages, and during such last occupation he also occupied a shop (the shop and house together being of the annual value of 10*l.*) and upon his dismissal from his employment he gave up possession of the house as required. The board had several other houses for their labourers, which they occupied only as long as they were in the employment of the board. The court held, that his last occupation of the house was not as tenant, but as servant, and that no settlement was thereby gained. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "In this case it seems to me that the party occupied this house as a servant only, and not in the character of a tenant. It is like the case of a coachman, who frequently occupies a room over the stables, but such occupation is not within the meaning of 13 & 14 Car. II. The pauper here was divested of the tenement as soon as his service terminated. He quitted the possession reluctantly, and was succeeded by the person who succeeded him in his employment under the board of ordnance. All this clearly shows that he was only entitled to hold it during and for the more convenient performance of his service. If the court should hold in this and similar cases, that the legal relation of landlord and tenant subsisted, it would become necessary to turn such persons out of possession by the regular proceedings in ejectment, and every gentleman having twenty or thirty cottages in which his labourers resided, would be compelled, on any change of their service, to have recourse to such means. This would be productive of the most serious inconvenience. Upon the whole view of this case, I think it plainly appears that the relation of landlord and tenant never did subsist here, and unless that were so, this was not an occupation within 13 & 14 Car. II." Bayley, J. "Rex v. Minister (ante, 614) only decided that the occupation of a tenement which was wholly unconnected with the service would confer a settlement; but that the occupation of one connected with the service would not. In this case the tenement is connected with the pauper's service under the board of ordnance."

Rex v. Iken, 4 Nev. & M. 117; 2 Ad. & E. 147. Appeal against an order of removal from Iken to Frostenden. Case:—In 1813, George Chambers, being at that time a married man, and settled in Frostenden, went into the service of Samuel Barnes, of Iken, as a pot maker. Barnes rented a considerable farm in the parishes of Iken and Sudbourne, including a pot-kiln and sheds in Iken. Chambers was to make and burn pots; to do which he was to have the use of the kiln, sheds, and yards. Barnes was to keep the kiln and sheds in repair; to furnish and cart off all the clay wanted, and supply horses to grind it twice, and to find red lead, with whins and coal for burning the pots. Chambers was to receive 25 per cent. on the sale of the pots, for making and burning them; Barnes was to receive 25 per cent. for the use of the kiln, sheds, and yards, and preparing and carting the clay, and also for carting out the ware when sold; another 25 per cent. for coals, whins, and red lead; and the remaining 25 per cent. was allowed to shopkeepers for selling the goods. Chambers resided in a cottage in Iken, which he rented of Barnes for three guineas a year, and worked the kiln until 1815; when Barnes, being dissatisfied with the ware made by Chambers, put an end to the foregoing agreement without notice; and the parties entered into a new one, as follows:—The average number of kilns burnt, during the year, was about twelve; and, the value of each being about 24*l.*, it was agreed that Chambers should pay Barnes 6*l.* after each burning, for the use of the kiln, sheds, and yards, and for furnishing, carting, and grinding the clay, and carting the ware out when sold. Barnes was to keep the kiln sheds in repair, as before; to provide red lead, coals, and whins for burning the pots; for which Chambers was to allow him in the settlement of accounts; and Chambers was to dig the clay, and do as he pleased with the ware. Chambers continued to reside in the cottage at the same rent, and worked the pot-kiln under this second agreement until 1828, when he died. The clay furnished by Barnes was dug and carted in the winter time, for the succeeding summer, from lands in Sudbourne occupied by him, except for one season only, when it was taken from other lands in Iken not occupied by Barnes. The cottage, with the kiln and sheds, and land on which they stood, without the clay, were worth more than 10*l.* a year; but the clay itself was worth 15*s.* a year only. The question was, whether Chambers came to settle upon a tenement within the meaning of 13 & 14 Car. 2. Lord Denman, C. J. "I think a settlement was gained in this case. It is contended that Chambers's occupation under the second agreement was merely a continuation of that under the first; that he had no independent interest, and that his occupation was merely ancillary to a service. But looking at the second agreement, I own I think he had an independent interest, and that he was not liable to be turned out at will. It is true that there are expressions in this case respecting the earlier agreement, which render it doubtful whether a settlement could have been gained by that; and we find that Barnes actually exercised the power of putting an end to it without notice, on being dissatisfied with Chambers. That fact, however, does not go far to interpret the agreement; and, at any rate, we cannot import the first agreement into the second, which appears to me to confer a substantial interest, and one under which Chambers was entitled to remain. Perhaps the best illustration of this case is that of Rex v. Seacroft (2 M. & Sel. 472; ante, 617,) where the alleged occupation was merely ancillary to the service, and consequently conferred no settlement. There, however, the party was engaged expressly as a servant. But here the party had a right to remain as long as he kept his agreement. He therefore had an interest which gave him a settlement." Taunton, J. "I am of the same opinion. If we had the first agreement only, it certainly would be a material fact, that the pauper went into Barnes's 'service;' and I should pause before saying that, in that case, I could infer a contract for a tenement. But the second agreement supersedes the first; and whatever my opinion on the first might be, under the second there was clearly a taking. The pauper had the property in the pots manufactured, the landlord finding the clay, red lead, coals, and whins necessary for the manufacture, and Chambers paying 6*l.* after each burning. Then it is found, as a fact, that the cottage, with the kiln, sheds, and land, is worth more than 10*l.* a year. Here the principal object of the contract clearly was, that the pauper should have the use of the kiln, sheds, and yard; and he could not have the use without the occupation. At the same time, if the occupation were merely ancillary to a service, it would not confer a settlement. But here I apprehend that there is no service. Chambers could not be called a servant at all under the second agreement. The use of the building and yards was in the pauper, and the property in the pots, when manufactured, was in the pauper. I agree in the decisions of Rex v. Ches-hunt (1 B. & Ald. 473; ante, 618), Rex v. Langrville (10 B. & Cr. 899; ante, 603), Rex v. Bowness (4 M. & S. 210; ante, 614), and Rex v. Seacroft (2 M. & S. 472; ante, 617). Rex v. Hammersmith (Note to Rex v. Dodderhill, 8 T. R. 450; ante, 604), is the strongest case; and it is somewhat difficult to distinguish it from the others: but I observe that counsel there gave up the settlement, and the reasons for the judgment are not stated: the only ground on which the decision, if right (and I do not say it was not), can be justified, is, to suppose that the court considered the grazing of the horse in the meadow, and the using of the buildings, to be ancillary to the principal contract. But that is a different case from this. Rex v. Seacroft is also distinguishable. There the pauper went into service expressly as a waiter: it never was contended that he was a tenant: it was a mere contract of service: he was to have the use of the tap and cellar, which is a profitable privilege often enjoyed by the principal waiter at large inns; it was a privilege, therefore, attached to him in reference to the principal thing; that is, to his contract as a waiter, which is inconsistent with the character of a tenant. Here the principal object was to enable the pauper to manufacture the pots, which he could not do without the buildings and yards. It is therefore a case of use and occupation." Patteson, J. "I ground my opinion on my construction of the second agreement: we are not called on to construe the first. Under the second agreement the relation of master and servant did not exist: such a relation is quite inconsistent with the stipulations. The pauper is to pay 6*l.* after every burning, and to burn what he pleases. Barnes, who had been dissatisfied with the old agreement, exercises under the new one no superintendence as master, or even as partner. The 6*l.* is evidently paid by way of rent. As to the cases cited, none of them create any difficulty, except Rex v. Hammersmith. That case is certainly very loosely reported; and I cannot understand the ground of the decision. If the only debated point there related to the grazing in the meadows, and to the use of the buildings, I can understand it; for it may be that the court held that there was merely a license, or, at any rate, not the relation of landlord and tenant. But as to the stipulation respecting the mill, and the taking back of the utensils at a valuation, that part of the case I cannot explain: there must have been something not reported. Perhaps in the present case the sessions ought to have found the fact of relation of landlord and tenant; but it is clear that relation existed." Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion, and that upon the second agreement. Mr. Follett makes use of the first part of the case to explain the second; and if that could be done, there might be some foundation for his argument. He has also noticed the difference of language in the case, in speaking of the cottage and of the other buildings; but that I think arises merely from the sessions having doubted whether the circumstances as to the latter took away the quality which creates an occupation. I think that, under the second agreement, there was an occupation. The case has been argued as if this occupation might be referable to something else, like the situation, for instance, of a waiter or a butler, or, which would be stronger still, that of a porter of a lodge, who would occupy exclusively. But as to that point, I agree with the rest of the court, that the service there explains away the occupation. Here it is not so." Order confirmed.

5. The Tenancy.

The pauper went into the service of B., and, by agreement, was to have the use of a pot-kiln, &c., he paying to B. so much for every burning pot: the pauper resided in a cottage in the same parish, the kiln, &c. and the cottage were worth more than 10*l.* a year: Held, an occupation of a tenement under 13 & 14 Car. 2, s. 1, and a settlement thereby gained.

5. The Tenancy.

Rex v. Croft, M., 60 Geo. III., 3 B. & Ald. 171. Removal from Croft to Stoney Stanton, both in Leicestershire. The sessions on appeal discharged the order, and stated the following case:—The pauper was born in appellants' parish, but was afterwards bound apprentice to and served Edward Stephens, in Croft, for several years. The respondents, in answer to this, produced a certificate from Earl Shilton, acknowledging the father of Edward Stephens, Elizabeth, his wife, and Francis, their child, to belong to that parish. The appellants then proved, that the father of Stephens, after he came to Croft, under the certificate, occupied a house and homestead in Croft, and at the same time some land in Marston, and that in one year, while he was in the occupation of the said premises, he agisted three cows for two or three months in the fields of his landlord. No positive contract for the agistment was proved. The sessions determined that the three cows were agisted for above forty days in the year, and that the average value of the agistment, reckoned by the year, added to the value of the other tenements, made the whole above 10*l.* per annum; but if the value of the agistment, taken only for the time the cows were on the land, were to be added, it would make the whole less than 10*l.* After argument, Abbott, C. J. in delivering the opinion of the court, said, "Upon the authorities there can be no doubt that the facts here stated must be deemed to be a coming to settle upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*, within the meaning of the stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12. The only doubt was, whether a difference of construction might prevail upon the certificate act, the 9 & 10 W. III. c. 11, which is expressed in somewhat more precise terms, viz. 'bona fide take a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l.*' It is obvious, however, that in construing these words reference must be had to the former statute, to supply the word 'yearly,' which is wanting in this statute; and in like manner the words of the second branch of this clause, 'execute some annual office in such parish, being legally placed in such office,' have been construed, with reference to the stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, to require a service of the office for an entire year. Rex v. Tittleworth, (Burr. S. C. 238.) No case has been found in which the stat. 9 & 10 W. III. has received a different construction from the stat. 13 & 14 Car. II., as to the nature of the tenement, or of the taking thereof. On the contrary, it has been decided, that a lease at will is a lease within the certificate act, (Stra. 502.) And in the case of Rex v. Shenston (Burr. S. C. 474; post, 632), Lord Mansfield says, the two acts are to be considered together, being in pari materia." Order of sessions confirmed. A license for a year to use part of the machinery of a mill will not confer a settlement.

Rex v. Butley, Burr. S. C. 107; 2 Bott, 128. The pauper took a lease of a windmill in Benhall for three years, but had a surety who engaged for the payment of the rent. Page, J., said, "the parish officers had nothing to do with looking into the fact of giving security. It is the credit of taking a tenement of such a value, that is the point; were it otherwise, a much greater rent might be insufficient to gain a settlement, though the act requires no more than 10*l.* a year. The visible credit is the grand point."

Rex v. Hooe, 4 East, 362. The pauper took a house in Hooe at 11*l.* per annum, of Pococke, then overseer of the poor of that parish; the pauper, previous to this taking, had had his rent paid by Hooe, and after the taking was relieved by them. Previously to this taking, Porter had agreed to take part of the premises at 5*l.* per annum, and the pauper would not have given so much for the premises if Porter had not promised to take part of them under him. Porter guaranteed the rent to Pococke, who would not have let the premises without such guarantee. But when the agreement was made between the pauper and Pococke, the latter said expressly he made the agreement with the pauper only, and considered none but him as his tenant. There was no fraud; credit was given to the pauper for 6*l.* only, and for the residue credit was given to Porter only. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. gives authority to two justices, on complaint within forty days after any person 'shall come to settle in any tenement,' &c. No doubt this was a coming to settle by the pauper. Then it says, 'upon any

What deemed a "taking a lease of a tenement" within 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 11, so as to discharge a certificate.

Parish officers have nothing to do with the fact of surety being taken for the rent.

And the question in these cases is, whether the pauper were tenant or not; and whether he acquired the interest of a tenant to that value.

5. The Tenancy.

Credit need not be given to the pauper for the rent, if he be the tenant for the premises.

tenement; that includes the character of tenant, in which he comes to settle, which is the principal question here: and then the value, which must be 10*l.* a year to confer a settlement: and here the value of the entire premises was 10*l.* a year. Now as to the principal question, the pauper was to all intents and purposes tenant of the legal estates for the whole; fraud being excluded by the sessions. He was subject to all the liabilities of a tenant. It is stated that the pauper took the premises of Pococke at the rent of 11*l.*, and Pococke said that he demised to the pauper only. Then shall it be said that he had not the whole interest in him, because a surety was required for the rent? Having such a surety has been holden to make no difference. But it is said that the only inducement to the landlord to let to the pauper was the security, and therefore credit was not given to him. But so a man's inducement to take a bill may be the security of the drawer as well as acceptor; still he gives the latter credit. Then where there is a tenement of sufficient value, and a tenant not removable, who is liable to all the burthens of a tenant, and all the liabilities of one, and against whom, as such, every proceeding in law may be had, he gains a settlement by forty days' residence on such a tenement." And Grose, J. said, "that it was not necessary the pauper should have paid the rent; it was sufficient he had credit to be trusted with a tenement of the annual value of 10*l.* It was not necessary for the tenant to have paid the whole rent; for though the rent were paid by others, yet as he had credit for the whole premises, it was sufficient; and he showed that he deserved that credit in the present instance, for he actually paid the whole rent." (So the case stated.) Per Lawrence, J. "It is argued, that unless credit were given to the pauper for 10*l.* a year in value of the rent, no settlement can be gained by him. But I do not know that that is a necessary conclusion. The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, gives power to the justices to remove, on complaint within forty days, any person 'who shall come to settle in any tenement under the value of 10*l.*' &c., unless certain things are done which are required by that statute; but they have no power given to them to remove any person coming to settle in a tenement of that value or upwards. Such a person is not submitted to their jurisdiction at all. The question, therefore, is not a question concerning the credit of the party, but whether in point of fact he came to settle; i. e. acquired the interest of a tenant in a tenement of that value; for if he did, the justices had no power to remove him. Now, upon the facts stated, it is apparent that the pauper had an interest to that amount in a tenement, as the tenant thereof, which prevented him from being an object of removal." Le Blanc, J. "I think sufficient appears to enable us to see what facts and conclusions the sessions meant to submit to our review. And we must, I think, take them to have found, that though the pauper had taken the whole tenement of Pococke, yet that from the guarantee of Porter, who was himself to occupy part under the pauper for 5*l.* a year, the sessions thought that this in effect was an agreement to relieve the pauper from the responsibility of so much of the rent, leaving him only liable for 6*l.* a year, and that that would not confer a settlement on him, but is founded on a mistake in law; for it is immaterial whether credit were given to the pauper for the rent, if he were the tenant of the whole premises."

A tenancy of eight pounds eight shillings per annum in the parish of A., cannot be coupled with a freehold let for fifty shillings per annum in the parish of B., so as to give a settlement in A.

Rex v. South Bemfleet, 1 M. & Sel. 154. Removal from Fobbing to South Bemfleet. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, Henry Brewitt, went to Fobbing, where he rented and lived forty days in a house of the value of eight guineas per annum, having previously to, and at the time of his quitting South Bemfleet, and during his residence in Fobbing, and when the order of removal was made, a freehold estate in South Bemfleet, which he had let at the rent of 2*l.* 10*s.* per annum. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This can never be called an occupation of a freehold interest, where there was no occupation in fact, it being leased out to another, and without some occupation the pauper cannot gain a settlement. The cases have already gone far enough: the mode of reasoning adopted to-day would go to show that having any interest whatsoever was an occupation, and if pushed a little farther would take in property in the funds." Le Blanc, J. "The words of the statute are, 'come to settle in any tenement;' which have been sufficiently departed from already, when it was decided that if a person take a tenement of the value of 10*l.* a year, and underlet a part, he will thereby gain a settlement; but the ground of that decision was, that he had credit to be trusted with 10*l.* a year. Here, however, the pauper had only credit for a less sum than 10*l.* a year, viz., eight guineas a year. But it is said he had property of his own elsewhere, of that however he was not the occupier; but an ingenious argument is raised from what fell from the court in other cases, to show that the principle of those cases is applicable to this, where he never occupied to the value of 10*l.* a year, because it is said that he was not likely to be chargeable, but it is sufficient to say, that those cases are not like the present, and that there is no case which seems to have gone the length contended for." Bayley, J. "According to the argument, if a person having property of his own of 5*l.* a year value in Cornwall, leased it out, and came to occupy a tenement of 5*l.* a year in London, that would be coming to settle in a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and the party would gain a settlement in London. Such a construction of the act would be a violent departure from the words of it." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. John's Glastonbury, 1 B. & Ald. 481. The pauper rented a house and potatoe garden, but not of the annual value of 10*l.* At the same time he occupied freehold land of his own which he had purchased for 10*l.* It was of the yearly value of 1*l.* 10*s.*, making in all more than 10*l.* Before the order was made he sold and gave it up. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "The argument in this case has brought back to my mind the decision in Rex v. Bowness (ante, 614). I think that the coming to settle, in the 13 & 14 Car. II., must mean to settle as tenant; the act having said, that persons who shall come to settle on a tenement of the value of 10*l.* shall not be removable, must be construed to imply that they shall be removable if the tenement be of less value. Now it is clear that at that time a man was not removable who resided on a tenement of less value than 10*l.*, if that tenement were his own property: the legislature, therefore, could not have contemplated a residence on a man's own property, when they used the words 'coming to settle on a tenement.' What is reported to have fallen from me in Rex v. Bowness, was certainly not to be considered as an obiter dictum, but it is confirmed by the authority of Lord Kenyon and Mr. J. Lawrence in the cases cited." Bayley, J. "The legislature must, by the word tenement (see 13 & 14 Car. II.), have contemplated a description of property from which, if of less than 10*l.* yearly value, a party could be removed: now if the property were his own he could not at that time be removed from it, however small its value, therefore it seems to me this is not a tenement within that statute. This is strongly illustrated by 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11. One of the means by which a certificate may be put an end to, is by taking a lease of a tenement, from which it may be fairly inferred that the legislature thought the 13 & 14 Car. II. applied to leaseholders and not to freeholders." Abbott, J. "was satisfied by the argument against his first opinion, that the pauper must come to settle on all as tenant." Holroyd, J. thought that the statute did not apply to a man's own property and said, "but my doubt arises from this; I consider that the statute meant to enact, that when a man resided forty days on property where he was entitled to reside he should gain a settlement. Now, here, the party did reside forty days, and was irremovable all that time. I am therefore rather inclined to think that in so doing he gained a settlement."

6. AS TO JOINT TENANTS. (a)

6. As to Joint Tenants.

Marden v. Barham, Burr. S. C. 311; 2 Bott, 311. Two persons jointly hired a house and land at Marden for 16*l.* a year, and jointly occupied the house and tilled the land for the year and jointly paid the rent, that is, each the like sum. It was urged that this gained no settlement to either of them. And a case was cited between Croft and Gainford, at Durham assizes,

Renting jointly a tenement, which, when divided as to value between the tenants, will not produce ten pounds a year for each tenant, will give no settlement to either.

6. As to Joint Tenants.

Where one originally takes a farm of the annual value of fifty-two pounds, and then takes a partner, the latter will also gain a settlement.

Being joint partner with a person of a farm of one hundred and seventy-six pounds a year, gains a settlement.

1733 (2 Bott, 130), which was a joint taking of 14*l.* a year, each paying separately, the landlord not caring to let to either singly. And the two judges (Lord C. J. Eyre and Reeve) to whom it was referred, held it no settlement, because the statute requires the person's taking a tenement of 10*l.* a year value: whereas this practice of calling in a partner in the taking would, if admitted equivalent to a sole taking, evade and frustrate the statute, and let in an indefinite number of families, all to be settled upon one tenement of 10*l.* a year value. On the contrary it was argued that each was legally tenant of the whole, both being liable to the landlord for the whole rent. By the court: "This was not sufficient to gain a settlement. Whatever remedy the landlord might have against the occupiers of the land for his rent, the act of parliament in the present case considers only the right; which clearly is but to one-half, and that half doth not amount to the value of 10*l.* a year."

Little Tew v. Duns Tew, Burr. S. C. 398; 2 Bott, 168. Richard Guffkyns the pauper, together with John Goodwin his father-in-law, rented a tenement at Duns Tew at 81*l.* a year as partners, and lived there twelve years. And being about to leave Duns Tew, Goodwin alone went to Mr. Keck's agent at Little Tew and took a farm of 52*l.* a year for four years. After the said taking, and before the farm was entered upon, Guffkyns inquired of Goodwin whether he depended upon his going with him to Little Tew? To which Goodwin replied, that he did; for he could not go without him. They both removed from Duns Tew to Little Tew, with their whole joint stock to the value of more than 100*l.*; and managed the farm together for seven years, both of them residing thereon. Keck gave his receipts for the rent to Goodwin only; and once when Keck distrained for rent the distress was made upon the stock, which Keck supposed to be Goodwin's only; and Goodwin alone gave a bill of sale of the stock; and Guffkyns then stood by without interposing. At the end of seven years, just before the order of removal was made, Guffkyns went off from the farm, and Goodwin took the whole stock, allowing Guffkyns 62*l.* for his moiety thereof. It was adjudged by the justices, that this being not a joint hiring but a taking by Goodwin only, Guffkyns, the pauper, did not hereby gain a settlement. By the court: "The words of the statute are, coming to settle in any tenement under the yearly value of 10l. The agreement between the two farmers was, to occupy jointly with a joint stock: that the case doth not turn only upon the credit given to the tenant by the landlord, but upon the credit given by the legislature to a man able to stock a farm of such a value: a tenant may let the whole, or even subdivide it out to the under-tenants, who may thereby gain a settlement, if the tenement be above 10*l.* a year. And where is the difference between the original tenant's letting out part, and his taking in a partner?" And after having taken time to consider of it the resolution of the court was, that Guffkyns gained a settlement in Little Tew. For being taken in partner by Goodwin he is to be considered as having an interest in the farm, at least as tenant at will to Goodwin, of the moiety of a farm worth 52*l.* a year for the whole of it, and consequently his moiety above 10*l.* a year. A tenancy at will, even in the case of a certificate person, is sufficient to gain a settlement, as was determined in Cranley v. St. Mary's, Guildford" (1 Str. 502).

Rex v. Seamer, 6 T. R. 554. John Yates was removed from East Haslerton to Seamer. Order confirmed. Case:—T. Yates, brother of the pauper, took a farm of Sykes, Bart., at East Haslerton, at 176*l.* a year. John resided with him upon the farm, they having agreed to be joint partners in the stock and farm previous to Thomas's taking it, but John did not consider himself as tenant to Sykes. John advanced 120*l.* towards the stock and farm. Thomas was the only person rated in the parish rates, though John said he conceived himself answerable for the payment of his part, and to pay interest accordingly. After seven months, they parted: there was no account of receipts and disbursements. Upon parting it was agreed that John was to allow 20*l.* out of what he had advanced, and to be repaid the remainder, which took place. The court, without hearing counsel, were of opinion that this case was governed by Duns Tew and Little Tew. And Lord Kenyon, C. J. added, "that whether the pauper were considered as a joint-tenant with his brother, or as under-tenant, he equally gained a settlement in East Haslerton." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Tissington, Burr. S. C. 499; 2 Bott, 134. The pauper, Isaac Wibberly, took a farm in Kniveton of 8*l.* a year; and, at the same place, jointly with Thomas Hill, took another farm of 3*l.* 15*s.* a year, and at the taking of the said farm of 3*l.* 15*s.*, it was agreed between Wibberly and Hill, that Hill should take one half of the corn and hay of the 3*l.* 15*s.* farm: and that Wibberly, after Hill had taken and carried away his half part of the corn and hay, should have the whole farm of 3*l.* 15*s.* till Lady-day following, paying 4*s.* for Hill's share of the farm. The question was, whether this were a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*? It was argued that Wibberly was liable (as being joint-tenant with Hill) to pay the whole 3*l.* 15*s.*; and that he was sole tenant of that farm for the last half-year; or, even taking it at the strictest, that he was really and properly to pay 10*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* a year; for he is to pay 8*l.* and half of 3*l.* 15*s.* (which is 1*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and 4*s.* more for the last half year,) which is in all 10*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* But the court unanimously held, "That this tenement, thus rented in Kniveton, was under the yearly value of 10*l.* The act fixes the value at 10*l.* And the value must be estimated by the rent, and always is taken to be according to the rent.(a) And here the rent is 8*l.* a year, and the half of 3*l.* 15*s.*; which two rents taken together do not amount to 10*l.* Indeed he was to pay Hill 4*s.* for the advantage he was to have after the crop was off: but an agreement of this sort between two joint-tenants cannot be considered as rent."

Rex v. Great Wakering, 3 Nev. & M. 47; 5 Bar. & Adol. 971. Appeal against an order of removal from Great Wakering to Great Wigborough. Case:—The respondents having proved a derivative settlement in the appellant parish, the appellants endeavoured to establish a subsequent settlement acquired by the pauper, either by renting a tenement in the respondent parish, or by paying rates in respect thereof, under the following circumstances:—By lease bearing date the 27th February, 1827, made between Catherine Summer, widow, of the one part, and Samuel Bullock, the pauper, and John Clay of the other part, Mrs. Summer, in consideration of the rents and covenants on the behalf of Bullock and Clay to be paid and performed, leased to Bullock and Clay certain freehold premises (therein particularly described), situate in the respondent parish, to hold from the 25th of March then next, for fourteen years, if Mrs. Summer should so long live, at the yearly rent of 16*l.* The lease contained a covenant by Bullock and Clay for themselves jointly and severally, and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for payment of the taxes, rates, and assessments to be charged on the premises (but there was no covenant for payment of the rent); and, previous to the 29th of September then next, to lay out 30*l.* in repairs on the premises, and to keep and leave the same in repair. It also contained a covenant by Mrs. Summer, with Bullock and Clay, to repay them the 30*l.*, in case they should be evicted by any person claiming lawful title. The lease was duly executed by all the parties. Denman, C. J. "It appears to me that this letting did not confer a settlement, because it was a joint letting to two, and as the rent of 16*l.* would be payable by the two lessees, each would be liable only to pay a moiety. But in order to give a settlement, the tenement of each should be of the annual value of 10*l.* In Rex v. Hooe (4 East, 362; ante, 621,) the demise was to one only, and his rent was guaranteed by another person, but the latter was not tenant. Whether the parol evidence be admissible or not, is immaterial; because, assuming it to be receivable, the letting was in fact to the two jointly, and the rent therefore payable by the two, and, consequently, neither rented to a sufficient amount. As to the other ground, that Clay may be considered as having let his moiety to the pauper, that is a fact not found by the sessions, and we cannot infer it." Littledale, J. "The demise being to two as joint tenants, each was entitled to occupy an undivided moiety in his own right. The pauper, therefore, if he occupied the whole, would occupy one half in his own right, and the other half as bailiff to Clay, and would be accountable to him for the profits. He therefore only occupied in his own right a tenement of 8*l.* a year value, which is not sufficient to give a settlement either by renting or by payment of rates." Taunton, J. "The rule laid down by Mr. Nolan (vol. 2, p. 37,) is, that where a tenement is occupied by two jointly, and is of the value of 20*l.* a year, both may gain a settlement, for the moiety occupied by each is of the value of 10*l.* per annum; but where the tenement is occupied by two jointly, and is under 20*l.* per annum, neither can acquire one: and he adds, (from the case of Croft v. Gainford, 2 Bott, pl. 194, 6th edit.) that 'if the law were otherwise, the inconveniences arising from it would be intolerable; for if forty persons, for the same purpose, were to rent a tenement of this value, each of them would be entitled to a settlement; the manifest design of the statute would be thereby eluded, and the parishes would be loaded with poor.' Here, no settlement was gained, because the rent for the whole premises was only 16*l.* per annum, and it was payable by the lessees jointly; and supposing that the parol evidence was properly received, it does not vary the case; for, although it may have been intended that Bullock should be sole tenant, and Clay surety, still the demise by the lessor was to the two jointly, and the rent therefore was payable by them. There is no ground for saying that there was a settlement by rates; for that depends on the same circumstances, precisely, as a settlement by settling on or renting land." Patteson, J. "This is a joint lease to the two as regards the landlord. Whether the parol evidence was admissible as between the parties to this record is immaterial. I think it was admissible as between them, though it would not be so as between the parties to the instrument. All the authorities show, that if there be a joint-tenancy, each of the parties should be interested to the amount of 10*l.* With respect to an under-letting by Clay to the pauper, there were some circumstances to warrant such an inference; but the sessions have not drawn it, and we cannot." Order of sessions quashed.

7. Permissive Occupation is a "coming to settle."

7. PERMISSIVE OCCUPATION IS "A COMING TO SETTLE." (a)

The words "coming to settle" in the 13 & 14 Car. II. are satisfied if the party takes up his residence in the place, although he is not responsible for the rent and taxes of the premises in which he dwells, but has a permissive occupation only.

Where a pauper's brother-in-law, without any authority from the former, and without his knowledge, hired a house at eighteen pounds a year, and allowed the pauper to remain in possession for two years and a quarter, and then, without notice, directed him to quit, which he did immediately, not having paid any rent or taxes during the time: Held, that the pauper was a tenant at will, and thereby acquired a settlement by renting a tenement with in the meaning of the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12.

Rex v. Chediston, 4 B. & C. 230; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 137. Thomas Squire was removed from Halesworth to Chediston. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper occupied a farm in Chediston in 1806, assigned over his farm for the remainder of his term, together with his farming stock and crops, to his brother-in-law Page, upon trust to cultivate the farm, and at the expiration of the lease, to sell the stock and crops for the payment of the pauper's debts, and then to pay over the balance to the pauper. Page acted under this trust till Michaelmas, 1817, when the lease expired, but no final settlement of accounts took place, and nothing was paid to the pauper, his property, as stated by Page, not being sufficient to pay his debts. At Michaelmas, 1817, Page not having any authority from the pauper so to do, and without his knowledge, hired a house in Halesworth, of the value of 18*l.* a year, in which Squire and his family resided. Some of the furniture belonged to Squire, and some to Page. The house was much larger than was required by Squire, and was taken by Page because he could not procure a smaller one. Squire never paid rent for the house, nor parish rates, nor taxes. They were all paid by Page, who was assessed in the parish rates and in the tax collector's assessment for the house. The pauper and his family continued to reside in the house till Christmas, 1819, when Page, without any notice, directed the pauper and his family to quit the house at Halesworth, which he did. Page stated that he considered Squire responsible to him for the rent, but when Page hired the house he did not think he should get the rent. Bayley, J. "It appears to me that there was a sufficient coming to settle on a tenement in Halesworth. The assignment to Page dispossessed the pauper of all right to reside on the farm, and gave Page the complete control over it. Under these circumstances P. took the house in question, not for his own purposes but as a residence for the pauper, who removed to it with his family. It is stated indeed that the house was larger than Squire wanted, and that P. put some of his own furniture into it, but S. had the exclusive occupation; and whether P. hired the house as agent for S., or whether he hired it for himself and underlet to S., still the latter was tenant; there might be a difficulty in saying that P. was agent; but then it is clear that S. was tenant at will to him; and Rex v. Fillongley, (post, 629), and Rex v. Lakenheath (post, 631), are decisive authorities that such a tenancy is sufficient to confer a settlement. In the latter of those cases Abbott, C. J. says 'The pauper gained a settlement because he occupied in his own right, and not as a servant.' Here S. occupied in his own right, for P. took the house expressly for him." Holroyd, J. "Had a burglary been committed during S.'s occupation, the house must have been in an indictment described as the dwelling-house of S.; the case contains no statement of any occupation by Page. S. might have maintained trespass; that makes him at least tenant at will to P., and then Rex v. Fillongley and Rex v. Lakenheath are in point. It is said that in the former the pauper could not have been turned out, because he had sown the land; but it appears that he had sown it with his brother's corn; it is therefore difficult to understand how that can vary his rights, and no such argument can be urged against the latter case." Littledale, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Ashton-under-Lyne, 4 M. & Sel. 357. Removal from Southcoates to Ashton-under-Lyne. Order confirmed. Case:—In 1803, S. Mills, the husband of the pauper, enlisted into the king's service, and in 1809 deserted from it, leaving his wife and children in Southcoates. Afterwards the pauper took a house in Southcoates at 5*l.* a year, and resided in it with her children to the time of her removal, a period of several years. During her residence in this house she took another house from one Dean at five guineas a year rent, and put some of her husband's furniture into it, intending at the time to remove from the house where she was then living into Dean's house; but she never did remove, but underlet it to another person. Dean considered the pauper as liable for the rent, and at the expiration of the first quarter called upon her for payment of it. During this quarter her husband came to see her, and remained for seven weeks of it concealed in the house in which she resided. Both that house and the house taken of Dean were taken without the privity of her husband, but the fact of their having been taken was communicated to him at the time of this visit. Dean never considered her husband as his tenant, nor ever knew of his being in existence. The question was whether the pauper's husband acquired a settlement in Southcoates. After hearing Scarlett against the order, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said "This is a new head of settlement latitando; but it appears to me that it would be a gross perversion of terms to say that this pauper came to settle in a house, when he only came to it for the purpose of concealing himself from the search of those who had a right to his service, and when the most that can be said of his residence is that the wife does not turn him out. But the wife was the ostensible party; she it is that makes the contract in her own name, and nothing is ever done on the husband's part to ratify it in any way. His coming into the parish therefore was nothing better than the mere intrusion of a fugitive who is lurking in hiding places, and was not in any sense a coming to settle, that is, not a coming into the parish animo residendi." Le Blanc, J. and Bayley, J. were of the same opinion. Order confirmed.

Rex v. St. Michael in Coventry, 15 East, 567. Stephen Merrall removed from St. Margaret in Leicester to St. Michael in Coventry. Order confirmed. Case:—Stephen Merrall, in October, 1810, took a house in St. Margaret, Leicester, of the annual rent of 4*l.* 15*s.*, which he gave up on the 5th of July, 1811. On the 8th of April, 1811, he agreed with a Mr. Bradley for a house and shop in St. Margaret, at the annual rent of 13*l.* 13*s.*, which house was then in the tenure of Goff, who was to be tenant thereof to Bradley till the 5th of July following. The pauper was to commence tenant from the 5th of July, and to pay rent from that time. On the 15th of June, by permission of Goff, the then tenant, the pauper put part of a stocking-frame into the said shop, and received the key of the shop from Goff for the purpose. On the 17th of June he put in the remainder of the frame, and on the 22d and 24th of the same month he put other frames in. On the 25th of June the pauper's daughter went to the shop to work, on which day the pauper found the key of the house in the outward door, and took it and put some goods therein by permission of Goff and Bradley, and he continued to take articles of furniture to the house as he went backwards and forwards to work at the shop from the 25th of June until the 3d of July, when he and all his family went to sleep there, having slept until that day in the first-mentioned house. Goff paid the rent for Bradley's house and shop up to the 5th of July, but left the house on the 25th of June, and went into an adjoining one. From the 28th of June until the removal took place, the pauper continued to receive relief from St. Margaret's parish, his wife being ill, on which account he had applied for and received relief from the same parish some days before. The pauper was neither tenant of nor occupied Mr. Bradley's house for forty days, nor did he ever pay any rent for the same. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It is assuming more than the facts of the case warrant, to say that the landlord consented to the pauper's occupation as tenant on the 25th of June. The landlord could neither put him in nor turn him out, for another person was the occupier and tenant of the premises. Then the tenant's leaving the key in the door only showed his consent to the pauper's putting his goods into the house, and the question is, whether a mere liberty of that sort is an occupation. In Rex v. Aldborough (post, 629,) there was a tenancy created in express terms; but here the pauper stood in no relation of tenancy to the premises at the time. He never got into the period of his tenancy, but while he was in the house, upon an expectation only of becoming tenant, he was removed." Grose, J. "The pauper's occupation as a tenant is expressly negatived by the case." Le Blanc, J. "I do not see how the objection can be got over, that at the time of his removal the pauper's interest had not commenced." Orders confirmed.

An express contract is not necessary; it is sufficient if residence be with the permission of the landlord.

Rex v. Netherseal, 4 T. R. 258. Thomas Taylor removed from Finderne to Netherseal. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper married the daughter of J. Shipman, of Finderne, who rented and lived upon a tenement there of the yearly value of 11*l*. The pauper and his wife continued to live in the family of Shipman until his death, which happened about two years after the pauper's marriage. Shipman made a will, and after bequeathing to his son and an unmarried daughter 5*s*. each, gave the pauper's wife all the rest of his property and stock upon his tenement of the value of upwards of 40*l*., and appointed her executrix of his will. The pauper possessed himself of this property, and paid the above legacies about a year after Shipman's death. The pauper's children got the will out of a box and tore it to pieces. The pauper never proved the will on account of the expense, but continued with his wife, the executrix, to occupy the tenement in Finderne from the decease of Shipman on the 9th of November, 1774, until the Lady-day following, and paid the rent for the same. Lord Kenyon, C. J. thought "If the question had depended on the title the pauper claimed under the will, it would not have been sufficient to give a settlement. But it being stated that the pauper resided for more than forty days on a tenement of more than the yearly value of 10*l*., for which he paid rent, he had no doubt; although it was said that he might have been turned out of possession by some other person having a superior right; but it was not suggested who had any better title, and the landlord who received the rent could not turn him out." Ashurst, J. "In order to acquire a settlement by taking a tenement of 10*l*. a year, it is not absolutely necessary that there should be an express contract for the tenement; it is sufficient if the tenant reside forty days on a tenement of such a value with the permission and consent of the landlord; for in such a case the law implies a contract." Buller, J. "Supposing there were no will in this case, the only persons entitled to the property of the pauper's wife's father were the pauper's wife and her brother and sister, and if it were necessary to go beyond the implied contract between the landlord and the pauper, here is sufficient evidence to show that all the parties interested consented to the pauper's continuing in possession of these premises, for the other son and daughter received 5s. each in lieu of all their right and claim to their father's property, therefore all the parties interested agreed to this occupation by the pauper, and consequently there is no pretence to say that this was a holding by wrong." Grose, J. of the same opinion. Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Aldborough, 1 East, 597. The pauper, by an agreement with Slap, the tenant of a cottage, occupied it, and Slap left it. He brought part of his furniture, and occasionally resided there till he was removed. The pauper agreed to pay the same rent as Slap. Slap had no authority to let the cottage, nor did the landlord know it. The court thought the case too clear for argument, and that the pauper gained a settlement. And Lord Kenyon said that "Nothing appears of the former tenant's term having expired, and the law gave him authority to assign his interest, and the pauper did occupy above 10*l.* a year."

7. Permissive Occupation.

If the party be let into possession by prior tenant, it will suffice.

Rex v. Fillongley, 1 T. R. 458. Mary Watson removed from Bedworth to Fillongley. Order confirmed. Case:—John Watson, late husband of the pauper, rented a farm of 40*l.* a year at Fillongley, and being distrained on for rent, his brother purchased for him out of the distress two cows and three sheep, with which he came to Bedworth about Lady-day, 1783, where he took a house and land of 8*l.* a year rent, and resided thereon about three years; during which time the rent was paid, the first half-year by himself, the second half-year by the parish of Fillongley, the third half-year by himself, and the fourth by distress. About the said Lady-day, Thomas Watson, in a conversation with his brother John concerning his poverty, said "I am sorry for your family, and therefore I will give you a close in Astley (an adjoining parish) containing about four acres, to enjoy as long as I please, and to take it again when I please, and you shall pay nothing for it." John enjoyed the close, which was worth 2*l.* 10s. a year, for three years, during which time his brother paid the land-tax and poor-rates for the same; all the tillage was done by the servants and horses of Thomas, and they also got in the harvest; one year the close was sown with John's wheat, procured by the gleanings of his family; and in the last year the same was sown with Thomas's corn, at whose expense the crops of the corn were carried to John's house. The cattle of Thomas were never put into the close, except for tilling the land; but the cattle of John were upon the close during the time he so enjoyed it. Ashhurst, J. "In all cases upon settlement law, it is the safest way to adhere to the words of the act; now taking it upon the words, nothing can be more clear; they are 'that it shall and may be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens, &c. within forty days after any person or persons coming to settle as aforesaid in any tenement under the yearly value of 10*l.* for any two justices, &c. of the division where any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by warrant to remove, &c.'" The act does not say any thing about ability, that is not the criterion. And if the party come to reside upon a tenement of 10*l.* a year, he cannot be removed, and then he gains a settlement by forty days' residence. But if ability, or rather confidence, were to be taken into consideration, according to the case reported in Strange, yet if a man have sufficient credit and confidence reposed in him by another as to be trusted with a tenement of 10*l.* a year value, even out of charity, it is sufficient to answer the intent of the statute, because such a one is not likely to become chargeable. Therefore, neither upon the words nor the meaning of the act, was this man removable, and so he gained a settlement." Buller, J. "It is admitted that this is the first case which has come directly before the court for a construction on this part of the statute. Now the words of the act cannot admit of a doubt; they only speak of persons coming to settle in a tenement of 10*l.* a year, who cannot be removed. As to the question of ability, it seems to me that this idea Living upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* although a part thereof is given out of charity, is sufficient.

7. Permissive Occupation.

is founded chiefly on the words of South Sydenham v. Lamerton, (post, 636), but the words, if attentively considered, will not warrant the construction put upon them; for the credit he has is only for the rent he has to pay, but that is only as between him and the landlord—the credit is given by the landlord. Lord C. J. Parker first says, ‘If a man hires a house at a small rent, and pays a fine, yet if the house is worth 10*l.* per annum it makes a settlement; for the settlement depends upon the value of the tenement, not on the rent.’ Then, indeed, he uses these words, ‘The reason of this statute is this, that a man who is entrusted with a tenement worth 10*l.* a year, is of such credit, and must have such a stock as makes him not likely to become chargeable to the parish.’ Eyre, J. took it to be within the letter and intent of the law, ‘that a man who is capable of renting a tenement of 10*l.* a year should be settled in that parish.’ It is clear that they applied this reasoning to the persons mentioned in the former part of the act, to show that that case did not come within the description: and this is put out of doubt by what Pratt, J. says, ‘The mischief recited by the statute, and intended to be prevented, is vagrancy of poor persons who used to come into parishes where there was the best stock; and the statute describes who are intended by those poor, (viz.) *such persons as are not capable of hiring a tenement of 10*l.* a year*.’ Now it is material to consider what was the case on which the court were then speaking; they were speaking of a case where the taking was of more than 10*l.* per annum; therefore, these expressions only relate to cases of above 10*l.* per annum, and are to be applied to the case then before them, and are not applicable to any case where the renting is not more than 10*l.* per annum. This is more decisive on account of what is said in the conclusion of the case, where, describing the poor persons whom the act intended to exclude from gaining settlements, Pratt, J. says, ‘such persons as are not capable of hiring a tenement of 10*l.* a year.’ There are no such words in the act, but if we have recourse to the preamble, it speaks of rogues and vagrants, and persons who are burthensome to the parish; these, therefore, are the persons of whom the statute speaks as likely to become chargeable, and therefore the expressions in that case are only to be considered as particular instances of persons who, from their situation in life, were not likely to fall within the description of persons in the preamble of the act. But one who is settled on a tenement of 10*l.* a year is not within the act. It has been contended that the pauper never had the tenement; but it is impossible for us to say so after the justices have stated that he had it under an agreement, which made him a tenant at will; for what is to become of the estate after he had sown it with corn? Its being gained by gleaning is not material, for supposing he had stolen it, it would have been just the same, he would have been entitled to the growing crop; he was then in possession of a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and could not have been turned out by his brother; therefore this is a sufficient taking of a tenement within the statute.” Order of sessions quashed.

A person renting a tenement in one parish and residing rent free in a tenement in another gains a settlement where he resides.

Rex v. Fritwell, 7 T. R. 197. Robert Hearne removed from Stoke Lyne to Fritwell. Order confirmed. Case:—Thomas Hearne, the pauper’s father, about twenty-two years since, rented two farms in Stoke Lyne, one at 35*l.* and the other at 10*l.* a year; during the last four months that he occupied the above farms he dwelt in Fritwell, in part of a house belonging to a relation, who permitted him to live in it rent free; the house consisted of two separate tenements, one of which the pauper occupied, together with a barn, &c. He kept a team there, and drew his corn from his farm at Stoke Lyne to Fritwell. In this separate tenement he continued nearly two years, but never occupied any land in Fritwell. The separate tenement and use of the barn, &c. were of the yearly value of about 35*s.* He never paid any rent in respect thereof, but his relation had all the dung and manure made by the pauper’s cattle, and spread it upon his own lands in an adjoining parish. Lord Kenyon, C. J. “It is now too late to inquire into the propriety of all the decisions that have been made on the settlement laws since the passing of 13 & 14 Car. II.; for even though it should appear on such inquiry (which I do not suggest is the case), that the words of that statute have been in some instances strained, yet as there is a series of decided cases on the subject, we ought not now to depart from them; if when the question first arose it had been holden, that the party must have one single tenement in the parish of 10*l.* a year, perhaps such construction of the act would have fallen in with the general opinion of mankind: however, it was not long ago decided that it need not be one undivided tenement held under one landlord, nor all lying in one parish, for that distinct tenements, held under different landlords, and lying in different parishes, may be joined together; and provided they all together amount to the annual value of 10*l.* they will confer a settlement on the party, and that being once decided I think it puts an end to this question. Here the pauper's father, who rented two tenements in Stoke Lyne, went to Fritwell, where he entered into part of a house forming a distinct tenement by itself, and belonging to his relation, where he was permitted to live, but not as has been argued out of charity. This is not like one of the cases cited, where the pauper was taken into the house of his son-in-law as a lodger, for here were two separate tenements, the whole of one of which he occupied, and I am not prepared to say that his relation could have turned him out of possession on a day's notice, and though it is stated in the case that the pauper paid no rent in money, it appears that there was an equivalent, there was a quid pro quo; the pauper brought all his dung and manure from his other tenements, and this relation had the benefit of it. As therefore he was in the occupation of more than 10*l.* a year in the whole, and some part of it lay in Fritwell, I am of opinion that this case was properly decided." Ashhurst, J. thought that it might be fairly collected that the parties stood in the relation of landlord and tenant. Lawrence, J. thought the manure was given as compensation for the use of the tenement, and the landlord might recover for use and occupation. Both orders confirmed.

Rex v. Lakenheath, 1 B. & C. 531; 2 D. & R. 816. H. Bailey was removed from Chippenham to Lakenheath. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper had resided the last seven years in Chippenham under the following circumstances: Earl of Orford, by his will, dated the 2d of March, 1726, charged his manor of and lands in Chippenham with the payment of a rent-charge of 20*l.* per annum, to be paid to the trustees upon trust, to be by them paid yearly unto a person, to be nominated by the person entitled to the manor of Chippenham, to officiate as a schoolmaster in the parish of Chippenham, for the teaching of the children of the parish, for no other reward than the 20*l.* a year, which was to be paid to the schoolmaster, without any deduction for taxes or otherwise, with a proviso that the schoolmasters should be removable and others nominated at the will of the person entitled to the manor. Upon the death of a former schoolmaster, about seven years ago, the pauper was appointed to the office. He resided at Chippenham during the seven years, and until the present order (rent free) in the house wherein his predecessors, the schoolmasters, had resided before him, and he received out of the rents of the manor and estates the annual sum of 20*l.* The house and the garden attached to it were of the value of 10*l.* per annum, part of which he underlet during the seven years to the parish at the annual rent of 2*l.* 2*s.* Scarlett and Nolan cited Rex v. Cheshunt (ante, 618), in support of the order; and Dover relied on Rex v. Fillongley (ante, 629), as an authority against the order. Abbott, C. J. "This case must be governed by the decision in Rex v. Fillongley (1 T. R. 458). There the pauper rented a house of the value of 8*l.* per annum, and resided in it three years. With respect to that house there was no question; but about the same time that he took that house his brother gave him a close in an adjoining parish, containing about four acres, saying, 'I'll give you a close to enjoy as long as I please, and to take again when I please, and you shall pay nothing for it.' The court held, that the occupation of the latter close was a coming to settle upon a tenement within the statute, and the two tenements being of the value of 10*l.* per annum, that he gained a settlement. Ashhurst, J. says, 'If the party comes to reside upon a tenement of 10*l.* a year, he cannot be removed, and then he gains a settlement by forty days' residence.' And Buller, J. considered that

7. Permissive Occupation.

The master of a charity school, who was removable from his office at pleasure, resided for seven years, rent free, in a house of the annual value of ten pounds; part of the house he underlet to the parish at an annual rent: Held, that this was a coming to settle upon a tenement of the value of ten pounds per annum within the meaning of the 13 & 14 Car. II. and that the pauper thereby gained a settlement.

7. Permissive Occupation.

the pauper was a tenant at will. This is not like Rex v. Cheshunt, where the pauper occupied as a servant. In such a case the occupation is that of a master. Here it is found as a fact that the pauper occupied a house and tenement of the value of 10*l.* per annum, and it is clear that he occupied in his own right, for he actually underlet part to the parish. I am, therefore, of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement in Chippenham." Bayley, J. "The occupation of a tenement of the value of 10*l.* per annum for forty days, although no rent be actually paid, is a coming to settle upon a tenement within the statute so as to make the party irremovable. Here, indeed, the pauper might be considered to have given his services partly in consideration of his being permitted to reside in the house, and in that case the services so rendered would be something in the nature of a rent. At all events, he came to occupy as tenant at will, with a view to permanent residence; and that is a coming to settle upon a tenement within the meaning of the statute." Holroyd, J. "I think that the schoolmaster was tenant at will of this house. The legal possession of the house was in him, and not in the lord or receiver of the manor. In the case of a master and servant, the servant may merely have the use of the house as servant, but in that case the possession is that of the master; but here the schoolmaster actually under-let a part of the house to the parish; he, therefore, enjoyed the house as his own, and not as the servant of the lord or receiver of the manor. That being so, I am of opinion that he gained a settlement in Chippenham." Order of sessions quashed. (See Rex v. St. Mary, Newington, ante, 611; and Rex v. South Newton, 10 B. & C. 843.)

8. As to the Time for which the Contract was made under 13 & 14 Car. II.

8. AS TO THE TIME FOR WHICH THE CONTRACT WAS MADE UNDER 13 & 14 CAR. II.

The above statute 13 & 14 Car. II. did not require that the tenement should be taken for any length of time. The holding for a year was first made an essential part of the contract by the 59 Geo. III. In cases arising under the former act, though the value is to be estimated by the year, yet the taking may be for less than a year, or for no definite period.

Taking a tenement for eight months will gain a settlement, there being also a forty days' residence.

Rex v. Shenstone, Burr. S. C. 474; 2 Bott, 141. A person took a house of 30*s.* a year in Gratwich, and land in King's Bromley for the growing of potatoes, from Candlemas to Michaelmas, being eight months, for 11*l.*, and lodged the last forty days before Michaelmas in King's Bromley. He took them bonâ fide, and without any design of fraudulently obtaining a settlement in the parish; and it was adjudged a settlement in King's Bromley.

Same point.

Staunton-under-Bardon v. Ulescroft, Burr. S. C. 558; 2 Bott, 142. The pauper took a tenement from 1st June till Lady-day following, for twenty-six guineas, which he occupied accordingly, and paid the rent. The question was whether by continuing upon this tenement for forty days unremovable, he thereby gained a settlement? And by the court, "Clearly he did."

So by taking for five months.

St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, v. St. Botolph's, Aldgate, Burr. S. C. 574; 2 Bott, 135. John Fell, the husband of the pauper, hired a house for five months, for which he agreed to pay 4*l.* He came and resided with his family there during the five months. And the house at the time of hiring and entering upon the same, was worth, to be let, 10*l.* by the year. It was argued that this could not gain a settlement. The criterion, which is the ability of a person to hire a tenement of 10*l.* a year value, fails in this case; for it doth not appear that this man had such a degree of credit as the statute requires. Besides, that the proportion of 4*l.* for five months falls short of 10*l.* a year by about 8*d.* a month. But by Lord Mansfield, C. J. and the court: "The rent is not material, but the value. And we are concluded from treating this tenement as under 10*l.* a year, by the finding of the justices, who have stated it as a fact, that at the time when he took it it was of the value of 10*l.* a year to be let." And it was adjudged that he gained a settlement.

Removal under an order will not put an end to a

Rex v. Fillongley, 2 T. R. 709. Removal from Fillongley to Kinwalsey quashed. Case:—The pauper, on 1st January, 1786, and for some years before, rented and resided on a tenement in Fillongley of the yearly value of 10*l.* He continued there till the 29th April in the same year, when he was removed by an order of removal from F. to Kinwalsey; on the same day on which he was delivered with the order he returned back to the tenement in F., where he resided without making any new contract with his landlord for the same, and without any interruption, for about three-quarters of a year, and then was removed to Kinwalsey. The question was, whether as the pauper entered into no new contract on his return, he could be considered as "coming to settle on a tenement of 10*l.* per annum," within the statute? and, whether the former contract were done away by the order of removal? And it was urged against the order of sessions, that by Rex v. St. Michael's, Bath, (post,) there must be a privity of contract, and that mere possession will not suffice; that the pauper's return was a wrongful act, and that therefore, by Rex v. Kenilworth, no settlement could be gained. But it was held clearly by the court, that an order of removal could not put an end to a contract between the parties respecting the taking a tenement; that therefore the pauper could not be considered as returning in a state of vagrancy, and that the old contract remained, and therefore he gained a settlement by a residence of forty days; that in St. Michael's, Bath (Cald. 110), the pauper resided against the consent of the landlord. Order of sessions discharged. (S. P. Rex v. Barham, 8 B. & C. 99, and Rex v. Willoughby, post, 649).

contract for renting: and a pauper returning, after execution of an order of removal, to his tenement under such contract gains a settlement thereby.

9. UNDER 59 GEO. III. c. 50, 6 GEO. IV. c. 57, AND 1 WILL. IV. c. 18,
THE TENEMENT MUST BE HIRED FOR A YEAR.

9. The Tenement must be Hired for a Year.

The above statutes first rendered it essential to acquiring this description of settlement that the tenement should be rented or hired for one whole year. (See ante, 581.)

Rex v. Herstmonceux, (a) 7 B. & C. 551; 1 M. & R. 426; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 140. Order of removal of J. Start from All Saints, Hastings, to Herstmonceux confirmed. Case:—On the 20th December, 1827, the pauper agreed with Foster to take a house in All Saints at twenty guineas a year, the rent to be paid weekly, and either party to be at liberty to give three months' notice from any quarter day, and at the expiration thereof to determine the tenancy. The pauper continued a year in the occupation of the premises, and paid a full year's rent. C. a. v. Judgment delivered by Bayley, J. "The pauper in this case clearly acquired a settlement in Hastings, provided this was a renting for a whole year, within 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, which requires that the tenement be bonâ fide rented for the term of one year. This statute repeals 59 Geo. III. c. 50. There is nothing in the preamble of 6 Geo. IV. which shows that it was then in the contemplation of the legislature to require more than what would constitute in ordinary cases a tenancy for a year. We find no recital in the act of any inconvenience having arisen where the tenancy by the original hiring was defeasible at certain periods. There is nothing in the act to show that by the term 'one whole year,' any thing more was meant than what the law considers to be a tenancy for a year. The ques-

The taking of a tenement at twenty guineas a year, the rent to be paid weekly, but either party to be at liberty to give three months' notice from any quarter-day, is a yearly hiring within the 6 Geo. 4, c. 57.

(a) Though the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, expressly requires that the dwelling-house, &c. "shall be bonâ fide hired for the term of one whole year, yet a conditional hiring for that term, with liberty for either party to determine the tenancy at a shorter period, is sufficient, provided the tenancy do in fact continue for a whole year. The doctrine in this case is precisely within the principle laid down in Rex v. Byker (3 D. & R. 330; 2 B. & Cres. 120; ante, 374), as to conditional hirings of servants." If the bargain be originally made for an entire year, and terms are introduced applicable to a continuance of the relation of master and servant [landlord and tenant] during the whole year; but there is also a provision, that on a given event it shall be competent to the parties to put an end to or suspend the service [tenancy] for a part of the year, still a settlement is gained if the service is actually performed [tenancy actually exists] for a whole year, and neither party avails himself of the condition. A conditional hiring [renting] is for this purpose the same as an absolute hiring [renting], unless the condition is acted upon.

9. The Tenement must be Hired for a Year.

tion in this case will therefore be whether this was a tenancy for a year; and I cannot entertain any degree of doubt but that this is prima facie a yearly tenancy. The legal effect of this agreement was to create a tenancy from year to year, with a proviso for determining that tenancy at an earlier period. Upon principle, as well as upon authority, the legal estate was vested in the pauper, subject to being defeated. In the case of all defeasible estates, the legal estate passes in the first instance. A lease for twenty-one years is frequently made determinable at the expiration of seven or fourteen years; yet it is not the less a lease for twenty-one years in law, though it may be defeated by matter ex post facto. (a) So where the lease contains a proviso for cesser of the term upon non-payment of rent or non-performance of covenants. In Co. Lit. 42 a, (b) several cases are put of defeasible life estates. Lord Coke there says, "If a man grant an estate to a woman, dum sola fuerit, or durante viduitate, or quamdiu se bene gesserit, or to a man and a woman during coverture, or as long as the grantee dwell in such a house, or so long as he pay 40*l.*, &c. or until the grantee be promoted to a benefice, or for any like uncertain time; which time, as Bracton saith, is tempus indeterminatum;—in all these cases, if it be of lands or tenements, the lessee hath in judgment of law an estate for life determinable if livery be made; and if it be of rents, advowsons, or any other thing that lies in grant, he hath a like estate for life by the delivery of the deed; and in court or pleading he shall allege the lease, and conclude that by force thereof he was seised generally for term of his life." (c) Order of sessions quashed. (d)

Rex v. Wainfleet, All Saints, 8 B. & C. 227; 2 M. & R. 223; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 400. Order of removal of B. Markwell from Wainfleet to Horncastle quashed. Case:—The pauper previously to Lady-day, 1822, hired from his wife's mother seven acres of land in Horncastle, which she then rented, at the yearly sum of 8*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* and for which the pauper agreed to pay her the same rent and 3*s.* per week in addition; his tenancy to commence from the ensuing Lady-day. No time was specified for which the pauper was to take the land, but he occupied it from Lady-day, 1822, for three years, and paid the several rents as they became due; and he resided and slept in a house in Horncastle for upwards of forty days and nights in the year immediately subsequent to Lady-day, 1822. Bayley, J. "The case states that the pauper hired of his wife's mother seven acres of land, which she then rented at a yearly rent, and that he agreed to pay her that yearly rent, and also a weekly rent of 3*s.* Prima facie a general hiring must be presumed to be a yearly hiring (Doe v. Browne, 8 East, 165; Doe v. Watts, 7 T. R. 83), and that presumption is the stronger where the subject-matter of hiring

(a) So e converso in Birch v. Wright, 1 T. R. 380, Mr. J. Buller says, "If a tenant from year to year holds for four or five years, either he or his landlord, at the expiration of that time, may declare on the demise as having been made for such a number of years. So it is expressly laid down by the court in Legg v. Strudwick, Salk. 414." This dictum was cited and recognized by Gaselee, J. in Lippincott, Bart. v. Yard, Taunton Spring Assizes, 1828. The words of Salkeld, however are "et per curiam, it was held first, that after the two years the lessor or lessee might determine; but if the lessee held on, he was not then tenant at will, but for a year certain; for this holding on must be taken to be an agreement to the original contract and execution of it; and the first contract was from year to year; 2dly, the third year is not in the nature of a dis-ting interest, because it arises from the same executory contract, and therefore the lessor may distrain the third year for the rent of the second; and such an executory contract as this is not void by the statute against frauds, though it be for more than three years, because there is hereby no term for above two years ever subsisting at the same time; and there can be no fraud to a purchaser, for the utmost interest that can be to bind him can be only for one year."

(c) And see Preston on Estates, 405.

(d) His lordship afterwards re-delivered the judgment of the court in Rex v. Sandhurst, which had been given at the sittings before Michaelmas term, (ante), confirming the opinion then pronounced by a reference to the above decision in Rex v. Herstmonceux (ante, 633.)

is land, because land varies in its value at different periods of the year. It is said that the mother's estate was determined at the end of the current year, and that she could not therefore convey to the pauper an interest for a year, commencing on a future day. But the mother was tenant from year to year; she had an interest therefore which would continue beyond the year, unless something was done to determine it, viz. unless six months' notice to quit had been given. That interest she conveyed to her son. I think therefore the land in this case was hired for a year." Holroyd, J. "For the reason given, I am of opinion that the land was clearly hired for a year." Littledale, J. concurred. (See also Rex v. St. Martin, Leicester, 4 Nev. & Man. 202; 1 Ad. & El. 210, S. C.)

10. The Tenement must be Rented by the Pauper.

10. THE TENEMENT MUST BE BONA FIDE RENTED BY THE PAUPER UNDER THE RECENT STATUTES.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 50, the tenement must be "bona fide hired by such person;" that is, the person claiming a settlement in respect thereof: the corresponding words in the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, are "bona fide rented by such person;" the meaning of the legislature is the same in both forms of expression.

10. The Tenement must be bona fide Rented by the Pauper under the recent Statutes.

Rex v. Kibworth Harcourt, 1 M. & R. 691; 7 B. & C. 790. (See the case more at length, post, 653). In this case, the pauper took a house and garden at 10*l.* a year; and shortly after his tenancy commenced, M. W. being churchwarden at the time, called upon him, and represented that the landlord had let the premises together with other lands to himself, and that the pauper was thenceforward to pay the rent to him; but that he should make a reduction of 8*s.* a year in his rent, to which the pauper assented, and he paid M. W. at that rate the two following quarters; and upon the death of M. W. two other quarters at the same rate to his successor in the farm. It appeared that this deduction of 8*s.* a year was repaid by the parish, which the sessions held to be fraudulent. Bayley, J. "As to the question of fraud, the case finds that neither the landlord nor the pauper was a party to the fraud; and though the act requires that the tenement shall be 'bona fide rented,' I think that expression can only be construed to mean that the renting shall be bona fide as between the landlord and tenant. Here the renting was bona fide as between the landlord and tenant. It seems to me therefore that all the requisites of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, have been complied with in this case; and that a settlement has been gained under that act."

The renting must be bona fide by the pauper, but fraud of parish will not prevent a settlement.

Rex v. Kegworth, 2 M. & R. 29; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 281. Removal of John Jelly from Sutton Bonington to Kegworth, confirmed. Case:—In December, 1823, the pauper Jelly applied personally and also by Smith to Jacques, to become tenant of a house and six acres of land situate in Kegworth, and finally Jelly himself concluded the agreement for and hired the house and land of Jacques, at the rent of 26*l.* a year, for one year. He entered upon the premises, and occupied the house and land, and paid rent for the same for one year and upwards. He also purchased of and paid for the fixtures on the premises to Jacques, and paid the parish rates and taxes; and upon quitting the premises Jacques paid Jelly for the fixtures then upon the premises. Smith agreed with Jacques to be surety for the rent, but Jelly always paid it, and with his own money. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think there was a perfectly sufficient bona fide hiring of the premises in question by the pauper, within the meaning of the act of parliament. The case expressly finds that 'finally Jelly himself concluded the agreement for and hired the house.' What had previously passed between Smith and Jacques therefore became quite immaterial. As to Smith's becoming the pauper's surety for the payment of the rent, that cannot affect the case; for it does not appear that the pauper even knew of that arrangement between Smith and Jacques, and it is stated that the pauper paid the rent with his own money." Order confirmed.

A party by whom a tenement is hired and occupied and the rent paid for a year, gains a settlement under 59 Geo. 3. c. 50, although a third person be surety to the landlord for payment of the rent.

11. *The Value
under 13 & 14
Car. II. c. 12.*

11. THE VALUE UNDER 13 & 14 CAR. II. c. 12.

The value of the tenement, by the renting or hiring of which a settlement may be gained, has always remained the same, notwithstanding tenements which were worth only 10*l.* by the year when that minimum was fixed, must have increased in annual value down to the present time many-fold.

Before the important alterations introduced by the recent statutes on this subject, if a person came to reside upon a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and remained forty days, his settlement was complete, whether he paid his rent or not, or continued in the occupation the whole term for which he had hired the premises. The legislature, relying upon the caution and prudence of landlords not to let their tenements to persons too indigent to pay for the occupation, and the vigilance of parish officers in removing such poor persons as were likely to become a burden upon the parish by settling upon such tenements, gave authority to justices to remove them; but if this power was not exercised for forty days, then the settlement was accomplished.

It will appear, however, by the next (12th) subdivision, that too great facility was still left for the acquisition of this species of settlement.

What has been deemed a tenement of 10*l.* annual value, sufficient for the purposes of a settlement under this statute of 13 & 14 Car. II., will appear by the following cases. The rent may be prima facie the criterion of value; but whether the rent be more or less than 10*l.*, the real value might have been enquired into, post.

The rent is not material, if the tenement be of the value of ten pounds a year.

South Sydenham v. Lamerton, 1 Sess. Ca. 115; 1 Stra. 57. Case:—A person took a lease of a tenement for ninety-nine years, determinable on three lives, and paid his fine, and the rent reserved was but 7*l.*, but the real value was 13*l.* By the court: "The quantity of the rent is not material, but the value of the tenement. If there be a lease of land worth 10*l.* a year, and a fine be paid, or no rent reserved, yet if the tenement be worth 10*l.* a year, it makes a settlement; for the settlement depends on the value of the tenement, and not on the rent."

If a rent of ten pounds be given in contemplation of improvements by the landlord, which are never made, and the house is thereby not worth such rent, no settlement is gained.

Rex v. Southwold, 2 Sess. Ca. 198; 2 Stra. 1127; Burr. S. C. 140; 2 Bott, 131. A person took a house at the yearly rent of 10*l.* The landlord agreed to make new buildings, which improvements were never made. The house, without the improvements, was worth only 6*l.* 10*s.* a year. By the court: "The sessions must judge upon the facts; they have stated that the agreement was for 10*l.* a year; this is evidence of the value, but the justices have a right to enquire into the real value, and they have expressly stated as a fact, that this house was only of the value of 6*l.* 10*s.* a year; and the mere covenant to build, which covenant was never performed, cannot alter the case. Therefore this was no settlement."

Rent evidence of value.

Rex v. Weston, 2 Sess. Ca. 141; 2 Stra. 1156; Burr. S. C. 166; 1 Bott, 132. The pauper took a farm at Kirton of 10*l.* a year, which had been let at that rent for five or six years then last past, but before that time was let at 7*l.* a year only. When he first took and entered thereon, he was not of ability to stock the same. Before his entry he was told by the former tenant that his farm was too dear. To which he answered, that he did not regard the dearness; for as it was 10*l.* a year, it would gain him a settlement, and put an end to a dispute there was between two towns about his settlement; but desired the former tenant to take no notice thereof to any body. By the court: "We are not to determine the matter upon the evidence given to the sessions, but upon facts stated and adjudications made by them. Here they have stated circumstances; but they have not explicitly stated the real value, nor have they adjudged any fraud. The act requires the renting a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* They state that he did take a tenement of 10*l.* a year at Kirton. Indeed they add, that it had been let at 7*l.* a year formerly. But it might be then worth more, or might have been afterwards improved; and it had for five or six years last been let at 10*l.* a year. And the quantity or value of his stock doth not alter the value of the tenement. They also state a conversation between him and the former tenant, who told him it was too dear; to which he answered, that he did it to gain a settlement. Yet they do not adjudge that there was any fraud; nor do they state that it was under the value of 10*l.* a year, and the evidence rather proves it to be of that value. They must expressly state that it is fraudulent, or else we cannot take it to be so. And we must take the case stated to be the whole case. He gained a settlement at Kirton."

The quantity of stock on a tenement does not alter the value.

Rex v. Purley, 16 East, 126. Richard Emmons was removed from Woodley to Purley. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, from Michaelmas, 1808, to Michaelmas, 1809, occupied a cottage and garden in Woodley, as tenant from year to year, of the annual value of 4*l.* He also held a piece of land in Tilehurst for one year, from Michaelmas, 1808, to Michaelmas, 1809, at the rent of 6*l.* 10*s.* It had been cropped by the landlord with clover and grass-seeds previously to letting thereof to the pauper, and in consequence of its being so cropped, it was worth 6*l.* 10*s.* that year; but had it not been so cropped by the landlord, it would have been worth only 2*l.* 5*s.* per year. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "He occupied a tenement, which during that year was in fact of the value of 10*l.*; how it became of that value is immaterial; it might have happened that the crop was worth more in that year." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Ringwood, 1 M. & Sel. 381. Removal from Tollard Royal to Ringwood. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper being settled in Ringwood, rented a cottage in Tollard Royal, for which he paid two guineas a year, and he had the use of a yard, for which he paid 1*l.* a year. Whilst he occupied this cottage and yard, he took nearly an acre of land in another parish, at the rent of 8*l.* from Easter to October following, for planting potatoes. The ground had been dug by the landlord for that purpose, and it would not have been let for more than half price if it had not been dug. Grose, J. "The only question is, whether the pauper came to settle on a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* He went to Tollard Royal with his family, and resided there more than forty days. As to the value of the tenement which he occupied during that time, it is expressly stated to be above 10*l.*; but it has been contended that the land which he rented from Easter to October for planting potatoes might be worth 8*l.* for that time, and yet not of that value for a year. That proposition I do not understand, and therefore cannot assent to it." Le Blanc, J. "The pauper rented a cottage in Tollard Royal, at two guineas a year, during which time he also rented nearly an acre of land in another parish, from Easter until October, for planting potatoes, at the rent of 8*l.*, which land had been previously dug by the landlord, and would not have been let for more than half that price if it had not been so dug. All the premises taken together at the rent for which they were let, amount to above the value of 10*l.* But the question is, whether we are to reduce that value by taking the land, which was let for 8*l.*, at the rent for which it would have been worth to be let, if it had been in a different state; or in other words, whether we are to deduct from the rent the value of the labour bestowed by the landlord on the premises before he let them. I think the court must look to what was the value of the tenement at the time the pauper came to settle upon it, without considering by what means it became of that value. I agree that the value of the tenement increased by the labour bestowed upon it after the letting cannot be taken into the account; as if the pauper had taken it at the rent of 5*l.*, and had bestowed labour upon it to the amount of 5*l.* more, that would not have made a renting of 10*l.* But where the labour has been previously bestowed, so as to make the land fairly worth the rent at the time it is taken, the court cannot separate the value of that labour from that of the land." Bayley, J. "This is nothing more than a party taking land in a high state of cultivation, which has rendered it of the value agreed to be given for it at the time of the taking. Nor do I think that it would have been worth less if it had been taken for a whole year. It is urged, indeed, that if the pauper had taken it for a year, he would have had to dig it himself, and then it would have been of less value to him than what was given for it for a shorter period; but it does not follow, that if he had taken it for a year he would necessarily have had to dig it.

11. The Value.

If land be taken ready sown for crop, its rent may be computed higher on that account.

Renting land which had been improved in value by the landlord having previously dug it for planting potatoes, and on that account let it at double the rent, was held to confer a settlement.

11. The Value.

Where the pauper agreed to take the land ready ploughed and manured, and when he entered upon it, it was quite prepared, it was held to be a renting of land of a yearly value, as it was increased by being ploughed and manured by the landlord, although, when the pauper took it, the ploughing and manuring was begun, but not finished.

I think therefore that this tenement, coupled with the other property, amounts to a tenement of more than 10*l.* a year." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. West Cramore, 2 M. & Sel. 132. Removal from Monckton Deverell to West Cramore. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper rented a house at Monckton Deverell of the value of 3*l.* per annum, and occupied and resided in it for four years. During one year of his tenancy he rented of Rossiter 136 lugs of land, at Monckton Deverell, at the rate of 9*d.* per lug, amounting to the sum of 5*l.* 2*s.*, for the purpose of planting potatoes. He also, at the same time, rented of one Maish 58 lugs at Hill Deverell, an adjoining parish, at the same rate of 9*d.* per lug, amounting to 2*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* These rentings together amounted to 10*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* The pauper agreed to take the land of Rossiter ready ploughed and manured; and when he took it, the ploughing and manuring was begun, but not finished; but when he entered upon it it was quite prepared. At the time of planting he followed Rossiter to plough, and planted the potatoes himself, which were afterwards covered in by the plough. The agreement with Maish was similar to that with Rossiter; and when the pauper took and entered Maish's land, it was ready ploughed and manured. The potatoes were planted in the same manner as before stated. The two pieces of land together, without being ploughed and manured, were worth about 2*l.* 8*s.* per annum, but being ploughed and manured, were worth what the pauper paid for them. The pauper took the two pieces of land in the spring for hoe crop, and he planted the potatoes in May, and took the crop out in November. This case had been reserved before Rex v. Ringwood (ante, 637), was decided, and it was attempted to distinguish it from that case, because there the land had been dug by the landlord before the letting; whereas here it is found that the ploughing and manuring was not completed when the pauper took the land of Rossiter; and the words of Le Blanc, J., were cited, "that the value of the tenement, increased by the labour bestowed upon it after the letting, cannot be taken into the account." It was said that this was nothing more than an agreement to take the land and employ the landlord to improve its value. If, instead of the landlord, the pauper had employed labourers for that purpose, surely it would not have conferred a settlement." Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The pauper agreed to take a tenement, which should be of a certain value; and at the time when he entered on it it was of that value, for the ploughing and manuring were then finished." Le Blanc, J. "The distinction endeavoured to be made does not vary the case; and it does not appear that any precise sum was agreed to be paid for the labour. The observation alluded to from Rex v. Ringwood must be taken with reference to the case then before the court, and to the context where it is found, rather than as a general observation, or applicable to a case of this kind." Order of sessions quashed.

An increased value arising from manure, agreed for at the time, but put in after the holding commences, may be included.

Rex v. Poulton with Fearnhead, 6 M. & Sel. 252. Order of removal of Luke Whittle from Warrington to Poulton with Fearnhead confirmed. Case:—The pauper's father rented a cottage in Poulton of the annual value and rent of 6*l.* 10*s.*, and held at the same time land of the annual value of 7*s.* 6*d.*; he also took of Kay twenty-seven perches of land for growing potatoes, at 2*s.* 6*d.* per perch, in the spring of 1813, during the time of his holding the cottage and the piece of land. Kay agreed to furnish pauper's father with manure sufficient for the culture of potatoes, and that he should get and set the potatoes. After the holding commenced, the manure was brought by Kay, and put into the land by the pauper's father. The value of the land, upon the ordinary terms of husbandry, did not exceed 4*l.* per acre; but upon the terms above specified, of the value of 2*s.* 6*d.* per perch, amounted to 3*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, a sum sufficient, with the other tenements, for the purposes of a settlement. The pauper's father held all the tenements for above forty days after the manure was put into the land. It was urged that if, in the interval between the commencement of this holding and bringing in the manure, the pauper had become chargeable, the improved value could not have been considered. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The difficulties that have been raised are occasioned by the decisions which I am almost inclined to wish had never been made, that a tenement of combined value is sufficient to constitute a settlement. However, taking the case as it stands upon the subsisting authorities, and keeping in sight the words of the act, which have been strongly and properly pressed on our consideration, I ask myself, is this a coming to settle on a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*? The answer depends on the value to be attributed to the twenty-seven perches; now the party who comes to settle contemplates the taking of a tenement of the value of 3*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* He contracts for twenty-seven perches, with manure to be supplied by the landlord, and upon these terms the tenement was of that value, and if that value, the whole exceeds 10*l.* The pauper then undoubtedly comes to settle, in contemplation that he has taken and shall have the benefit of a tenement of the value of 10*l.* But the question is put, Are these perches of the value of 3*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* at the time he comes to settle? The answer is, they are not, in point of actual permanency, on the day when the party first takes possession; but they subsist in contract of that value the instant that he enters, and actually become so pursuant to contract by the act of the landlord, and the party afterwards occupies above forty days. In this way of considering it, the tenement is of the contemplated value contracted for by the landlord, and afterwards made good by him. If we are bound down to the precise moment when the party enters, the consequence will be, that in many cases the improved value to which the landlord contracts to raise the land, can never be taken into account. In many contracts there will be stipulations of some advantage to the tenant increasing the value of the tenement, which induce him to come to settle upon it, on the faith of having this improved value made good to him; these, therefore, when made good, may fairly be referred to the value at the time of the coming to settle. I might instance stipulations on the part of the landlord to paint and paper, or to make additions to the dwelling. In cases like these the value contemplated and engaged for by the contract, as it is an improvement from which the tenant is to derive a benefit, and perhaps his motive for coming to inhabit there, may fairly be set down to the account of its value at the time he comes to settle within the meaning of the act. I do not venture into all the cases for the purpose of reconciling the various dicta with the statute. It would be an Herculean labour to conflict with, and I am not sure that it would be attended with success." Bayley, J. "I agree that this was a tenement sufficient to confer a settlement. It has been argued that to constitute a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*, so as to make the party irremovable under this act, or, in other words, to confer a settlement, the tenement must be of the requisite value when he enters upon it. But I think the argument would be more correctly stated thus—that the tenement must be of the value of 10*l.* at the time of entry, or be made of that value at the expense of the landlord; and that this is so appears from the distinction which has been taken where the improvement is to be at the expense of the tenant; in which case it has been held that it ought not to be taken into the account. This was the principle on which Rex v. Aston (post, 640), was decided. The observation of Le Blanc, J., in Rex v. Ringwood (ante, 637), certainly was not made in reference to the distinction between the actual value of the land at the moment of entering, and its becoming of that value a short time afterwards by the agreement and act of the landlord. It seems to me, that whenever it is a part of the contract for the letting, that the land is to be improved at the expense of the landlord, and this is done, the tenement is to be accounted of the improved value. According to the language of some of the cases, the question is, whether the pauper was of sufficient ability to obtain credit for a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* And certainly it is the same thing as it regards his ability, whether the land were of that value at the moment of taking it, or whether it was stipulated to be made so, and was made so afterwards at the expense of the landlord. I think both cases are equally within the words and spirit of the act." Abbott, J. "It cannot escape our notice, that in Rex v. Aston the increased value arose out of several acts voluntarily performed by the tenant: here it arises, not out of any act done by the tenant, but from the act of the landlord stipulated for before entry, and done in pursuance of that contract. What is done by the landlord under such circumstances may I think fairly be considered as referable to the time of entry. If the court were tied down to the precise time of entering, it would lead to very subtle enquiries, which would be inconvenient, as to the instant of time when such and such repairs were made, as increase the value of the tenement to the necessary amount. To avoid such inquiries, I say, what is contracted for, before the entry, to be done by the landlord, and is afterwards done in pursuance of that contract, may be considered as done at the time of entering." Holroyd, J. to the same effect. Order confirmed.

Rex v. Huntsham, 2 Bar. & Adol. 503. Appeal against an order whereby H. Vinnicombe was removed from Sampford Peverell to Huntsham. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's birth settlement was in Huntsham. On the 1st of April, 1818, he took of one Hewett in the parish of Burlescombe, a field for potatoes, at the rent of 12*l.* Hewett agreed to supply twelve hogsheads of lime and a heap of manure, and to give the field three ploughings, to prepare it for the pauper to plant his potatoes; without which the field would have been worth less than 10*l.* a-year. About a week after the agreement, the pauper went upon the land and worked upon it, at which time the field had only been once ploughed, and none of the lime and manure had been then supplied; but Hewett performed all that he had agreed to do before the pauper planted the potatoes. The pauper, who took off his crop in the autumn, planted the potatoes himself, and paid the whole rent of 12*l.*, and the field ploughed and manured as it was by Hewett was worth that sum. The pauper went to live in Burlescombe in the year 1817, and lived there during the whole time that he occupied this field, which was about six months, and he occupied the field for more than forty days after Hewett had done his work. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "This case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Poulton with Fearnhead, (ante, 638), and must be governed by it. The order of sessions must therefore be quashed." The rest of the court concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Bilsdale Kirkham, 2 Bott, 137. T. Wilson went from Bilsdale Kirkham to Bilsdale Westside, and there married Sarah, the pauper, who rented a tenement of 4*l.* a-year, and he occupied the tenement with her during his life. Evidence was offered to prove this tenement, at the time the man occupied it with his wife, was worth 15*l.* a year, though let at no more than 4*l.* But the sessions rejected this evidence, and determined on the rent actually reserved. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The justices have done wrong in not receiving the evidence of the value of the tenement beyond the rent paid. Every lease from year to year begins afresh every year, and is in point of law a new demise. If the tenement was of the value of 10*l.* a year any year during the man's occupation of it, he will thereby gain a settlement." The case was sent back to the sessions to receive evidence of the value; which being certified as above, the court held it a settlement.

Rex v. Aston, 6 M. & Sel. 54. Order of removal of S. Jesson from Aston to Hales Owen quashed. Case:—The pauper was the widow of T. Jesson, junior, son of T. Jesson, elder, who in 1800, took land in Hales Owen for ninety-nine years, at 2*l.* 2*s.* a year, and built on it two houses, each of the value of 5*l.* 5*s.* a year. When the first was finished, he went to live in it; and before the other was built, he let it for 5*l.* 5*s.* a year; and the tenant, when it was completed, entered and occupied to the present time. Jesson, junior, lived with his father as part of his family. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I think, upon looking at the language of the statute, that we are bound, in considering the value of a tenement, to regard that as its value which it bore when the party took it, and not the increased value which it has acquired by improvements made during his occupation. If we find that this tenement was of no greater value than 2*l.* 2*s.* a year at the time when the pauper took and entered upon it, that must be deemed its value at the time he came to settle upon it. It cannot be that its value is to be perpetually fluctuating afterwards, the time pointed to being that when he comes to settle in it; at which time, if it be not of the annual value of 10*l.*, he does not acquire a settlement by it. I forbear entering more into the details of this case, because I fear that many of the doubts that have arisen upon subjects like the present, are owing to extraneous dicta that have from time to time fallen from the bench. The principle however seems to be this, that where a party comes into a parish with a sufficient credit to acquire the taking of a tenement of 10*l.* a year, this shall entitle him to reside irremovably." Bayley, J. "The value of the tenement must be taken as of the time when the person comes to settle in it. Rex v. Bilsdale Kirkham (ante, 640) is a strong authority in point. That case was shortly this:—The pauper rented a tenement at 4*l.* a year, which during his occupation became of the value of 15*l.* a year; and it was held that evidence to prove it of the increased value ought to have been received, because being tenant from year to year the lease began afresh every year, and was in point of law a new demise. This was the express ground of distinction taken by Lord Mansfield in that case." Abbott, J. "This case is neither within the words or meaning of the act of parliament." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Whitechapel, 2 Bott, 132. Removal from Whitechapel to Westham quashed. Case:—The pauper's husband, P. Allam, hired a house in Whitechapel at 8*l.* 8*s.* per annum, and lived in it till his death; he also hired a room in a victualling house in W. at 3*s.* a week, to be made use of, and which was used as an office or place for the justices to meet and transact the parish and other public business. The room was furnished with chairs and tables, and the landlord was to find firing, and the landlord was to have the use of the room when Allam did not want it. Allam had the key, and might have locked it if he would, but did not. Allam alone had the concern of and paid for the room. Buller, J. "There is nothing found as to the value of the fire and furniture, and all we can say is, that he has rented a tenement of 10*l.* a year." Order quashed.

Rex v. Londonthorpe, 6 T. R. 377. John Ingram took a tenement of 6*l.* a year, and rented a piece of waste ground at the yearly rent of 10*s.* 6*d.*, on which he had the privilege of building a post windmill. This he did at the expense of 120*l.*, and worked it for three quarters of a year, but rented the ground for two years and a half, the greater part of which time the mill was standing. The mill was constructed on cross traces, laid upon brick pillars, but not attached or fixed thereto, which is the usual mode of building mills of that nature. The mill was considered as the property of the tenant. He let it to one J. for a quarter of a year at the rate of 9*l.* a year, and during that time resided in the said tenement at the rent of 6*l.* The pauper sold the mill afterwards as a chattel interest. It was never rated. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J. "There is no doubt but that the taking of a windmill attached to the ground of the value of 10*l.* a year, will confer a settlement; a præcipe will lie for such a windmill. The taking of a rabbit warren was also held to give a settlement, because it was a tenement; and so in the case of the Landsale colliery. But this windmill, as described in the case, is nothing but a chattel. And if in questions of this kind we were merely to consider the ability of the pauper, without at the same time considering whether he rented a tenement, we should abandon the statute altogether, and the decisions upon it. It might as well be said, that an iron malt mill would give a settlement. This post windmill was the sole property of the tenant himself, and it was not fixed in the ground, but detached from it. But in order to confer a settlement it should be so connected with the land as in legal contemplation to fall within the description of a tenement." Grose, J. "It is no more a tenement than a large coffee mill put up in a house."

Rex v. St. Dunstan in Kent, 4 B. & C. 686; 7 D. & R. 178; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 378. Mary Wilson removed from Saint Mary, Canterbury, to St. Dunstan. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's husband, on the 23d of April, 1823, went to live in a house in St. Dunstan, at the yearly rent of 10*l.*; he had not occupied it for a year, but he had been rated for the house in that parish, and had paid the assessment for one quarter; one Butler had occupied the house before the pauper's husband; and at the time of the hearing of the appeal one Hunt held it, each of them paying the annual rent of 10*l.* It had for six years preceding the pauper's tenancy been let, together with the articles of furniture hereinafter mentioned, at 10*l.* per

11. The Value.

The principle is, that the person has credit to take a tenement of ten pounds value.

A furnished room with fire was taken, and the sessions did not find the value of the furniture distinct from that of the tenement: Held, a sufficient tenement.

If a chattel (as a post-windmill) be placed upon land by the tenant, its value cannot be added to the rent of the land.

Landlord's fixtures, which are parcel of the freehold, may be taken into the valuation of a ten pound tenement, though without them the tenement would not be of sufficient value to gain a settlement.

11. The Value.

annum. All houses in St. Dunstan were rated at half their actual value; and in the assessment on the pauper's husband the said house was valued at 3*l.* 10*s.*: at the time of his occupation, the house was in a very bad state of repair, and then it would have required an expenditure of 40*l.* to put it into a tenable condition: since his death and previously to Hunt's tenancy, 12*l.* had been expended upon it; there were a stove and cupboard in a room below stairs, a grate and a cupboard in the chamber, and a grate in the kitchen; the stove and grates had not originally belonged to the house, but had been put in by a tenant, and the landlord had taken them in part payment of rent about six years before; these were fixed with brickwork in the chimney places, but they might be removed without doing any injury to the chimney places; the cupboards stood on the ground, and were supported by holdfasts—and these might also be removed without doing any other injury to the walls than leaving a few marks of nails; the use of these several articles was worth about 6*d.* per week: and the tenement, including the use of them, was worth 7*l.* 10*s.*, and without them, about 6*l.* per annum. If any deduction, however small in amount, was to be made in respect of the above-mentioned articles, the tenement would not be of the annual value of 10*l.* Abbott, C. J. "It is found as a fact in the case, that these grates and cupboards were the property of the landlord, and affixed to the freehold, and they were taken by the pauper as the property of the landlord. I am therefore of opinion that they were a parcel of the tenement demised. Whatever might be the question, if they were merely tenant's fixtures, it is unnecessary to discuss in the present case. The sessions, in confirming the order, have stated their opinion to be, that if any deduction, however small in amount, is to be made in respect of these articles, the tenement would not be of the annual value of 10*l.*, from whence I infer, that in their judgment no deduction ought to be made." Bayley, J. "These articles being fixed to the freehold, and being part of the demised premises, I think they might enter into the valuation of the tenement." Littledale, J. "If the landlord had died, these articles would have gone to the heir, and not the executor. Then as the annual value is increased by these fixtures, I think they must be taken into account with a view to the settlement. In Winne v. Ingleby (5 B. & Ald. 625), and Colegrave v. Dias Santos (2 B. & C. 76, 3 D. & R. 255), articles savoring less of the realty, were held to be fixtures and parcel of the freehold." (See also Rex v. North Bedburn, Cald. 452.)

A contract of renting at ten pounds per annum, the landlord paying parish taxes, is a good taking of a tenement of the proper value.

Rex v. Framlingham, Burr. S. C. 748; 2 Bott, 201. S. Churchyard contracted with S. Hayle to hire of him a public house, &c., at the rent of 10*l.* per annum, Hayle to pay all parish rates and charges. By Lord Mansfield, C. J., and the court: "This was a good taking of a lease of a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*, within the intention and meaning of the act of parliament. It turns upon the credit given the person; now here, credit is given to this man for 10*l.* a year. He contracted for it at that rent, and he paid that rent to his landlord for it. It was a real and bona fide taking a tenement of that yearly value." (See also Rex v. Thurmaston, 1 Bar. & Adol. 731, post, 644, S. P.)

Same point.

Rex v. St. Paul's, Deptford, 13 East, 320, Richard Rice was removed from St. Paul's, Deptford, to Greenwich. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, at Christmas, 1807, rented a tenement of E. Burford, in Greenwich, and resided upon it more than forty days, under an agreement that he should pay 10*l.* by the year to Burford for the tenement, that Burford should pay all taxes, rates, and charges whatsoever, which he did. If the taxes, rates and charges usually deemed tenant's taxes, are to be deducted from the 10*l.* which the tenant agreed to pay to the landlord, the tenement was not of the annual value of 10*l.*; but if those taxes are not to be deducted, the tenement was of the value of 10*l.* This case was expressly brought to reverse Rex v. Framlingham (supra). Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If we were sitting to hear that case argued, the argument might have weight; but it having been settled nearly forty years ago, that the rent reserved (all fraud apart) is to be taken as the criterion of the value of the tenement, without reference to the payment of the rates and taxes by the landlord, we are not now at liberty to disturb that decision upon any speculative opinion. (a) The tenant may be said to obtain credit for a tenement in one sense of the yearly value of 10*l.*, and I cannot say that the former decision is so directly against the words of the act as necessarily to be wrong." Grose, J. "It is better stare decisis." Le Blanc, J. "If we were to decide against the former case, it would let in the deduction from the amount of the rent reserved of every payment to be made by the landlord, which might have been thrown upon the tenant. The rule being settled otherwise, it is better to abide by it." Bayley, J., concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Hellingly, 10 East, 41. Removal from Hellingly to Brighton. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper's husband hired a house at Brighton by the week, paying four shilling a week for the same, which house he so continued to occupy and sleep in. The house so hired and occupied by him is at all times of the year of the value of 4*s.* a week if taken by the week; but is not of the value of 10*l.* per annum if taken by the year. By Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The words of the statute enable the justices to remove any person who 'shall come to settle in any tenement under the yearly value of 10*l.*;' that is, upon a tenement, the value of which is to be estimated by its annual value, to be let by the year, at the time of the party's coming to settle upon it. It need not in fact be let for a whole year; it may be let only by the week or the day. But those lettings are only media for ascertaining the yearly value, if nothing appear to the contrary. But when it is expressly found, that the tenement is not of the value of 10*l.* a year, to be taken by the year, it is impossible for any reasoning to make the matter more clear. The statute, speaking of yearly value, means the value of the tenement to be let by the year." Le Blanc, J. "A settlement may be gained by the taking of a tenement for less than a year, if it is of an aliquot value which would amount to 10*l.* a year. But where that has been decided, it did not appear that the estimated value depended on the mode of letting by the week or other period shorter than a year. But the letting at so much a week was merely a criterion of the yearly value. Here the value of 10*l.* within the year depended on the taking being for a shorter period than a year. No person would have paid that yearly value for it. If this would confer a settlement, it would be next contended that a field, which nobody would take at 10*l.* a year, if it could be let out by the tenant for one night (which he might do to drovers of cattle on the road) at that rate would confer a settlement. I am not disposed to extend the words of the act further than the cases have already gone." Bayley, J. "The question was, whether the value of this tenement be 10*l.* a year? To ascertain that, the only fair criterion is, whether it would let at a single letting, without further trouble, for that sum. If it could be so let, the landlord might reside at a distance; but if it is to be let weekly, he must either reside on the spot and have additional trouble in letting it, or he must employ somebody, and pay him; in either case, part of the 10*l.* obtained within the year by weekly lettings would go either to compensate himself for his trouble, or in defraying the expense of his agent, besides the risk of not being able to let it for three weeks in the course of the year, in which case the actual rent would be reduced under 10*l.* The statute then, speaking of yearly value, and the question being whether the tenement were worth 10*l.* a year by the single letting, without further trouble, and that being negatived, no settlement was gained." Order of sessions confirmed.

11. The Value.

If tenement be worth less than ten pounds per annum, if let by the year, it is not sufficient that it produce more than that sum when let by the week.

By 6 Geo. Rex v. Ashfield-cum-Thorpe, 4 M. & R. 709; 9 B. & C. 939. Order of removal of W. Miller from Snape to Ashfield-cum-Thorpe confirmed. Case:—The pauper, after the passing of 59 Geo. III. c. 50, and before that of 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, boná fide hired a house and land for one year in Snape, at a rent exceeding 10*l.*, and held, occupied, and paid the rent for more than one year, though at the time the value of the holding and occupation was under 10*l.* Bayley, J. "The statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, requires that the tenement be boná fide hired at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year. It seems to me that by that statute the actual value is immaterial, provided the tenement be boná fide hired at the specified rent. The provision, 'that it shall not be necessary to prove the actual value of the tenement,' was introduced into the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, for greater caution." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "One fertile source of those disputes and controversies (mentioned in the recital of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50), was the necessity of proving the value of the tenement; and that statute, in order to prevent litigation, requires that the tenement shall be bona fide hired at the sum of 10*l.* a year. Generally speaking, the rent agreed upon between the landlord and tenant is the best criterion of value, and I think the legislature meant to dispense with any other proof of value. If the tenement hired turns out to be of much less annual value than 10*l.*, that would be evidence to show that it was not boná fide hired at that sum. But if it be boná fide hired at that sum, I think that is sufficient. That being so, the pauper gained a settlement in Snape." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Thurmaston South End, 1 Bar. & Adol. 731. John Simpson and his wife and children were removed from Thurmaston South End to St. Margaret, Leicester. Order discharged. Case:—At Michaelmas, 1824, the pauper, John Simpson, took a house for one year in St. Margaret, Leicester, of Thomas Mawley, at the annual rent of 10*l.*, the said T. Mawley agreeing to pay all levies and rates chargeable upon the house; and under this agreement the pauper occupied the house for one year, and paid 10*l.* by four quarterly payments. The question submitted by the court of quarter sessions was whether the payment of the levies and rates by the landlord of the house would defeat the settlement of John Simpson in the appellant parish of St. Margaret. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "Where the intention and the object of the legislature are doubtful, it is a safe rule of construction to be guided by the words of the act of parliament, taking them in their plain ordinary sense. The statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, requires that the tenement shall be boná fide hired at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year, and that the rent for the same be actually paid. Here the house was boná fide hired at the sum of 10*l.*, and the rent has been actually paid for the term of one whole year. If it had been the intention of the legislature that the rent to be paid to the landlord should be 10*l.*, exclusively of all tenant's taxes, they would have said so in express terms. Perhaps the matter did not occur to the framers of the act; and if not, we cannot introduce such a provision. If it did occur to them, then the legislature must be considered as having intentionally omitted that provision. The cases put, of collateral benefit wholly unconnected with the occupation of the tenement, are not in point. In those instances, if they occurred, there might be ground for saying that the house was not boná fide rented at 10*l.* a year. But here the benefit conferred on the tenant was in its nature connected with the occupation. We cannot say that he has not boná fide paid 10*l.* rent." Littledale, J. "This case appears to me to fall within the express words of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, and the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. The tenement was boná fide hired at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year, and the rent for the same actually paid for the term of one whole year. If the legislature had intended to make a distinction between cases where the landlord paid the rates and taxes, and where he did not, they would have introduced an express provision for that purpose. Their attention must in all probability have been called to it by the decisions in Rex v. Framlingham (Burr. S. C. 748), and Rex v. St. Paul's, Deptford (13 East, 320; ante, 642.) In those cases it was considered that the 'yearly value of 10*l.*' mentioned in the 13 & 14 Car. II. and 9 & 10 Will. III., might be calculated without deducting the rates and charges usually deemed tenant's taxes. The legislature, by not altering the law established by those decisions, have adopted it. Here the word rent must be taken in its ordinary sense, to import not what the landlord put in his pocket, but the sum paid by the tenant for the use of the premises. The payment of the taxes by the landlord was a collateral term introduced by agreement. I think, therefore, the house was hired at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least within the meaning of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, and that the rent for the same has been paid, and therefore that the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of St. Margaret, Leicester." Taunton, J. "I am of the same opinion. A general principle may be considered as established by Rex v. Framlingham (Burr. S. C. 748), and Rex v. St. Paul's, Deptford (13 East, 320), with reference to all cases where tenant's taxes are paid by the landlord; viz., that if the sum paid to him by the tenant be 10*l.*, it will be a sufficient yearly value of 10*l.* to gain a settlement. That being so, does the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, revoke those decisions, and give any new rule on the subject? I find nothing of that sort. The statute merely requires, in addition to the hiring of a tenement at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year, that the rent shall be paid. The taxes here are collateral to the rent. As the decisions just mentioned were well known long before the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, passed, it may be presumed that if the legislature had intended to alter the law in this respect, they would have used the words 'at and for the sum of 10*l.* per annum, clear of all taxes, parliamentary and otherwise, and all other outgoings.' In Rex v. St. Paul's, Deptford, the judges, who expressed some doubts, still felt themselves bound by the authority of Rex v. Framlingham; and if so, à fortiori, we are bound by the two cases." Order of sessions quashed. (See also Rex v. Castlemorton, 3 B. & Ald. 588; Rex v. North Bedburn, Cald. 452.)

Rex v. Pickering, 2 Bar. & Adol. 267. John Todd, his wife and child, were removed from Pickering to Newton. Order quashed. Case:—Prior to the 6th of April, 1826, John Todd took of Hugh Kirby a dwelling-house and thirty-two acres of land, at the annual rent of 20*l.*, to be holden from the 6th of April, 1826, for one year then next ensuing. The dwelling-house and twenty-seven acres of the land were situate within the township of Newton, and the remaining five acres within that of Pickering. At the period specified he entered under such yearly hiring, and occupied the whole of the said premises for the said term of a year, and at its expiration paid the said reserved rent of 20*l.*, residing during the whole of such time in the said dwelling-house. It was objected by the counsel for the appellants, that there was no evidence of the tenement within the township of Newton being of the yearly value of 10*l.* Whereupon the counsel for the respondents offered to prove, that the proportion of the rent payable in respect of the dwelling-house and land in Newton was more than 10*l.* in amount, either by showing the land within Pickering to be of less value than 10*l.* a year, or by showing the dwelling-house and land within Newton to be of greater annual value than 10*l.* But the sessions refused to admit such evidence. It was also stated by the counsel for the appellants, that he was prepared to show that the land within the township of Newton was of no greater annual value than 6*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It was contended that no evidence of the value of the tenement could be received. The words of the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, are undoubtedly very strong. The preamble recites, 'that the settlement of the poor had been made in some instances to depend upon the annual value of tenements which they may have rented, or upon the annual value of tene-

Settlement gained by the payment of rent of 20*l.* for the occupation of land lying in two parishes; and evidence is admissible to show that the amount of rent paid for the land lying in one of those parishes is sufficient to confer a settlement, notwithstanding the provision of 6 G. 4, c. 57.

13. The Rent.

ments in virtue of which they have paid parochial rates, and that the ascertaining such value in such respective cases had given rise to very expensive litigation, and that doubts had been entertained whether the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, had been effectual for the purpose of altering the law in respect of proving the annual value of tenements so rented.' Then section 2 enacts, 'that no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement, unless it shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bond fide rented by such person at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house, or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least.' Then comes the proviso that it shall not be necessary to prove the actual value of such tenement. Now it is said that as evidence of the entire value of the tenement as contradistinguished from the rent was not admissible, and no distinction is taken between cases where the whole tenement is situate in one parish and where it is situate in several, the evidence ought not to have been received in this case, and consequently that no settlement was gained in the parish of Newton. The effect of that would be, if the argument were to prevail, that if a party rented land in two parishes, for which he paid an annual rent of 300*l.* or 400*l.*, and one acre was in one parish and the residue in the other, he would not gain a settlement in either parish. We think the legislature never could have so intended. The rent stipulated to be paid must be taken, for the purposes of this case, as the criterion of the value of the entire premises; but evidence was admissible to show that the rent payable in respect of the land in the township of Newton amounted to 10*l.*; that is, supposing the house and all the land to be of the value of 20*l.*, it was a question for the sessions to consider how much of that sum was paid in respect of the land in Newton. The amount must depend upon the relative quantity and quality of the land in each parish. The case must go back to the sessions, in order that they, taking the entire value of the tenement to be 20*l.* (the annual rent), may ascertain by evidence how much of that sum was paid in respect of the dwelling-house and land in Newton." Case sent back to the sessions.

13. The Rent, &c.

13. THE RENT MUST BE PAID UNDER 59 GEO. III. c. 50; 6 GEO. IV. c. 57; AND 1 WILL. IV. c. 18.

The actual payment of any rent for the purpose of gaining a settlement was first rendered necessary by 59 Geo. III. c. 50 (ante, 583). The 6 Geo. IV. c. 57 (ante, 584), contains a similar though less extensive provision. By the former statute the rent, whatever the amount, must be paid for the term of one whole year at the least by the person hiring the same. These latter words are omitted in 6 Geo. IV. c. 57; and under that statute it was sufficient if the rent was paid by the person hiring or by any other person. But the 1 Will. IV. c. 18, again requires that the rent should be paid by the person hiring the same; and by the second section, which is retrospective, payment of 10*l.* is sufficient.

In ascertaining whether the pauper has acquired a settlement it is most material to attend to the dates of the transactions. The rent must be paid by the person hiring the tenement under 59 Geo. III.; i. e. from 2d July, 1819, to 22d June, 1825: from this time (the date of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57), to the 30th March, 1831, the rent may be paid by any person. But from the latter period (the date of 1 Will. IV. c. 18), the payment must be by the person hiring the premises. The whole rent must be paid under 59 Geo. III., but rent to the amount of 10*l.* is sufficient after 22d June, 1825.

Rex v. Dursley, 3 Bar. & Adol. 465. Thomas Merritt, his wife and six children, were removed from St. George's, Hanover-square, to Dursley. Order confirmed. Case:—In March, 1829, the pauper (being then settled in Dursley) took a house in St. George's, Hanover-square, at a yearly rent of 36*l.* He resided in and occupied that house from Lady-day, 1829, until August, 1830, and paid during such occupation several sums on account of rent, amounting in the whole to 29*l.* The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the statute 1 Will. IV. c. 18, s. 2, which passed on the 30th March, 1831, applied to this case, so as to enable the pauper to obtain a settlement in St. George's, Hanover-square, by such renting, occupation, and payment. If it did apply to this case the order of sessions was to be quashed; if otherwise, to be confirmed. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think we must understand the second section to be retrospective, because it would be useless unless it were so. The words that 'payment to the amount of 10*l.* shall be deemed sufficient for the purpose of gaining a settlement under the said recited act' import that, as to the payment of rent, the statute is declaratory. If the words had been 'it is hereby declared that payment, &c. shall be deemed sufficient,' there could have been no doubt that the clause would be retrospective. Here the words are the same in effect." Littledale, J. "The act is not very clearly expressed; but taking the words in the first section, 'the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* at the least,' to be descriptive of the amount of rent to be actually paid, which I suppose is meant, then the effect of the first section is, that 'after the passing of the act no settlement shall be gained unless rent to the amount of 10*l.* be paid;' and if that be so, then unless the second section be retrospective, it adds nothing to the former." Parke, J. "This act is to 'explain' the former. Sect. 1 provides for settlements by renting for the future. Sect. 2, therefore, unless it be retrospective, is without object." Patteson, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Ruthin, 2 Nev. & M. 97; 5 B. & Ad. 215. Appeal against the removal of David Jones, his wife and family, from Ruthin to Cwm. Order quashed. Case:—The appellants admitted the pauper's settlement to be with them, unless he had acquired a subsequent one under the following circumstances. The pauper took from Mr. Eddisbury, who was mortgagee in possession, a farm called Tynyffirth, in the parish of Llanrhaidr yn Cimmerch, as tenant from year to year, at the rent of 24*l.* per annum. The tenancy was to commence according to the custom of the country; viz., as to the land, from St. Andrew's-day, 1829, and as to the farm-house and outbuildings, from the 1st of May following. The rent was made payable half-yearly, on the 25th of March and the 29th of September following, though, according to custom, the first half-year was not to be called for until St. Andrew's, 1830, and the second half-year on the 1st of May, 1831. The pauper entered upon the premises at the appointed periods, and occupied the land until after the 30th of November, 1830, and the house and outbuildings until the 1st of May, 1831. In August, 1830, the mortgagor and mortgagee having agreed upon a sale of the property, and a purchaser having been found, the three parties met by appointment, and were attended by the pauper's wife, whose husband sent her on his behalf, he having been desired by Shaw, the mortgagor, to come to pay his half-year's rent. Mr. Eddisbury insisted upon being paid the half-year's rent due the 25th of March, 1830, and declining to complete the sale without it, the pauper's wife said that her husband was then unprepared, owing to its being demanded before the usual time, namely, St. Andrew's-day: whereupon Shaw, being anxious to avoid delay in order to get the business concluded, agreed, without the previous knowledge or request of the pauper, but with the consent of the pauper's wife, to pay the 12*l.* for the pauper, and did so. The pauper had not repaid the amount when the appeal was heard; but there had been disputed accounts between him and Shaw. The year's holding as to the land, which was the principal taking, was begun and concluded, and the rent was due and paid as before mentioned, while the stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, was in operation, and before the passing of the act of 1 Will. IV. c. 18; but the year's holding of the house and outbuildings was not concluded until the 1st day of May, which was after the last-mentioned act came into operation. The court of quarter sessions found that the pauper had gained a settlement in Llanrhaidr yn Cimmerch, and quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the court upon the case. Denman, C. J. "The only question here is, whether the rent to amount of 10*l.* shall be deemed sufficient for the purpose of gaining a settlement under 6 G. 4, c. 57," is retrospective; and therefore, where a pauper in 1829 hired a house at a yearly rent exceeding 10*l.* occupied it for more than a year, and paid not a whole year's rent, but above 10*l.*, it was held that he thereby gained a settlement.

The first section of 1 W. 4, c. 18, which requires that the rent to the amount of 10*l.* for a dwelling-house, building, &c. must be paid by the person hiring the same, is prospective only.

13. The Rent. the amount of 10*l.* has been actually paid. The party entitled to receive the rent has been satisfied, and the stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, does not require that it should be actually paid by the party hiring. The sessions might have decided this case themselves." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "The rent to the amount of 10*l.* has been paid by some person, and that is sufficient. The second section of the 1 Will. IV. c. 18, is retrospective; but the first is prospective only. The enactment is, that from and after the passing of that act no person shall acquire a settlement except as there stated." Patteson, J. "The first section of 1 W. IV. c. 18, prevents the gaining of a settlement, unless the rent to the amount of 10*l.* at the least shall be paid by the party hiring; if that were retrospective, section 2, which provides, that where the yearly rent shall exceed 10*l.*, payment to the amount of 10*l.* shall be deemed sufficient for the purpose of gaining a settlement under the recited act, would have been unnecessary." Order of sessions confirmed.

The rent must be paid before any order of removal made.

Rex v. Ampthill, 2 B. & C. 847; 4 D. & R. 447; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 297. Order made on the 5th day of August, 1829, for the removal of J. Apsley from St. Botolph to Ampthill, confirmed. Case:—The pauper, a ropemaker, came at Midsummer, 1822, to reside in a house in St. Botolph; he had hired it of one Mitchell for 10*l.* a year; he put his own furniture into it, worth 15*l.* or 16*l.*; he continued to live in it above a year, and in July, 1823, being much distressed, he applied to the parish officer of St. Botolph for relief, who refused to give him any, but afterwards, in obedience to the order of a magistrate, gave the pauper 14*s.* on the 31st of July. The day after this relief was given, Mitchell called for his rent of 10*l.*, but gave the pauper a fortnight to pay it. On the 5th of August, the pauper was removed to Ampthill. He then applied to Furze, an auctioneer, to buy his furniture, to enable him to pay his rent. Furze went to Cambridge, valued it at 13*l.* 3*s.* (exclusive of his tools, which were worth 5*l.*) and agreed to buy them for 10*l.*, which he paid to the pauper, who kept the key of the house all the time, and returned to it about the 14th of August, on which day Mitchell had sent a person to distrain for the rent, but no distress was taken, because the bailiffs, Furze, and the pauper, went together to Mitchell, and the rent was paid by the pauper with the 10*l.* he received from Furze. Another auctioneer had been employed to sell some of the furniture, under the direction and according to the inventory of Furze, and sold it for 3*l.* 13*s.*, and after this sale the remainder of the furniture and the tools might be worth 6*l.*; without the tools, the remaining furniture would be worth 1*l.* The sessions decided that the house was not of the annual value of 10*l.* Bayley, J. after adverting to other points in this case, for which see post, said, "I am of opinion also that on the 5th of August, 1823, when the order of removal was made, the pauper had not acquired any settlement in St. Botolph. The 59 Geo. III. c. 50, introduces new provisions with respect to the gaining of a settlement by renting a tenement. Before that statute, any person renting a tenement of the annual value of 10*l.*, and residing on it forty days, obtained a settlement; but that statute enacts, that no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of dwelling for forty days in any tenement rented by such person, unless such tenement shall be bonâ fide hired by such person at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least for the term of one whole year, nor unless it shall be held and the rent for the same actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least by the person hiring the same. Now in this case the pauper took the tenement at Midsummer, 1822, for one year; the year expired, and the rent became due and payable at the expiration of that time; and if the pauper had made a legal tender of the rent upon the premises before sun-set, or the last hour of the day when it became due, and had been able to show that he was always afterwards ready to pay it, possibly such a tender might have been considered in point of law as equivalent to payment. But in this case he had neither paid the rent nor done any thing which, in point of law, can be considered as payment at the time when the order of removal was made. He had not done what was requisite, in order to give him a settlement by the renting of a tenement, according to the provisions of the 59

Geo. III. c. 50. The order of removal, then, was a valid order at the time when it was made, and the subsequent payment of the rent cannot affect it. I am therefore of opinion that in this case the pauper, by having applied for relief from the parish in July, 1823, and having received that relief under an order of magistrates, was then actually chargeable, and therefore removable under the 35 Geo. III. c. 101; and I am also of opinion that when the order of removal was made he had not acquired any settlement in St. Botolph, because he had then neither paid a year's rent nor done any act which, in point of law, can be considered as equivalent to payment." Holroyd, J. "A party, in order to gain a settlement by renting a tenement, is required by the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, to do certain things which were not requisite before. One of the things required is, that there should be a payment of one year's rent by the tenant to the landlord. Here the year's rent had become due and payable at Midsummer, and on the 1st of August the landlord gives the pauper a fortnight's time to pay it, and before it is actually paid, and before the pauper had done any act which the law considers equivalent to payment, the order of removal was made. At that time then the pauper had not gained any settlement in St. Botolph. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider, whether the finding of the justices that the annual value of the tenement was less than 10*l.* is material or not. I am of opinion that the subsequent payment of rent does not, by retrospective operation, give the party a settlement in St. Botolph at the time when the order of removal was made." Littledale, J. "It is unnecessary in this case to decide the question, whether in opposition to the contract of the parties any other value than the rent actually payable can be set up, because, since the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, no settlement can be gained until a year's rent is actually paid. Now in this case the order of removal was made on the 5th of August, and the year's rent was not paid until the 14th. The subsequent payment of the rent cannot, by retrospective operation, give him a settlement at the time when the order of removal was made, and therefore the pauper had not gained any settlement at that time, and having then become actually chargeable he was properly removed." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Willoughby, 5 Nev. & Man. 457. Appeal against an order of removal from Byfield, Northamptonshire, to Willoughby, Warwickshire, which the sessions confirmed. Case:—The pauper rented a house in the parish of Willoughby, from Michaelmas, 1832, to Michaelmas, 1833, of a Mr. Judd, at the yearly rent of 17*l.* He occupied the house under this hiring for the whole year, and in the month of July paid a half-year's rent, 8*l.* 10*s.* He continued to occupy this house until the 6th of December, 1833, without paying any more rent. On that day he was removed with his family from Willoughby to Byfield, by an order of removal, he having become chargeable to the parish of Willoughby. Against which order, the parish of Byfield appealed to the quarter sessions for the county of Warwick. The appeal was tried on the 1st of January, 1834, and the order confirmed on the merits. On the 7th December, 1833, the pauper's family returned to their house at Willoughby, and on the next day the pauper himself returned and remained there in the same house until the 27th of the following January. On the 11th December, 1833, the pauper borrowed the sum of 8*l.* 10*s.* and paid his landlord his second half-year's rent, due at the preceding Michaelmas. On the 27th of January, the pauper left Willoughby with his family, and went to Byfield, where he remained until the 17th of the following March, when he was removed, by an order of two magistrates, back to Willoughby; and against that order the parish of Willoughby appealed. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether or not the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of Willoughby subsequent to the order of removal of the 6th December, 1833. Patteson, J. "This case depends upon the construction which we are to put on the statute, which requires that in order to gain a settlement by residence and renting and occupation of a tenement, the rent shall be paid for the same. There has not been any case in which the court has decided that the rent must be paid within the year of occupation, or within a limited time after the expiration of it. It is said that it is not the occupation for a year, nor the payment of rent for a year, but the residence for forty days, that is the substantial ground of the settlement. That I do not deny: I admit that it is so: but still the question is, what is the date that is to be given to the settlement when acquired? The time of the forty days' residence, whether at the beginning or the end of the year, is immaterial. In this case there was an occupation for a year, residence for forty days, (which residence may be in any part of the year of occupation,) and half a year's rent paid. Under these circumstances, an order of removal was made; and there can be no doubt but that at that time no settlement was gained. The order was appealed against, and pending the appeal the party returned to Willoughby, and paid the remainder of the rent, so as to complete the conditions of the act of parliament. It is quite clear that this having been done, so as to fill up all the requisites, the party gained a settlement, unless it is affected by the order of removal which intervened. The order has been treated in the argument as if it had the effect of putting an end to every inchoate settlement. I do not find any authority for so treating it. Rex v. Kenilworth (2 T. R. 598, ante, 441) is relied on, but does not support the position for which it is cited. That was a case of hiring and service: the servant was removed under an order, which was not appealed against; and he returned to his master's service at Birmingham. If there had been an appeal against that order, it is not doubtful but that the party would have had a right to return to his master, and might have completed his service; and if he had done so, he would have acquired a settlement in Birmingham. So Mr. Justice Buller appears to have considered; for he says, 'the question here is, whether the pauper gained any settlement in Birmingham subsequent to the order of removal? Now, in this case he did no act by which he could gain a settlement in Birmingham after the order of removal. What I rely on is this, that after the order of removal, unappealed from, the pauper could not legally return to the parish from whence he had been removed.' From this it follows, that, in his opinion, if the order had been appealed from, the pauper might have returned, and would have gained a settlement subsequent to the order. The learned judge then said, that it would have been a crime in the pauper to have returned, and that the order of removal therefore put an end to the contract of service. Whether he was right or wrong in this reasoning, is not now to be determined; but it shows how far his remaining words, which are the words relied on, are properly applicable to this case. The words are, 'now in this case the pauper returned after the order of removal, to the parish of Birmingham, where he served a month; but that could not gain him a settlement there; for the act subsequent to the order of removal, by which he was to gain a settlement, should be complete in itself.' It is sought to be inferred from this, that all that is done towards gaining a settlement before the order of removal, must in every case be put out of consideration. These words, taken by themselves, might seem to warrant such an inference; but they must of course be construed secundum subjectam materiam, and being so construed, the inference is altogether shut out. The decision in Rex v. Kenilworth appears to me to rest on no legal principle. Can it possibly be said that if a man is serving or renting a tenement, and the parish officers choose to get him removed, the contract is thereby put an end to? I see no reason for so saying. It is true that the order of removal is conclusive, that at the time of making the order the pauper had no settlement in Willoughby; but the whole question comes to this, whether, when a man has done all that is required except one thing, the payment of the rent, and such payment is made after an interval, the settlement is to take effect from the time of completing the main requisites, or from the final completion by payment of the rent? We have the authority of Rex v. Ampthill for saying, that the payment has no reference back; and therefore, if the settlement is not to be dated from the time when the last requisite is complied with, there never can be a settlement gained in such case. The argument of Mr. Waddington would indeed go this length. That, however, cannot be right. The pauper did in this case, in my opinion, gain a settlement in Willoughby subsequent, in point of date, to the order; and therefore the order of sessions must be confirmed." Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion. There is no case to show that the payment of the rent must be within the year of the occupation; and there is nothing in the nature of an order of removal to make a payment of the rent, after the order, have a different effect from a payment where no such order has been made. The words of Mr. Justice Buller have been relied on; but those words, when taken in connection with the doctrine which he had just laid down, and with which (whether the doctrine be right or wrong) they are consistent, are no authority for the position in support of which they have been cited." Cole-ridge, J. "It was conceded in the argument, that all the facts of this case might have existed, with the exception of the order of removal, and that a settlement would in such case have been gained. The whole question therefore turns upon the effect of the order. Mr. Waddington argues, that where an order of removal has been made, every thing necessary to the gaining a settlement must be commenced anew after the order; and for this position he cites Rex v. Kenilworth. Now the decision in that case, when examined, will be found to be no authority at all here, as it arose upon a different state of things, and proceeded on a supposition that the order of removal dissolved the contract, which, after Rex v. Fillongley, certainly cannot be said to be the case here. The dictum of Mr. Justice Buller must be considered with reference to the subject-matter. The question then is, what is the effect of the order of removal? It merely determines the conclusion of law upon the facts existing at the time when it was made. If, at the time of making the order, nine only out of ten requisites had been complied with, then the order is conclusive, that a settlement was not gained by the performance of the nine requisites; but there is no authority whatever for saying that, upon the tenth requisite being added, the order is to have the effect of preventing a settlement from being gained." Order of sessions confirmed.

Where a party rents and occupies for a year a tenement in A. at the yearly rent of 10*l.*, and before payment of the full rent is removed to B. by an order which is not appealed against, or is confirmed on appeal, he may, by a subsequent payment of the remainder of the rent, acquire a settlement in A. under 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and 1 Will. IV. c. 18. The forty days residence required under this head of settlement must be within the year of occupation, but at what period of the year it takes place is immaterial.

Rex v. Ramsgate, 6 B. & C. 713; 9 D. & R. 688. G. Sweetman was removed from Ramsgate to St. Lawrence. Order quashed. Case:—In April, 1825, the wife of the pauper (who was of unsound mind) hired a house in St. Lawrence for one year, at a rent of 15*l.*, payable quarterly. The pauper occupied it for the year, and his wife paid 6*l.* 15*s.* of the rent. Soon after the year, the landlord distrained for the remaining rent, and received 4*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, making the total rent received 11*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Bayley, J. "It is very desirable in all cases to adhere to the words of the act, giving to them that sense which is their natural import, in the order in which they are placed. The 59 Geo. III. c. 50, enacts [he then read it]. That statute, therefore, required that the rent (whatever its amount might be) should be paid for the term of one whole year. But as that statute applied only to settlements which might be gained by reason of renting a tenement, a settlement might still be gained by paying parochial rates in respect of a tenement of the annual value of 10*l.*, without complying with the requisites of that statute, and that was the cause of much litigation. The 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, was passed to remedy that inconvenience, and it recites, [he here read the recital and enactments; and added,] it is very material to attend to the collocation of these words, 'for the term of one whole year at the least.' They are the last words of a sentence, and, according to grammatical construction, apply to both branches of the sentence. It is contended that they do not apply to the latter branch, 'the payment of rent,' but that the words 'and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.*' ought to be construed as if they were in a parenthesis; but I cannot collect from the recital in previous provisions of the act that they ought to be so read. I think they ought to be construed according to the plain import which they bear, and the order in which they are placed. If the legislature had intended that it should be sufficient to pay rent to the amount of 10*l.*, the words 'for

(a) The retrospective clause of the 1 Will. IV. c. 18, has rendered payment of 10*l.* sufficient, under 6 Geo. IV.; but it does not apply to the 59 Geo. III. The house was taken in this case before the 6 Geo. IV. came into operation, but the rent became payable afterwards. The effect of a payment by a distress was argued but not decided. See as to the latter point, Rex v. Ruthin, ante.

the term of one whole year at the least,' should have immediately followed the words relating to the occupation. It is true that the words 'to the amount of 10*l.* a year at the last' create some difficulty, but that difficulty is not such as to warrant us in construing them as if they were placed in an order different from that in which we find them. Taking them in that order, their application is not confined to one branch of the sentence. Undoubtedly it will follow from this construction, that if a person rent premises at a high annual rent he will not gain any settlement unless he pays the whole amount of one year's rent. On the other hand, if the other construction were adopted, a person who rented premises at 15*l.* per annum, and resided three years on the premises, would gain a settlement by paying 10*l.* on account of one year's rent. But I cannot think that was intended: upon the whole, I am of opinion, that the rent actually reserved must be paid for the term of one whole year at the least. The pauper, not having done this, gained no settlement in St. Lawrence." Holroyd, J. "I think that the words 'for the term of one whole year at the least,' must be construed according to their nature and import in the order in which they stand in the act of parliament; and so construing them, it appears to me that the rent, which must amount to 10*l.* at least (but which may exceed that sum), must be paid for the term of one whole year at the least." Littledale J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Ashley Hay, 8 B. & C. 27, by the name of Ashley-de-la-Hay, 2 M. & R. 21; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 273. Order of removal of John Sneap from Ashley Hay to Mugginton quashed. Case:—At Lady-day, 1825, the pauper hired a farm at Ashley Hay by the year, at the rent of 54*l.* per annum, payable half-yearly. He held and resided upon the farm for more than twelve months, and he paid rent on account of the same to the amount of 40*l.*; but he did not pay a whole year's rent for the same prior to his becoming chargeable to and his being removed by Ashley Hay. He was, prior to the 22d June, 1825, charged in respect of the farm in two poor assessments, and with the public levies or taxes of Ashley Hay; and applications were made to him for payment of such levies or taxes prior to the 22d June, 1825, but he did not pay the same till after the 10th July, 1825. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I entertain no doubt in this case, the more particularly as there has already been one express decision upon the point which it raises. In order to arrive at the true construction of this act of parliament, which it is contended was not done in the case of Rex v. Ramsgate (ante, 651), it is necessary to consider the state of the law when this act was framed, and the object which the legislature had in framing it. By the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, it is quite clear that no person could acquire a settlement by renting a tenement, unless the whole rent for one year was actually paid; and therefore the only question is, whether any alteration in that respect was intended to be or has been effected by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. The recital states that inconveniences had been found to exist in consequence of the settlement of the poor being made to depend upon the the annual value of tenements which they have rented, or upon the annual value of tenements in virtue of which they have paid parochial rates. The recital therefore clearly applies to 'the annual value' only; and the enacting clause, after repealing the former act, and then repeating its words, except so far as it mentions the payment of parochial rates, concludes by declaring that no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of renting a tenement, unless the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* be actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least. The true construction of these latter words in my opinion is, that a year's rent, which shall not be less than 10*l.*, but without reference to its being more than 10*l.*, must be paid, in order to entitle the party to a settlement. It is true, the words 'to the amount of 10*l.*' were not inserted in the former act; it is unfortunate that they have crept into the present act, and they have probably done so through mistake or inadvertence; but they do not appear to me to alter the spirit and meaning of the enactment. I think the passage may be read as if those words were not in it; that they may in fact be rejected as surplusage. This being so, the present case is governed directly by that of Rex

v. Ramsgate, and no settlement has been acquired in Ashley Hay." The other judges concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Carshalton, 6 B. & C. 93; 9 D. & R. 132; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 249. Charlotte Long was removed from Carshalton to Wandsworth. Order quashed. Case:—T. Long, the husband of the pauper, at Lady-day, 1824, came to reside in a house at Carshalton, which he had hired of his father-in-law by the year, at the rent of 14*l*. He put his own furniture into the house, and continued to reside there until July, 1825, when he died in possession. During his life-time, no more than 25*s*. was paid by him on account of the rent. His widow, after his death, continued to reside in the house until September following, when the landlord put in a distress, under which he seized the furniture and goods put in by T. Long, which were purchased by the landlord. The following was the receipt: "Received from Mr. Savage, on advance of goods, 12*l* 15*s*. for balance of rent due from T. Long, to Midsummer, 1825." Signed. Abbott, C. J. "The question is, whether the pauper had a derivative settlement from her husband; or in other words, whether the husband had acquired a settlement in Carshalton at the time of his death. I think he had not, whether we consider the 59 Geo. III. or the 6 Geo. IV. as the governing law. There was not any payment of rent by the person hiring the tenement, as required by 59 Geo. III.; nor was there any payment of one whole year's rent, as required by the 6 Geo. IV. at the time of his death; and I think that the subsequent payment by means of the sale of his goods, is not sufficient to satisfy the requisites of that statute. The husband not having acquired a settlement in his life-time, the pauper cannot have any derivative settlement." Bayley, J., Holroyd, J., and Little-dale, J., concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Kibworth Harcourt, 7 B. & C. 790; 1 M. & R. 691; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 255. Order of removal of James Asker from Kibworth Beauchamp to Kibworth Harcourt. Case:—About Lady-day, 1825, the pauper took of Thomas Bradshaw a house and garden situate in Kibworth Beauchamp, at the rent of 10*l*. for a year, to commence at the ensuing Michaelmas. The house and garden were then in the occupation of one Cooper, whose term expired at Michaelmas, but Bradshaw said he should expect Cooper to stand as tenant till Michaelmas, and should expect the rent when Matthew Waterfield, who was tenant of other premises to Bradshaw, paid his: and it should all be put in one receipt. The pauper was let into possession immediately by Cooper, and paid rent up to Michaelmas to Cooper; after which time he continued to occupy the premises, and paid rent as after mentioned up to Michaelmas, 1826. Early in the pauper's tenancy, Waterfield, then being churchwarden of Kibworth Beauchamp, called upon the pauper, and represented to him that Bradshaw had let the pauper's premises, together with other premises, to him, Waterfield, and that the pauper was thenceforth to pay the rent quarterly to him. At the same time Waterfield told the pauper that he should make a reduction in his rent of 8*s*. a year, to which reduction the pauper assented, and a rent of 9*l*. 12*s*. was accordingly paid by the pauper to Waterfield, in the course of that year, by four quarterly payments, namely, the first two payments to Matthew Waterfield, and the last two, after the death of Matthew, to John Waterfield, his brother and successor in the premises. At the end of the year, a sum of 55*l*. was carried by John Waterfield to Bradshaw, the landlord, which sum included 10*l*. for the pauper's rent of the house and garden for the year just completed, and the residue was composed of rent for the other premises occupied by Waterfield. Bradshaw returned 5*l*. to Waterfield, and gave him one receipt for the whole rent. It further appeared that John Waterfield was reimbursed out of the parish funds the sum of 8*s*. paid by him to the landlord, over and above the 9*l*. 12*s*. The sessions found that there was fraud in this case on the part of the township of Kibworth Beauchamp, but that neither the landlord nor the pauper was a party to the fraud. Bayley, J. "If 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, had required that the rent should be paid by the pauper, there would be some difficulty in overcoming the fact of fraud found. I am of opinion that the pauper did acquire a settlement by renting a tenement in Kibworth Beauchamp under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. The renting, upon which the question in this case depends, did not commence till Michaelmas, 1825, after that act came into operation; therefore the former act of 59 Geo. III. c. 50, does not appear to me to bear upon the case. The new act does not require that the whole rent shall be paid by the person hiring the tenement, but only that it shall be 'actually paid.' Here the whole rent of 10*l.* was actually paid; and though a part of it was paid, not by the pauper, but by a third person, still the whole having been paid, I think the requisites of the statute have been satisfied in that respect." (a)

(a) See this case observed upon by Will. IV. c. 18, the rent must be paid Bayley, J., post, 661. But now by 1 by the person hiring.

Where the payment of the rent by the parish officers for the occupiers was stated to have been made fraudulently: Held, that no settlement was gained under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57.

Rex v. St. Sepulchre, Cambridge, 1 Bar. & Ad. 924. Appeal against an order removing Thomas Kisby and family from Holy Trinity to St. Sepulchre, both in Cambridge. Order confirmed. Case:—About Michaelmas, 1827, the pauper, who was before settled in St. Sepulchre, hired of one Sophia Bones a house situate in the parish of St. Andrew the Great, in Cambridge, at the rent of 10*l.* per annum, payable quarterly. He entered upon it at Michaelmas, 1827, and occupied it till Christmas, 1828. His wife paid the first quarter's rent at Christmas, 1827, the next soon after Lady-day, 1828, and 2*l.* towards the next, a little after Midsummer, 1828, but no more was ever paid by her or the pauper. The pauper, about the time he gave up the house (Christmas, 1828), went to the parish officers of St. Sepulchre, and asked one of the overseers for a little assistance, as he was rent run; but the overseer gave him nothing then, stating that he was only just come into office, but he would see the other officers. The pauper went a second time to the same overseer, when he said "something must be done." It further appeared that the overseer did not know when the pauper applied for relief that his rent was 10*l.* a year, but the landlady having applied afterwards for the rent, he then knew the amount of rent, and that the pauper lived out of the parish; it did not however appear that at that time the overseer knew that the pauper had inhabited the house a year. The parish officers met, and determined to pay the remainder of the pauper's rent, and the amount (5*l.* 10*s.*) was paid by the same overseer to Miss Bones. The sessions found that the payment of the 5*l.* 10*s.* was fraudulent, with an intention of settling the pauper in St. Andrew the Great. Per curiam: "The sessions having found that the 5*l.* 10*s.* was paid fraudulently, no settlement was gained. It cannot be the meaning of the statute that the hiring or renting must be bonâ fide, but that the payment of the rent may be malâ fide." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Ditchet, 9 B. & C. 183; 4 Man. & R. 458 (see post, 661). Bayley, J. said "That the words 'by the person hiring the same,' may be considered as struck out of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and the law altered so far as it required that the rent should be paid by the person hiring the premises. It is now sufficient if it be paid either by the person hiring or by any other person, i. e. provided the payment be made in the lifetime of the party hiring." (Rex v. Carshalton ante, 653.)

The words of the act 6 Geo. IV. c. 57 (ante, 584), are "paid for the term of one whole year." If the hiring be from an antecedent period, and the tenant hold from the time of hiring into a second year, and then pay a full year's rent, that is sufficient. (Rex v. Stow, post, 661.) But payment to the amount of 10*l.* is sufficient from 22d June, 1825.

14. Occupation under 13 & 14 Car. 2.

A tenant at 10*l.* a year gains a settlement, although he lets part of the premises to under-tenants.

14. OCCUPATION UNDER 13 & 14 CAR. II.

Rex v. Llandverras, Burr. S. C. 571; 1 Bla. Rep. 603. E. Hughes, father of the pauper, rented a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and paid the rent to the landlord. He lived for above forty days in a part of it, which was of the value of 40*s.* only. Immediately after his taking the tenement he let the residue thereof to under-tenants, without residing thereupon at all himself.

(a) See also Rex v. Ruthin, ante 647, and Rex v. Tibbenham, post.

It was argued that being liable only to the rent did not gain him a settlement. He must occupy as well as take a tenement of 10*l.* a year value, and he ought to occupy the whole 10*l.* a year; otherwise many different poor families might be introduced into a parish upon one such taking. It would quite evade the act if the mere taking of a tenement would do so; for then one would gain a settlement by taking, and another by occupying the same tenement. By the court: "In case of a gross fraud, the sessions no doubt will find it so, and the settlement would be void. But no fraud being found, there is no doubt upon the law of the case, but that Hughes was the tenant and liable to the rent, and had credit for the whole; and therefore he is as much settled as if he had rented a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and let lodgings. The act doth not require a person renting a tenement of 10*l.* a year to occupy it; it is enough if he rents it and resides forty days in the parish. The ground the act goes upon is a person's having credit sufficient to hire a tenement of that value. This man appears to have had such credit. The under-tenants do not take a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*, therefore they do not hereby gain a settlement."

Rex v. Newnham, Burr. S. C. 756. The pauper H. Denton, and R. Mann, his wife's father, jointly rented and occupied an estate at Newnham, of 80*l.* a year, for three years. Mann dying about the end of that time, Denton soon afterwards took a house of R. White at Awre, of the yearly rent of 3*l.*, and another estate, consisting of lands, of J. Sergeant, at Awre, at the yearly rent of 8*l.* Mann leaving a widow, and she and Denton being upon the death of Mann jointly possessed of the remainder of the stock, which had been on the estate at Newnham, they went and lived in the house at Awre, and jointly occupied that house and the said estate of 8*l.* a-year, for one year, the stock on the house and estate being partly the property of Denton, and the other part the property of the widow; and sometimes one, and at other times the other of them, sold parts of the stock and received the money for the same: and at the time of taking the tenements by Denton, neither White nor Sergeant knew of any connection subsisting between Denton and the widow. A moiety of the stock was more than sufficient to stock the house and farm. (Lord Mansfield was not in court.) The other three judges declared themselves all thoroughly satisfied that the settlement was in Awre. Aston, J., observed, "that if two persons jointly take a tenement of less annual value than 20*l.*, this will not gain a settlement to either of them. But a man who takes more than 10*l.* in yearly value, may let part of it to under-tenants: and this will not destroy his settlement, though it will not gain one to such under-tenants who pay him less than 10*l.* a-year, as was determined in the case of Rex v. Llandverras (ante, 654). The widow Mann was in the nature of an under-tenant to the pauper. The pauper had the credit of taking the tenement. He alone took the house and likewise the lands. Neither of the landlords knew of any connection between the widow and him; and he only was personally responsible for the rent. They were not partners in taking the tenement, though they were joint occupiers of it. She would gain no settlement by merely being a joint occupier, without having been concerned in taking it. Nor shall the person, who alone took it, lose his settlement by letting in a joint occupier."

14. Occupation.

Or occupies it jointly with another person.

Joint taking by two must be of the annual value of 20*l.*

15. OCCUPATION UNDER 59 GEO. III. c. 50, 6 GEO. IV. c. 57, AND 1 WILL. IV. c. 48.

It may be doubtful whether the legislature did not intend that "to hold" and "to occupy" should be convertible terms, as they have used them both in these statutes upon the same subject. The courts of law however have felt themselves bound to notice the distinction in their legal signification, in adjudicating upon questions of settlement law, arising since these statutes were passed.

The 59 Geo. III. c. 50, requires that such house or building shall be held, and such land occupied by the person hiring the same; but the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, enacts, "That no person shall acquire a settlement unless such house, 15. Occupation.

A pauper occupied a tenement till within three days of the end of the year, when he died. His family remained in it beyond the year: No settlement was gained under 59 Geo. 3, c. 50.

The hiring of a cottage and land for a year, at the rent of 11*l.* 10*s.* with an agreement that the land should be entered on at Lady-day, 1827, and held till Lady-day, 1828, and the cottage on May-day, 1827, and held till May-day, 1828: Held, to be an occupation for one whole year sufficient to gain a settlement under 6 G. 4, c. 57.

or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring for the term of one whole year at the least." And the 1 Will. IV. c. 18, requires that the house, land, or building, shall be actually occupied by the person hiring the same.

Rex v. Crayford, 6 B. & C. 68; 9 D. & R. 80; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 208. Order of removal of Sarah Stone, widow, from Bexley to Crayford, confirmed. Case:—At Michaelmas, 1824, Thomas Stone, the pauper's husband, hired a house in Bexley, for a year, at the rent and annual value of 12*l.* He took possession on the 29th of September, and lived in the same till the 26th September, 1825, when he died. His body remained in the house till the 30th. The rent for the first three quarters of a year was paid by him, and for the last quarter by the pauper. The pauper continued in the house till she was removed under the order, and paid rent up to 25th December, 1825. Bayley, J. "The safest rule to adopt in these cases is to adhere to the words of the act. [He then read the 59 Geo. III. c. 56, and added,] The settlement therefore is to be gained by the person who has hired the tenement, and occupied it for one whole year. Here the husband may have hired, but he has not occupied the house for a whole year, inasmuch as he expired three days before the end of the year; and assuming that the wife occupied and paid the rent for a year, still she is not the person who hired the house. This certainly is a very critical case, and perhaps if it had been foreseen by the legislature at the time of passing the act, some provision would have been made to meet it." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Ormesby, 1 Nev. & M. 27; 4 Bar. & Adol. 214. Appeal against an order, whereby W. Milestone and family were removed from Stokesley to Ormesby. Order confirmed. Case:—About Candlemas, 1827, the pauper being legally settled in Ormesby, took of one Emerson a cottage and some land, both in the parish of Kirby. Both the cottage and land were bargained for at the same time, and the rent agreed upon, namely, 11*l.* 10*s.*, was for both conjointly, and each was to be held for the term of one year; but the times of entering upon and quitting the land and the cottage were different, the agreement being that the land should be entered upon at Lady-day, 1827, and the cottage at May-day, 1827, the same to be held till Lady-day, 1828, and May-day, 1828, respectively. The pauper entered upon the land at Lady-day, and the cottage at May-day; he quitted the former on the ensuing Lady-day, having occupied the same for a year, and at May-day quitted the latter, having occupied that for a year, paying the full rent of both cottage and land at two separate payments, namely, the first half-yearly rent after Martinmas, 1827, and the second half-yearly rent about a week before May-day, 1828. No evidence was offered by the appellants as to the value of the land alone or of the house alone. Denman, C. J. "This question depends on the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, which enacts, 'that no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement, unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both bonâ fide rented by such person at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year, nor unless such house or building or land shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least.' Now here the tenement did consist of separate and distinct building and land; they were bonâ fide rented for 10*l.* The question is, whether it was occupied for one whole year. The house and land were occupied under the yearly hiring, and each of them was for the term of one whole year. The words of the statute are therefore satisfied." Parke, Taunton, and Patteson, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. North Collingham, 1 B. & C. 578; 2 D. & R. 743; (see ante, 611.) Upon the second question in this case, namely, whether the pauper gained a settlement when he underlet a part of his tenement, Abbott, C. J., said, "As to the second question, it is to be observed that a different expression is applied to land and to houses. The house is to be held, but the land is to be occupied: it was probably intended that a party taking lodgers, properly so called, should not be thereby prevented from gaining a settlement. The question is, did the pauper hold the whole dwelling-house? It is said that the lodger held a part distinct from the rest, so that a burglary committed in that part might in an indictment be laid to have been in the dwelling-house of the lodger. I think however that that proposition is not established by the facts stated. It is said that putting the key of the inner door into the hands of the lodger, was the same thing as if there was a brick wall between his and the adjoining room. If indeed it had been stated that the key was delivered to the lodger, for the express purpose of preventing the communication between the different apartments, there would be the more weight in the argument. But the key may have been delivered to him for the purpose of enabling him to enter either way; and if that was the object, then he had not any distinct dwelling-house. I rather infer from the facts stated, that that was the object for which the key was delivered; and if so, then the pauper held the whole house, and it is to be considered as one entire tenement; and in that case a burglary committed in the part occupied by the lodger, must have been laid to have been in the dwelling-house of the pauper. For these reasons I am of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement in North Collingham." Bayley, J. "The second point is a question of fact, rather than of law. The sessions might have found it a separate holding, but I see nothing in the facts stated, from which a separation of the part occupied by the lodger from the rest of the house must be necessarily inferred." Holroyd, J. "I am of opinion upon the facts stated, that the whole dwelling-house is to be considered as the dwelling-house of the pauper." Best, J. "It was probably the intention of the legislature that a settlement should not be gained in such a case as the present; but we are bound to decide according to the words of the statute. As to the second point, I have no doubt that in an indictment for burglary, the room occupied by the lodger might be described as the pauper's dwelling-house. Notwithstanding the underletting, in point of law he still continued the tenant of the whole house." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Great Bolton, 8 B. & C. 71; 2 M. & R. 227; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 404. Lucy Hall removed from Great Bolton to Little Bolton. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper's mother Mary Hall being a widow, went to reside in Little Bolton in May, 1823, where she hired a house, consisting of six rooms and a cellar, and being a separate and distinct dwelling-house, for a year, and from year to year, at the annual rent of 11*l.*; and she continued to hold such house, and actually paid the said rent for the same, for the space of two years and upwards. Before she went to live in the house, but after she had hired it and put some of her furniture into it, she underlet to one Clough the cellar under the house at 1*s.* 6*d.* per week, and he occupied the cellar during the whole of Mary Hall's tenancy. The cellar was let unfurnished, and Clough occupied nothing but the cellar. The cellar communicated with the street by an outer door, of which Clough kept the key; and at the time Mary Hall took the house the cellar communicated with the room above in the house by means of a step-ladder and a trap-door; but when she went to live in the house she took away the step-ladder, which she placed in one of the higher rooms of the house, and shut the trap-door, expressly for the purpose of preventing any communication between the cellar and the rest of the house. The trap-door was not fastened, except that the furniture of the house was placed upon it, as upon other parts of the room-floor. The trap-door was never used by the cellar tenant, or by Mary Hall. When the cellar was underlet to Clough there was no fire-grate in it, and soon afterwards Clough applied to Mary Hall for a grate to be put up in the cellar. Mary Hall furnished the grate at her own expense, and it remained there until she left the house, when she sold the grate to Clough, who paid her for it. The pauper lived with her mother, as part of her family, in this house during the whole of her tenancy. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the pauper's mother, on whose settlement that of the pauper depends, gained a settlement in Little Bolton under the 59 Geo. III. c. 50. Lord Tenterden, "The safest course is to give effect to the particular words of the enacting clause. Where the legislature uses in the same sentence different words, we must presume that they were used to express different ideas. The words are, 'that the house or building shall be held and the land occupied.' Here the house was held for one whole year, and the pauper's mother gained a settlement in Little Bolton." Order of sessions quashed.

Under 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, a settlement was gained by holding for one year a dwelling-house, part of which was let by the week to an under tenant, who had no means of access to the rest of the house.

15. Occupation.

It is not necessary that the hiring and occupation under 59 G. 3, should be for the same year.

Rex v. Stow, 4 B. & C. 87; 6 D. & R. 110; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 87. Joseph Ashton was removed from Sturton-by-Stow to Stow. Order quashed. Case:—Three weeks after May-day, 1820, the pauper took a house and land in Stow, at the annual rent of 15*l.*, for one year, from the preceding May-day to May-day, 1821; and at May-day, 1821, he took the same again at the same rent for the year then ensuing. The pauper resided in the house, and occupied the land from the time he first hired the same till five weeks after May-day, 1821, and paid the whole rent during the time he so occupied the house and land. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that the sessions have in this case mistaken the law. All that the act in question requires for the obtaining a settlement has been complied with. There has been a hiring of a house and land for a whole year, at a rent exceeding 10*l.*, and there has been a bonâ fide occupation and payment of rent for more than a year. That satisfies the whole of the act. It has been contended that the legislature must have meant the hiring, occupation, and payment to be for the same year.^(a) If that had been their intention, it would have been easy to say that the occupation and payment should be for such term. But as the words of the statute have been complied with, we cannot say that a settlement has not been gained, on the ground of some supposed intention of the legislature." Bayley, J. "Considering the state of the law before the act in question passed, the words of that act, and the decision of this court in Rex v. North Collingham (ante, 656), I think we are bound to say that a settlement was gained in Stow. Before the passing of the act it was not necessary that a tenement should be hired for any specific period; the mere occupation for forty days of one or more tenements, together of the annual value of 10*l.*, sufficed. Then came the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, requiring that the tenement should consist of a house or land, or both, that it should be hired for a year, occupied for a year, and that the rent should be paid for a year. All those requisites have been literally complied with, and the Rex v. North Collingham decided that the taking need not be of one entire tenement; and I collect from that case, that the court did not think it necessary that, where there are several tenements, the holding of all should commence at one and the same time. And this is a reasonable construction of the act; for suppose a man to hire at Michaelmas land for a year at the rate of 9*l.*, and in like manner to hire at each quarter of the year land of the same value, and to occupy the whole, and pay the rent for five years, unless the occupation under different hirings can be connected, it would be difficult to say that he ever occupied a tenement of 10*l.* per annum for one whole year. That surely would be a very unreasonable construction. I am therefore of opinion, that the occupation under the different hirings stated in this case may be connected, and that the pauper thereby gained a settlement in Stow." Holroyd, J. "I think that a settlement was gained by the renting a tenement stated in this case, connected with the other circumstances of occupation and payment of rent. We are required to put a construction on a restrictive act; but even if that were not so, I should think that the words of it have been complied with. If it had been intended that the occupation should be for the same time as the hiring, the legislature would probably have introduced the words for the said term. It seems to me that the words 'nor unless' have been used in order to divide the sentence, and to exclude the construction now contended for on behalf of the appellants. The dicta as to the decisions on the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, are not applicable to this case; that statute requires that the servant shall be hired for a year, and continue and abide in the same service for a whole year; there was, therefore, strong ground for supposing that the legislature meant the service which the party was hired to perform, viz., a yearly service. But the statute now before us does not require that the occupation shall be for the same term as the hiring." Littledale, J. "Upon the strict words of the act I think that a settlement was gained in Stow, but at the same time I cannot but think the meaning of the legislature extremely doubtful." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Tonbridge, 6 B. & C. 88; 9 D. & R. 128; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 245. John Hazell was removed from Tonbridge to Lamberhurst; quashed. Case:—The pauper, about Michaelmas, 1816, took a cottage, situate in Tonbridge, of one Douch, for a year, at the yearly rent and of the value of 8*l.* 10*s.* At Michaelmas, 1817, he made a fresh agreement for the cottage for one year, at the annual rent of 8*l.*, and continued to hold and occupy it from that time until Michaelmas, 1821, paying a rent of 8*l.* per annum only for it from Michaelmas, 1817. At Lady-day, 1821, he took a garden, also situate in Tonbridge, for a year, at the yearly rent and of the value of 2*l.* 2*s.* He agreed with one William Maynard that they should share the expenses and profits arising from the cultivation of the garden. Maynard paid to Hazell half of the rent, but the latter paid the whole rent to the landlord, who was not (to the knowledge of Hazell) aware of the partnership. The garden was thus occupied for a year, until Lady-day, 1822, and the rent paid for the whole year. At Michaelmas, 1821, Hazell having quitted Douch's house, took a house in Tonbridge of one Lawrence for a year, at the yearly rent of 9*l.*, and he occupied it from that time until his removal in 1825, and paid the rent for it during the whole time. The question for the opinion of the court is whether the pauper gained a settlement by renting a tenement, by operation of the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50. Cur. ad vult. Judgment delivered by Bayley, J. "This was a settlement question between the parishes of Tonbridge and Lamberhurst, depending on the 59 Geo. III. c. 50. The facts were these:—The pauper was removed to Lamberhurst in 1812, and there was no appeal. In 1816 he took a cottage in Tonbridge at 8*l.* 10*s.* per annum, but in 1817 the rent was reduced to 8*l.* He continued in that cottage till Michaelmas, 1821. At Lady-day preceding (in 1821) he took a garden at 2*l.* 2*s.* a year, but he agreed with one Maynard that the expense and profits should be shared between them. The garden was occupied a year, and the rent paid. At Michaelmas, 1821, when he quitted the house at 8*l.* a year, he entered upon another at the yearly rent of 9*l.*, which he occupied till 1825. So that from Lady-day, 1821, to the Michaelmas following, he had the garden and the 8*l.* house, and from Michaelmas, 1821, to Lady-day, 1822, he had the garden and the 9*l.* house; and it is only from Lady-day, 1821, to Lady-day, 1822, that there is any pretence for saying he had 10*l.* a year. By 59 Geo. III. c. 50 (which operated from 2d July, 1819), a distinction is made between houses and buildings on the one hand, and land on the other; and though this distinction is removed by the 6 Geo. IV. as to settlements subsequent to the period from which that statute operates, it must still be attended to in cases of previous settlements. By the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, it was required, in case of a house or building, that it should be held for a year by the person hiring it; in the case of land, that he should occupy. In the case of houses and buildings, therefore, so as the tenure subsisted, it was in this respect, before the statute of 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, sufficient; so that under-letting a part of a house or building would not have prevented a settlement; and that point was accordingly so decided in Rex v. North Collingham (ante, 656), which was cited in the argument. But in the case of lands, the person hiring was to occupy for the year. Did the pauper, then, occupy the garden for the whole year? It is stated in the case, that though the pauper took the garden, it was agreed between him and Maynard that they should share the expense and profit. It is also stated that Maynard paid the pauper half the rent, and that the garden was thus occupied. It is not in terms stated that there was a joint occupation; but as Maynard was entitled to participate in the occupation, we think it must be taken that he did, and if so, the pauper cannot be considered as occupying more than a moiety of the garden. Unless the garden was separately occupied by the

15. Occupation.

The pauper agreed with another that they should share the expense and the profits equally of cultivating some garden ground; the partner paid half the rent to the pauper, but the latter paid the whole to the landlord: Held, that no settlement was gained under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50.

15. Occupation.

Pauper took a house for a year at 10*l*. Having lived there nearly the whole term, he abandoned the premises a few weeks before the year ended, and they were then occupied by another person. It did not appear how that party came in. The pauper paid the whole year's rent. He gained a settlement under 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, by holding the house for a year.

pauper the whole year, no settlement was gained. We are therefore of opinion that there was no settlement in Tonbridge, that the settlement in Lamberhurst remained, and that the order of sessions, which quashed the removal to Lamberhurst, on the ground of a settlement in Tonbridge, cannot be supported." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Stow Bardolph, 1 Bar. & Adol. 219. M. Buck, and his wife and children, were removed from Stow Bardolph to Downham Market. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, M. Buck, at Old Michaelmas, 1819, hired a house in the parish of Downham Market, of one Jonah Weston, for a year, at the rent of 10*l*. He occupied the house from that time until a few weeks before Old Michaelmas, 1820, when he removed to another house. The house was then occupied by one Mary Palmer. The pauper paid the whole year's rent, and took a receipt. The sessions found that the pauper had, previously to the Michaelmas, entirely abandoned the possession of the house, and stated the question to be, whether the pauper, having entirely given up possession of the house four or five weeks before Michaelmas, and being succeeded by another occupier, yet paying the whole year's rent, could be considered to have held the house for one whole year, within the meaning of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, so as to gain a settlement in Downham Market. Bayley, J. "This is a plain case. The distinction between land and houses, under 59 Geo. III. c. 50, was laid down in Rex v. Tonbridge, (6 B. & C. 88; 9 D. & R. 128; ante, 659). Land was to be occupied; a house might be held only. In the latter case, 'so as the tenure subsisted, it was sufficient.' Can it then be presumed here, that the relation of landlord and tenant was determined? It must be taken to have continued, unless a determination of it be shown. The case finds that the pauper hired this house for a year, and occupied it till a few weeks before Old Michaelmas, when he abandoned the possession, and removed to another residence; that the house was then occupied by another person, and that the pauper paid the whole year's rent. It does not appear how the succeeding occupier came in. The duty of a tenant on quitting possession is to give up the premises to his landlord; it was essential to the appellants' case that there should have been a surrender, but nothing of this kind is stated. The rent is not shown to have been paid before the end of the year, nor does any intervention of the landlord appear previous to that time. Abandoning does not determine a tenancy; the tenant held till he should give up to the landlord, and that, according to the case, must be taken to have been at the expiration of the year." Littledale, J. "It should have appeared that the holding was put an end to,—not merely that the possession was abandoned. If the pauper had given up the premises, and the landlord, with his assent, had accepted Mary Palmer as tenant, that would have been a surrender by act and operation of law, as in Thomas v. Cook, (2 Bar. & Adol. 119). But we are not informed how Palmer came into possession." Parke, J. "The statute is not clearly penned, but construing it as other acts and writings are construed, we must suppose a distinction intended between lands and houses; that an occupation of the one for a year is required, but not of the other. In this case, for the purpose of the act, the house was the pauper's during all the year. Unless it could be shown that a regular surrender took place, or that another person was let into possession with the consent of the pauper as tenant (as in Thomas v. Cook), we cannot say that his interest ceased until the year was out." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Ditchet, 9 B. & C. 176; 4 Man. & R. 151. Removal of Martha, wife of T. Jerard, from Ditchet to Lyncombe, quashed. Case:—Jerrard rented a tenement in Lyncombe by the year, from Lady-day, 1825, to Lady-day, 1826, at the rent of 15*l*. with liberty to quit on a quarter's notice. After the first month's occupation Jerrard left his wife for seven months. She paid the year's rent, the receipts for which were given as if it had been received from the husband. A few days after Lady-day, 1825, Jerrard let an apartment in the tenement to Gay, at the yearly rent of 8*l*. with liberty to quit on a quarter's notice. Gay occupied till Lady-day, 1826, and paid his rent to that time. Jerrard gave notice at Christmas, 1825, to quit at Lady-day, 1826. The landlord permitted the wife to occupy part of the tenement till Midsummer, 1826, on paying 38s. for the same, till which time she lived there. Jerrard never paid any parochial rates although rated. Bayley, J. "The statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50, is repealed by the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. The question therefore in this case is, whether a settlement was or was not obtained under the last-mentioned statute? By the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, a settlement could not be obtained in the case of a house or building, unless such house or building were held, or in the case of land, unless it were occupied, and the rent for the same were actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least, by the person hiring the same. There was therefore a specific enactment that the house should be held, and the land occupied, and the rent paid by the person hiring the same. The language of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, is different. That statute is wholly silent as to the occupation or payment of rent by the person hiring; and it has been decided in Rex v. Kibworth Harcourt (ante, 653), that according to the true construction of the statute, the payment of rent need not be made by the party hiring. The words, by the person hiring the same, are to be considered therefore as struck out of the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and the law altered so far as it required that the rent should be paid by the person hiring the premises. It is now sufficient if it be paid either by the person hiring or by any other person. The words of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 2, are, that the house, or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same, to the amount of 10*l.*, shall be actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least. Here the phrase is varied. The statute says, not that the house or land shall be occupied by the person hiring the same, but only that it shall be occupied under such yearly hiring. And although it may be difficult to arrive with certainty at the meaning of the legislature, which is not expressed in very intelligible language, I incline to think the true construction of those words is, that it shall be occupied by the person to whom that hiring gives the right of occupation, and that occupation by any other person, to whom that right is communicated either by assigning or underletting, is not an occupation under the yearly hiring within the meaning of the statute. That is my present opinion. If between this time and to-morrow morning I should change that opinion, I will certainly communicate it to the court. My learned brothers think that the words under such yearly hiring do not make occupation by the person hiring requisite, but that it is sufficient if either he himself or any other person under him occupy. I think that a party who occupies as an under-tenant, though he may be said in some sense to occupy under the yearly hiring, cannot be said to occupy under the yearly hiring within the meaning of this clause of the act of parliament; because though he does occupy in part under that yearly hiring, he does not in toto; he occupies under the yearly hiring and something else. As to the other question, viz. whether the holding before the 22nd of June, when the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, was passed, and the holding subsequent to that period, can be connected, I am of opinion they may; provided the occupation before the 22nd of June be such as will satisfy the requisites of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57; and therefore if a party, before the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, began to operate, was in possession of a yearly tenement, and held it under such circumstances as that statute says shall be requisite in order to gain a settlement, a settlement will be conferred. There are no words in the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, which import that the taking shall be subsequent to the time when that statute came into operation. With respect to the residence for forty days, I think the case ought to go down to the sessions again, in order that it may be stated more distinctly what the nature of the residence was, or whether the whole forty days' residence required was actually by the husband himself. The cause of the husband's absence, whether it arose from his own free will, or from compulsion, or from other circumstances, may possibly be material. In Rex v. St. George, Southwark (post, 672), the husband was incapacitated by law from residing in his own house; for he was in prison during the whole of the time, and had not the power of residing on his own property for forty days." Littledale, J. "The principal difficulty in this case arises upon the construction of the word 'occupied,' in the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. There is a material difference between a holding and an occupation. A person may hold though he does not occupy. A tenant of a freehold is a person who holds of another: he does not necessarily occupy. In order to occupy, a party must be personally resident by himself or his family. In this case it seems to me that the pauper has been the occupier of the house during the whole period. We have no distinct account how the apartment was let or occupied. In an indictment for housebreaking it might be laid to be the house of the pauper's husband. So in an action for use and occupation, he might properly be described not merely as holding but as occupying the house. In the statute 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 14, which gives the action for use and occupation where the agreement is not by deed, a distinction is made between the words held and occupied. That section enacts, 'that it shall be lawful for the landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the lands, &c. held or occupied by the defendant, in an action on the case for use and occupation of what was so held or enjoyed.' By the statute of the 43rd of Elizabeth, the rate for the relief of the poor is to be on the occupier. The rate in this case must clearly have been made on the pauper's husband for the whole house though he underlet part. In Nolan's Poor Laws, 176, it is laid down that no lodger, though possessing the principal part of the house, was ever rated; but the owner, how small soever the part reserved for himself, is, in the eye of the law, the tenant for the whole, and is rated as the occupier. Then, as in an indictment for housebreaking (committed in the apartment let to Gay), the house might be described as the dwelling-house of the pauper's husband; and as he might be described as the occupier of the house in an action for use and occupation, and would be rateable to the poor as occupier in respect of the whole house, I think he must be considered in point of law as having occupied and resided in this house. It is not necessary in order to make a man an occupier that he should actually sleep or take his meals in a house, or that his family should actually dwell in the whole house; but the law considers him for this purpose an occupier if he hold the whole, and by himself or his family occupy part. I think therefore the pauper's husband may be considered to have occupied the house within the meaning of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. It might have been otherwise if he had underlet the whole house and occupied no part. The word occupation as applied to a house undoubtedly implies personal residence. But if a lessee of a house dwell in any part of it, though he let the other part, he in point of law is to be considered as the occupier of the whole. If that be the true construction of the word 'occupied,' the pauper's husband occupied the house; and then the only question is, whether there has been forty days' residence by the pauper's husband? and upon that point there is some doubt. That certainly is essential; for the legislature did not intend by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, to alter the law in that respect. Upon the finding in this case, I rather collect that the pauper's husband had abandoned his wife, and gone to pursue his own course of living in some other place. If he had merely gone away for the purpose of business, with the intention of returning, the residence would be there still, though he was temporarily absent. I agree with my brother Bayley that the case ought to be sent back to the sessions, in order to have the fact ascertained." Parke, J. "I have entertained considerable doubt in this case; but I am inclined to think that a settlement was gained in the parish of Lyncombe and Widcombe. The question turns entirely on the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. My judgment may have the effect of defeating the intention of the framer of that act. But it is a very safe rule of construction to adhere to the words of an act of parliament in their grammatical and natural sense, unless it appears clearly from the context that they were intended to be used in some other sense. There is a material difference between the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 50. The last-mentioned statute expressly requires the building to be held, and the land to be occupied, and the rent to be paid, by the person hiring the same.

The statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, omits the words 'by the person hiring the same.' It does not require the payment of rent or occupation by the person hiring the same, but occupation under the yearly hiring. These words may be satisfied by the continuance of the term and occupation by a sub-tenant or assignee during the continuance of that term. It is not necessary to decide in this case whether occupation by an assignee would be sufficient or not. Here there was an occupation by a person whose character is left doubtful. It does not appear by the case whether it was that of a sub-tenant having an entire occupation of one part of the building or that of a lodger. It seems to me there was an occupation by the husband of the pauper under the yearly hiring, provided the premises continued in the occupation of any person entitled under the tenancy created by the yearly hiring. I think we ought to give effect to the words of the act of parliament in their plain natural sense, unless we see clearly from the context that the intention of the legislature was different; but I find nothing in the context to show that that which those words taken in that sense import, was not their intention. I must suppose that the legislature, when they repealed the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, which expressly required an occupation by the person hiring, had some reason for omitting those words in the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. Possibly that omission may have arisen from inattention on the part of the framer of the act, and it may have been intended to require occupation by the person who took the term. But it seems to me that the words used do not expressly require such occupation, and we must not presume the intention of the legislature, but collect it from the words of the act of parliament. Then if the meaning of the legislature be that which the words used naturally import, a settlement has been gained provided there has been a residence of forty days. As to that the case is ambiguous. I think it ought to be referred again to the sessions for the purpose of having the facts stated one way or the other. If it be found that there was no residence by the husband for forty days, then no settlement will be gained." Case sent back to the sessions.

15. Occupation.

Rex v. The Inhabitants of Great Bentley, 10 B. & C. 520. Upon appeal against an order of two justices, whereby J. Peeling, his wife, and children were removed from little Clacton to Great Bentley, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the court of K. B. on the following case:—J. Peeling, the pauper, hired a tenement, consisting of a separate and distinct dwelling-house and a pasture field of two acres in the respondent parish of Little Clacton, the hiring to commence on December 25th, 1826. He engaged to pay for this tenement the rent of 13*l.* 10*s.* a year for the term of two years; but in the latter part of March or the beginning of April, 1827, the pauper sold the grass in the field, from that time till New Michaelmas, to John Townsend for ten guineas, to be mowed or fed by him, as he pleased, and during that time he discontinued to turn his donkey and cow into the field as he had before done, as he did not consider that he could feed the grass after he had sold it to Townsend; and having a quantity of clover which he wished to stack in the field he asked Townsend's leave to stack it there; and having obtained that leave, abated one shilling from a claim he had upon Townsend for labour which he had performed for him, and which Townsend accepted as an acknowledgment for the damage done to the grass by the stack. The pauper sold the grass to Townsend in the same way in the second year, though with some variation in the price. The court of quarter sessions held that during the operation of the pauper's agreements with Townsend he did not occupy the field under his yearly hiring in the manner required by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and therefore that he had not gained a settlement by the hiring of this tenement. Knox and Broderick argued in support of the order of sessions. Mirehouse, contra. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The question in this case turned on the tenement act, 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. Upon consideration we are all of opinion that all that was required to be done by that act has been done in this case, and consequently that the pauper gained a settlement by renting the tenement in question. That statute enacts, that 'no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township by, or by reason of settling

By the 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, which repealed the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, it is enacted, that no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of settling upon any tenement, unless it shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person at the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least, &c. : Held, per totam curiam, that under that statute a pauper who rented for a year a dwelling-house and land at a rent exceeding 10*l.* per annum, which was upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement, not being his or her own property, unless such tenements shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person in such parish or township at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year.' Here the tenement consisted of a separate and distinct dwelling-house and land: it was bonâ fide rented by the pauper in the parish, and at and for a rent exceeding 10*l.* per annum for one whole year. But then the statute continues, 'nor unless such house or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least.' The rent for the term of one whole year has been actually paid. The only question is, whether there was an occupation of the whole of the premises hired under the yearly hiring? It was objected that the pauper did not occupy the whole of the premises hired under the yearly hiring; that he let off the land, and that this clause of the act of parliament therefore was not satisfied. There is a difference between the language of the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 2, and that of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50. The last-mentioned statute required that the house should be held, and the land occupied, by the person hiring the same; but those words 'by the person hiring the same' are omitted in the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57. The legislature when they passed that statute must have had in their minds the very act (59 Geo. III. c. 50,) which they were repealing. We cannot therefore but consider that those words were left out by design. Then the only question is, whether the whole of the premises were occupied under the yearly hiring? It is clear that they were. That being so, every condition that was required by the terms of the act of parliament has been complied with, and the pauper has gained a settlement. We think it much the safer course to adhere to the words of the statute construed in their ordinary import, than to enter into any enquiry as to the supposed intention of the persons who framed it. The order of sessions must therefore be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

To give a settlement by renting a tenement since 1 Will. 4, c. 18, there must be an occupation in fact of the whole dwelling-house or building of which the tenement consists by the party hiring the same.

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester, 5 Bar. & Adol. 219; 3 Nev. & Man. 21, S. C. Appeal against an order, whereby C. Tress and family were removed from St. Margaret to St. Nicholas, both in the city of Rochester. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, C. Tress, on the 3d of October, 1831, took a lease for a year of a house in the appellant parish, at the rent of 40*l.* per annum. Under this lease he entered into possession of the house, and remained there with his family until the 3d day of October in the following year; he paid the rent for half the year, and fulfilled all the conditions of the statutes 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, and 1 Will. IV. c. 18, unless the court should be of opinion, that under the following circumstances the house was not occupied by the pauper within the meaning of the 1 Will. IV. c. 18. The house in question was a separate and distinct dwelling-house, consisting of three floors. When the pauper had been in possession of the premises about three months, viz. on the 4th of January, 1832, he underlet the two upper floors, unfurnished, to one Boucher; and during all the time Boucher staid in the house the pauper occupied the ground floor only, by himself and his family. Boucher's agreement with the pauper was, that he should take these two floors of the pauper by the quarter, at the yearly rent of 22*l.*; that Boucher should have the use of a wash-house on the ground floor in common with the pauper, and that the pauper should have a sleeping room in the upper floor for one of his children, whenever Boucher did not want it for his own family. Boucher entered into possession of the two floors on the 4th of January, furnished the rooms himself, staid in them upwards of two quarters, and paid the rent agreed on. During Boucher's residence there he had the joint use of the wash-house, and the pauper's child, by the permission of Boucher, occupied the sleeping room in the upper floor about a fortnight or three weeks according to the agreement. The ground floor was not separated from the upper floors by any door or partition, and both the pauper and Boucher, during Boucher's residence in the house, had common access to it by the front and back doors, and each took the key of the front door whenever he had need of it, without asking permission of the other. Denman,

C. J. "The meaning of the word occupied may vary according to the occasion or the subject-matter. The meaning, therefore, which it has received in considering what occupation was necessary to constitute a mansion-house in which burglary might be committed, or to give a right of voting, or to make a party rateable to the relief of the poor, is no test of its meaning in this particular case. A new distinction is introduced by the statute 1 Will. IV. c. 18. Under the former statute, 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, a constructive occupation was sufficient. This statute requires an occupation in fact. It recites the former act, and that doubts had arisen with respect to the intentions of the legislature concerning the occupation of such house, building, or land, by the person hiring the same, and enacts, that 'no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish by reason of such yearly hiring of a dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, as in the said act expressed, unless such house or building, or land, shall be actually occupied under such yearly hiring by the person hiring the same.' A constructive occupation will not satisfy these words. The statute requires in terms an actual occupation. Here it appears that the pauper underlet the two upper floors, and occupied the ground floor himself. It is impossible to say, in the face of the statute, that the pauper who occupied the ground floor only actually occupied the whole house. The consequences resulting from this statute are remarkable; a person of whatever degree of respectability who hires a house by the year at a high rent, and underlets a part of it, will be prevented from acquiring a settlement by renting. But whatever the consequences may be, I must say that the words which the legislature has used prevent a settlement being gained in this case." Littledale, J. "What I am reported to have said in Rex v. Ditchet (9 B. & C. 176, ante, 660,) as to the meaning of the word occupation, applies to a constructive occupation only, which was sufficient to satisfy the statute that governed that case. The statute 1 Will. IV. c. 18, referring to the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, enacts, that no person shall acquire a settlement by such yearly hiring of a dwelling-house, &c. unless such house, &c. shall be actually occupied under such yearly hiring by the person hiring the same. That evidently means an occupation in fact. But in this case another party, not the person hiring, had a right to occupy two-thirds of the premises; there was not, therefore, an occupation in fact of the whole house by the pauper, for he could not in an action of trespass justify going into the rooms which he had let; he had parted with all right to them from quarter to quarter. The word actually must have effect given to it; and giving the word full effect, it must mean occupation in fact, as distinguished from a constructive occupation. To the question I put during the argument, whether it would make any difference if the underletting were for a less period than a year, the proper answer has been given. If there be not an actual occupation of the whole house, within the statute, when part of it is let for a year, neither would there be when part of it is let for a week. It may be said, that deducting 22*l.*, which the under-tenant in this case was to pay, from the whole rent of 40*l.*, that part of the premises which the pauper retained was still rented at 18*l.*; but this cannot be taken into consideration. There must be an actual occupation of the whole house. The consequence undoubtedly will be, that all persons who let lodgings will be prevented from gaining a settlement by renting a tenement of any value. But it is better to adhere to the plain words of a statute than to depart from them on the ground of some supposed inconvenience." Taunton, J. "It is a safe rule of construction to adhere on all occasions to the language of a statute. It has been often much lamented that the judges have departed from the plain and literal construction of the statutes relating to the settlement of the poor. On the language of this statute, which was made to remove doubts arising as to occupation, I have no hesitation in saying, that it requires an occupation of the whole house by the party hiring. The word 'such,' which comes before the words 'yearly hiring,' is very material, because, by reference to the recited statute, it must be taken to mean the yearly hiring of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or land, or both. There must be an occupation in fact of a separate and distinct dwelling-house, and not only under the yearly hiring, but also by the person hiring the same. Now, were all these conditions performed here? The pauper took a distinct and separate dwelling-house at 40*l.* a year, but divided the occupation of that dwelling-house between himself and Boucher. The latter probably had the larger part; but whether that was so or not is immaterial. We cannot say that the pauper actually occupied a separate and distinct dwelling-house under the yearly hiring, when there was an exclusive occupation of part by another person. I am therefore satisfied that there was not an actual occupation within the meaning of this statute. The order of sessions must be quashed." Patteson, J. "I am of opinion, on the plain words of this statute, that no settlement was gained by the pauper. The words 'actually occupied' put an end to all question, and the case must be considered as if the word 'actually' were incorporated in the former statute, which is not repealed by the 1 Will. IV. c. 18. Then reading the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, as if that word as well as the words 'by the party hiring the same,' were incorporated in it, it will prevent any one from acquiring a settlement by renting a tenement, unless such house or building (that is, the separate and distinct dwelling-house, or building, or land, or both, of which the tenement is required to consist,) shall be actually occupied under the yearly hiring, by the party hiring the same, for the term of one whole year. Now in this case it is clear that the whole dwelling-house was not actually occupied by the party hiring the same; part of it was occupied by another person. The decisions on the liability of persons to be rated, and their rights of voting, as occupiers, which have been referred to, are not affected by this case." Order of sessions quashed.

No settlement can be gained since the passing of 1 Will. IV. c. 18, by the renting and occupation of a tenement by a party who allows an under-tenant to have the exclusive occupation of rooms in the tenement, for however short a period such occupation may continue, and however small may be the sum paid in consideration of it.

Seemle, That a letting of rooms by an innkeeper to his guests, is not such an under-letting as would defeat the settlement.

The 1st sect. of 1 Will. IV. c. 18, (though prospective only) applies to cases in which the occupation had commenced but was not complete at the time of passing of the act.

Seemle, That a discharge of rent by means of a distress upon the goods of the tenant is a sufficient payment of rent by the party hiring the tenement within 1 Will. IV. c. 18, s. 1.

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Colchester, 4 Nev. & Man. 422; 2 Adol. & Ellis, 599, S. C. Appeal against an order of removal of S. Sparrow and family from St. James to St. Nicholas, Colchester. Order confirmed. Case:—By an agreement in writing, dated 24th March, 1831, the pauper and one Hutchinson hired a messuage at St. Nicholas for two years, at the rent of 60*l.*, payable half-yearly. Hutchinson was included in the agreement merely to guarantee the payment of the rent, the pauper only being intended to occupy the premises. 25th March, the keys were delivered to the pauper. 7th November, a distress was put in for the half-year's rent which had become due at Michaelmas, 1831, and the pauper's goods were sold under the distress by the bailiff, who, out of the proceeds, paid 30*l.* for the rent to the landlord who had employed him, and paid over the remainder, after deducting the costs of the distress, to the pauper. At Lady-day, 1832, the pauper gave up possession, in pursuance of an agreement made with Hutchinson, under which the latter took exclusively upon him the liability to pay the arrear of rent due from the pauper. During the year commencing Lady-day, 1831, and expiring Lady-day, 1832, three rooms in the said messuage were underlet by the pauper to Mr. D. W. Harvey, who had the exclusive occupation of them for three weeks, for which he paid 8*l.* The question is, whether the pauper gained a settlement in St. Nicholas or not. If he did, the order of sessions is to be confirmed; if not, the order to be quashed. Lord Denman, C. J. "This is in truth a question whether Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester (ante, 664), was well decided; for the attempt which has been made to distinguish that case from the present appears to me to fail. Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester, was decided after full argument, and upon great consideration, by my brothers and myself. At the same time, if there had been anything like a reasonable doubt raised as to the law having been improperly applied on that occasion, I am quite sure every one of us would have been willing to give the greatest attention to every argument that could be brought to show us that we were wrong. I recollect that upon the former occasion every judge who gave an opinion felt that the consequences were such as the legislature had not contemplated, and such as might involve some inconveniences. But we found the words of the statute too strong to grapple with. I am ready to declare that where I find the words of a statute perfectly clear I shall adhere to those words, and shall not allow myself to be diverted from the application of them by any supposed consequences of one kind or the other, as to which courts of justice are very often much deceived. The words of the statute

(which came into operation on the 30th of March,) are these: 'that from and after the passing of this act no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor, by or by reason of such yearly hiring of a dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, as in the said (recited) act expressed, unless such house or building or land shall be actually occupied under such yearly hiring in the same parish or township, by the person hiring the same, for the term of one whole year at the least.' The fact is found in this case, that during the year commencing at Lady-day, 1831, and expiring at Lady-day, 1832, several rooms were underlet by the pauper to Mr. Harvey, who had the exclusive occupation of them for three weeks, for which he had paid 8*l.* I find that this very case was contemplated by one of my brothers in the decision of Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester; and it was admitted that if for any period another person had the exclusive occupation of any part of the house, that would defeat the settlement; and it seems to me we should frustrate the object of the act if we said that under such circumstances the pauper would gain a settlement. Some difficulty is supposed to be raised by the case of innkeepers. I cannot say that I feel the difficulty, for there is no analogy between the occupation of a room by a guest, and the letting out to a person the exclusive occupation of a part of the house. The occupation in the former case is that of the innkeeper, who has a general control over the whole house, and who, in fact, occupies by means of his guest. I do not think that any doubt can be raised on that subject; nor do I think that any great inconvenience can result from any of the consequences which have been suggested. Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester, however, having been fully considered, and the words of the act completely warranting that decision, I think we are bound to say that in this case also no settlement was gained." Littledale, J. "I see no reason to depart from the opinion I gave in Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester; and I think that we are bound by that decision, and that this is not such an occupation as falls within the meaning of the act of parliament. Then the only question is, whether the year having commenced prior to the passing of the act, the inchoate settlement can be affected by it? Now it appears to me that the words of the act being 'that no settlement shall be gained from and after the passing of the act,' which was the 30th of March, it clearly does apply to this case." Williams, J. "I am of the same opinion. One of the reasons which induces me to abide by the decision in Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester, is, that I am quite satisfied of the truth of that which has been often said by learned judges, who have very well understood this subject, that it is as important, especially in cases of this sort, to abide by the rule of law when ascertained, as it is to determine the rule originally. Unless, therefore, I saw the clearest ground for doubting the correctness of the decision in Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester, I should certainly give my assent to that decision. It appears to me that it is perfectly consistent with the principles and objects of the acts which have been passed upon this subject. The 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, was introduced in consequence of the very expensive litigation occasioned by the then state of the law; and, in order to remedy this evil, that act confined the legal settlement by renting a tenement, by enacting that no person should acquire a settlement in any parish, &c. by or by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement not being his own property, unless such tenement should consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person in such parish, &c. at 10*l.* a year for one whole year; nor unless such house, &c. should be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* actually paid, for one whole year at the least. That at once got rid of much of the vexatious litigation which arose on the subject. After that act came the one upon which this question depends, (1 Will. IV. c. 18,) which is expressly stated to be 'An Act to explain and amend an Act of the Sixth of his late Majesty, as far as regards the Settlement of the Poor by the Renting and Occupation of Tenements.' Now in what respect does it explain and amend it? It explains and amends it by still further abridging and curtailing the power of gaining settlements by renting a tenement, in conformity with the principles of the former act; and it accordingly says, that 'no settlement shall be gained unless the house, &c. shall be actually occupied under such yearly hiring by the person hiring the same for the term of one whole year at the least.' It appears to me that the construction which was put upon those words by the court in Rex v. St. Nicholas, Rochester, is the true and right construction. It has been said that this act ought not to have a retrospective operation. It is observable that the act does not affect the contract, but relates expressly to the occupation. It declares that after the passing of that act no settlement shall be gained unless an occupation of a particular sort shall take place. If the act had required a contract of a specific nature, an inchoate settlement by reason of an occupation under a contract valid at the time when it was made, would not have been affected by this. This case is, however, totally different. I therefore am of opinion, that those words 'actually occupied,' &c. which are studiously introduced into this statute, must point to an entire exclusive occupation; and, if it does, we cannot enter into the question of degree—whether the under-letting be of 10*l.* a year, or 5*l.*, or 50*s.* If there be a clear under-letting by the party of any portion of the house, for however short a period of time, and for however small a sum, it seems to me that it cannot be said that there was an actual occupation of a separate and distinct dwelling-house by the party hiring the same. I should not have said so much upon this case if I had belonged to the court at the time of the former decision." Order of session quashed.

In Rex v. St. Giles in the Fields, Hil. T. 1836, MS. the pauper let a bed in a room of his house for one night, reserving the right of entering the room and putting another lodger into the same bed: Held, that this was an occupation by the pauper.

What a holding under the hiring.

Rex v. Kibworth Harcourt, 7 B. & C. 790; 1 Man. & R. 691. (See the case, ante, 653.) Bayley, J. "I also think that the pauper occupied the premises for one whole year under that hiring, for nothing that was done by Waterfield could have the effect of altering the original tenancy created between the pauper and the owner of the premises. The pauper remained tenant under the original taking, and the landlord ought to have distrained on him for the 10*l.* if it had been in arrear."

During the year the pauper, but not his family, was removed by an order. He returned the same day: Held, sufficient occupation under 59 Geo. III.

Rex v. Barham, 8 B. & C. 99. Welch was removed from Barham to Dover. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, on 6th April, 1823, hired a house in Dover for a year, of the value and rent of 12*l.* per annum, payable monthly. In January, 1824, the pauper became chargeable, and was by an order directed, with his family, to be removed to Barham. He alone was removed, and an overseer of Barham received him, gave him money, and directed him to return to Dover. He returned the same day to his house, and occupied it under the original contract till Michaelmas, 1824; when, in consequence of threats by the overseer of Dover to send him to gaol for coming back, he agreed with his landlord to take the house by the week. At Michaelmas, 1824, the pauper owed some rent. No final settlement took place till June, 1825, when a distress having been put in, the pauper paid the rent, and left the house which he had occupied first under the yearly and then under the weekly hiring uninterruptedly since April, 1823. The pauper paid his rent on account as it suited him, part in meat (being a butcher) and part in money, but had no regular settlement till he left the house. Barham did not appeal against the order in January, 1824. The sessions thought that the pauper gained no settlement by the occupation of the house. C. a. v. Judgment by Lord Tenterden, "The question depends on the 59 Geo. III. c. 50. [He then read it.] The language of this enactment is very peculiar. No person is to acquire a settlement by reason of dwelling forty days in any tenement, unless such tenement shall consist of a house (as it does in the present case) bonâ fide hired by such person at 10*l.* a year, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house shall be held and the rent for the same paid for the term of one whole year at the least. It should seem, therefore, that if a pauper resides for forty days upon a tenement, and the other requisites of the act have been complied with, he gains a settlement. Now here the pauper resided in the house more than forty days, both before and after the removal, and all that the act requires in other respects was complied with; the house was taken for a year, held upwards of that period, and the rent paid. It has been contended, that the effect of the order of removal was to prevent the settlement only; all that the act requires has been complied with after that order was made. If the effect of the order had been to compel the pauper to abandon his tenement, it would make a difference. But he was absent from his home not even a day, and his family were never removed at all. It is admitted that Rex v. Fillongley (ante, 632,) has decided that the removal did not put an end to the contract between the landlord and tenant; and under all the circumstances we think it safer to say that a settlement was gained under 59 Geo. III. by the residence before and after the removal. [His lordship then adverted to the supposed offence of the pauper in returning after removal, for which see post, and concluded.] Our decision may, perhaps, in this particular case, operate to defeat the object of 59 Geo. III.; but it is better to abide by the consequence than to put upon it a construction not warranted by the words of the act, in order to give effect to what we may suppose to have been the intention of the legislature." Order of sessions quashed.

15. Occupation.

16. THE WHOLE TENEMENT NEED NOT BE IN ONE PARISH, UNDER 13 & 14 CAR. II.

16. The whole Tenement need not be in one Parish, under 13 & 14 Car. II.

As the renting of a tenement of the prescribed annual value was all that was required, the courts held, that if a person rented several different tenements, making together the required amount, it followed, that if these several tenements were situated in different parishes that would not defeat the settlement, which would in such case be acquired in that parish in which the person resided.

South Sydenham v. Lamerton, 1 Stra. 57. A person rented a tenement of 10*l.* a year, being one entire tenement, but lying in two parishes. The question was, whether this gained a settlement. Parker, C. J. "The quantity of rent is not material, but the value of the land. A tenant often pays a fine, and thereby lowers the rent, and yet the land is of equal value. And if a man should out of kindness settle another in a tenement of 10*l.* per annum value, reserving no rent, that will not alter the case. The only difficulty is that there is not in this case 10*l.* per annum in one single parish. As to that, I am of opinion, that if such a person as this should take a tenement of 8*l.* per annum in one parish, and another of 3*l.* per annum in a different parish, that would not gain him a settlement in either; but if the tenement be entire, and the house in one parish, as this case is, and part of the land in another, yet this may properly be called a tenement of 10*l.* per annum in that parish where the house is. Two distinct tenements, in two parishes, making together 10*l.* per annum, will give no settlement; but it seems to me to be otherwise where the tenement is entire." Eyre and Pratt, Js. accordant. [But see infra.]

An entire tenement lying part in one parish and part in another will gain a settlement.

Elsted v. Hollibourne, 2 Sess. Ca. 130; 2 Stra. 849. A person rented a farm-house and lands at 12*l.* 10*s.* a year, which house and land lay contiguous and had been usually letten together and occupied by the same person; but the house and part of the land, together amounting to 9*l.* a year, lay in one parish, and 3*l.* 10*s.* in another parish. This was held to be a settlement, on the authority of South Sydenham v. Lamerton, (1 Stra. 57, supra.)

Same point.

Rex v. Sandwich, Burr. S. C. 44; 2 Bott, 107. A person rented a house in Studland at 30*s.* a year. After he had lived in it about two years he took lands in Langton of 12*l.* a year, on which there was no house, and occupied the lands two years; all which time he inhabited in and rented also the house in Studland. By the court: "It hath been a question, whether two distinct tenements taken at different times (where neither of them alone amounted to 10*l.* a year in value) should make a settlement? But it is now settled that it does: and it is the same thing, whether the takings were distinct or entire, or in one parish or two parishes. The settlement is in the parish where he lives;

Different tenements, lying in different parishes, held under different takings, would formerly confer a settlement.

16. The whole Tenement need not be in one Parish. (Rex v. Fritwell, ante, 630.) The ground of these resolutions is the ability to rent a tenement of such a value; which excludes the presumption of his being likely to become chargeable to the parish.”

Same point.

St. Lawrence v. St. Maurice, Winchester, Burr. S. C. 588; 2 Bott, 169. R. Gradidge rented a tenement of H. Warne, in Hursley, for a year from Lady-day at 3*l.* 10*s.* a year, but resided therein five or six weeks only and then quitted it and tendered the key to Warne which Warne refused to accept, whereupon Gradidge left it with a neighbour before Midsummer-day then next for Warne to take it when he thought proper. On Midsummer-day, Gradidge took a tenement in St. Maurice at 9*l.* a year; and on the same day entered into possession, and resided thereon above forty days, before the key in Hursley was received by Warne, who did not accept it till the 16th of August following. But by the court: “Here is a contract for a year in Hursley not dissolved; nor could it be dissolved; the landlord refused to accept the key; and he did not receive it at last till the middle of August, which was more than forty days after hiring the second tenement.”

17. In what Parish the Tenement must be.

17. IN WHAT PARISH THE TENEMENT MUST BE, UNDER 59 GEO. III. c. 50; 6 GEO. IV. c. 57, and 1 WILL. IV. c. 18.

Among the several important alterations made by the above statutes, is to be noticed that by which a person can no longer acquire a settlement by renting several small tenements in different parishes, making together a total of sufficient annual value. This settlement can now only be acquired in respect of the renting in the same parish in which the settlement is claimed.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 50 (ante, 583), the whole of such land shall be situate within the same parish or township as the house, wherein the person hiring such land shall dwell and inhabit. The 6 Geo. IV. c. 57 (ante, 584), requires that the tenement shall consist of a dwelling-house or land, or both, rented by such person in such parish or township. The 1 Will. IV. c. 18 (ante, 584), requires that the tenement “shall be actually occupied in the same parish or township.” But it is not necessary that the whole of the tenement should be taken at one time.

18. Who may acquire this Settlement.

18. WHO MAY ACQUIRE THIS SETTLEMENT.

It would probably be difficult to say who may not gain this kind of settlement; of course, every person capable of entering into a contract for the renting of a house or land, is competent to acquire this right by such means; and even where, from the peculiar condition of the individual, it may be doubtful whether he is of ability to contract, yet if he actually hire a house or land and continue in the enjoyment of the property the requisite length of time it will be sufficient.

A foreigner may gain a settlement by renting a tenement.

Rex v. Eastbourne, 4 East, 103. Ann Borchert and her children were removed from Seaford to Eastbourne. Order confirmed. Case:—Ann B.’s maiden settlement was in Eastbourne; she married J. B., a German, by whom she had the children mentioned in the order. J. B. was, at the time of the removal, resident in a house at Seaford of above the value of 10*l.*, exercising therein the trade of a baker. His trade declined at Seaford, and he thereupon thought he could exercise it with more advantage at Eastbourne. The wife and children thereupon became chargeable, and were removed as above. The husband acquiesced in every thing which took place with regard to the removal; accompanied them to Eastbourne, and afterwards continued to reside there with them. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. “This man was not an alien enemy, but a German by birth; an alien amy; and as such, though he may not take a lease of a dwelling-house or shop, yet he may occupy a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and carry on his trade there like any other person. (a) Then he has that interest which may enable him to gain a settlement by the provision of the legislature.” Order quashed.

(a) 1 Saunders’ Rep. by Patteson and Williams, 6 & 7, note 1.

Rex v. Brighthelmstone, 1 B. & Ald. 270. W. Lancaster was removed from Gloucester to Brighthelmstone. The pauper had been serjeant in the militia, which lay in barracks at Brighthelmstone, and performed all the duties of his situation as serjeant, and during that time had taken a tenement there of the value of 10*l.* a year or more, in which he had resided with his family for more than forty days. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "In this case, it seems to me, that the sessions have drawn the right conclusion. It is contended that the party here had no intention of coming to settle at Brighthelmstone; that is not correct; certainly he had the intention of settling there, subject, however, to the power of those who directed his movements. The case states that he himself took the tenement as a lodging for himself and his family. Now suppose an action then to have been brought against him for non-payment of rent, he clearly could not set up as a defence, that he was not the tenant of the premises; then if he, as a tenant, occupied this house of the yearly value of 10*l.* and upwards, he was, during his occupation, irremovable, and that having continued for forty days, he has gained a settlement. But it is said the mutiny act prevents a soldier from gaining a settlement; that act, however, contains no such express provision: the clause enabling every soldier to be examined as to his settlement, does not disqualify him from obtaining a new one. The case of hiring and service is quite distinguishable from this; that proceeds on the ground of a person's not being permitted to contract two relations inconsistent with each other. In order to gain a settlement by hiring and service, he must engage to serve at all events for a year; now a soldier has not the capacity to render such service, for an order from the war office may at any time intervene and take him from his master's controul. The case of taking a tenement is quite different, he does not there engage to reside in it for any definite period, and if he does actually reside for forty days it is sufficient. If not, it would equally follow, that supposing an estate to have devolved upon him by act of law, or that he had made a purchase to the amount of 30*l.*, still no settlement would be gained by him." Order of sessions confirmed.

18. Who may acquire this Settlement.

So a soldier, whilst on duty, may gain this settlement.

19. RESIDENCE UNDER 13 & 14 CAR. II. c. 12.

19. Residence, &c.

Residence for forty days is sufficient; and the law in this respect is not altered by the recent statutes.

Rex v. Dilwyn, Burr. S. C. 54. William Smith, the pauper, agreed for a farm in Eardisland, to hold from Candlemas, at 44*l.* yearly rent; and in April following he sowed about fifteen acres of the land with grain; in May following he came to live on the farm, and inhabited there about three weeks; and then the greatest part of his stock of cattle was seized for rent due to a former landlord. Smith then came to a new agreement with his landlord in Eardisland and agreed to quit that farm, and to continue in the farm-house and garden, and to have a small parcel of pasture with it, at the rent of 3*l.* 10*s.*, and he continued thereupon in Eardisland till Michaelmas following. By Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "There was no inhabitancy for forty days in Eardisland under the lease of 44*l.*; and, therefore, there can be no settlement gained under it. And the next agreement with his landlord in Eardisland was quite a separate contract, and cannot be tacked to the former. It did not take effect till the other was finished."

Forty days' residence upon a tenement of ten pounds yearly value is necessary.

Rex v. Caversham (see ante, 605), where the pauper rented a stall in a market, to which he had access only on two days in the week, and rented it from 1st of November, 1817, to the 4th of March, 1818, the court held that as he did not occupy it for more than thirty-eight days, he gained no settlement.

Rex v. Llanbedergoch, 7 T. R. 105. Order of removal of the pauper from Llanbedergoch to Pentraeth quashed. Case:—The pauper rented a tenement in Lleckylehod, called Peurhyw, of Griffith, for the year 1795. In May, 1795, he received notice to quit at All Saints following. The pauper said he had no place to go to, and if he was compelled to quit he would take down a barn he had built upon the farm. Griffith then said, suppose we exchange, you shall go to Weyû Emâd, a tenement in Llanbedergoch that If a person be forcibly removed from his tenement within forty days, it prevents his settlement.

19. Residence. Griffith farmed of Pritchard, at the rent of 10*l.* 10*s.* a year, to which the pauper agreed, and promised not to take down the barn. It was agreed that they were not to mention the matter, lest the respondents should hear of it, and prevent the pauper getting into possession of the farm at Weyû Emâd. On the 16th November, 1795, he removed to Weyû Emâd, but did not remove his furniture there, lest the respondents should see him, he having been informed if he got into possession and slept in the house one night he could not be turned out. The pauper resided twenty-nine days on the premises, when Pritchard, aided by some of the parishioners and overseers of Llanbedergoch, forcibly removed him and his family from Weyû Emâd, and thereby prevented him residing there forty days, and he has ever since been forcibly kept out of the premises. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "In order to gain a settlement by living upon a tenement of 10*l.* a year, it is absolutely necessary that the party should reside there for forty days; with regard to the fraud, where a case is pregnant with circumstances of fraud, the court have repeatedly said they cannot infer fraud; that fraud is a fact to be expressly stated." Order of sessions quashed. (See Rex v. Fillongley, p. 632.)

In case of fraud it might be otherwise.

If a person be arrested and carried to prison in a parish different from that in which his tenement is, before he has completed a residence of forty days, he gains no settlement, though his family reside for seven weeks.

Rex v. St. George the Martyr, Southwark, 7 T. R. 466. Order for removal of Mary, wife of J. Lord, from St. George the Martyr to St. Martin in the Fields, quashed. Case:—J. Lord took the first floor of a house in St. Martin's at 15*l.* per annum, the rent to be paid quarterly; he went into possession on the 17th March, and on 22nd March he was arrested and carried to the Marshalsea prison in St. George's, but his family continued to reside in the house in St. Martin's parish until the 6th of May following, being seven weeks, the husband remaining all the time in the Marshalsea prison, when his wife and children went to him there, and he gave up possession of the house in St. Martin's, and the landlord took part of his furniture for seven week's rent. The question was, whether the husband gained a settlement in St. Martin's. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "that no settlement could be gained by a residence on a tenement for a shorter period than forty days; and though in Rex v. Leeds (1 Bla. Rep. 466, post.) it was only decided that the justices ought not to have removed the pauper from Blackfordly during the continuance of his lease, the court added that 'if his lease at Blackfordly had been at an end, his last forty days' residence at Leeds might have borne a different consideration;' evidently intimating an opinion that forty days' residence is necessary to give a settlement." Order of sessions confirmed.

Absence on business, but family continuing, may constitute residence.

Rex v. Ditchet, 9 B. & C. 183; 4 Man. & R. 151. (See case, ante, 660.) Bayley, J. said, "with respect to the residence for forty days, the case ought to go to the sessions again, in order that it might be stated more distinctly what the nature of the residence was, or whether the whole forty days' residence required was actually by the husband himself. The cause of the husband's absence, whether it arose from his own free will or compulsion, or from other circumstances, may possibly be material. In Rex v. St. George's, Southwark (supra), the husband was incapacitated by law from residing in his own house, for he was in prison during the whole time, and had not the power of residing on his own property for forty days." Littledale, J. "There is some doubt whether there has been forty days' residence by the pauper's husband. That certainly is essential, for the legislature did not intend, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, to alter the law in that respect. Upon the finding in this case, I rather collect that the pauper's husband had abandoned his wife and gone to pursue his own course of living in some other place. If he had merely gone away for the purpose of business, with the intention of returning, the residence would be there still, though he was temporarily absent." Parke, J. agreed that the case must be sent back, and added, "if it be found that there was no residence by the husband for forty days, then no settlement will be gained."

Residence for thirty-three days by a widow, on a tenement of twenty pounds a year, cannot be coupled with a residence on

Rex v. South Lynn, 5 T. R. 664. Order of removal of the children of Ann Howard, widow, from South Lynn to East Bilney, quashed. Case:—C. Howard, the father of the paupers, on the 23rd October, 1792, being then and some time before in possession of a cottage and land in Wiggshall, at the yearly rent of 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, hired a house in South Lynn at the yearly rent of 9*l.*, and paid 10*s.* 6*d.* in part of the rent, and on the following day he and his wife and children entered into possession, and resided thereon till his death on the 8th November, 1792, still keeping possession of the cottage and land in Wiggenhall. C. Howard died intestate, and no letters of administration have been granted to any person, but the widow kept possession of and occupied the house and cottage in South Lynn and Wiggenhall, but she and her children resided in South Lynn until 11th December, 1792, and on her quitting the house at South Lynn, she paid the landlord 12s., which, with the money paid him before by her husband, was for half a quarter's rent. After this she remained in possession of the cottage in Wiggenhall. By Lord Kenyon, C. J.: "If we were to decide on the express words of the act of parliament, we should overturn ninety-nine cases out of a hundred that have been determined on this statute. If a mere residence on a tenement for forty days irremovable, were sufficient to give a settlement, every lodger and every servant residing for that length of time would then acquire a settlement; but in order to gain a settlement by residing on a tenement of the yearly value of 10l., the party must stand in the relation of tenant to the property for forty days. Here there was an inchoate right in the husband, and afterwards in the widow, which, if completed by a full residence of forty days, in either case would have been sufficient; but that one necessary act, residence for forty days, by the same tenant to the property, was wanting. The husband, after residing sixteen days on this estate, died, and then the wife resided on it; but what privity was there between husband and wife as to this property? It appears that she did not take out letters of administration, so as to give her a settlement by residing on her own for forty days, nor did she reside on the estate for that time as tenant of the premises; and indeed she was not solely entitled to administration. Rex v. Netherseal (ante, 628) is different from the present, because there the estate was bequeathed to the widow, whose second husband lived forty days upon it; but here there was no privity of contract or of interest whatever between the pauper and her late husband, and we cannot connect the residence of the husband as tenant with the residence of the widow as tenant, so as to complete the forty days' residence by both. Though this case is new in specie, it is not new in principle; and upon the principles established in former cases, I am of opinion that the widow did not acquire any settlement in South Lynn." The other judges concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

St. Margaret's, Westminster, v. Ludgate, 2 Barnard. 76; 2 Bott, 127. Removal of Elizabeth Conyers from St. Margaret's to Ludgate. Case:—J. Conyers, father of Elizabeth, rented a house in Ludgate of 25l. a year, and paid to the rates of the church and poor; but he was a prisoner in the Fleet at the time he did so. In this case he was in the custody of the law, and in no capacity of gaining a settlement elsewhere; though occasionally absent, yet he might be looked upon as virtually resident in Ludgate, which was the place where he came to settle. (a)

Rex v. Topcroft, Cald. 478; 2 Bott, 221. The pauper rented a farm in Kempnell at 30l. a year, and resided on it from Lady-day, 1779, till Christmas, 1781, when he went with his wife to reside with his son-in-law at Topcroft, taking with him all his furniture and the stock remaining on his farm at Kempnell; he resided with his son-in-law at Topcroft upwards of forty days before he delivered up the possession of the farm in Kempnell, but he did not hire or occupy any land or tenement whatever in Topcroft. Rex v. Llanverras (ante, 654) was cited to show that the residence must be in the parish where the tenement or some part of it lies; and of this opinion was the court. And Lord Mansfield, C. J., said, "Even if residence in one parish and occupation in another were sufficient, here is no such occupation, for he had run away and left his tenement." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Knighton, 2 T. R. 48. Robert Hardy was removed from Knighton to St. Margaret. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper took a windmill in St. Margaret's of ten guineas a year, at Lady-day, 1778, and occupied it for the same tenement with her husband for sixteen days preceding, so as to gain her a settlement.

Where the tenant is in the rules of the Fleet, and he has in the same parish a tenement he rents, he paying the rent, he gains a settlement.

The residence must be in the parish where some part of the tenement lies.

one year. On the 30th of April following he married Anne, the daughter of Samuel Ward, of Knighton. Before the marriage Ward said he would give him house-room till he could provide himself; and on his marriage he went accordingly to reside with his father-in-law at Knighton, whose house was about a quarter of a mile distant from the mill; and he continued there until the death of Ward, in 1786. During the time he occupied the mill, or afterwards, he neither rented nor occupied any land in Knighton. During the last half year he rented the mill he kept a servant, who resided with him in Ward's house as part of his (the pauper's) family. The pauper believed it was known to Knighton that he rented the mill, because he served some of the inhabitants there with grist, and they knew him to be a miller. Ashhurst, J. delivered the opinion of the court, (after taking time to consider). "The question in this case is, whether the pauper gained a settlement in the parish where he rented a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*, or in the parish where he resided, occupying at the same time a tenement in another parish? And we are all of opinion that he did not gain a settlement in Knighton, because, *in order to gain a settlement by renting 10*l.* per annum, there must be a residence either on the premises, or at least in the parish where some part of the premises lies.* Rex v. Topcroft (ante, 673) is decisive of the question; and there are two or three other cases, Rex v. Butley (Burr. S. C. 107, ante, 621), which confirm this doctrine, where it has been taken for granted that there must be a residence." Order of sessions quashed.

It is not necessary to the gaining of a settlement by coming to settle upon a tenement, that the pauper should reside upon any part of it.

Rex v. Kenardington, 6 Bar. & Cress. 70; 9 D. & R. 72, S. C. Appeal against an order for the removal of W. Knight and family from Kenardington to Ulcomb. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, W. Knight, when about sixteen years of age, hired himself for a year to T. Knight, at the wages of four guineas: he served the year in the parish of Ulcomb, dwelling in his master's house there, and received his wages. He afterwards, and about twenty-two years ago, married Sarah his wife; and having, about four years after his marriage, removed to Kenardington, he entered into a contract with Joseph Stead, a farmer there, to serve him as a labourer upon his farm, at the wages of 16*s.* a week, to have his wheat at 6*s.* a bushel, butter at 1*s.* a pound, and a small house of his master's situate in his master's farm rent free to live in. He entered into the service, and continued in it under these terms for three years; and between Christmas and Lady-tide, in the third year of his service with Stead, the pauper, with two other persons, hired of Joseph Boon seven acres and a quarter of land in the parish of Kenardington, at the price and of the value of 25*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, being 3*l.* 10*s.* per acre; and at the same time he, on his own account, took an acre of land in the same parish of Joseph Boon, at the price and of the value of 50*s.* The seven acre piece was cultivated and cropped with potatoes, and the expenses and the rent for the same were paid equally by the pauper and his two partners; but the one acre piece was cultivated and cropped with potatoes by and at the sole expense of, and rent for the same was paid by the pauper alone; thereby making his renting in the parish of Kenardington at one time 10*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*; and these two parcels of land were held together by the pauper, and by the pauper and his partner six months. The pauper at no time resided on any part of the land taken of Joseph Boon, but resided in the small house of his master's on his master's farm, as his servant. At the end of the three years he quitted Stead's employment, and at the same time left his house. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the order of sessions was right; a settlement having been gained in Kenardington. The argument against the settlement is, that although the pauper rented a tenement of more than 10*l.* annual value, yet as he did not reside upon any part of it, but with a master, no settlement was gained. In Rex v. Bardwell (2 B. & C. 161; 3 D. & R. 369; ante, 616), expressions were certainly used by Best, J. and me, giving a larger meaning to the words coming to settle in the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, than we ought to have done, and Rex v. Shipdam (ante, 617) was decided on the same ground. In Rex v. Benneworth (2 B. & C. 775; 4 D. & R. 355; ante, 603), the court took time to consider the question; because they were pressed with the former decisions, and re-considered them. The point is not mentioned in the judgment pronounced in Rex v. Benneworth; but that judgment could not have been given if the court had been of opinion that Rex v. Bardwell, and Rex v. Shipdem, were well decided. In Rex v. Sutton St. Edmunds (1 B. & C. 536; 2 D. & R. 800; ante, 598), it appeared that the pauper entered into a service where he was to have 18*l.* a year wages, and the keep of two cows. He lived in a cottage on his master's farm; but it was found that the occupation of the cottage was incidental to his service. The court held that he did not gain a settlement; because there was no bargain that the cows should be pasture fed. If the court had then thought residence upon the tenement necessary the case would not have admitted of an argument, and the other point would not have been made the ground of the decision. In Rex v. All Saints, Derby (ante, 588), there could not be any residence on the tenement, and yet a settlement was gained. In Rex v. Benneworth also there was no residence on the tenement, and the renting of the tenement was during the service. It can make no difference, whether the bargain for the tenement is connected with the contract for service, or whether, as in this case, it is a separate contract made with a third person." Littledale, J. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Mary, Lambeth, 8 T. R. 240, 241. John Taylor was removed from St. Olave to St. Mary, Lambeth. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, about four years ago, took a tenement at the yearly rent of twelve guineas, in St. Mary, Lambeth, and continued tenant thereof until 29th September, 1797. He resided in that tenement from the time of taking it, until 24th June, 1797, when he took a lodging for the convenience of his business, at the rent of 8*l.* 10*s.* a year, in St. Mary-le-bone, where he occasionally slept, leaving his family at Lambeth: both tenancies expired on 29th September, 1797. The pauper slept sometimes in Lambeth and sometimes at his lodgings in St. Mary-le-bone, and for above forty days in the whole upon the tenement in St. Mary-le-bone, and he slept there the last thirty nights of that tenancy. His family never accompanied him, or slept in St. Mary-le-bone, but remained at the house in Lambeth until about three weeks previous to Michaelmas-day, 1797, when she went away, and took the furniture away with her. The court said there could be no doubt but that the pauper's settlement was in St. Mary-le-bone, where he had a tenement of above the annual value of 10*l.* when joined to the other in Lambeth, and in which former tenement he had resided on the whole above forty days, and where he had slept the last night. The question was too plain for argument." Both orders quashed.

Where a residence is in different parishes, and in one of them for forty days at different intervals, and the pauper sleeps there the last night, the settlement is gained there.

Rex v. Ringwood, 1 M. & S. 381. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. in the course of the argument, said, "The court will not enter into minute inquiries whether the pauper slept, in the literal sense of the word, during the last night of his residence,—what will satisfy pernoctavit is sufficient."

20. Residence and other Requisites under 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, 1 Will. 4, c. 18.

20. Residence, &c.

It is here essential to consider each of those enactments. The 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, enacted that no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor, in England, by or by reason of his or her dwelling for forty days in any tenement rented by such person, unless such tenement shall consist of a house or building within such parish or township; being a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building: or of land within such parish or township, or of both, bonâ fide hired by such person at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building shall be held, and such land occupied, and the rent for the same actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least, by the person hiring the same: nor unless the whole of such land shall be situate within the same parish or township as the house wherein the person hiring such land shall dwell and inhabit, any thing in any act or acts, or any construction of or implication from any acts or any usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

59 G. 3, c. 50, no settlement shall be acquired by renting any tenement except a house or land in the parish bonâ fide hired at and for ten pounds a year, &c.

By 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, (passed June 22, 1825), reciting that the ascertaining the value of tenements had given rise to very expensive litigation, and that doubts had been entertained whether the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, had been effectual for the purpose of altering the law in respect of the necessity of proving the annual value of tenements so rented, the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, is repealed; and by sect. 2 it is enacted that no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor, by or by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement not being his or her own property, unless such tenement shall consist of a separate or distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person in such parish or township, at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building, or land, shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same, to the amount of 10*l.*, actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least: Provided always that it shall not be necessary to prove the actual value of such tenement; anything in any act or acts, or any construction of, or implication from any act or acts, or any usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

By 1 Will. 4, c. 18 (passed March 30th, 1831), reciting 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, and that doubts had arisen with respect to the intentions of the legislature concerning the occupation of such house, building, or land, by the person hiring the same, and concerning the amount of the rent to be paid, and the person paying the same, it is enacted that, after the passing of this act, no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor by or by reason of such (a) yearly hiring of a dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, as in the said act expressed, unless such house, or building, or land, shall be actually occupied under such yearly hiring in the same parish or township, by the person hiring the same, for the term of one whole year at the least; and unless the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* at the least shall be paid by the person hiring the same.

Sect. 2. Provided that, where the yearly rent shall exceed 10*l.*, payment to the amount of 10*l.* shall be deemed sufficient for gaining a settlement under the said recited act. And see 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 66, Appendix.

It has been already noticed, that the land or buildings, by renting which a settlement is to be gained, must all be in the same parish, and although the latter of these statutes requires that the tenement shall be occupied, yet it does not follow that a longer residence is necessary than heretofore. (See the statutes, ante, 583.)

A residence therefore for forty days, and although not on the tenement, if it is in the parish, is sufficient under these statutes, as it was before they were passed.

In Rex v. Ditchet, 9 B. & C. 183; 4 Man. & R. 151 (ante, 660, 672), it was assumed that if the pauper himself had resided for forty days, he would have acquired a settlement. Littledale, J. said, that the legislature did not, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, intend to alter the law in that respect.

Rex v. Wainfleet, 8 B. & C. 229; 2 Man. & R. 223 (ante, 634). Bayley, J. “Another objection is, that the pauper did not reside on the land, though he resided in the parish; and, secondly, that he did not reside in the parish for a year. Before the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, actual residence in the parish for forty days upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* conferred a settlement, although the party did not pay any rent for the forty days. But the 59 Geo. III. altered the law in that respect, and the language of that statute must be abided by as nearly as possible. It enacts, that no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish by reason of dwelling for forty days in any tenement rented by such person, unless certain conditions mentioned be complied with.

It seems, therefore, that residence for forty days will be sufficient, if the other requisites of the act have been complied with. Now it requires among other things, if the tenement consists of land, that it should be hired and occupied for the term of one year at 10*l.*, and the rent for that period paid. Here all this has been complied with. It does not appear, therefore, to be essential in this case that the pauper should have continued in the parish for one year. It is sufficient if he resided in the parish for forty days, provided he hired and occupied the land in the parish for the year, and paid the rent for that period.

(a) Must be the same, and not a second hiring, Rex v. Banbury, 1 Adol. & Ellis, 136; 2 Nev. & Man. 105.

21. THE OCCUPIER ASSESSED TO AND PAID POOR RATE UNDER 4 & 5
WILL. IV. c. 76, s. 66.

We have seen that the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 66, enacts that from and after the passing of this act (14th August, 1834), no settlement shall be acquired or completed by occupying a tenement, unless the person occupying the same shall have been assessed to the poor rate, and shall have paid the same in respect of such tenement for one year.

22. OF THE EVIDENCE OF SETTLEMENT BY RENTING, &c.

Rex v. Castle Morton, 3 B. & Ald. 588. Removal from Tewkesbury to Castle Morton. Order confirmed. Case:—James Bedward, the husband of the pauper, took a tenement in Longdon of Miss Poole; the terms of the taking were contained in a written agreement, unstamped, which was lost. J. B., after residing on the tenement about half a year, gave Miss Poole 3*l.* to be off the bargain, and entered into a fresh agreement with Mr. Percent, the landlord of Miss Poole, who accepted him as tenant in her stead. Parol evidence of the contents of the unstamped agreement was offered, in order to prove the amount of rent agreed for between Bedward and Miss Poole, and refused. Dover v. Maester (5 Esp. 92,) was cited. Abbott, C. J. "The promissory note was there admitted in evidence, on the ground that the defendant, who had been in that case guilty of a crime, should not be allowed to relieve himself from the consequences of it by such an objection. And so in the case of forgery, a prisoner cannot object that the forged instrument, when produced, cannot be given in evidence for want of a proper stamp. But this case is very different; for the parties here seek to show the value of a tenement by the proof of a contract previously entered into respecting it. The contract was not therefore in this case collateral, but of the very essence of the case. Nor can it be introduced as a declaration; for it is a declaration made under such circumstances as prevent its being admitted in evidence." Order affirmed. (a)

Rex v. Holy Trinity, Kingston-upon-Hull, 7 B. & C. 611; 1 M. & R. 444. Removal from Eccleshall to Hull, confirmed. Case:—On cross-examination of the pauper, who proved a settlement in the appellant parish, the appellants were proceeding to show that he had acquired a subsequent settlement by the occupation of a tenement, and to prove the rent paid, but the respondents interposed, and asked if the contract for the tenement was not in writing, and he admitted it was. The appellants contended that they might prove the fact of occupation, and the value of the tenement, without reference to the agreement, but the sessions refused it. Bayley, J. "The general rule is, that the contents of a written instrument cannot be proved without producing it. But although there may be a written instrument between a landlord and tenant, defining the terms of the tenancy, the fact of the tenancy may be proved by parol, without proving the terms of it. It was unnecessary in this case to prove by the written instrument either the fact of tenancy or the value of the premises." Littledale, J. "Payment of rent as rent is evidence of a tenancy, and may be proved without producing the written instrument." Case sent back to the sessions, to hear the evidence. (b)

(a) Upon counsel alluding to this case in Rex v. Hull, 7 Barn. & C. 613, Bayley, J., said "There the court only held that they could not receive parol evidence of a written agreement which was void."

But a presumption of tenancy, arising from occupation, cannot be negatived without proving the written agreement.

Rex v. Rawden, 8 B. & C. 708; 3 Man. & R. 426. Removal from Idle to Rawden, confirmed. Case:—The pauper occupied a tenement for a year, and paid rent for it. In answer to this it was insisted, that the pauper was a joint tenant with two others, and to prove this the steward of the landlord was called, who said he did not know who occupied the tenement. He was then asked to whom he had let it, and who were the tenants, but being asked if there was not an agreement in writing, he admitted there was. The sessions received the parol evidence. Bayley, J. "The question in this case is, whether the evidence of the steward was sufficient to rebut a prima facie case of tenancy made out by the appellants? In Rex v. Hull the question at the sessions was, whether the pauper came to settle on a tenement in the character of tenant? The proof was that he occupied and paid rent. The court thought that was prima facie evidence that he came to settle in the character of tenant; there can be no doubt that a party may, by keeping out of view a written instrument, make out by parol testimony a prima facie case of a tenancy, and it then lies on the opposite party to rebut it. Here the appellants made out a prima facie case. The respondents attempted to vary it, by proving that the premises were let to the pauper jointly with others; but that letting was by a written instrument. It is quite clear it could be proved only by the production of a written instrument." Littledale, J. "This case is perfectly different from Rex v. Hull. There the tenancy was proved by occupation and payment of rent. That was prima facie evidence of tenancy. Here the parol evidence was adduced to negative the presumption of tenancy arising from occupation and payment of rent." Parke, J. "A general hiring of land is presumed to be a yearly hiring." (Rex v. Wainfleet, 8 B. & C. 229; 2 M. & R. 223; ante, 634.)

If the occupier is dead, proof of his occupation, and evidence of his declarations as to the terms on which he held, will suffice.

Proofs by which a prima facie case of tenancy may be rebutted.

If the occupier of the tenement is dead, the fact of his possession being first proved, any declarations which he may have made when in possession, tending to show in what manner or on what terms he occupied, may be given in evidence. A prima facie case being thus made out, may be met by proof that the occupation was against the consent of the landlord, or that the party occupied in the capacity of bailiff or servant to the owner of the property, or only a privilege allowed him in respect of something else, which was the principal thing.

The rent, if there be no fraud, is a very fair criterion of the value.

23. Effect of Fraud.

23. EFFECT OF FRAUD. (a)

If the renting is colourable between the parties to the contract, or in any way fraudulent, the settlement will be defeated. (As to the effect of fraud, see Rex v. St. Michael's Bath, Dougl. 630; Rex v. Edington, 1 East, 288; Rex v. Launceston, 3 East, 226.)

Taking land, without stocking it, held to be fraudulent.

Rex v. Woodland, 1 T. R. 261. The pauper went to Ashburton, where he rented a cot-house at 1*l.* 12*s.* per annum, in which he resided; during which time he took a meadow in Woodland, at the rent of ten guineas, of one M. N., who resided in the same parish. The pauper did not stock it at all, but at Christmas he let the grass for 3*l.* 3*s.* to Edward Barter till Lady-day following, who stocked it and paid the rent to him. Several persons offered to take the grass of the pauper before he let it to Barter. The pauper laid up the ground for mowing, and then let the mow to M. N. for five guineas, and the after-grass for two guineas. At the end of the year, when the pauper settled accounts with M. N., he received two guineas on balance of accounts, after allowing five guineas to M. N. for the half year's rent then due; M. N. had frequently made a practice to take ground and let it again in parcels (it was the case now); three years before this transaction, the pauper had received relief from Woodland, and half a year after the expiration of the term, his wife received relief from Woodland. The sessions were of opinion that the said taking was fraudulent. The Court of King's Bench said they were of opinion that it was a fraudulent taking, and they would give no opinion upon the right of the court to examine into the propriety of such conclusion by the sessions.

In Rex v. Fillongley, 2 T. R. 709, which was a question arising upon a settlement by taking a tenement, Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "There is no rule better established than that fraud is never to be presumed, and I believe in a case sent for the opinion of this court, which was pregnant with fraud, they would not presume fraud, because it was not so stated. (See Rex v. Llanbedergoch, ante, 671.) See Rex v. St. Sepulchre, Cambridge (1 B. & Adol. 924; ante, 654), where it was held that no settlement was gained under 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, where the case stated that the rent had been paid by the parish officers for the occupiers, fraudulently for the purpose of gaining the settlement.

Rex v. Tillingham, 1 Bar. & Adol. 180. Upon appeal against an order of two justices, whereby J. Spells and his wife and children were removed from Bradwell to Tillingham. Order confirmed. Case:—About Michaelmas, 1827, the pauper, who it was admitted was before legally settled in Tillingham, hired a house, garden, and bakehouse, situate in Bradwell, of Mr. John Willis, under the following agreement: "Mr. Jonathan Spells agrees to take the house and shop late in the occupation of John Stoker, situate in the parish of Bradwell, Essex, at the yearly rent of 10*l.* for the first two years, to commence at Christmas, 1827, clear of all rates and taxes, landlord's excepted, half yearly payments: Jonathan Spells." The pauper took possession of the premises at Christmas, 1827, and occupied them a whole year. He also paid a year's rent for them, under the following circumstances: Soon after Midsummer, 1828, Mr. Willis applied to the pauper for a half year's rent then due, which he was unable to pay. Shortly after Michaelmas, 1828, a similar application was made for three quarters of a year's rent then due, but no money was paid. The pauper being then distressed, his business of a baker failing, and his family in want, applied to Mr. Stowers, one of the overseers of Tillingham, for relief, and also for a sum of money to enable him to pay his half year's rent, and to carry on his business. Mr. Stowers gave the pauper 1*l.* for relief, and directed him to call again two or three days afterwards. The pauper did call again accordingly, when he received from Mr. Stowers the sum of 12*l.* 10*s.*, 7*l.* 10*s.* of which he paid to his landlord for the three quarters of a year's rent due at Michaelmas, and the remaining 5*l.* he applied in carrying on his business and supporting his family. Shortly after Christmas, 1828, Mr. Robert Willis, one of the overseers of Tillingham (but not the acting one), who was the nephew of the proprietor of the house in which the pauper resided, and acted as agent to his uncle, applied to the pauper for one quarter of a year's rent then due. The pauper said he was unable to pay it, and that he must apply to Mr. Stowers for relief for himself and his family. Mr. Willis said that if the rent was not paid the next day, he should put in a distress, to which the pauper replied he did not consider there was any rent due until the following Michaelmas, 1829. The pauper afterwards again applied to Mr. Stowers for relief; Mr. Willis was present, and asked the pauper if he would object to pay the rent if he had the money in his pocket; to which the pauper replied no, but repeated that he did not consider there was any rent due. Mr. Stowers then desired the pauper to withdraw for a few minutes, that he and Mr. Willis might consult upon the business. The pauper did withdraw accordingly, and in a few minutes was called in again, when Mr. Stowers gave him 3*l.* Mr. Willis then demanded of the pauper payment of the one quarter's rent, and the pauper accordingly paid him 2*l.* 10*s.*, reserving only the remaining 10*s.* for himself; as he was going away, the pauper asked Mr. Stowers where he was to apply for relief when the 10*s.* were gone, saying that he supposed as he had paid a year's rent for his house he was in future to apply to the parish of Bradwell, to which Mr. Stowers replied that he was. Previously to his advancing the sums of

23. Effect of Fraud.

The Court of K. B. will not presume fraud.

Where upon the trial of an appeal, the question was, whether the pauper had gained a settlement by renting a tenement in parish A. and it appeared that he being then settled in parish B., had applied to the officers of the latter parish for relief, and they gave him a sum of money, which enabled him to pay his landlord a year's rent for the tenement in A., whereby he would become settled in A., it is a question of fact for the sessions, whether that payment was fraudulent or not; and if they find that the money was paid solely to enable the pauper to gain a settlement in A., they ought to find fraud; but if of opinion that the money was paid for the purpose of relieving him, they ought to negative fraud.

23. Effect of Fraud.

7l. 10s. and 3l. to the pauper, Mr. Stowers consulted the other parish officers of Tillingham upon the propriety of making such advances, and both those advances were made with their knowledge and approbation. He also took the opinion of two magistrates of the district upon a supposed case, and was advised by them that he might safely and properly make such advances, and that his so doing would not prejudice the pauper's right to acquire a settlement in Bradwell. The sessions did not assign fraud as the ground for determining that no settlement had been acquired in Bradwell, but stated, that as the facts of the case were novel, they were desirous of having the opinion of the Court of King's Bench whether the payment of rent under such circumstances was a legal payment. Bayley, J. "It is not for this court to draw the conclusion of fraud from the facts stated. It was a question for the justices at sessions whether there was fraud or not. If the money was paid by the overseer to the pauper when he was actually under pressure, as for the purpose of relief, that would be no fraud; but if it was paid not with a view to relief, but only to get rid of the pauper and to throw the burden of maintaining him on another parish, that would be fraudulent. I think that this case should go back to the sessions, in order that they may state that there was fraud, or that there was none. If upon this evidence they shall be of opinion that the money or any considerable portion of it was paid by the overseer for the sole purpose of fixing the pauper on one parish, and enabling the other to get rid of him, they ought to find fraud; but if they shall be of opinion that the money was paid bonâ fide with the sole view of relieving the pauper, they ought to negative fraud." Case sent back to the sessions.

8. Of Settlement by Estate.

The favor with which the ownership of real property, as indicative of individual respectability, has always been regarded, is corroborated, among many other of our civil institutions, by the law of parish settlements.

It has been seen under the last title, that the credit and confidence reposed in a man who has been trusted as tenant with the occupancy and temporary possession of a 10l. a year tenement, was sufficient to exonerate him from the condition of legal vagrancy, and to confer upon him the privilege of a settlement, although he in fact remained in the place where he was thus located not more than forty days. The law on this subject has certainly in more recent times been limited and restrained by various statutory regulations; but the observation applies with almost unabated force to settlements by estate; the only condition superadded by modern legislation to the acquisition of this settlement being, that if the estate be acquired by the party's own act, that is, by pecuniary purchase, it must be of the value of, or rather that the price paid must be 30l. at the least. With this exception, whether the individual be owner in fee, copyholder, mortgagee, or leaseholder, executor, or administrator, or come to the possession in any other way by operation of law, his title to the land is sufficient to give him a settlement, although he may not have the beneficial ownership. It is also settled, that an equitable estate is sufficient for this purpose, though a mere equitable interest, which a court of equity might probably sustain and enforce, is not. The case of Rex v. Stone (6 T. R. 295, post, 689), proves that the nature of the tenure or quantity of interest is immaterial, and that even an executor, by residing on a leasehold estate belonging to him in that character, may acquire a settlement.

The principle upon which these settlements are founded is, that the party ought not to be removed from his own, but is entitled to the superintendence and care of his property, however small the annual value. (a) Having land in a parish will not of itself make a settlement, but living in a parish where one has land, will gain a settlement without notice; for the act (13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12,) never meant to banish men from the enjoyment of their own lands. (a) No one can be removed from the parish in which his freehold is situated within the first forty days of residence: but if he quits it voluntarily before he has been resident forty days, and becomes indigent, he cannot be removed thither. In order therefore to acquire a perfect settlement by estate, the party must have resided forty days in the parish in which his estate lies, and while his interest continued. (b)

This head of settlement admits of the following general arrangement and subdivisions.

I. OF THE STATUTES RELATING TO SETTLEMENT BY ESTATE.

No statute expressly creates any settlement by estate. The only statutes relating to this subject are the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, and the 9 Geo. I. c. 7. The first directs the sending a pauper to the place where he was last legally settled for the space of forty days. The last prevents a person who has not bonâ fide paid 30*l.* for a purchased estate, from acquiring a settlement by such estate.

By 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, "that it shall and may be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish, to any justice of peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming so to settle as aforesaid in any tenement under the yearly value of 10*l.*, for any two justices of peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove and convey such person or persons to such parish where he or they were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or they give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said justices."

1. Statutes relating to Settlement by Estate.

9 Geo 1, c. 7, s. 5.
No settlement to be acquired by purchase, if consideration or purchase-money is under 30*l*.

Per Lee, C. J. in Rex v. St. Nyotts, Burr. S. C. 132. "The statute, 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, does not expressly mention residence as owner of an estate. This species of settlement must therefore either depend upon being an exception to the modes of acquiring settlement specified in the act, or upon applying the term 'sojourner' (a) to persons lawfully inhabiting a parish and who cannot be removed from it."

The 9 Geo. I. c. 7, intituled an "An Act for amending the Laws relating to the Settlement, Employment, and Relief of the Poor," section 5, enacts, "That from and after the twenty-fifth day of March, which shall be in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and twenty-three, no person or persons shall be deemed, adjudged, or taken, to acquire or gain any settlement in any parish or place for or by virtue of any purchase of any estate or interest in such parish or place whereof the consideration for such purchase doth not amount to the sum of thirty pounds, boná fide paid, for any longer or further time than such person or persons shall inhabit in such estate, and shall then be liable to be removed to such parish or place where such person or persons were last legally settled before the said purchase and inhabitancy therein."

This act is confined to cases of estates acquired by purchase in the vulgar acceptation of that term, for which a consideration amounting to 30*l*. must be boná fide paid. It does not create or enable persons to acquire a settlement, but prohibits them from gaining one, except under certain circumstances.

No settlement by possession of estate longer than the person shall inhabit within ten miles thereof.

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 68, it is enacted, "that no person shall be deemed, adjudged, or taken to retain any settlement, gained by virtue of any possession of any estate or interest in any parish for any longer or further time than such person shall inhabit within ten miles thereof: and in case such person shall seem to inhabit within such distance, and thereafter become chargeable, such person shall be liable to be removed to the parish wherein previously to such inhabitancy he may have been legally settled, or in case he may have subsequently to such inhabitancy gained a legal settlement in some other parish, then to such other parish."

2. Of Estates acquired otherwise than by Purchase or for Pecuniary Consideration.

1. Nature of property.
Generally land or houses.

2. OF ESTATES ACQUIRED OTHERWISE THAN BY PURCHASE, OR FOR PECUNIARY CONSIDERATION.

First. Of the Nature of the Property.

It has been observed that the nature of the thing or property out of which the interest which is to confer a settlement must arise, has not been expressly defined. The reported cases generally respect settlements by estate in land or houses, and it is no where directly considered, whether a settlement can be acquired by an estate in a "tenement," as that word has been explained under the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, or in the more extensive denomination of property called an "hereditament." (b) The principle upon which these settlements is founded, before adverted to, (c) seems to extend this right to all interest in things immoveable, situate within a town or parish, which as the party cannot take them with him to the place of his settlement, he must be allowed to remain where they are for the purpose of superintending them. (d)

Must be some realty.

It is clear however that the interest must issue out of the realty locally situated in the parish where the settlement is sought; (e) and it should seem it must be such an interest as would entitle the party to take possession of such realty, and therefore an annuity charged by will on personalty or chattel real, or even a rent charge out of freehold, would not constitute a settlement. (f)

trust therein named, out of her estate, during the said J. W.'s mother's life; and if her grandson J. W. should happen to die before his mother, S. W., that then his brother and sister, W. and M., should have and enjoy the aforesaid 10*l.* a year of like lawful money, to be paid by her executors in trust therein named, yearly and every year during the life of her daughter, S. W., aforesaid; and in case W. W. and M. W., her grandchildren aforesaid, should either of them happen to die before their mother, S. W., that then her will and pleasure was that the survivor of them should have and enjoy the aforesaid legacy of 10*l.* a year in manner and form aforesaid payable; the testatrix soon afterwards died, without altering or revoking her will, and left at the time of her decease the leasehold estate above mentioned, and effects to the amount of 32*l.* only and no more. The pauper, J. W., being settled in S. and considerably in debt, in order to avoid his creditors went to reside in C., and there resided with his mother on the leasehold estate, and did carry on the business of a jobber in cattle during the continuance of the annuity and while the same was due and payable for the space of forty days and upwards, between Midsummer, 1770, and Midsummer, 1771: it did not appear that the annuity was rated to any of the public levies. Lord Mansfield said, "There was no colour for adjudging the pauper to have gained a settlement in Cheriton Fitzpayne. He did not go thither to reside upon his own: he absconded there to avoid his creditors. This was no specific legacy: it is payable out of her whole personal estate. But if it were a specific legacy, has a specific legatee any right to go and live upon the estate? If it had been a rent-charge out of a freehold, it would not give a right to live upon such freehold. But this man had only a pecuniary demand. There was no colour for his going to live upon this leasehold estate as his own." The other three judges concurred. Order affirmed.

Rex v. Milborne, 1 Wilson, 87; Burr. S. C. 244. T. Membury, a certificate man, came from the parish of Sheepshead to the parish of Milborne, by a certificate dated November, 1733; was a schoolmaster and taught the charity-school there until his death, in 1743; but in what manner he was admitted to the school it does not appear, but only in general that he officiated till his death. That Lady Ann Hastings had by deed conveyed to trustees 10*l.* per annum in trust to be paid to the vicar of Milborne for the time being for the charity school; that this 10*l.* per annum had not been appropriated to any other use than paying it to the schoolmaster; and whether Thomas Membury had gained a settlement at Milborne, either by serving an office or having a freehold in the school of 10*l.* a year was the question; and the sessions were of opinion and declared he gained a settlement there as having had a freehold in the school. But per curiam, (absente Foster, J.) "A schoolmaster is not an office but only an employment; and what interest Thomas Membury had in the school, whether for life, or how otherwise, or how he was admitted to or came into this employment, does not appear; and that the vicar is the person entitled to the 10*l.* per annum, and not choosing to teach the school himself paid it to this poor man as his deputy, which could not gain a settlement for any person whatever." Order quashed. (a)

It seems that land held as an appurtenant to an office, will not give a settlement by estate. The case was as follows. By an award made by the authority of the lord of the manor and certain commoners an allotment of a portion of the lands enclosed was awarded to "the shepherd for the time being." It was also provided by the award, that the shepherd was to keep the fences in repair. The shepherd had been for many years appointed by the commoners, and was liable to be discharged like any other yearly servant. It was also held that a person who had in fact filled the situation of shepherd and enjoyed the allotment for several years, did not thereby gain a settlement by estate. His situation being yearly, from which he was liable to be discharged, and his taking to the allotment not by virtue of the award, (to which he was

S. P. as to a rent charge on a freehold.

An annuity charged on real estates to a charity school, to be paid to the vicar, is not an interest to the person officiating as schoolmaster which gives a settlement.

Land held as appurtenant to an office in the nature of a yearly service will not give a settlement.

(a) Rex v. Milborne, Burr. S. C. 244; 1 Noll. P. L. The pauper resided under a certificate. See 9 & 10 W. III. c. 11. But if the schoolmaster is in effect the cestui que trust, residing upon what is substantially his own, he acquires a settlement. (See Rex v. Owersby le Moor, 15 East, 356, and 2 Noll. P. L. 88.)

a stranger) but by virtue of his situation as shepherd, the court considered his occupation of the allotment to be a part of the consideration or wages for his service, and that he had no title either legal or equitable to the land, but merely the right to occupy so long as he was in the place of Shepherd. (Rex v. South Newton, next case.)

Rex v. South Newton, 10 Bar. & Cres. 838. Removal of T. Brown and family from Woodford to South Newton, both in the county of Wilts. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper in 1823, while single, was hired as shepherd by the tenantry farmers of the manor of Lower Woodford for eleven months at 14s. per week, and was to have a piece of land called the Shepherd's Croft, which was to make up money as good as 16s. a week, to keep certain sheep belonging to them called the tenantry flock. Payment of his monied wages was made quarterly by the tenantry farmers. The pauper after serving eleven months was hired again for one month. Before the end of the month the pauper was hired "to go on again upon the same terms." He served a year under this last hiring and slept the last forty nights at South Newton, the appellant parish, having married in the course of that year. The tenantry farmers above mentioned are leaseholders and copyholders of the manor of Lower Woodford. By an agreement under seal, made June the 12th, 1799, the parties to which were the Bishop of Salisbury, lord of the manor of Lower Woodford, the leaseholders and copyholders of that manor, and William Beckford, of Fonthill Gifford, Esq. who then held the manor under the bishop for three lives, reciting among other things that the leaseholders and copyholders were entitled to divers lands within the manor by virtue of the several leases and copies to them thereof granted, arbitrators were duly appointed for dividing and allotting the open and common fields and common downs within the said manor. The power of these arbitrators were, "to set out, ascertain, and allot the said open and common fields and common downs so intended to be divided and allotted as aforesaid, unto and amongst the said W. Beckford in respect of such lands as he had in hand or at rack rent, and the several leaseholders and copyholders, entitled to or interested in the same, in proportion to their several and respective shares, interest and properties in and over the said open or common fields or downs. They were also empowered to set out ways and in some respects to direct the course of husbandry. And it was agreed that the persons to whom allotments should be made should be possessed of them for the same estates, terms, and interests, and subject to the same rents and services as the several lands in lieu whereof such allotments should be made were then subject to. Neither the shepherd of the tenantry farmers at that time, nor the pauper Thomas Brown, was a party to the agreement. The arbitrators appointed by the agreement made an award dated the 10th of October, 1818, which has been acted on ever since. By the award, among other allotments, they allotted to W. Beckford, Esq. lord or farmer of the manor of Lower Woodford, in trust for the shepherd or keeper of the common sheep flock of Lower Woodford for the time being, in lieu of lands in the common fields held by custom by the said shepherd, "two allotments of land, (that is to say) one piece of enclosed pasture marked V. containing thirty perches, and one piece of enclosed arable land marked V. containing three roods and twenty-four perches, the shepherd for the time being keeping the fences of the same in repair." This was the land which the pauper took when he was hired as shepherd as above and which had been possessed by former shepherds since the time of the award. The pauper let part of the land to a tenant from year to year for about 5l., and received the rent; a part he always occupied himself, but never paid rates. He is still shepherd, and at the time of his removal was resident in Woodford, and had been so more than forty days. Becoming chargeable he was removed by order of two justices to South Newton, without any objection on the part of his masters, or any interruption to his service, or his possession of the said Shepherd's Croft, both of which he still retains. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that the pauper took no interest in the land by virtue of the award or allotment. The award itself was void for many reasons. The shepherd therefore could derive no legal interest from it. All the interest which he had, he took in his character of servant from year to year. He was tenant to those with whom he made the bargain, and his enjoyment of the land was in lieu of wages, which would otherwise have been paid him for his service." Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the pauper was settled in South Newton by virtue of the hiring and service for a year. It appears that he was hired for eleven months and afterwards for a month, and then he was hired to go on again on the same terms: that was an indefinite hiring, and therefore a hiring for a year; and as he resided in South Newton the last forty days, he was settled in that parish. The agreement made the 12th of June, 1799, was binding upon those persons who were parties to it. The effect of it was that whenever a shepherd should be appointed he should have an allotment for his own use; it did not operate as a conveyance, but merely as an agreement between the several parties who signed it. As soon as the shepherd was appointed he took the land, not by virtue of the articles of agreement, but by virtue of the contract of hiring. He was hired upon terms and conditions which were pointed out to him: one of them was that he should have Shepherd's Croft, which with the wages of 14s. a week was to make it as good as 16s. per week. The persons who hired him therefore did confer upon him the right to occupy the land for such period of time as he should faithfully perform the office of shepherd. This right to hold the land was founded on his contract with them. The settlement therefore was in South Newton." Littledale, J. "It appears there was a custom to appoint a shepherd to attend the flocks, and that person was usually allowed the use of some land. By the agreement of 1799 arbitrators were appointed to divide the waste land, and the allottees were to hold their allotments for the same estates and interests as the lands in respect of which the allotment should be made; but as the lord of the manor, his lessee, and the copyholder and leaseholder, were in the habit of allowing the shepherd a piece of land, I think the pauper did not acquire in this case an interest sufficient to confer a settlement. Suppose there had been an agreement in writing to take care of flocks, and that in lieu of wages, the exclusive use of the land should be given to the shepherd, his interest in the land would be co-extensive with the time during which he was to remain shepherd. During one year therefore (the period for which he was hired) he would be entitled to the exclusive use of the land; but that was not such an interest as would give him a settlement by estate. For that purpose he must be the substantial owner of the property." Parke, J. "The sessions have come to the right conclusion. It is said that the pauper took either a legal or equitable estate by virtue of the award. He took neither. The parties to the submission were the Bishop of Salisbury, the lord of the manor, and his lessees of the manor, the leaseholders and copyholders. Now the shepherd was not a leaseholder or copyholder of the manor, nor lessee of the manor. The arbitrators therefore had no power whatever to allot to him, and pro tanto therefore the award is bad. He had a right to occupy the land for part of the year; that was not a settlement by estate, but a coming to settle on a tenement under 10*l.* a year, and therefore no settlement was gained." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Warkworth, 1 M. & Sel. 473. Order for removing William Forster from Alnwick to Warkworth confirmed. Case:—The pauper was a freeman by descent, and had been admitted to his freedom twenty-five years. The pasturage of Alnwick Moor is of considerable value, and the freemen of Alnwick, and no others, are entitled to common of pasture thereon, each freeman being entitled when resident, but not otherwise, to the pasturage of five stints of his own cattle, that is five cows, or twenty-five sheep: the freemen have also a right to dig and cut peats, furzes, turves, and bushes; and to get limestone, slates, and free-stones in the open quarries upon that moor: they have the privilege also of setting up their stalls in the market-place without paying stallage to the lord, and of having their children educated free of expense at the town school, at which school two of the children named in the order were placed at the time of the removal. The question was, whether the rights of the pauper as a freeman of the borough of Alnwick amounted to an estate from which he was not legally removable. Grose, J. "There is no doubt whatever in this case. The question is, whether the pauper was irremovable from his own estate? In order to determine that, we must first inquire what estate he had. Now it appears that he had neither land nor house; it is said, however, that he had a right of common; but supposing he had, it does not appear that he was ever in the enjoyment of or had any cattle wherewith to exercise that right. The profit à prendre, or easement, as it has been called, never existed in him; how, then, can he be said to have been resident on his own? It cannot be considered as a residence on his own, when in truth he never had it. It would be absurd so to consider it." Le Blanc, J. "The case made in argument to show that he was residing on his own is this, that he was a freeman of the town, and as such entitled to a right of common on Alnwick Moor, and this common right is said to be a tenement. But I think this is not in strictness a right of common, nor can it properly be said to be a tenement, it is a mere franchise. The argument, however, has been carried this length, viz. that supposing it to be only a franchise, still the pauper was irremovable from it. But to this I cannot accede. In the case, for instance, of a freeman of a corporation, who has a right of suffrage for the election of a mayor, or any other of the officers belonging to the corporate body, has it ever been decided that such a franchise made the person entitled to it irremovable? Here the pauper, as a freeman of the town, was entitled, if he had any cattle, to turn them on the moor. This, however, was a mere personal privilege, wholly unalienable, and not falling within the legal definition of a right of common. A privilege of this sort, I believe, has never yet been holden to be such an estate as to make the person entitled to it irremovable. It is a strong circumstance, that notwithstanding the existence of such rights in different parts of the kingdom, no attempt like the present has hitherto been made. It appears to me, therefore, that this does not fall within the purview of those cases which have decided that a party is not removable from his own; and which doctrine, I admit, has been extended to cases where a party was merely residing in the parish in which his estate was situate, and not upon the estate itself." Bayley, J. "The case does not find that the pauper had any house in which he was entitled to reside, and as a freeman he had no right of residence; but that must be acquired by other means. When he can obtain a residence, then as freeman he is entitled during such residence to turn cattle on the common. But when he removes he loses this privilege. I am not aware of any case in which a privilege of this description has been holden to be sufficient to confer a settlement. It is a mere local privilege, and attached to the person so long only as he is resident. From the frequency of these rights, which exist in many corporations in the kingdom, settlements must have been claimed in respect of them had they been deemed sufficient for that purpose. This case is very different from the cases of removals from landed property." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Belford, 10 B. & C. 54. Order of removal of Grace, wife of John M'Queen, then a prisoner in Berwick gaol, &c. from Berwick to Belford, confirmed. Case:—M'Queen is a burgess of the borough of Berwick, and in 1807 came to reside in Berwick, where he resided to the date of the order, at which time he was a prisoner. For the last three years he enjoyed as burgess certain pecuniary benefits arising out of the estates of the corporation lying in the parish. The mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Berwick, by virtue of a charter granted by James I. and confirmed by statute, hold, to the only proper use of them and their successors, a large estate in land in the parish of Berwick, which is co-extensive with the borough. This estate is chargeable, in the first instance, with the payment of salaries of officers and other corporation expenses imposed by the charter; but has from an early period after the grant of the charter, and from thence hitherto, been distributed into three portions, each applied to distinct purposes. The first consists of farms demised to tenants by the mayor, bailiff, and burgesses, the rent being reserved to them, or their treasurer for the time being, and collected by him. This rent, with the proceeds of other property, called the town's ancient revenue, now forms a separate fund, out of which the salaries of the officers and other corporate expenses authorized by the charter are paid; these farms are called Treasurer's Farms. The second portion is subdivided into quantities from one-and-a-half acre to two-and-a-half acres, and in value from 4*l.* to 9*l.* per annum; these are called Meadows; and at an annual meeting, called the Meadow Guild, are distributed, as they become vacant by the death or non-residence of the last occupiers, among the senior resident burgesses and widows of burgesses, who succeed to the rights of their husbands as to meadows and stents, though the charter has no provision in behalf of the widows; the oldest resident burgess being entitled to choose the most valuable vacant meadow, and so on down to the junior; the burgesses may occupy or let the meadows, reserving the rent to themselves. The lands forming the third portion were, up to 1761, open fields, upon which each burgess was entitled to a certain right of depasturing. At that period they were inclosed, and have ever since been let in guild, as farms, to tenants for various terms, and are now leased under the corporation seal; and the rent has, since 1810, been reserved to the mayor, bailiff, and burgesses (the name of incorporation), and successors, or to their treasurer. Previous to that, several instances occur of cases of stent land, wherein the rent was reserved to the mayor, &c. or treasurer, or to the several respective burgesses or burgesses' widows, who should from time to time during the term have shares in the farmhold, in equal portions; the rent of each farm is divided into equal portions, generally eleven, but in a few instances twenty-two. At another annual meeting, called a Stent Guild, a portion is allotted, as a specific farm, to each resident burgess or burgess's widow, or to as many as there are vacant portions; these are called stents, and vary in value from 2*l.* to 9*l.* per annum: the senior burgess is entitled to preference, as the more valuable become vacant. The portion of the rents called stents are paid annually by the treasurer to the burgesses entitled to them; but until the last fourteen or sixteen years the burgesses in many instances received their stent-money immediately from the farmer or lessee of the specific farms upon which their several stents were assigned. The burgesses in guild have, by their charter, a power of making bye-laws for the better preserving, disposing, and letting their lands, and they have made bye-laws to regulate the enjoyment of the meadows and stents, and prescribed the condition of husbandry under which these lands may be tilled, and the terms for which the meadows may be let, by the individual burgesses. They decide on the title of those who claim to enjoy meadows and stents according to such bye-laws, and instances of forfeitures are recorded. Unless there is such a forfeiture, or the party becomes non-resident, or relinquish his stent or meadow by choosing one of more value, he may enjoy the first allotted to him for life. Some enjoy one stent, others two, and others one and a meadow. Those who enjoy two stents hold one in lieu of a meadow. M'Queen for three years previous to his removal has been, and now is, in the enjoyment of one stent, assigned upon a farm within the parish, and annually receives from the treasurer for his portion of the rent 3*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* He also enjoys another portion assigned on the out-fields, under the description of stent, for a meadow, his share of which is 3*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.* The rents of these two farms, during the entire period of the pauper's share, is reserved to the mayor, &c. or treasurer, and paid to the treasurer, and by him to the pauper. The pauper is not at present entitled to a meadow, but he may claim one when there is a vacancy. The pauper, as burgess, is a member of the guilds, and entitled to vote in the meadow and stent guilds as well as others. The question is, whether the pauper was irremovable, so as to acquire a settlement? Lord Tenterden, C. J., "I am of opinion that M'Queen was not seised of any equitable estate, that being in the corporation. He was only entitled to such a portion of the rents as the body corporate might think fit to allow him. Whether they allowed him a portion of those rents, first throwing the whole together, and then dividing them among the freemen; or whether they assigned to each freeman the rent of a particular portion of land, seems to me immaterial. The freemen had no right to enter on the land: and in Rex v. Warkworth (ante, 685) his lordship observed, 'In that case the pauper simply as a freeman had a right to exercise a right of common.' Here the burgesses have no right to occupy the land, the corporation let it." Bayley, J. "Rex v. Warkworth shows that a burgess entitled to a right of common is not settled by residing in the borough. Being a freeman, and as such entitled to certain local privileges, did not give M^{rs} Queen any estate, legal or equitable; and if he had no estate in the land, he had no right to occupy. The estate was in the corporation." Parke, J. "The pauper had nothing but a privilege of taking a portion of the profits of the land, at the will of the corporation." Order confirmed.

2. The Tenure and Duration of Interest.

Secondly.—The Tenure and Duration of Interest.

The nature of the tenure is not material, as far as respects the law of parochial settlement. It may be acquired by an estate in lands held in frank tenure, or freehold, (a) or by copyhold. (b) The duration of the estate is also immaterial, if it were sufficient to ensure a residence of forty days. (c) It may be either a freehold or copyhold estate, in fee or for life, (d) or a leasehold interest, determinate on lives (e) or years. (f) The right of a widow to continue forty days upon her husband's lands, until she is assigned her dower, (g) has been held to be an interest sufficiently permanent to confer a settlement.

3. Of the Value of the Estate.

The estate need not be of ten pounds per annum, if it be for life, or of inheritance, &c.

Thirdly.—Of the Value of the Estate.

Harrow v. Edgeware, Fol. 257; 2 Bott, 608. C. having gained a legal settlement in the parish of H., afterwards purchased a copyhold estate for his own life, worth 1*l.* 5*s.* a year, in the parish of E., to which estate he was regularly admitted. He removed from H. to E., and lived on this copyhold estate near five years. His wife was afterwards admitted to the estate, and lived thereon till she died, leaving three children, who became chargeable to the parish, from whence they were removed to the parish of H., and the sessions confirmed the order. Parker, C. J. "A parochial settlement is nothing more than the privilege of living irremovable in the parish. (h) A man who has an estate for life, or an estate of inheritance, of his own, cannot be removed from it, although in value it is under 10*l.* a year. It therefore follows that where a man does so live, he gains a settlement for himself and for the children in his family." Powell, J. "If this had been the grant of a copyhold for years, it might, as it is under the value of 10*l.* a year, have been within the reason of the statute, but as it is an estate for life, it certainly is not. The father clearly gained a settlement in E. by residing forty days on this copyhold, and the children must of necessity be settled in the parish in which their parents are settled, until they have acquired settlements for themselves, which in the present case they were not of an age to do. The argument respecting the possible inconveniences parishes may suffer from such estates being held to confer settlements, loses its weight, when it is recollected that lords of manors cannot create new copyholds, nor by 31 Eliz. c. 7, erect new cottages, without laying four acres of land to each, and it is not much to be feared that lords will give away merely from spleen such quantities of land, especially as the land itself would defeat the intended effect of such grants, by preventing the possessors from requiring parochial relief." Eyre, J. "The distinction attempted to be made between being settled and not being removable is imaginary, for a settlement is nothing but the privilege of living irremovable." And accordingly both orders were quashed.

2. Of Estates acquired otherwise than by Purchase, &c.

Fourthly.—The Interest in the Estate, and Who may acquire this Settlement.

It seems that any person may acquire this description of settlement, and even an alien, though he cannot acquire a descendable interest, may yet hold till inquest found. (a) So an infant, and other persons under legal incapacity, may acquire the same.

4. The Interest in the Estate, and Who may acquire this Settlement.

1. Of Infants.

Rex v. Hasfield, 2 Stra. 1131. The mother of the children removed had an estate of 4*l.* a year in Tirley, where she and her husband lived and had these children. She dying, the husband became tenant by the courtesy; and whilst such took 30*l.* a year at Hasfield and lived one year there with his two children and then died. The Court of King's Bench confirmed the order removing them to Hasfield as to the girl, but quashed it as to the boy; for as to the boy, who was eight years old, he was tenant in fee of the 4*l.* a year. And though it was not stated that he was actually upon that spot, yet it was enough that he had such an estate in the parish, from which he could not be removed. But as to the daughter, it was otherwise; she could demand no maintenance out of her brother's estate; as it was never yet determined that children should go to a grandmother for nurture. She may, indeed, be charged to contribute to their relief in the parish where they are settled.

1. Of Infants.

An infant eight years of age residing in the parish in which it has an estate of its own of only the annual value of 4*l.*, gains a settlement.

2. Executors, Administrators, and the next of Kin.

Rex v. Sundrish, 1 Sess. Ca. 200; 2 Stra. 983. T. Perch, by indenture, demised to T. Gates, the father, a cottage at 5*s.* a year, which was the full value, for ninety-nine years. The lessee held it till his death, and devised it to T. Gates, his son. And the question was, whether the son, as executor, being entitled to the term, shall gain a settlement by inhabiting in such cottage? The court were unanimously of opinion that this estate, though a leasehold, was his own estate; that he had come into it under his father's will; that it is, together with other things, charged with 20*l.*, payable to his mother for her maintenance, and that in Mursley v. Grandborough, a leasehold estate, although it was not a beneficial lease of the whole, had been held sufficient to confer a settlement.

2. Executors, Administrators, and the next of Kin.

An executor gains a settlement by residence as such upon leasehold.

Rex v. Uttoxeter, Burr. S. C. 538; 2 Bott, 620. The pauper, W. Gilbert, was settled at Uttoxeter. His mother rented and resided upon a farm of 22*l.* a year at Marchington Woodlands; which she devised to her five children, and made the pauper and her three other sons executors, and died. The pauper alone proved the will and entered as her executor, and resided upon the farm twelve or thirteen weeks. He afterwards returned to Uttoxeter, but continued to go over to Marchington Woodlands, to give directions from time to time, and had a servant upon the farm till the Lady-day following. The question was, whether he thereby gained a settlement at Marchington Woodlands? By the court: "It is very true that a share not amounting to 10*l.* a year, of a tenement of above 10*l.* a year in value, will not do. But here he has a right as executor. The value thereof is totally immaterial; because, by common law, no person can be removed from his own. And one who has a right to reside irremovably doth thereby gain a settlement, if he reside forty days."

Coming to a tenement by executorship, although under 10*l.* a year, gains a settlement.

Rex v. Stone, 6 T. R. 295. E. Syms removed from Salt and Enson to Stone. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper went to live with his father-in-law E. Bentley, in Salt and Enson, who rented from year to year a cottage and about six acres of land, under the yearly value of 10*l.* Bentley died, and by his will gave all his personal estate to the pauper in trust, that he would allow the testator's wife a sufficient maintenance thereout during her life; and at her decease his personal estate should be divided amongst his five children, the pauper's wife being one: and he appointed the pauper sole executor of his will. Upon the testator's decease, the pauper possessed himself of all his personal estate and continued in possession of the cottage and lands, without coming to any agreement with the landlord, buying and selling every thing, paying the rent, and maintaining the widow until his removal, which was upwards of three years; but he did not prove the will till three days previous to his removal. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "I cannot distinguish this case from Mursley v. Grandborough (post, 705), and the other cases in which it has been held that an executor or devisee of a leasehold estate, of less value than 10*l.* a year, gains a settlement by residing upon it for forty days. It is said, however, that this pauper was a mere trustee: but no one had a right to take the estate from him; he took it liable to all the testator's debts, and the creditors would have had a right to call on him for payment of their debts before he made any distribution of the testator's property under the will. In fact, the pauper resided on this estate for more than forty days; and the established rule, which we ought to preserve with anxiety, is, that though a person cannot acquire a settlement by a purchase for less than 30*l.* paid, yet if he take such estate by devise, he may: so, though he cannot gain a settlement by renting a tenement of less value than 10*l.* a year, yet, if such an estate devolve on him by operation of law, he may gain a settlement by forty days' residence on it. The distinction taken between a tenant from year to year, and a tenant for a term of years, is rather a distinction in words than in substance. A tenant from year to year is entitled to estovers, and the same advantages as a tenant for a term of years. In truth, he is a tenant from year to year as long as both parties please. And, considering how many large estates are held by this tenure, it would be dangerous to say that the term ceased at the end of the year, because then the landlord might lose his right of distress. Although, on my first reading this case, it struck me as a very minute interest to confer a settlement, on consideration I am satisfied that we cannot, without overturning a variety of cases, determine that the pauper did not gain a settlement by residing on it for forty days." Ashhurst, J. "It is perfectly immaterial whether the pauper had a beneficial interest in the estate, it being sufficient that he resided there forty days for a necessary purpose, and could not have been removed from it." Grose, J. "It certainly seems strange, at first, that an executor should gain a settlement by a residence on the testator's estate, when such a residence by the testator would not have conferred a settlement upon him. But we must consider the difference of the situation of the two persons; the one comes in by his own contract, the other by act of law. This distinction was taken in Rex v. Ultoreter (ante, 689)." Lawrence, J. "It was settled in Doe d. Shore v. Porter (3 T. R. 13), that if a tenant from year to year died intestate, his administrator has the same interest in the land that the intestate had; then what was the interest of the pauper's testator? He had a right to continue on the estate another year, unless six months' notice to quit were given, and, of course, the pauper (his executor) had the same right. With regard to the want of probate, there is a case in 3 Dyer, 367*a*, that gives a decisive answer to this: a termor devised his term to another, whom he made his executor, and died; the devisee entered and died without any probate, and it was held that the term was legally in the executor by his entry, and an execution of the devise without any probate. So that if there had been no probate of the will in this case, still the term was vested in the pauper, the executor."

Value immaterial. The executor to a tenant of an estate under 10*l.* a year gains a settlement by forty days' residence, although he do not prove the will.

But letters of administration are essential.

South Sydenham v. Lamerton, 1 Stra. 57; ante, 669. Held that next of kin of lessee acquires no settlement until he has taken out letters of administration; but see Rex v. Horsley, 8 East, 405; Rex v. Okeford Fitzpaine, 1 B. & Ad. 254; post.

Where there are two next of kin in equal degree, and the father being possessed of the residue of

Rex v. Widworthy, Andr. 4; Burr. S. C. 109; 2 Bott, 612. The pauper removed to Widworthy, and lived there with his father in a cottage-house of 30*s.* a year, working as day-labourer. The father died intestate, possessed of the cottage for the residue of a term, determinable on lives, leaving the pauper and another son. The pauper's brother took his distributive share of his father's estate in goods, and the pauper, after the father's death, continued in the cottage for five or six years until the lease was determined; after which, and since the making out the order for his removal, he took out administration to his father." Page, J. "At the time of making the order he had gained no settlement in W.; because nothing vested in him before administration was granted to him. If so, then the order for removing him to F. was a good order when made, and the sessions ought not to have quashed it; though administration had been afterwards taken out; for they could not quash a good order upon a matter which happened ex post facto; and if this administration really gained him a settlement, there ought to have been a new order of two justices to remove him back to W. When he was first removed from thence he had nothing to do with the cottage; for nothing vested in him till he took out letters of administration; consequently, if he gained a settlement at W. at all, it was gained subsequent to the making of the original order. But secondly, he had it not at all in his own right, even after administration; nor does it seem to be such a sort of estate as would gain him a settlement. This is a cot-house of so small a value as 1*l.* 10*s.* a year only, holden upon the residue of a term of years determinable upon lives. In the case of Ashbottle v. Wyley (post), there was a continuance of the quiet possession for thirty years and a descent cast. The pauper had a title against all the world except the lord of the waste; and it would be a good bar, even against the lord, in an ejectment. There the pauper clearly had such a possession as to be irremovable from it. But I apprehend that the pauper in the present case was removable even during the term; but afterwards he certainly was." Probyn, J. "The whole depends upon this single question, whether the pauper was removable during the five or six years that he lived in this cottage? for I take the rule now settled and established to be, 'that if the pauper come to an estate by inheritance, or as executor or administrator, be it of ever so small value, he is irremovable; and if he remain forty days in possession and inhabitancy, he gains a settlement.' Now I take it, that the pauper in the present case was removable. His possession rested only upon a private agreement between him and his brother. If he had taken out administration during the interest, he had had a vested right; but taking out administration after the term expired could never give him an interest in the expired term, in which he had none during its subsistence. He was in possession merely as a tenant at will; he was removable by the parish, and his right would have been without foundation if administration had been granted to any one else. Therefore he had no right at all till administration was granted. The case of Wyley was a strong case. That was a descent to the pauper after a possession of thirty years; which is a good title in an ejectment and a presumption of an inheritance. It was prima facie a good title as heir at law: none but the lord could contest the right. And if a pauper live forty days under a right which makes him irremovable, it gains him a settlement." Chapple, J. was of the same opinion. "For there was no time during the continuance of this lease when the pauper was irremovable, and without remaining forty days irremovable, a settlement could not be gained by him." And he observed, "that there was no agreement at all between the brothers, that the pauper should take this lease as his distributive share; or, at least, no such agreement appeared. It is only stated that the other brother did take his share in goods; and John did live in the cottage; but it does not appear that this happened in pursuance of any preceding agreement that it should be so." (See Rex v. Cold Ashton, Burr. S. C. 450.)

Rex v. North Curry, Cald. 137; 2 Bott, 631. Betty Winter and children removed from North Curry to Ruishton. Order quashed. Case:—John Winter, late husband of the pauper, purchased a cottage and garden in North Curry of the yearly value of 20*s.* for fourteen guineas, which was demised to him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for ninety-nine years, or three lives, at the yearly rent of 2*s.* He and his wife resided in the cottage for several years until his death: his widow and their children soon after became chargeable to North Curry, but were refused relief unless they would go into the workhouse, which they did, and quitted possession of the cottage and garden, where they were relieved until they were removed to Ruishton in February, 1781. Ruishton appealed at the Easter sessions, 24th April, 1781, which sessions was adjourned, and Betty soon after returned to the cottage and resided there till 28th April, 1781, when she sold the cottage and garden for six guineas for the residue of the term, and by indenture dated 28th April, 1781, assigned the term. On 11th July, 1781, being the day after the first day of the present session, Betty sued out letters of administration of her late husband's effects. It was argued that there was a difference between the sole next of kin, and where several persons in equal degree have an equal right; here the widow had before administration a specific right in the thing, and only a ceremony necessary to make the assignment by her indefeasible. Lord Mansfield, C. J. said, "That this case did not materially differ from Rex v. Widworthy (ante, 690); as the children were entitled to two-thirds of the effects, the widow is not properly and in the sense of the cases the sole next of kin." (a) Order of sessions quashed.

The general rule.

Tenant at will of an estate less than 10*l.* can gain no settlement as such.

Where a wife and two children survive the intestate, the wife cannot gain a settlement by letters of administration taken out after assignment by her of the intestate's term. Lease for years determinable on lives.

Rex v. Berkswell, 1 B. & C. 542; 3 D. & R. 9. Order of removal of J. Matthews, wife, &c., from Berkswell to Holy Trinity, Coventry, quashed. Case:—In 1808 a lease for thirty-one years was granted by the lady of the manor, under an inclosure act, to one Hands, of a cottage situate in Berkswell, at the annual rent of one shilling. Hands was residing in the cottage at the time of the lease, and continued to do so afterwards for upwards of a year, when he died intestate, leaving a widow and three daughters, one of whom was married to the pauper. Letters of administration were granted to the widow, but no distribution was made of the intestate's effects. After the death of Hands his widow lived in the cottage for about two years. One of the other daughters, with her husband, resided there for two or three years more, and then the pauper and his wife came, and resided there for some years, and until the period of their removal, with the permission of the widow, she occasionally helping them, and always paying the annual rent of one shilling reserved by the lease. The pauper never paid any rent either to the widow or the lady of the manor. Abbott, C. J. "I am clearly of opinion there was not an equitable interest in this case, which would have entitled the pauper to say to the administratrix, 'I shall come and live in this place, and if you do not allow me so to do, a court of equity will enforce my title.' The pauper had no such right. He was entitled indeed, in right of his wife, to call upon the administratrix to give an account of the estate and effects of the intestate, but it might have turned out that she had paid much more than the value of this tenement in discharging her husband's debts, and in that case he would have had nothing." Bayley, J. "In Rex v. Toddington, (post, 710) which is the latest case upon this head of settlement, the beginning of Lord Ellenborough's opinion is, I think, decisive upon this subject. His lordship says, 'This is not an estate so clearly equitable, that a court of law can presume that a court of equity would, if applied to, clothe the party with the legal right to it.' That paragraph shows in what case an equitable interest shall give the party a right to be considered as gaining a settlement in right of it; and my brother Holroyd, in giving his judgment in that case, says, 'An equitable estate is very different from an equitable right to have a conveyance of the legal estate.' In this case it seems to me, that the pauper had no right at all to go into a court of equity to have a specific portion of this estate decreed to him, or to be admitted to reside upon the premises." Holroyd, J. "I am of opinion that the pauper in this case had not any equitable right to enjoy the property in question. He was entitled to his wife's share, assuming that the testator's effects were sufficient to pay it, but I think he had no right to enter and take possession of the cottage without the assent of the administratrix, nor even then, if she disposed of the possession, without reserving the powers given to the ordinary under the statute of distributions."

(a) Can the widow be even sole next of kin in such a sense as to be entitled to letters of administration? By 21 Hen. VIII. c. 5, administration is to be granted "to the widow or next of kin as by the discretion of the ordinary is good." The court, it is true, prefers a sole to a joint administrator. (4 Burn Ec. L. 277, 278.)

Order of sessions quashed. (See Rex v. Cold Ashton, Burr. S. C. 450, post).

Rex v. Great Glenn, 2 Nev. & M. 91; 5 B. & Ad. 188. Removal of M. Stevens and children from Great Glenn to Leir, both in the county of Leicester. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper Stevens was married to John Stevens in April, 1827; and on their marriage she and her husband went to live in a house in the appellant parish, which her husband had taken of Thomas Eaglefield as tenant from year to year, at the rent of 3*l.* per annum, which was a rack-rent. They continued to live in this house until the 14th of May, 1831, when the husband died. The widow (the pauper) continued the possession from thence for about a fortnight or three weeks. She then went to the respondent parish for a few days, viz. from Monday till Saturday, when she returned to Leir, having left her sister in possession of the house during her absence. She was relieved there by the respondents until the 3rd of December following. On the next 2nd of June after her husband's death the pauper had an interview with the landlord, and told him she wished to pay the rent weekly; he assented, and it was agreed that the pauper should pay 1*s.* 2*d.* per week, which she paid accordingly until the 5th of March, when she quitted in consequence of having received a week's notice to quit. Some time in August after her husband's death, the pauper took out letters of administration to the effects of her husband under the following circumstances. The attorney for the respondent parish, accompanied by a clergyman, in that month called upon the pauper and administered the oath, saying, "We shall be obliged to get you to take out letters of administration: I dare say you don't understand it. You have a right to take out letters of administration if you like, and if you will leave it to me I will do whatever is necessary." This explanation was not understood by the pauper. However, she said she had no objection, but hoped they would not take her goods, which she believed the respondent parish were going to lay claim to. The pauper was ignorant of administering any further than she understood her oath was to declare that what she had was not worth 20*l.*; and she never heard until the 6th of December following that letters of administration had been taken out, when the attorney for the respondent parish having laid some papers on a table before her, said, "Those are your letters of administration." The pauper's goods at the decease of her husband were not worth more than 5*l.*, 3*l.* of which were due for rent, and 2*l.* for other debts. The letters of administration were taken out by the direction and at the expense of the respondent parish for the purpose of settling the pauper in the appellant parish. The pauper resided forty days and upwards in the house late her husband's in the appellant parish after the grant of the above-mentioned letters of administration, whereupon the order of removal appealed against was obtained. The court of quarter sessions found that there was fraud in taking out the letters of administration, and discharged the order. Denman, C. J. "The pauper, as administratrix of a tenant from year to year, though at a less rent than 10*l.*, would gain a settlement by forty days' residence, because the interest vested in her by act and operation of law. The only question as to this point is whether the settlement is altogether void, because the sessions have found that there was fraud in taking out the letters of administration. They have stated the facts on which that finding was grounded; and I am of opinion that there was not in this case any fraud sufficient to prevent the estate of the intestate from vesting in his widow. She not only had a right, but was bound to take out letters of administration; and she consented that they should be obtained. There is no ground for saying that they should not have their full legal operation of vesting in her the property of the intestate. Another question is, whether she resided in the parish forty days while the leasehold estate (formerly her husband's) was vested in her. There are premises from which the sessions might have inferred an agreement by her, after administration granted, to become a weekly instead of a yearly tenant. They have not drawn any such inference; but have left it doubtful whether she resided forty days in the parish of Leir, while the leasehold estate which formerly belonged to the husband was vested in her. If that be really a matter of doubt, the case must go back to the sessions in order that they may determine it." Littledale, J. "I think that under the circumstances stated in this case the leasehold interest of the husband was not prevented from vesting in his widow, on the ground that the letters of administration were fraudulently obtained. She was not only entitled but bound by law to take them out; and was merely told by the solicitor to the parish of Leir that she was so entitled, and assented to administration being obtained. There was no misrepresentation or suppression of any fact. The only other question is, whether she resided forty days in the parish of Leir after her husband's interest as tenant from year to year had vested in her as administratrix. If within that period she held as a weekly tenant, and continued to do so ever afterwards, she was not irremovable. It is stated that on the 2nd of June she told the landlord she wished to pay the rent weekly, and that he assented; but whether she then actually took the premises from week to week, or only gave notice to the landlord that she wished to do so, is not very clear. I should rather think she then became a weekly tenant. It is true she could not surrender her husband's interest before taking out administration, but as the facts are left doubtful the case must be sent back to the sessions, in order that they may say whether after taking out administration she was a weekly tenant in her own right, or a tenant from year to year in right of her husband." Parke, J. "I should be satisfied to dispose of this case on the ground that the sessions had found (as I think they would) that the pauper, before the letters of administration were taken out, had become a weekly tenant in her own right and continued so afterwards, and consequently that she did not reside forty days in Leir while she was irremovable by reason of the estate which had vested in her by operation of law. She paid the rent weekly from the 2nd of June, 1831, to March, 1832, and quitted on a week's notice. As soon as she obtained the letters of administration she might have disaffirmed the weekly tenancy and claimed to hold as tenant from year to year in right of her husband; but I think there is abundant evidence of her having confirmed the weekly tenancy, for she afterwards always paid the rent weekly, and quitted on a week's notice. Then as to the other question, there were no sufficient premises to warrant the sessions in finding such fraud as would avoid the letters of administration and prevent the leasehold estate of the husband from vesting in his widow. The pauper had a right to take out letters of administration, and a consenting mind that it should be done. She was only induced by the solicitor for Great Glenn to exercise that right, but there was no deceit practised by him; if there had, the case would have been different." Patteson, J. "In order to acquire a settlement by estate the pauper must have resided forty days in the parish where the estate lay, and where her interest in that estate by operation of law still continued. If before that time elapsed she acquired an interest in her own right as weekly tenant, and resided in the parish in respect of that interest, she was not irremovable, and acquired no settlement. The sessions probably find on the evidence that she had become a weekly tenant. The letters of administration are not void on the ground that they were obtained by fraud, because the widow had the right, and indeed was under a legal obligation to take them out, and consented that they should be taken out." Case to go back to the sessions in order to ascertain whether the pauper became a weekly tenant within forty days after the letters of administration were taken out.

2. Of Estates acquired otherwise than by Purchase, &c.

The husband of the pauper rented a house from year to year, and on his death the pauper told the landlord that she wished to pay the rent weekly, which she continued to do for nine months. The respondent parish had relieved her in the meantime, and the attorney of that parish suggested her taking out letters of administration, and did so for her. Held, that as the widow was bound by law to take out administration, it was not to be considered a fraudulent transaction, although the sessions had so found it. But it was referred back to the sessions to say whether after administration granted she continued a weekly tenant, or was tenant from year to year in her husband's right.

A sole next of kin has such an equitable interest in a leasehold tenement of the intestate, that she gains a settlement by residing forty days in the same parish after the intestate's death, before administration granted to her. And it matters not that the widow of the in-

Rex v. Horsley, 8 East, 405. Removal from Horsley to Avening, quashed. Case:—The pauper, S. B., was the widow of J. B., who died in 1801. W. P., the father of S. B., died about Christmas, 1802, intestate, possessed of a leasehold house in Horsley, of 40s. per annum, for a term of years, leaving a widow and the pauper his only child, whom he had by a former wife. W. P.'s widow died about a month after her husband. Upon the death of W. P., the pauper, who had previously occupied the leasehold house by permission of her father, continued to reside in it till the death of her mother-in-law, when she left the house, and let it to a tenant, who occupied it for three years from that time, and paid the rent for it to the pauper. The pauper during this time, and until the date of the order of removal, resided with her family in Horsley. On the 11th of January, 1806, the pauper obtained letters of administration to her father, and on the 29th sold her interest to W. D., who ever after continued in possession. The court said, the grant of administration could not operate by relation to make a person irremovable for a time past, who during that time was removable. On the other point, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. delivered judgment as follows, on a subsequent day. "This is the case of a sole next of kin exclusively entitled, after the death of her mother-in-law, to administration of the personal estate of the intestate, her father; and the question is, whether the pauper, having, after she became such sole next of kin to the intestate, resided more than forty days in the parish, in which a leasehold tenement of 40s. per annum belonging to the intestate lay, thereby gained a settlement in that parish. The grant of letters of administration cannot operate for the purpose of rendering her not removable at a time past, when, as far as the letters of administration are concerned, she was removable for want of them; and when any order which might have happened to be made for her removal, (as no letters of administration then existed), could not, as was held in Rex v. Widworthy (ante, 690), be quashed afterwards upon the subsequent grant of them. Can then a person for this purpose become the owner of a chattel real, which had belonged to the intestate before the actual grant of administration to such person? Upon the death of her mother-in-law the pauper became sole next of kin to the intestate; it was in her power, therefore, at any moment afterwards, to have clothed herself exclusively with the legal character and rights of an administratrix. Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. Cold Ashton, observes that there is 'a great difference between a sole next of kin, and where several persons in equal degree have all of them (as in that case they had) an equal right.' In Rex v. North Curry (ante, 691), Lord Mansfield again observed, that the widow (the pauper in that case) 'was not properly, and in the sense of the cases, the sole next of kin.' The effect, however, of a forty days' residence by a sole next of kin has never yet received a judicial opinion. South Sydenham v. Lamerton (ante, 669,) was argued and decided on another ground. Adverting to the intimation given by other judges, of what would be their opinion upon such a case as the present, if it should come before them, and to the reason of the thing, according to which the exclusive right to enforce the proper means of acquiring a legal title to the property, coupled with the actual enjoyment of it in the meantime, through the occupation of a tenant, gives so much colour of right to reside without being removed within the parish in which the property is situate, as to exempt such residence from being considered as a vagrant intrusion into a parish, in which the party has nothing of his own, within the purview and scope of the poor laws, and to the determinations thereupon; we are of opinion that in a case in which the language of no statute upon the subject precludes us from so determining, and where no principle of convenience, nor any decided case, is contravened by such a determination, we are well warranted in considering that a settlement was gained by a residence of forty days within the parish, in which a pauper thus circumstanced in respect to the real property there situate, resided; and of course that the order of sessions must be affirmed."

Rex v. Camford Magna, 6 M. & Sel. 355. Order of removal of R. Poulden, from Camford Magna to Corfe Mullen, quashed. Case:—Richard, the father of the pauper, about thirty-nine years ago, lived in a house of White, at Corfe Mullen, whose daughter, Ann, he married. The house was held by White, under a lease for years determinable on lives, one of which is still subsisting. Its yearly value is 40s. White died about thirty-six years ago, leaving a widow, and Thomas and Ann, his children. It did not appear that any administration had been taken out. The widow and Richard and his wife were all living in the house when White died, and continued there afterwards—the widow until her decease, about six years ago, and Richard and his wife to the present time, they being, after her decease, in the sole occupation. The house is one tenement. No rent was ever demanded or paid but the quit-rent, and that by Richard. Thomas White lived close to the house. Lord Ellenborough: "The presumption raised in Rex v. Cold Ashton (Burr. Sett. Cas. 450, post; and see The King v. Okeford Fitzpaine, 1 Bar. & Adol. 251), was, that the pauper and his wife had agreed testate survived him, if she died afterwards without having taken out administration, leaving the other sole next of kin to the intestate. But no settlement is gained by the mere relation back to the death of the intestate of the letters of administration when granted, taken out only eighteen days before the next of kin parted with her interest in the leasehold; so as to connect the residence for those eighteen days with a residence by such next of kin in the same parish for more than forty days, after the deaths of the intestate and his widow, before such administration granted.

Letters of administration have no retrospective effect.

The widow, daughter, and son-in-law, occupied a leasehold house of the husband for more than thirty years, no administration taken out: neither of them gained a settlement.

with the other children for their shares: no such presumption has been drawn here; nor do I think the case admits of it. There is not any circumstance from which to infer an abandonment by any of the parties to the others of their right. According to the facts, there was neither exclusive right nor exclusive possession. Had there been a sole occupation, I am not prepared to say it would have been enough in the present case, although it may be in the case of a sole next of kin. Abbott, J. said, "In order to determine in favour of a settlement, it must be presumed either that administration was granted to Richard, his wife, or the widow. Are we at liberty to make such a presumption? The sessions are judges of the fact and law. They have not done it, and, in my opinion, they have done right; for the acts and conduct of the parties must be taken together before any presumption can be raised; and we find from these, (so stated in the case,) so far from a presumption arising that the father was settled in Corfe, that about fourteen or fifteen years ago he received relief from Canford, being resident in Corfe. The sessions therefore could not do otherwise than conclude that at that time Richard had not acquired a settlement in Corfe. (See Rex v. Okeford Fitzpaine, 1 Bar. & Ad. 254; Rex v. Geddington, 2 Bar. & Cres. 129, post; 3 Dowl. & Ryl. 403, S. C. post; Rex v. Long Bennington, 2 Bar. & Cres. 132.)

Rex v. Natland, Burr. S. C. 793. T. Gibson and his wife were removed from Natland to Stainton. Order quashed. Case for the opinion of the judge of assize, and agreed to be determined by his opinion. Allan Court, by his will, devised his estate at Natland to his wife during her widowhood, and after the determination thereof to trustees to sell, and divide the money equally among his children, of whom the wife of the pauper was one. The testator died, the widow entered and let part of the estate to farm, reserving to herself a dwelling-house, which was worth about 30s. a year. The pauper being reduced in his circumstances, came with his wife to live with her mother, the widow, in part of the dwelling-house: the widow died in June, 1769, the pauper and his wife continuing in possession of that part of the dwelling-house. In about a month after the death of the widow the trustees contracted for the sale of the estate, and in February following a conveyance was executed, the children of the devisor being no parties thereto. The pauper paid no rent to the widow; but, from her death, he paid rent to the purchaser until May-day following, when he quitted the premises. Upon this it was insisted that as the pauper and his wife inhabited in Natland in part of the house devised as aforesaid, from her mother's death, in June, till the same was conveyed in February following, and she being entitled to a distributive share of the money to be raised by sale of the said devised premises, the pauper was not removable during that time, and, consequently, gained a settlement in Natland. The opinion of the judge was given in writing in these words, "I have heard counsel on both sides, and am of opinion the settlement is in Natland. H. Gould." Afterwards a rule was obtained in K. B. to quash the order. But it was objected against the court's entering at all into the matter, for the judge having heard counsel and given his opinion in writing, this ought to be final, otherwise no judge of assize will ever hereafter accept a reference of this kind. The court saw it in the same light; and Lord Mansfield, C. J. observed, that here was a manifest consent of the parties to this reference to the judge, and therefore it was, like all other reference, by consent. He intimated that, as at present advised, he was of opinion with the judge; however, after this consent, he thought it very improper to take the matter up again.

Reference to judge of assize.

Though estate be devised for sale, yet if one of the devisees take it by agreement with the others, he gains a settlement.

Rex v. Wivelingham, Doug. 767. Robert Bittany, late husband of the pauper, Mary Bittany, came with a certificate from Haddenham to Wivelingham. Elizabeth Bittany, by her will devised her estate at Wivelingham to trustees to be sold, and the money arising from the sale to be divided between Robert and three daughters of William Bittany. They agreed among themselves that Robert should have the real estate, and the three daughters the personalty amongst them; whereupon the trustees conveyed the real estate to Robert, (a) who entered and resided thereupon several years. It was insisted, that Robert had taken no interest of any kind in the lands by the will, neither legal nor equitable. He had only a right to call upon the trustees to sell the estate, and distribute the money arising from the sale. On the other hand, it was argued that Robert had clearly an equitable title under the will; all the parties had agreed that the trustees should not sell; and that it was clearly settled that a residence on one's own estate, coming either by descent or devise, whether the legal interest be coupled with the equitable or not, and whatever the value is, will gain a settlement, and discharge a certificate. Lord Mansfield, C. J. mentioned Roper v. Radcliffe, (9 Mod. 167, 181,) to show that a devisee of the surplus arising from the sale of lands, after payment of debts and legacies, has an equitable interest in the lands themselves, it being in his option to pay the debts and legacies, and keep the land. Willes, J. said, "The same question in this case had occurred in Rex v. Natland, (ante, 696,) which was referred to Mr. J. Gould, who decided that a settlement was gained; and that his opinion had been recognised by the court, and in the present case the court were unanimous, that Robert hereby vacated the certificate, and consequently gained a settlement."

Rex v. Darlington, 5 M. & Sel. 493. Order for removal of Elizabeth, widow of Meriton Sedgwick, from Brompton to Darlington, confirmed. Case:—Mary Sedgwick devised a dwelling-house, with appurtenances, in Brompton, to the use of G. Jackson and W. Marwood, in trust for her niece, M. A., daughter of her brother, Meriton Sedgwick, with remainder to three of his children. She also devised her other messuages and real estate, situate in Brompton, and all her personal estate, after payment of her just debts and funeral expenses, to the trustees, in trust, to receive and pay the yearly proceeds thereof, for the benefit of her brother, his wife and children, all or any of them, during his life, as they should think proper; and she appointed the trustees her executors. The testatrix died on the 20th of June, 1815, and upon her death, Meriton and his family went to reside at Brompton. Meriton S. did not occupy any part of the premises devised in trust for him, but he occupied, by permission of the trustees, another cottage, worth 3*l.* or 4*l.* per annum, part of the property of the testatrix, devised in trust for M. A. Sedgwick, and resided therein from June, 1815, until his death on the 28th of December following. Meriton S., at the time of the testatrix's death, and also at his decease, was an uncertificated bankrupt. The personal estate of the estate, and the rents and profits of the premises, were insufficient for the payment of her debts, and the trustees did not pay or appropriate any part of the rents or profits for the benefit of Meriton S. or his wife, or any of their children, during the life of Meriton, the same being applied to the discharge of the testatrix's debts; and a considerable portion of debt remained undischarged at the time of Meriton's decease. The question was, whether Meriton took under the devise such an interest as enabled him to gain a settlement by his residence at Brompton. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It was evidently the purpose of the testatrix, knowing probably that her brother, Meriton, was an uncertificated bankrupt, to abstain from giving him any vested interest, and therefore she leaves this matter entirely in the control of the trustees. After hearing the argument, I am clearly of opinion that there is not a scintilla of interest in Meriton, either legal or equitable, which entitled him to reside irremovably in the parish. He was only one of several persons to whom the trustees might, in their discretion, have given the rents, if there had been any to dispose of." Bayley, J. "The only question submitted to our consideration is respecting the interest of Meriton, as to which, it seems to me, that it is only by losing sight of the real question that any doubt can be raised. The foundation of this head of settlement is, that a man is not to be removed from his own. But here the trustees had the estate; first, for the payment of debts, which they were unable to pay in the life-time of Meriton, and consequently were not in a condition to empower him to take any thing." Abbott, J. "If Meriton had taken an equitable interest the intention of the testatrix would have been defeated; because whatever he took, being an uncertificated bankrupt, it would have passed to his assignees." Order confirmed.

S., who, after the death of testatrix, by permission of the trustees, occupied until his death a cottage in the township where the lands devised were situate, did not acquire a settlement thereby; the rents and profits of the lands having been insufficient to pay testatrix's debts; and M. S., at the testatrix's decease, and from that time until his own decease, being an uncertificated bankrupt.

Rex v. Woburn, Burr. S. C. 680; 2 Bott, 528. The paupers (two sisters) resided at E. under a certificate from Woburn. A person entitled to a long term of years in a cottage in Eversholt, after having devised it to Andrew Powell, son of their father William Powell, adds, "it is also my will and pleasure that William Powell (their father), his wife and children, shall have free liberty and power during their life to dwell in it." And accordingly, W. P. and his wife, and their son A. P., and the two daughters, (the paupers) resided in it till W. P.'s death. The court held clearly that the settlement of the two paupers was in Eversholt.

Rex v. Owersby-le-Moor, 15 East, 356. Mary, wife of William Saltfleet, deceased, schoolmaster, was removed from Maltby to Owersby-le-Moor. Order confirmed. Case:—In 1705 Mrs. Bolle devised a farm in Maltby-le-Marsh to certain persons and their heirs, in trust, that they should employ the rents as follows, viz. yearly to the poor of the town 40s., and the rest of the rents of the farm should be yearly paid to a fit person, to be nominated and elected by the trustees, who should be a schoolmaster, to teach the poor children of Maltby to read the Bible. On June 13, 1807, the following agreement was entered into between William Saltfleet and James Digby and Catherine Digby his wife (the heir-at-law of the only surviving trustee appointed by the will.) "Memorandum of an agreement made 13th of June, 1807, between J. D. and C. D. his wife, of the one part, and W. S. schoolmaster of the other part; Whereas J. D. in right of his wife is entitled to a school-house, &c. situated at Maltby, which they have agreed to let unto W. S.: W. S. shall have the possession and the use and occupation of the school-house, yard, garden, and premises, for the purpose of teaching the poor children of M. to read in the Bible, pursuant to the will of Mrs. B.; and in consideration of W. S. agreeing to teach children, &c., he is to reside upon the premises rent free, and to be paid by J. D. and C. his wife, a salary for the first year that he shall so teach, of 10*l.*, such year to commence from the 1st August next, and 15*l.* for every year after. [Then a covenant by D. to pay as aforesaid. Then further agreement, that in case any reasonable complaint shall be made to J. D. and C., &c., it shall be lawful for him, &c., to suspend the salary of W. S. for two years, and apply the same to such purposes as J. and C. D., &c., shall think proper, without being liable to make any remuneration to W. S. In case of the death of W. S., it shall be lawful for J. D. and C. his wife, to turn out from the premises the executors of W. S., and to appoint another person to the situation of schoolmaster thereto, in such manner as he, &c., may think proper.] W. S. (June 13, 1807,) entered upon the school-house, &c., being part of the farm so devised in trust, and resided upon those premises till his death, about three years and a half afterwards. He taught the children to read during that time, and received from J. D., for the first year, a salary of 10*l.*, and afterwards a salary of 15*l.* per annum. The annual value of the school-house, yard, and garden, is about 5*l.* The remainder of the devised premises, consisting of a farm-house and twenty acres of land, was occupied by C. Barton, the tenant of J. D., at the rent of 52*l.* 10s. per annum. The court of sessions thought the above appointment fraudulent, and in no respect consistent with the will. Per Curiam: "We are of opinion that a settlement was obtained in Maltby-le-Marsh. The agreement of the 13th June, 1807, was we think in substance an appointment of Saltfleet to the situation of schoolmaster, to teach the poor children of Maltby to read the Bible: and though the sessions have stated that that appointment was fraudulent, and in no respect consistent with the will of Mrs. Bolle, it is clear that their meaning is not that it was a colourable appointment, under which he was not to discharge the duties of schoolmaster, but that it was an appointment upon such terms as tended to deprive him of a great part of the emoluments attached to the situation. There was no fraud in him: he was to discharge every duty the situation of schoolmaster required; but the fraud was in those who appointed him, in attempting to withhold from him what Mrs. Bolle's will entitled him to receive. By that will the schoolmaster was to have all the profits of a farm at Maltby, except the yearly sum of 40s., which was to be paid to the poor of the parish. The schoolmaster therefore for the time being was, to a considerable extent, to the extent of all but 40s. a year, the cestui que trust of the farm; and had the trustees kept in their own hands sufficient to raise the 40s. a year, and put the rest into the possession of the schoolmaster, they could not have dispossessed him whilst he continued schoolmaster, unless he had misused the property, or unless what they retained to raise the 40s. a year had proved insufficient for that purpose. In this case the trustees allowed Saltfleet to have the possession of a house, yard, and garden, which were part of this farm, and they retained what was greatly more than sufficient to answer the 40s. a year. He had this possession therefore not by purchase, so as to be within the statute 9 Geo. I. c. 7; not by renting, so as to be within the statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12; but in the character of a cestui que trust, residing upon what was for the time substantially his own; and as the trustees could not have removed him, we are of opinion that this residence for more than forty days gave him a settlement in this parish." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Melborne, Burr. S. C. 244; 2 Bott, 239. The pauper's husband, during his residence at Melborne, officiated as schoolmaster there. During his continuance in the school, certain lands were by deed indented and inrolled conveyed in trust to permit certain persons, being vicars of certain parishes and the succeeding vicars, to take the profits thereof, to employ the same for certain purposes: one of which was as follows: "Also the yearly sum of 10*l.* to the charity school of Melborne, to be paid to the vicar for the time being." This sum was yearly received by the pauper's husband from the vicar of Melborne. It was held that this annuity of 10*l.* per annum did not appear to be appropriated to the schoolmaster, and that he had no freehold in it, and could therefore gain no settlement by receiving it.

Rex v. Holm East Waver Quarter, 16 East, 127. Removal of Jane Anderson, single woman, and her child, aged five years, from Holm E. W. Quarter to Aicton, confirmed as to the child, but quashed as to the mother. Case:—Jane Anderson's father, Daniel Anderson, purchased an estate for less than 30*l.* in Holm and died, having devised it to a trustee in trust to let the same to farm during the life of his daughter, and to pay her the rent; and after her death to his right heirs. The pauper J. A. continued to reside upon the premises for more than forty days after the death of her father, the trustee never having interfered. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This species of settlement does not depend upon any term in a statute, but is an excepted case in the law, standing upon the rule, that a man shall not be removed from his own while his trustee permits him to occupy it, and from which nobody else had a right to remove him. Here the pauper did not reside in the character of a tenant: and whether the estate here were legal or equitable, it was still the pauper's own, and she could not be removed from it." Orders confirmed.

Rex v. Thruscross, 3 Nev. & M. 284; 1 Ad. & E. 126. Removal of J. Fryer from Thruscross to High and Low Bishopside, both in the West Riding of Yorkshire. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper's grandfather was the devisee of a copyhold estate in High and Low Bishopside, under the will of one Furniss. On the death of the deviser in 1780, the grandfather took possession of the estate under the devise; and the pauper's father, then about sixteen years of age, lived with him there as a member of his family till 1789, when he married; but the grandfather was not admitted tenant of the property in question before the year 1790. To prove a surrender of the copyhold to the use of Furniss's will, the steward of the manor was called, who produced the book of the records of the manor, and read from it a record of the admittance, reciting a surrender of the property in question, made in 1774, to the use of the will. He also stated that he had not been able to find the surrender itself upon the roll or elsewhere, except as recited in the admittance: that the old surrenders appeared to have been kept in a very loose and irregular manner; that the originals were very often not to be found; and further, that there were many surrenders to the use of wills on the records, the originals of which were not to be found; but that he had not been able to discover any other instance in which there was not either the original surrender itself, or a record of a surrender on the court rolls. The questions for the opinion of the court were stated to be, whether, under these circumstances, the entry in the book of the records of the manor was evidence of a surrender to the use of the will? whether the admittance of the pauper's grandfather in 1790 had relation back to his possession in 1780? and, whether the residence of the grandfather for more than forty days, he having the right of admittance, was sufficient to confer a settlement by estate? Lord Denman, C. J. "I think this case is clear of doubt. The principle is, that a man is not to be removed from that which he has a right to enjoy. Here the pauper's grandfather had a right to enjoy the copyhold without being removed by the parish officers. I think the overseers, if they had presumed to remove him, would have been liable to an action. In several cases an interest as feeble as this has been held sufficient for a settlement." Littledale, J. "I think that the admission relates back to the time of the deviser's death for this purpose as well as others. I agree that the grandfather had not an actual estate at the time of the emancipation; he could not then have devised at law or equity. He was a mere occupier. Still he was an occupier who, by doing an act which he might at any time do, could have obtained the legal estate. The lord could have ejected him, but only for a short time; for he might immediately have claimed admittance. He had the substantial power over the land. And although the lord or the heir-at-law might have removed him for a time, the officers of the parish had no right to do so; and if so, he became settled by forty days' residence under such circumstances." Parke, J. "I am not prepared to concur with the Lord Chief Justice and my brother Littledale, and should have wished for more time to consider the case. As at present advised, I think there was no settlement in the appellant parish. The question of evidence is disposed of: we must take it that a surrender to the use of the will is found by the sessions. The question then is, whether a settlement was gained by the grandfather before the pauper's father became emancipated. In the first place, there can be no doubt that admittance has relation back for some purposes, as to enable the devisee to avoid mesne incumbrances by another party. That relation, however, will not, in my opinion, operate so as to make the possessor irremovable in the mean time; he must have an interest before the admittance sufficient to make him irremovable. Then was the pauper's grandfather in this case removable in the meanwhile? He ought to have had a legal or an equitable estate; but that is not the condition of a copyholder before admittance. The law enables him to enforce a devise made in his favour; but he is not even obliged to accept such a devise. No case has yet gone so far as to allow a settlement to be created by that which is neither a legal nor an equitable estate." Patteson, J. "It appears to me that a settlement was gained by the pauper's father. It is true that he had no legal or equitable estate. That is, however, not absolutely necessary, according to Rex v. Holm East Waver Quarter (16 East, 127; ante, 699). Where a party can enforce the conveyance of a legal estate, and is in the occupation of it, that is sufficient to confer a settlement. Here the devisee had that right, and no one else had. He might have taken legal proceedings to compel the lord to admit him; and after he had enforced the admittance, he might have ousted the heir. Though I cannot find any case in which the court has professed to go the full length of this case, I think we may collect the principle that such an interest is sufficient. In Rex v. Holm East Waver Quarter there was neither legal nor equitable estate, though it is true that by the language of the court the decision seems to have turned on the notion that there was an equitable estate. It was held that an occupation, not as tenant, by permission of the trustee, as if the property had been the occupier's own, was sufficient to give a settlement. There the property was not the occupiers, nor could she have compelled a conveyance by any proceeding in equity. The facts of that case go further than those of the present. As to the first point, there can be no question but that the evidence was admissible." Order of sessions quashed.

4. Estate in Remainder or Reversion.

Rex v. Eatington, 4 T. R. 177. Order of removal of John Harris from Eatington to Hooke Norton quashed. Case:—The pauper married the daughter of G. Malings. After the marriage, to induce the pauper and his wife to reside with, and take care of him, by lease and release he granted a cottage to the pauper in fee, with this proviso, "that Malings was to live in and occupy the cottage as he had done, and then did, for his life." The pauper paid nothing for it. The premises were then worth 30*l.* The pauper resided with Malings up to the time of the order. Lord Kenyon, "The mutual question is, whether an immediate estate in possession was vested in the pauper? for it is admitted, that unless an estate of present interest was conveyed, the pauper gained no settlement. If this had depended on the first words of the proviso, I should have thought that they would have been satisfied by determining that only a liberty to inhabit the cottage was reserved to the father; but the word 'occupy' carries it further, and shows that the whole estate was to be reserved to him. If such be the construction, the estate in remainder was not come into possession when the order was made, and consequently the pauper had not that which confers a settlement, viz. a present interest." Ashhurst, J. "The word 'occupy' shows that it is a reservation of the thing itself, of the whole estate; for a license to occupy an estate for a particular time is a lease of the whole estate for that time."

A remainder man must have a present interest to render him irremovable.

Rex v. Houghton-le-Spring, 1 East, 247. Removal from South Shields to Houghton-le-Spring confirmed. Case:—The pauper became entitled as heir to three copyhold houses, let at 6*l.* per annum, and to one freehold house at Sedgefield. Upon becoming so entitled, he let to R. W. the freehold house at 3*l.* per annum, the pauper undertaking to sink a cellar, and make some repairs in the premises. W. entered and occupied. The pauper, in pursuance of such agreement, went, after W. had possession, from Houghton to Sedgefield, for the sole purpose of sinking the cellar, and making the repairs. He was occupied upon the work for forty days, during the whole of which time he resided as a lodger in W.'s house. After finishing the work he returned to Houghton to his father, with whom he lodged. During the whole of the pauper's residence at S. the copyhold houses were in mortgage to R. W. for 40*l.* Rex v. Dunchurch (post) was cited to show that where the property was leased to another, a residence upon it will not gain a settlement. (But per Lord Kenyon. C. J. That was the case of a purchase, and a distinction has always been taken between cases where the party came to his property by his own act, or by operation of law.) It was also said that the general expression which runs through all this class of cases, that a party shall not be removed from his own estate, seemed to imply that he must be in possession of it though he need not actually reside in it. On the other side it was argued, that in Rex v. Catherington (post, 712) the mortgagee was in possession, and there did not appear any surplus on which the interest of the mortgagor could attach; that in Rex v. St. Michael's, Bath, (post, 711,) the insolvent had conveyed all his interest to trustees, and no probability of a surplus; and the possession of it was afterwards fraudulently obtained by him. Here the pauper had a substantial freehold interest in the parish where he resided, and an undisputed residue in the copyhold premises. In Rex v. Sowton he resided not on his estate, but at an ale-house; yet he gained a settlement. Further, 1st, A man cannot be removed from his estate devolved on him by operation of law, whatsoever the value may be. 2d, A residence for forty days irremovable will gain a settlement, except in case of a purchase under 30*l.* 3d, It is enough to reside in the same parish. Ryslip v. Harrow, Rex v. Sowton, Rex v. St. Nyott's, Rex v. Hasfield (post). 4th, The party need not actually occupy his estate. It is sufficient to reside in the parish where he has a freehold. Lord Kenyon, C. J., was clear that a settlement was

If the estate be leased, and the owner reside forty days upon it by leave of the lessee, for the purpose of making repairs, he is settled there.

gained at Sedgefield, and said "That he was decided by the case of Hasfield, where the child, residing with his grandmother, could not be taken to have been in actual occupation of the property; nor did the judgment of the court proceed upon any such ground." (a) Grose, J., agreed, "That a mere residence in the parish where the estate was, was sufficient." Lawrence and Le Blanc, Js., doubted; but afterwards the court were all agreed that here was a settlement gained in Sedgefield.

Rex v. Ringstead, 9 B. & C. 218; 4 M. & R. 67. The question in this case was, whether the pauper took an immediate estate in land devised by his grandfather; the devise was "to his daughter, widow of T. M., all that messuage, &c., for her life, if so long she continued a widow, and from and after her decease or day of marriage, he devised the messuage and all other real property unto the four children of T. M. and their heirs for ever, as tenant in common." The pauper was one of those children. Between 1817 and 1819, when the property was sold, he resided in Ringstead forty days; his mother being then a widow. Neither of the children was heir at law to the testator, and there was a devise of other property to him. It was urged that the pauper took an estate in fee expectant on the death or marriage of his mother, and had as much right to reside in the parish as if he had a reversion for a term of years. Contrà. It is a clear principle of settlement law that a party cannot gain a settlement by estate, unless he has a freehold in possession. He must have an estate of which he may be disseised. Bayley, J. "Upon that point the court do not feel any doubt. It was then urged that the pauper took an immediate interest in all that was not devised to his mother;" and judgment was given by Bayley, J. who said "We are of opinion that the pauper did not take an immediate estate, and that he is entitled to no estate until the tenant for life died."

Rex v. Willoughby-with-Sloothby, 10 B. & C. 62; 5 M. & R. 32. Order of removal of W. Stokes, &c. from Huttoft to Willoughby, confirmed. Case:—J. Neal, by lease and release dated 19th and 20th May, 1825, in consideration of 105*l.*, conveyed a parcel of land and two unfurnished dwelling-houses in Huttoft, to the use of Elizabeth Stokes for life or during widowhood, remainder to the pauper in fee. The 105*l.* had been bequeathed by the father of the pauper to him, and the interest of which the pauper had subsequently by deed settled upon his mother for life or her widowhood; the principal after her death to be paid to himself; 50*l.* was expended by the pauper after the conveyance in furnishing the dwelling-houses, which sum his father had bequeathed in trust to pay the interest to the widow for life or widowhood, and the principal afterwards to the pauper. The pauper paid the interest of the 105*l.* to the trustees, who paid it over to the mother. The pauper entered upon one of the houses and part of the land at the time of the conveyance. The mother let the other house and remainder of the land for one year after the execution of the conveyance, at the expiration of which the mother told pauper she would deliver up all the premises to him, and he might do as he liked with them. The pauper then entered into possession of the other house and land, let it, received the rent, and never accounted for it to his mother; and continued to occupy the same house he had previously occupied until both were sold in May, 1828, and conveyed by deed, to which his mother, still a widow, was a party. The pauper received the whole of the purchase-money, and did not account for it to his mother. They both joined in the receipt to the purchaser. Bayley, J. "Ever since Rex v. Elington (ante, 701) it has been an established principle, that a party cannot gain a settlement by residence on an estate in which he has not a freehold vested in possession. Here the pauper had a freehold estate in expectancy only, viz. a remainder, which implies a

(a) It is to be collected from a MS. note of the late Mr. Masterman that the boy in Rex v. Hasfield was not living on his estate. It also appears that the settlement of the same pauper came in question again in Ryslip v. Hendon, 5 Mod. 416, where Holt, C. J., incidentally said, "Let a man be settled where he will, we are all of opinion he may go and live where he has an estate, and therefore that he might have gone to the place where he had a freehold." 1 East, 258.

preceding estate of freehold in some other person. The cases of Rex v. Houghton-le-Spring (ante, 701) and Rex v. Staplegrove (post, 718), only show that where a present estate of freehold is vested, the premises need not be in the owner's occupation. In the first of these cases the present freehold interest was vested in the pauper. In Rex v. Staplegrove, the estate of freehold in possession was in the pauper's wife, a chattel interest only having been granted by her father to the parish officers. In this case the pauper never had any other estate of freehold in the premises than one in remainder. His mother had the estate of freehold in possession." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "This question was expressly decided in Rex v. Eatington (ante, 701), and considered by the court as settled law in Rex v. Ringstead (ante, 702)." Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I entirely concur in the judgment given by my learned brothers." Order confirmed.

5. By Widow's Right of Dower.

Rex v. Painswicke, Burr. S. C. 783; 2 Bott, 627. The widow of a man who died seised of a house and orchard in South Stoke, entered and resided therein for seven years, without any assignment of dower, and then married a second husband, who resided in this house with her about two years, and then died. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. and the court: "The mere right of dower gained a settlement to herself, she having by Magna Charta a right to remain forty days in the house; and being irremovable for forty days, she thereby gained a settlement. But she could not communicate it to her second husband, as a tenant in dower has no right to enter till dower is assigned. (S. P. Rex v. Long Wippingham, 4 Doug. 195.)

Rex v. Northweald Bassett, 2 B. & C. 724; 4 D. & R. 276; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 221. Millicent Reynolds, widow and children, were removed from Northweald Bassett to Magdalen Laver. Order quashed. Case:—R. Reynolds, the pauper's husband, died in May, 1822, seised of a freehold estate liable to dower in Northweald Bassett. Dower was not barred, but it had not been assigned, nor had any steps been taken for that purpose. The heir at law has been from the time of his birth an idiot, and at Richard's death was twenty-one years of age. In 1820, long after the marriage of Richard and Millicent, the estate was mortgaged for a term of 1000 years by Richard, to secure the payment of 100*l.* The mortgagee received from the tenant the full half year's rent which accrued after the death of Richard at Michaelmas last, out of which he paid the sum of 3*l.* to the pauper, and took from her the following receipt: "The 7th December, 1822, received of the heir at law of my late husband R. Reynolds, deceased, the sum of 3*l.*, by the payment of Richard Hauchin (the tenant), being my third share, as his widow, of the half year's rent of the freehold part of his estate at Thornwood Common, in Northweald Bassett, due Michaelmas last." R. R. lived in Magdalen Laver, and after his death the pauper, his widow, resided in that parish for some months, and then hired and lived in a cottage in Northweald Bassett, which was not on the husband's estate. Before her residence of forty days had been completed in that parish, she became chargeable, and was removed. It was urged that the payment of rent was equivalent to assignment. But Abbott, C. J. said "The payment was made by the mortgagee, who had no power to bind the heir;" and he added "As it is agreed on both sides that there was in fact no assignment of dower, I am clearly of opinion that the pauper in this case had not any such interest as would entitle her to the possession of any part of the estate as her own, so as to render her irremovable. Rex v. Painswick (supra) seems to be a decisive authority; and as that case has never been impeached by any subsequent decision, I think we are bound by it, and consequently the order of sessions must be quashed." Bayley, J. "There being an express decision on the point, unless we could see that that decision was wrong, we ought to abide by it. Rex v. Painswick is I think a decisive authority upon this question. Here the pauper would never have a right of occupation; for so long as the thousand years term continued, the right of occupation would be in the termor, and whatever right she might have could only be by assignment, which in fact has never taken place." The learned judge, after referring to the decision in Rex v. Painswick, added "Now if the right of dower unassigned would confer a settlement on the party who was residing upon the estate out of which the dower was to issue, the husband would have been irremovable during the whole of that time. The question in that case was, whether the children of the second marriage were settled in the parish in which the mother and father had so resided; and the court held that they were not. Why? Because the right to have the dower assigned, and residing upon the estate on which the mother was entitled to have dower assigned, was not sufficient to communicate a settlement to the husband and the children, the dower not having been in point of fact actually assigned. That case is precisely like this in principle, and we ought to be bound by it." Holroyd, J. "I think the decision in Rex v. Painswick is decisive of the present case, unless we could see that it was determined upon a wrong principle. We should not be authorized in disturbing it, unless there was reason to doubt the propriety of it. I see no reason for saying that it is wrongly decided, and therefore on the authority of that case I am of opinion that we ought to quash the order." Abbott, C. J. "Rex v. Painswick is stronger in favour of the settlement claimed than the present case, for there the pauper had actually resided upon the property out of which the claim to a settlement arose. I think it is our safest course to abide by that decision. If we consider the nature of the widow's right to dower before assignment, it will be seen that she had not any right, either legal or equitable, to the land. Her legal right was to have dower assigned; her equitable right to have an account of the rents and profits. But in Rex v. Berkswell (ante, 692) a right of that nature was held insufficient to confer a settlement. Upon the authority of those two cases, but particularly the former, that being a case of dower, I am of opinion that the widow of Richard Reynolds had not any right to reside in the parish of Northweald Bassett, and that the order of sessions must be quashed."

5. By Widow's Right of Dower.

A widow having right of dower, although not set out, gains a settlement by residing upon the estate; but the second husband gains none, though he resides with her.

A widow, before assignment of dower, has not such an interest in the land of which she is dowerable, as to be irremovable from the parish in which the land lies.

6. By Wife's Estate in Trust(a)

Where an estate is vested in trustees for the separate use of the wife, the husband may gain a settlement by residence upon it.

6. By Wife's Estate in Trust.

Rex v. Offchurch, 3 T. R. 114. Henry West and his wife were removed from Thurlaston to Offchurch. Order affirmed. Case:—J. West was the father of the pauper. In January, 1767, his wife, who was mother of the pauper, died, and in June, 1767, J. West married Jane Lockley, with whom he lived in Offchurch until 1770, when they went to Southam. In 1773 they removed to Ladbroke, to a house there held under the following title [the case then stated that his house was vested by a settlement in trustees, to the separate use of the wife, with the usual clause that her receipt should be a discharge to the trustees for the rents and profits, and that the rents should not be subject to the husband's debts, &c.] West and his wife lived in the house ever since 1773. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said "The question had some novelty in it; where a person resides on his own property, he gains a settlement by it, it having been considered as an excepted case out of the acts of parliament. Lord Macclesfield first held, that as a man cannot be disseised of his freehold he is irremovable from it, and residing forty days on an estate of his own irremovable, and gaining a settlement, are synonymous terms. That indeed does not hold in all cases now; for by 9 Geo. I. c. 7, a purchaser of an estate for less than 30*l.* shall not acquire a settlement for any longer time than he resides upon it. Then here, if this had been the father's own estate, the settlement would clearly have devolved on the son. But it is said that this is only the equitable estate of the wife. Now supposing it had been the wife's legal estate, the husband would have been seised jure uxoris, and by residing upon it would have gained a settlement. Then must it be a legal estate in order to confer a settlement? Certainly not. This was not doubted in South Sydenham v. Lamerton, (ante, 669), or in any of the other cases. The question in that case was, whether the next of kin, without administration, had any estate whatever? and it was held that he had not. In Rex v. Cold Ashton, a doubt was made whether a next of kin having the sole right of administration could not gain a settlement without taking out letters of administration. That shows an equitable estate is sufficient to give a settlement; and indeed this position is confirmed by many other cases, and there are none in opposition to it. (a) Then it is said that this is going still further, because this is only the equitable estate of the wife, and that even the wife herself had no right to reside upon it without the consent of the trustees. But she might, beyond all doubt, if she had chosen, have elected to take the esplees with her own hands, and that the trustees could not have prevented. The objection then against the husband's gaining a settlement here is too refined; for the wife had a right to reside on her property, and to communicate it to the husband. And although there is no case directly like the present, yet the principles of the decided cases go the length of determining this." The other judges assented, and both orders were quashed.

Mursley v. Grandborough, 1 Stra. 97; 1 Sess. Ca. 122; 2 Bott, 609. Sir John Fortescue demised a cottage of 20s. a year to Eden for ninety-nine years, reserving 12d. rent: Eden assigns the term to Gadden in trust for his wife for life, and then in trust for his son, during the remainder of the term. The wife dies. Afterwards the son dies, leaving a wife, who, as administratrix to her husband, becomes entitled to this term; and she grants this cottage for twenty-four years, excepting two rooms, (in which two rooms she lives,) and marries John Chappel. The question was, whether Chappel, as husband of an administratrix, who was entitled to the trust of a term only, and as being entitled to a chattel in another's right only, was removable by 13 & 14 Car. II.? And by the court: "He is not: this is not a taking of a tenement under 10*l.*, for the 12d. is not reserved as a rent, but only an acknowledgment usually paid on long leases. The case of a copyhold is stronger than this, for that is but an estate at will. To strip the man of his own is the way to make him chargeable, for he may not be able to let it." Therefore the orders which adjudged this to be no settlement were quashed.

Rex v. Ilmington, Burr. S. C. 566; 1 Bla. Rep. 598. Elizabeth Stanley purchased a leasehold tenement in M. for 6*l.* for the remainder of a term of 1000 years. She resided upon it about nine years, and then married T. E., who resided with her upon the same tenement about sixteen years; then he died, and after his decease she continued upon the premises for several years, and at last sold the same for 6*l.*; and after such sale was removed to Ilmington, the place of her husband's settlement before their marriage. Order confirmed. It was urged, that this woman had an estate vested in her when Evans married her, which upon the marriage vested in him. The husband gained a settlement in Mickleton by forty days' residence upon his own estate; and his settlement communicated itself to the wife. And of this opinion was the court. Orders quashed.

Rex v. Ynyscynhaiarn, 7 B. & C. 233; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 77. Order of removal of Hugh Hughes, his wife and children, from Aberdaron to Ynyscynhaiarn confirmed. Case:—H. Williams, the father of Elizabeth Hughes, resided as tenant of a small farm, called Peny Cwin, in Aberdaron, and which he held at the rent of 3*l.* 5*s.* per annum, and died thereon the 9th of June, 1782. Williams made a will the 23d of May, 1782, bequeathing all his personal estate and effects, subject to the payment of legacies, to his daughter Elizabeth, and appointed her sole executrix. Elizabeth continued to reside at Peny Cwin from the time of her father's death until the time of her marriage. On the 27th of July, 1782, Hugh married Elizabeth, and went to reside at Peny Cwin, where they continued many years. Elizabeth proved her father's will on the 23d of May, 1783. Williams never paid any taxes in Aberdaron, nor did Elizabeth while sole, nor Hugh after his marriage, (except county bridge rate,) until 1795. Bayley, J. "The wife in this case was executrix of a tenant from year to year, and by forty days' residence as such would gain a settlement. If, therefore, the wife took the interest as executrix, and in that character became tenant from year to year, and married, a settlement would be gained by her husband. If she took the land as tenant for a year, she became tenant from year to year, and the term

A man marrying a woman who after the passing of 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, has become a yearly tenant of premises at a rent of less than ten pounds per annum, gains a settlement by forty days residence thereon.

Tenant from year to year at the rent of fifty shillings, died in 1826, and his widow continued to reside on the premises, and paid rent for two half years, without taking out administration, she then married again, and with her husband continued to pay the rent for several years. The question being whether the second husband became entitled to such a legal interest in the right of his wife as gained him a settlement, the court were equally divided.

would vest by marriage in the husband. Rex v. Ilmington (ante, 705,) shows that a man will acquire by marriage the same right to a settlement which an executor does by the death of the person whom he represents. The executor of a tenant from year to year of an estate under the value of 10*l.* may gain a settlement by residing on it forty days, because the interest vests in him by operation of law. And upon the same principle a husband may gain a settlement by residing forty days upon an estate vesting in him by marriage, although it be of less annual value than 10*l.* A settlement, therefore, was gained in Aberdaron." Orders quashed.

Rex v. North Cerney, 3 Bar. & Ad. 463. Appeal against an order of removal of John Lovesey and Elizabeth his wife from Winchcomb to North Cerney. Order confirmed. Case:—About five years ago (and after the expiration of the indentures under which the pauper had served in North Cerney,) the pauper's wife Elizabeth, being at that time a widow, took a house and garden, situate in the parish of Winchcomb, of one Greening, from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, at the rent of 3*l.* per annum. She went into the house immediately after taking it, and continued to reside therein until the 23d of July, 1828, on which day she married the pauper, John Lovesey, who immediately went to reside in the said house with his wife, and continued to live there from that time till the order of removal was made. Before the marriage the rent was paid by the said Elizabeth, and after that time by the pauper. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of Winchcomb by his residence on the tenement which had been so taken by his wife before her marriage. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am not able to distinguish this case in principle from Rex v. Ilmington (Burr. S. C. 566, ante, 705,) and Rex v. Ynyscynhaiarn (7 B. & C. 233, ante, 705). In the last mentioned case it was expressly decided that a man by marrying a woman who was a yearly tenant of premises of less than the annual value of 10*l.* gained a settlement. So here upon the same principle the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of Winchcomb, his wife having before her marriage become the yearly tenant of a house and garden at the rent of 3*l.*, and that interest having on the marriage vested in him by operation of law." Littledale, Parke, and Patteson, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Barnard Castle, 4 Nev. & M. 128; 2 Ad. & E. 108. Removal of H. Siddle and family from Barnard Castle to New Forest. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper's settlement by parentage was in New Forest, but the appellants contended that he had subsequently become settled in the township of Marrick, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, by residence on the property of his wife. The pauper in 1827 married his present wife, then a widow. Her former husband rented a cottage in Marrick at 50*s.* a year, payable on the 21st of June and the 21st of December in every year; and was residing in it at the time of his death, in September, 1826. The widow did not take out administration, but continued to live in the house with her five children from the period of her husband's death till her marriage with the pauper, and paid the rent due in December, 1826, and June, 1827. The pauper, on his marriage with the widow in September, 1827, went to reside with her on the premises, and paid the half year's rent due on the 21st of December, 1827. He continued to occupy and pay rent for the tenement for several years: first, the old rent of 50*s.*, and afterwards 4*l.* If this court should be of opinion that, under the above circumstances, the pauper was settled in Marrick, the order of sessions was to be confirmed, otherwise to be quashed. Lord Denman, C. J. "I think the proof in this case was sufficient to establish the pauper's settlement in Marrick by residence on his wife's estate. It is stated that the widow on her first husband's death did not take out administration, but continued to live in the house with her children from her husband's death till her second marriage, and paid the rent due in December, 1826, and June, 1827. The question is, whether that statement raises such a presumption of her having assumed a representative character as makes her holding necessarily a holding by wrong. It seems to me that it ought to be shown by the case, and not assumed, that she was acting in a right which she did not possess; and the statement before us as to her holding, and the subsequent payment of rent, makes out, to my mind, that she was upon the premises as tenant in her own right, and not as a person entitled, but omitting to take out administration. Certainly there is some doubt upon the subject, and it would have been more satisfactory if the sessions had stated the case more particularly; probably, however, they have found all the facts that came before them, and I think those facts present to us matter from which we ought to infer that the holding by the widow was by such a title as she might lawfully claim, and not otherwise. With deference, therefore, to my brothers who are of a different opinion, I think the sessions have decided rightly." Taunton, J. "I am sorry that on so insignificant a subject there should be any serious difference of opinion on the bench; and I do not give my judgment without distrust on that account; but still the case is one upon which I cannot entertain what appears to me a reasonable doubt. We must proceed upon the facts as stated, and not upon any ingenious supposition of other circumstances. The first husband died in September, 1826; the widow continued in the occupation of the premises, and paid the rent up to December, 1826, and for the following half year. The question is, whether it is necessary to infer that those sums were not paid on her own account, so as to make her the tenant, but are referable to a prolongation of her late husband's interest, and consequently not made in her own right. The sessions, having found in favour of the settlement in Marrick, must be taken to have expressed their opinion that the payments were made on her own account. And with all respect to my brothers who are of a different opinion, I think it is putting a forced construction on the facts to suppose that she should have paid the rent as representative of her husband (being under no obligation to do so), and not on her own behalf. It is true that the landlord never having given any notice to quit, might, if he thought proper, have considered the tenancy of the husband as still subsisting; it does not, however, appear that he did so, but rather that she paid the rent, and he accepted it, as due from her. No dissent appears on his part to its being so paid; nor is there any thing to show, on behalf of the respondents, that it was received (as they must contend) in contemplation of a prolonged interest in the widow as representative of the deceased. If then the landlord received the rent from her personally, in her own right, there is an end of the question; she became tenant from year to year, and on her marriage with the pauper, the estate vesting in him by operation of law, conferred a settlement on him, though the rent was below 10*l.* a year. Under all the circumstances, I think there is enough to satisfy us that she became tenant in her own right; the sessions might, indeed, have stated the case more distinctly, and it would have been desirable to send it back in order that they might say in what light they considered this point; but it would be attended with expense, and I do not think the doubt sufficient to warrant it." Patteson, J. "There is no doubt or difference of opinion as to the law of this case. It is clear, that if the widow became tenant in her own right, though she was not thereby settled in Marrick, the husband she married was; and there is no doubt, that if she continued on the premises only as a person having a right to take out administration, she could not acquire a settlement in her own right, nor the second husband through her, she not being the representative of the deceased. The only difference of opinion is on the facts of the case; and I think it would have been more satisfactory to send it back. The sessions are supposed to have inferred that the widow became tenant in her own right, because their order is in favour of the settlement in Marrick. But they ought to have drawn that inference expressly, and the danger of leaving it to the court is shown by what has taken place: one part of the court drawing one inference, and another the contrary. The question, however, is not of sufficient importance to warrant sending the case back. It appears to me that some evidence ought to have been given of an actual change of the tenancy, and of some new contract entered into between the widow and the landlord. Where the original tenant had his family living with him in the house during his life, and upon his death his widow, who is entitled to take out administration, remains with the children in the house, I think it is too much to say that a mere payment of rent by her is the commencement of a new tenancy, especially when a part of the rent she pays is rent which accrued during the tenancy of the husband. It appears to me, that she only continued on the premises in the situation of a next of kin, neglecting to take out administration. Suppose she had ultimately taken it out, could it have been said that she was in, not as personal representative, but as tenant, because she had previously paid rent? The want of any interposition by the landlord is relied upon as showing that her continued holding was in her own right; but I think that this fact tells the other way, and that an interposition of the landlord was requisite to make it appear that she became tenant." Williams, J. "I am sorry there should be a difference of opinion in this case; but the sole question is, upon the facts found, whether or not the widow became occupier of the premises in her own right. As to that I only say, it does not satisfactorily appear to me that the sessions meant to find a payment of rent by her, and acceptance of it by the landlord, on her own account, so as to make her his tenant. The fact is a simple one, and might have been expressly stated. As it is, I am not satisfied that the widow became tenant in her own right; if she did, it would have been better found by the sessions than left to be inferred by us." The court being equally divided in opinion, no judgment was given.

Rex v. Great Farringdon, 6 T. R. 679. Order of removal of William Herbert from Stanford to Great Farringdon confirmed. Case:—The pauper on his marriage in 1782 went to reside in a cottage belonging to his grandfather, who had agreed to give it to him. The agreement was in writing, but not stamped. The pauper fitted up the cottage, and resided upon it as his own till 1795; no rent was ever paid, or claimed. The grandfather died in 1783. The pauper's mother was his only child, married to Herbert, the pauper's father. The pauper's mother died in 1786, leaving her husband and the pauper, her eldest son. The husband is now living. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "No interest passed by the agreement. Then, on the death of the grandfather, the estate descended to his daughter, who might have reduced it into possession, but did not; and in order to make the husband tenant by courtesy, there must be a seisin in fact in the wife. Then, as she did not reduce it into possession, it descended to the pauper, who is seised in fee." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Oakley, 10 East, 491. Removal of John King and Mary his wife from Brill to Oakley confirmed. Case:—Thomas Hawes, about thirty-eight years ago, inclosed a piece of waste land in Brill, and built a cottage thereon, which he occupied till his death. By indenture, dated the 3d November, 1795, he and his son Thomas demised the cottage to James Hawes for five hundred years, by way of mortgage, for securing 20*l.* and interest, which yet remains unsatisfied. (a) Thomas, the son, afterwards married the pauper, Mary, and resided in the cottage with his father until June, 1801, when Thomas, the father, died intestate, leaving his son his heir at law, who continued to reside on the estate till November in the same year, when he died intestate, leaving the pauper, Mary, his widow, and four infant daughters, three of whom at the time of the removal were under fourteen years of age. The widow continued with her daughters to reside on the said estate for more than forty days after the death of her husband, before her eldest daughter attained the age of fourteen, and in October, 1806, the widow intermarried with the pauper, John King, whose legal settlement was in Oakley, and who, with his wife and her children, resided on the estate from the time of the marriage to the time of the removal. The estate at the time of the removal was of a less annual value than 10*l.* It was admitted that Mary gained no settlement by any right of dower. The only question argued was, whether either John or Mary King gained a settlement by their respective residence on the estate? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "There is no doubt in this case but that the mother, who was guardian in socage to her daughters, had a right to elect whether she would let the estate or occupy it for their benefit, and unless she let it, the law which imposes the duty of a guardian upon her, would necessarily protect her in the personal occupation and superintendence of it. The only difference which can be pointed out between the cases of an executor or administrator and of a guardian in socage, in this respect, is that the one is accountable for the profits by statute, and the other at common law. The law considers a guardian in socage as entitled to the possession of a ward's property, and incapable of being removed from it by any person; such a guardian has not the mere office or authority, but an interest in the ward's estate. It is laid down in Wade v. Baker (1 Lord Raym. 131), that he may maintain trespass and ejectment, avow for damage feasant, make admittance to copyhold, and lease in his own name. He cannot, indeed, convey the property absolutely as an executor or administrator, because the nature of the trust does not require it in the one case as it does in the other; but he may dispose of it during his guardianship, though accountable afterwards to the heir. The widow, therefore, had such an interest in the estate as rendered her irremovable from it." Grose, J. "The question is, whether the widow was irremovable from this property for forty days? She had a right during her guardianship either to lease or occupy the estate, and if she chose to occupy it, she was irremovable from it as from her own, though liable to answer afterwards to the ward for the profits." Le Blanc, J. "The case, though new in circumstance, is not new in principle. It is governed by the decisions which have taken place, that in order to make persons irremovable on account of having property in the parish, it is not necessary to have a beneficial interest in it for themselves, but it is sufficient that they reside there for some beneficial purpose to another. Now a guardian in socage has a right to the possession, and until she leases it, it is for the interest of the wards that she should occupy the estate, and there can be no right to remove her from it to their prejudice, as in the case of an administrator, or of a sole next of kin, even before administration granted, who has a right to reside on the leasehold property, and such residence for forty days will give him a settlement in the parish." Bayley, J. "If a guardian in socage can maintain trespass and ejectment in his own name, and avow for damage feasant on the land, this shows that he has a right to occupy it. And this is confirmed by the old method of pleading by guardian in socage, which was, that he entered as guardian into the tenement in question, and was possessed. In like manner an administrator has a right to the possession of leasehold property, and is only accountable for the profits." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Sherrington, 3 Bar. & Ad. 714. Appeal against an order for the removal of Mary Bailey from Olney to Sherrington. Order confirmed. Case:—Sarah Whiting by her will, duly executed and attested, dated the 9th of October, 1821, devised her real estate unto and to the use of her niece Catherine Bailey, the pauper's sister, her heirs and assigns, and appointed John Bailey, the father of Catherine and of the pauper, executor. The testatrix at the time of the execution of her will, and thenceforward till her death, was seised in fee simple of a real estate in the respondent parish, consisting of two cottages or tenements. On the testatrix's death Catherine was in the sixteenth year of her age, and her father immediately took possession of the two tenements, considering himself her guardian, and resided in one of them for five or six years, both his daughters living with him and forming part of his family during the whole of that time. He let the other cottage to a tenant and applied the rent to his own use, considering it a compensation for the expense of bringing up his daughter Catherine. The pauper had gained no settlement in her own right. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether John Bailey gained a settlement in the respondent parish by residing under such circumstances on the tenement

A real estate was devised to C. B., who on the death of the testator was sixteen years old. Her father considering himself her guardian resided with her on the estate: Held, that as the estate came to the daughter by the devise, and not by descent, and she was above fourteen years of age, the father was not a guardian in socage, but natural guardian only, and that having as such no interest in the land, he gained no settlement by residing on it.

devised by Sarah Whiting's will. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The father of the pauper was not guardian in socage, because the land did not come to his daughter by descent, nor was she under fourteen years of age. Neither was he a guardian appointed by the parent of a child under the age of twenty-one years, pursuant to the statute 12 Car. II. c. 24, s. 8, who as such would be entitled to take the profits of the land. Then he was only the natural guardian, and had not in that capacity any title to a control over the land belonging to his child. To give a settlement there must be an interest in the land." Littledale, J. "In Quadring v. Downs (2 Mod. 176,) it was held, that there can be no wardship without a descent. The land, therefore, having come to the daughter by devise, and not by descent, the father was not guardian in socage. Nor was he a guardian appointed pursuant to the statute. He had, therefore, no legal or beneficial interest in the land, and consequently gained no settlement by residing on it." Parke, J. "The father here was only the natural guardian, and it is clear that as such he had no interest in the land, for that guardianship extends no further than the custody of the infant's person." (Hargrave's note to Co. Litt. 88 b, note 66.) Taunton, J. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Wilby, 2 M. & Sel. 504. Removal from Debenham to Wilby confirmed. Case:—In 1794 John Bedwell went with a certificate to reside in Debenham. In 1807 he purchased of Smith a copyhold estate, holden of the manor of Bloodhall, in Debenham. After his decease, his widow and family continued to reside on the premises for 143 days, and until their removal by this order. No instance appeared on the rolls of any actual assignment by dower; but it was usual for femes covertes to join with their husbands in securities (surrenders by way of securities) of estates possessed by such husbands in their own right within the manor, though never expressly stated in bar of dower; and the pauper had actually joined with her husband in the before-mentioned conditional surrender of these premises. The copyhold descended to the youngest son. C. a. v. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The court had looked into the cases, particularly Egleton's case, and that it seemed to them that the mother was the guardian of the infant's copyhold, and as such was entitled to occupy the same irremovably." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Toddington, 1 B. & Ald. 560. Removal of D. Evans, Susannah his wife, and children from Flitwick to Toddington confirmed. Case:—In 1801, S. Elmer, the then husband of the pauper Susannah, agreed to purchase a cottage at Flitwick of James Evans. There was no conveyance or written contract, but S. E. entered and continued in possession till November, 1802, when he died intestate, leaving Susannah and one child three years old. The widow and child resided in the cottage till July, 1804, when she married the pauper D. Evans, who, with his wife, resided in the cottage more than forty days. On the 12th September, 1808, J. Evans duly conveyed his cottage to the pauper, and the consideration was stated to be 16*l.* paid at the making of the deed by the pauper to J. Evans; but no sum was paid; the only consideration was the money paid by S. Elmer. On the 4th October, 1808, the pauper duly conveyed the premises to W. F. for 25*l.* Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "This is not an estate so clearly equitable, that a court of law can presume that a court of equity would, if applied to, clothe the party with a legal right to it. Rex v. Oakley (ante, 708,) is clearly distinguishable from this; that was decided on the assumed ground of a legal estate. But this is at most a question of an equitable estate only, and we are to consider, not only whether a court of equity would order a legal estate to be conveyed, but whether in that case the conveyance would operate ab antecedenti, so as to constitute a legal estate in the father which would descend to the heir; for unless that be so, the guardianship in socage, which is one of the incidents of the legal estate descending with it, will not go to the widow. I think, therefore, that the widow in this case was not nor ever has been guardian in socage. If so, her husband could not by residence in the parish gain a settlement." Bayley, J. "A court of law generally looks at legal rights only, and not at doubtful equitable estates. There are, indeed, equitable rights recognised by statutes, of which perhaps courts of law are bound to take notice; but how can we see that the party in this case is entitled to an equitable estate? We do not know what was the original bargain between Elmer and Evans, and the case states a subsequent conveyance to a stranger, and not to the heir-at-law, from whence a totally different conclusion from that contended for (of procuring a conveyance to the child) would seem to arise." Holroyd, J. "Where there is a conveyance to uses not executed, or on trusts stated on the face of the deed, the one party has the equitable the other the legal estate. In these cases, for collateral purposes, a court of law will take notice of such equitable estates. An equitable estate, however, is very different from an equitable right to have a conveyance of the legal estate. Here the party had only the latter; and if there be any doubt as to what a court of equity would do, this court will not take cognizance of the estate. But supposing there is a sufficient equitable estate here, there must be also a guardian in socage. It is to be observed, that the law only took notice of the tenant of the legal estate. It was his duty to do all the services if he was of age; and if an infant or lunatic, the burden and right were cast on the guardian in socage. The guardian in socage, therefore, was only appointed in the case of a legal estate; for otherwise there would have been this incongruity; two persons would be bound to perform the services, viz. the trustee having the legal estate and the guardian in socage for the cestui que trust. It is said that the widow might be by a court of equity clothed with the estate; but the utmost that that court could do, would be to decree a conveyance of the legal estate to the infant, who would then take by purchase and not by descent; and there can be no guardian in socage, except where the heir takes by descent." Order confirmed.

8. Estate in Mortgage.

8. Estate in Mortgage.

Rex v. St. Michael's, Bath, Doug. 630. The pauper conveyed two houses, whereof he was seised in fee, at Walcott, to trustees, in trust to sell and pay mortgages and other debts, and to pay the surplus money, if any, to the pauper. Some short time after, one of these houses becoming void, the trustees having possession thereof, employed a woman to clean and air the house, and delivered to her the key for that purpose; which having done, she placed the key among some things of her own, intending afterwards to re-deliver it to the trustees: but the pauper's wife took it from thence, and took possession of the vacant house, and she and her husband went and lived there till the removal, being about a year and three quarters. The deed did not provide for the annual rents to be sold. One of the trustees seeing her conveying her goods thither gave her notice that she was doing wrong, not having the consent of either the trustees or creditors. But the house still remained unsold, and it was stated that the value of the premises was 650*l.* and the debts 880*l.* It was argued, that the beneficial interest in the estate remained in the pauper till sold; and for this was cited Rex v. Natland (ante, 696); and that residing upon it as his own he was not removable from it, and consequently gained a settlement. And it was likened to the case of a mortgage. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. (unto which the rest of the court assented): "If the estate on which a pauper resides is substantially his property, that is sufficient, whatever form of conveyance there may be; and therefore the mortgagor in possession gains a settlement, because the mortgagee, notwithstanding the form, has but a chattel, and the mortgage is only a security. It is an affront to common sense to say the mortgagor is not the real owner. But here, what interest had the pauper in this estate? He made an immediate conveyance to trustees, not a mortgage, to sell and pay off two mortgages and other debts; and when this conveyance was made, it was so doubtful whether there would be any surplus, that the deed says, he shall have the surplus, if any. He had only a chance of a residue, and had not a right to continue a moment in possession. A mortgagor has a right to the possession, till the mortgagee brings an ejectment. After the mortgagee has got into possession, he (the mortgagee) might gain a settlement. There is still another and a stronger ground in this case; for the possession was gained by fraud."

An estate conveyed to trustees to be sold to pay mortgages and other debts, will not give to the person conveying it a settlement by a subsequent residence till actually sold.

A mortgagor in possession may gain a settlement.

So also a mortgagee in possession.

Note. In Rex v. Edington (post, 712), the court said, "that the main point

2. Of Estates acquired otherwise than by Purchase, &c.

A mortgagor living on the premises mortgaged, but not in possession as owner, gains no settlement.

If a cottage be leased for years determinable on lives, and be conveyed by a woman and her husband in trust to raise money by sale or mortgage, with a clause for re-assignment, and the parties continue in possession and the husband die, and the wife marry a second time, she retaining possession, the second husband gains a settlement by forty days' residence, though the money do not appear to have been paid.

upon which the decision in this case was made, was the fact of fraudulent possession."

Rex v. Catherington, 3 T. R. 771. William Booker was removed from Compton to Catherington. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, prior to Michaelmas, 1789, was entitled to the equity of redemption of a freehold estate in Compton, consisting of several dwelling-houses of the annual value of 13*l.* 5*s.* which had been mortgaged by his father to Elizabeth Morey, which mortgage was afterwards assigned to one Ayles. In Michaelmas term, 1788, Ayles delivered declarations in ejectment to the pauper as landlord, and to the several tenants in possession of the estate in Compton, and thereupon the tenants attorned to Ayles. About Michaelmas, 1789, the pauper asked permission of Mr. Newland, the agent for Ayles, to inhabit one of the houses, part of the mortgaged estate, and which was then untenanted, for the purpose of overlooking some repairs, which he proposed to do upon the estate with an intent to sell the same and pay the mortgage money; in consequence of which he inhabited one of the houses upwards of three months, when he was removed by the present order. He did nothing towards the repair of the houses or sale of the estate. No agreement was made between him and Mr. Newland with respect to any rent to be paid for such house. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It has been long established that an equitable title is sufficient to give a settlement; but, in the case alluded to, the mortgagor was in possession. So, by the act for regulating votes at county elections, either the mortgagor or mortgagee in possession may vote. But in this case the party had neither jus in re nor ad rem." Buller, J. "In St. Michael's, Bath (ante, 711), it was said, that either a mortgagor or mortgagee might gain a settlement according to circumstances; one of these circumstances is possession; and upon possession all the questions have turned." Orders confirmed.

Rex v. Edington, 1 East, 288. Removal from Edington to Urchfont, quashed. Case:—M. M., being in possession of a cottage in Edington, granted to one C. W. for ninety-nine years determinable on three lives, purchased a reversionary interest in the same for a further term of ninety-nine years, to commence at the determination of the first term, but determinable with the lives of herself and her brother H. M. Having married one W. D., the premises were assigned by deed, to which she and W. D. were parties on one side, and J. P. of E. on the other, to J. P. as trustee for the parishioners of E. for the payment of 10*l.* and interest, in trust that J. P. should, by sale and mortgage of the premises, and by the receipt of the rent, or by one of those ways, raise the sum, &c., together with costs and charges; and after payment of the 10*l.*, &c., in trust to re-assign. W. D. died, leaving M. D. his widow, who afterwards married the pauper W. B., then settled in U. She and the first husband in his lifetime (and after his death and her second marriage, and also after the death of the surviving life named in the first lease, she with the pauper her second husband, for the space of four years,) occupied to the time of her death, and the pauper continued to pay the lord his quit-rent during his possession, and at different times repaired the premises: but it did not appear whether the lord had any knowledge of the assignment. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "Some points of this case are very clear. Generally speaking, in the case of a purchase, if the value be under 30*l.* no settlement can be gained by virtue of it; that is, where it comes to the party by his own act: but if it come to him by operation of law, the value is not material. That is the case here; for the purchase was made by the wife before the coverture, and it came to the husband upon his marriage by act of law; and he might even during the coverture have sold it without the assent of his wife. But the objection now made is, that this was not such an interest in the husband as was sufficient to enable him to gain a settlement by residence on the property, on account of the antecedent conveyance to Price the trustee. But what was that conveyance? It was for the purpose of securing the re-payment of a sum of money expended by the parish for the use of the man's family. Lord Mansfield, in the case of St. Michael's, Bath (ante, 711), said, 'it was an affront to common sense to say that a mortgagor has no interest in the mortgaged premises. The law recognises his interest; in the case of a freehold, he has a right to vote for members of parliament.' Now the conveyance in question is equivalent to a mortgage, and no more. Consider what in strictness is the interest of a mortgagor; after the usual time given for the payment is expired, the estate becomes absolute in the mortgagee at law; but neither the courts of law or equity lose sight of what the parties intended. In mortgage deeds there is sometimes introduced a clause that the mortgagee may repay himself by sale of the mortgaged premises, without the concurrence of the mortgagor: but a court of equity would, I believe, control the exercise of that power. I am sure they would control it in an instance like the present, upon payment of what was due. The trustee, in such a case, would be bound to execute a reconveyance: and here there is an express clause to that purpose. Virtually, therefore, this is no more than a mortgage, and must be governed by the same rules. With respect to the case of St. Michael's, Bath, principally relied on, it is very plain that the greatest stress was laid on the circumstances of the pauper's possession having been obtained by fraud. After touching upon the interest which he had in the premises conveyed, Lord Mansfield says at the end of the case, 'there is still another and a stronger ground in this case; for the possession was obtained by fraud.' Now if the other point had been clear, he would not have used such an expression. Here the possession was not fraudulent; and therefore I am of opinion that the second husband, the pauper, gained a settlement by his residence on this estate, which came to him by operation of law on his marriage." Grose, J. "I cannot distinguish this from the case of a mortgage. The purpose of the conveyance was to secure the money. The parties interested continued afterwards in possession: the pauper paid the quit-rents and repaired the premises. Now what more could a mortgagor in possession do? In the case of St. Michael's, Bath, another reason is given for the judgment than what is now relied on: the possession there was fraudulently obtained by the pauper: it was expressly found to be against the consent of the trustees who had before taken to the possession. Whereas here the pauper always continued in quiet possession of the premises." Lawrence, J. "The principal argument against the settlement set up in this case is grounded on a dictum in the case of St. Michael's, Bath, in the first part of the opinion delivered by Lord Mansfield: without which there is no pretence for the objection. For it cannot be disputed that a conveyance to a trustee in trust by sale, or mortgage, and receipt of the rents and profits, to raise 10*l.*, is merely a security for that sum: and it is plain that the parties themselves so considered it, by providing for a re-assignment of all or so much as should not be sold, applied, or otherwise disposed of. Now in that case Lord Mansfield begins by saying that which is decisive as applied to this. 'If the estate on which a pauper resides is substantially his property, that is sufficient, whatever forms of conveyance there may be:' and therefore he says that a mortgagor in possession gains a settlement, 'because the mortgagee, notwithstanding the form, has but a chattel, and the mortgage is only a security.' If then the object be merely to secure money, whether the conveyance be in the form of a trust like the present, or of a mortgage, it is in substance the same thing." Le Blanc, J. "I am of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement by residing on this estate, in which he had an equitable interest; and I consider that the assignment to the trustee was no more than a security for so much money. According to what was said by Lord Mansfield in the case of St. Michael's, Bath, the court will not look to the mere form of the conveyance, but will consider what the parties really meant by it. Then, if this were substantially a mortgage, as I think it was, it is clear that the pauper gained a settlement by residing on the premises." Order of sessions affirmed.

Rex v. Cregrina, 4 Nev. & M. 455; 2 Ad. & E. 536; 1 Harr. 53. On appeal against an order of two justices for the removal of Septimus Lloyd from Cregrina to Glascombe. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper acquired a settlement in Glascombe by renting a tenement situate in that parish for several years, up to 1830, at the yearly rent of 24*l.* The pauper's father John Lloyd died in 1822 intestate, possessed of a leasehold tenement situate in Cregrina, which he held for the residue of a term of 999 years at a peppercorn rent. He left a widow and four sons, John, James, Septimus (the pauper), and William. On the 4th of August, 1828, James took out letters of administration to his father's estate. By an indenture of assignment dated the 23rd of August, 1828, between the said James Lloyd, the administrator, John Lloyd, Septimus Lloyd (the pauper), and William Lloyd, and Mrs. Ann Guise, after reciting the lease, the tenement was assigned by James Lloyd the administrator, and confirmed by John, Septimus, and William Lloyd to Mrs. Ann Guise, by way of mortgage for the residue of the term of 999 years, for securing 120*l.* and interest. The four brothers divided the 120*l.* equally between them, executed the deed and signed the receipt, and covenanted for the repayment to Mrs. Guise of the 120*l.* and interest. At the time of this transaction the pauper resided in the parish of Glascombe, upon the tenement before mentioned. About a year afterwards, whilst residing in the tenement in Glascombe, he agreed verbally with his brother William Lloyd to sell to William all his interest in the leasehold tenement, in consideration of his paying the share of the pauper in the 120*l.* and all interest due and to grow due, and also of the sum of 2*l.* which was allowed to the pauper by William. About a year after making this agreement, the pauper removed into a cottage in the parish of Cregrina, and continued there till his removal under this order, but did not interfere with the leasehold tenement. In September, 1832, William Lloyd, on behalf of himself and his brothers James, John, and Septimus, gave Mrs. Guise notice of paying off the principal and interest on her mortgage. By an indenture dated 29th of April, 1833, John Lloyd, James Lloyd (the administrator), and Septimus Lloyd (the pauper), in consideration of 30*l.* expressed to be paid them by William Lloyd, released and assigned to him all their interest in the leasehold tenement. No money passed to the pauper; William Lloyd claiming and retaining his, the pauper's, share, under the bargain made three years before, and having received and retained the intermediate rents belonging to the pauper's fourth share. Lord Denman, C. J. "It appears to me that no interest whatever remained in the pauper after the agreement." Littledale and Williams, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Tarrant Launceston, 3 East, 226. Removal from Tarrant Launceston to Tarrant Rawson quashed. Case:—J. C., the pauper, in June, 1795, made a purchase for less than 30*l.* of a leasehold tenement in T. L. for 99 years, determinable on three lives, in consideration of 10*l.* advanced to him by W. D.; he afterwards sold the estate with the lease to W. D. to hold for the remainder of the term, in trust, to let the premises, receive the rents, and pay himself the 10*l.* with interest; and after such repayment to receive and pay the rents and profits to the wife of the pauper during her life, to her sole use, not subject to the debts of her husband, and her receipt alone to be a discharge of the rent; and after her decease, in case the pauper survived her, in trust to pay the rents to the pauper during his life; there were other trusts after the death of the survivor. After the execution of this deed, W. D. suffered the pauper to continue residing upon the premises, which he did till he became chargeable, when he was removed. It was urged, first, that the pauper took a new estate by act of law, by virtue of which a settlement might be acquired, either as mortgagor in possession, or by virtue of the equitable interest of his wife in it. Rex v. Edington (ante, 712,) was cited. Secondly, That as the trustee did not reject the pauper, the parish officers could not legally procure his removal from the property, in which he as well as his wife had a reversionary interest. Upon payment of the 10*l.* he was to reside on it immediately in the right of his wife. On the other side it was said that this was no mortgage; here the pauper was not entitled to any thing; he had no intermediate interest left in him. The pauper had assigned the whole term as a security for the 10*l.* and that was never repaid. He was no more than a tenant at sufferance. Neither was he entitled to reside there in right of his wife, supposing the 10*l.* to have been paid off, for the husband is by law bound to provide a suitable residence for his wife, and the house being then to be holden in trust for her separate use, the trustee would have been guilty of a breach of trust to have given it up to the husband, unless in the character of a tenant paying for it. Rex v. Edington was on the footing of a mortgage: for on payment of the money lent the premises were to be re-assigned to the party. The pauper's continuing in possession here was a fraud upon the trust. That there is no instance of a settlement gained by the act of the original purchaser of an estate under 30*l.* value. It must come to the party through whom the settlement is acquired by act of law. If the pauper had an equitable interest it was by his own act, and therefore he could not gain a settlement by it. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If this had been res integra, I should apply to the plain letter of the statute [he read 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 5, and said] that is for so long as there is an union of interest and occupation in the thing. We must not however contravene the authorities, but preserve uniformity of decision. This was not a residence of the pauper as mortgagor. He had parted with the absolute interest which he had in the premises. (a) For even when the 10*l.* is paid, (which non constat is ever likely to be done) the trustee is to account for the rents and profits to the wife for her separate use during her life; and I think there is much weight in the observation which was made against any claim of the husband to reside upon property so circumstanced in the right of his wife. In the first instance however, and during the time of his residence there, the trustee was entitled to the rents and profits till the 10*l.* advanced by him was paid; it was contingent whether that would ever be done, whether the wife would ever be entitled to the rents and profits; and if she became so, it was also contingent whether the pauper would survive her, so as to have any claim of his own. I should therefore be much inclined to ask with Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. St. Michael's, Bath (ante, 711), 'What interest had the pauper in this estate? He made an immediate conveyance to trustees, not a mortgage to pay off debts.' Upon the whole this was such a doubtful contingent interest in the pauper, that without clashing with any of the adjudged cases, I am authorized to say that no settlement was gained by the pauper's residence on this property." The other judges agreed, and the order of sessions was quashed.

Rex v. Dorstone, 1 East, 296. Removal of Mansell Powell with his wife from Dorstone to Blakemere quashed. Case:—The pauper went prior to November, 1778, to reside with his wife and family in Blakemere, upon a tenement which he rented there at 1*l.* 15*s.* per annum. On the 14th of the same November, and whilst the pauper resided at Blakemere, T. Matthews died intestate, seised of a freehold house and lands in Blakemere, which descended to the pauper's wife and her two sisters as coparceners, being the grandchildren and co-heirs of T. M. On the 14th December the pauper entered into an agreement to sell his wife's share of the house and lands to John Delahay, husband of one of her sisters. After the agreement was signed, the referees valued the pauper's wife's share of the premises at 28*l.* The deeds not being ready by the 2nd of February, the pauper complained, and Mr. Elliott, agent for Delahay, offered to pay him three months' rent for his wife's share of the premises if required; but the pauper did not require it; the deeds were executed and the money paid the latter end of February or beginning of March, 1779. From the 14th of November, 1778, when the grandfather died, to the execution of the deeds in the latter end of February or March following, the pauper resided in the tenement he rented at Blakemere, but did not occupy any part of the tenement which descended to his wife and her sisters; the house and gardens were in the occupation of Delahay and his wife, and the rest of the land was occupied by Mead, who had been tenant to the grandfather. A distinction was suggested between this case and Houghton-le-Spring (ante, 701), that here the title accrued on the 14th of November, and within less than forty days, viz. on the 14th of December, the pauper bound himself to convey away the property. The court however said, "That the contract was executory, and the conveyance was not actually executed till long after the forty days were expired, till when the title remained in the pauper, and consequently he gained a settlement in Blake-mere." Order of sessions quashed.

9. By Estate acquired by Possession.

Rex v. Wyley, 2 Sess. Ca. 115; 1 Stra. 608; 2 Bott, 610. A poor man built a cottage upon the waste of Wyley, belonging to Lord Pembroke, without his license, who never disturbed him; he lived in this cottage for thirty years, and by his will left three guineas in the hands of his executors to purchase this cottage. Upon his death, Elizabeth, his only child, entered into the cottage and married one Barrow, and lived in the cottage, and they were in quiet possession for three quarters of a year and then sold it. It was argued the cottager was a disseisor, and had no right to build upon the waste, and was at any time removable by the lord; and if he might have been removed within forty days, his long possession gave no title; for he must only be considered as a tenant at will, and consequently his continuance upon the cottage though never so long could give him no settlement; and if the cottager had no right of settlement, none claiming under him shall be in a better condition. The court held it clearly to be a settlement. And though it was objected that the cottager himself was sensible he had no right, by his devising money for the purchase of a term under the lord of the waste, yet it was over-ruled. And by all the court it was held, "that when a man hath such a possession as he cannot be removed from, and hath enjoyed that possession forty days, he thereby gains a settlement; and that is the reason why a copyholder or lessee for years gains a settlement by an inhabitaney for forty days: for in those cases the justices of the peace cannot determine his right. This present case is very strong; for the thirty years' possession of the cottager without interruption would have been a good title in an ejectment, and for that reason the justices of the peace cannot determine his title. It appears upon the face of the order that the cottager had a good title in ejectment and in any case but in a real action." Lord C. J. Raymond said, "He had known recoveries upon a twenty years' quiet possession, and twenty years' possession is a title to a plaintiff in ejectment as well as to a defendant. After so long a possession as this it shall be presumed that the cottager had a license to erect the cottage; but this case goes further; for besides the thirty years' quiet possession of the cottage, here is a descent cast upon the daughter, who was heir to the cottager, and prima facie it is an inheritance in the daughter; and an estate by disseisin is in law a good estate and a fee simple till it be defeated." The court held that the justices had no jurisdiction in this case, for they could not examine into the title to the land. And the settlement in Wyley was adjudged to be good.

Rex v. Bitton, Burr. S. C. 631; 2 Bott, 624. The pauper, G. Battman, built a cottage upon the waste without leave of the lady of the manor; was not rated nor paid any taxes; but continued nineteen years and a half in possession. About twenty years ago the pauper was turned out of possession of the cottage by an ejectment, brought by a person claiming the same under a mortgage thereof made by the pauper for 15*l.* And some time after that (which was more than twenty years ago) the pauper and the mortgagee sold the cottage to Williams for 28*l.*; and the pauper had 5*l.* of it. The court were all of opinion that it appeared to be a possession of more than twenty years. He was himself in possession nineteen years and a half; and the mortgagee's possession must be also considered as his possession. And it was adjudged a good settlement.

Rex v. Garway, Burr. S. C. 632; 2 Bott, 623. The pauper, about thirty-five or thirty-six years ago, went to live with his father in a cottage built upon the waste in the parish of A., where his father had then lived about thirty years, and who, soon after the pauper went to live with him, died. The pauper (as eldest son) continued in possession of the premises, and paid an acknowledgment of 2*s* 6*d.* to the lord of the manor for thirty years; but the pauper had no recollection of his father ever having paid an acknowledgment.

The premises were of the yearly value of 50s. The pauper was removed from A., which order was confirmed; but K. B. quashed both orders.

Rex v. Butterson, 6 T. R. 554. R. O. purchased a piece of land, and gave part of it (but without executing a conveyance) to his son in law J. H., who built a house upon it at an expense exceeding 100*l.*, and resided in it without paying any rent or acknowledgment to R. O. for fourteen or fifteen years, when he removed to another house in the same parish, and let the one he had built, and received the rent to the time of his death, which happened three years after. Upon the death of J. H. the pauper (his eldest son and heir) continued to receive the rent and had mortgaged the premises. No claim had been made or rent demanded by R. O. or his heirs. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "As twenty years have nearly elapsed since the time when this land was given to the pauper's father, and as no claim has ever since been made either on the pauper or his father, Rex v. Wyly (ante, 716) is an authority to show that the court ought not to permit the title to the estate to be determined on an order of removal. The strict rules to be observed on the trial of ejectment ought not to be applied to settlement cases. After such a length of time as this, perhaps a conveyance may be presumed to be executed. And in Rex v. Cold Ashton, where there had been a possession for nearly twenty years, Wilmot, J. said 'There ought not to be a nicety of computation in a settlement case, but the court may presume a conveyance.' And even if no conveyance were executed to the pauper's father, and a claim were now made by Oakden's heir at law, he would perhaps be told in a court of equity that as O. stood by while the pauper's father built on this land, and treated it as his own, he could only resume the possession on certain terms." Lawrence, J. "I remember a case where Lord Mansfield would not suffer a man to recover in ejectment, who had stood by and seen the defendant build on his lands."

Rex v. Calow, 3 M. & Sel. 22. The removal of B. Maskery, his wife and children, from Wirksworth to Calow, confirmed. Case:—A prima facie settlement in Calow being proved by relief given to the pauper's father about thirty years ago, it was proved in answer, that about the same period the grandfather of the pauper gave the pauper's father a piece of land in Wirksworth, upon which the father immediately built a house and lived in it with his family for several years. He then resided in a third parish for some years, during which time he let the house and received the rent for it. Ten years ago he returned to the house, and has resided in it ever since, and never paid any rent or acknowledgment for the house or land on which it stood. The pauper was a part of his father's family at the time the house was built, and continued so for about fifteen years afterwards, when he married, left his father's family, and never returned. The pauper's grandfather resided in Wirksworth from the time when the house was built until his death, about seven years ago, within a few yards of his son, during which time he received occasional relief from Calow. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It is true that the father, at the time when the son ceased to be a part of his family, had been in possession of the estate for fifteen years; but he was in under some title or other under which he has continued the possession for fifteen years more, and up to the present time; therefore, looking at the whole, we must infer a title in him at the former period. The subsequent possession reflects light back on the title under which he before held; and the court will presume that his possession originated under a title which would have prevented him from being dispossessed at the time when the son quitted his family." Bayley, J. "It cannot be said that the father was in without any pretence of title, for the case states that he had a gift of the land." Dampier, J. "The subsequent possession legalizes the former possession, and shows that it was of right." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Chew Magna, 10 B. & C. 747. Appeal against an order of justices, whereby J. Naish and wife were removed from Ubley to Chew Magna. Order confirmed. Case:—William Bath, about 1795, being seised in fee of a close of land in the parish of Ubley gave a small piece thereof by parol to his nephew James Naish, the pauper, whereon to build a cottage. Naish, who had no settlement in Ubley, took possession of the spot, and built his cottage, and inhabited it with his family. In October, 1800, while he so resided in Ubley, his wife and children became ill, and he applied to the overseers of that parish for relief, and received the same, and on their complaint an order for the removal of Naish, his wife and children, to the parish of Chew Magna, was made by two justices of the peace, and Naish was under that order removed and delivered to the overseers of Chew Magna, who relieved Naish from time to time. Naish slept in that parish for one night only, and the next day returned to the cottage in Ubley, from whence neither his wife or children, on account of their illness, had been removed. Naish continued to reside there till about 1810, when Bath told him that he had sold the ground to one Carpenter, and asked Naish to give him free possession, and to sell him his right. Naish was unwilling to do so; but before Naish said any thing, Bath proposed that Naish should receive 3*l.* for giving such possession, and should take away the materials of the cottage. Naish never paid Bath any acknowledgment. Bath paid the 3*l.* to Naish, and Naish pulled down the cottage, carried away the materials, and delivered possession to Carpenter. No writing passed on the occasion. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether the pauper James Naish gained a settlement in Ubley. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "There is no ground for contending that Carpenter's occupation is to be considered a continuance of the estate of Naish; and if that be so, there was no more than a possession for fifteen years. The adverse possession in the cases cited had continued for more than twenty years. There is no authority to show that a residence on an estate at will of a value less than 10*l.* per annum can confer a settlement." Bayley, J. "Undisturbed possession for twenty years confers an estate. It is evidence for a jury to presume a grant. Here there was only possession for fifteen years. It is said possession of Carpenter is possession of Naish. But Carpenter came into possession, not under Naish, but under his uncle Bath." Littledale, J. "I think that Naish was no more than a tenant at will to his uncle. There is no authority to show that a mere tenant at will can gain a settlement by residing upon an estate of less value than 10*l.* a year." Order of sessions confirmed.

The father of a pauper's wife mortgaged a cottage to the parish officers for one thousand years: he died; the pauper claimed the cottage, and resided there undisturbed by the parish for four years: as there was no fraud in his claim, he gained a settlement.

Rex v. Staplegrove, 2 B. & Ald. 527. The facts of the case are stated in the judgment delivered by Bayley, J. "In this case there were two questions, one, whether forty days' residence in a parish in which the pauper had a freehold subject to a lease for years, would be sufficient to confer a settlement by estate? and the other, whether it would be so if the residence were upon that estate and without right? Upon the first point it appeared to us to be settled, especially by Rex v. Houghton-le-Spring (ante, 701), that such residence is sufficient; and it was upon the second point only we wished time to consider. Upon that point the facts are these: the father of the pauper's wife had a freehold cottage in Creech; in 1795 he let it to the parish officers for 1000 years, and they took possession. In 1813 he was placed in it by the parish officers, and the pauper's wife came to nurse him. He died there that year, and his daughter continued in the cottage, and at the end of six weeks the pauper joined his wife, and laid claim to the cottage as his wife's property. The parish officers had mislaid the conveyance to them, and therefore could not withstand his claim, and the pauper and his family resided there from 1813 to 1818, when the pauper having become chargeable, and the officers having found the conveyance, they were removed, and the point submitted to us was, whether the pauper gained a settlement by this residence? We are of opinion that he did. The sessions have found no fraud in the pauper or his wife in acquiring or retaining possession; and if we were at liberty to infer fraud, which we are not, there are no premises from which such an inference could properly be drawn. The husband comes to the cottage under a claim of right, and for any thing which appears, he might really believe he had that right. The parish officers who alone can gainsay, do not gainsay it or take any steps to oppose his occupation, but acquiesce in it for more than four years. There is no decision under circumstances in any respect like the present. Rex v. St. Michael's, Bath (ante, 711), and Rex v. Catherington (ante, 712), were cases where the pauper had nothing which he had a colour for calling his own, and if not, we must look to the words of the statute whether this is within the mischief against which that statute meant to provide. The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, recites, &c. [here he read the recital and enactment, and added] is then the pauper within the words, the spirit, or the mischief of the provision? He comes to Creech, not for any of the motives this statute meant to repress, but because he has a freehold in the parish; not to prey upon the parish stock, but to live upon that of which he is the freeholder, and as to which he was warranted in concluding that he was entitled to the possession. This is not a case of fraud, nor a case in which the pauper is conscious at the time that he is taking the possession wrongfully, nor a case in which the person entitled to possession takes prompt measures to displace him. Leaving such cases to be decided when they arise, it is sufficient for us to say that in this case there does not appear to have been fraud or consciousness of wrong; and where no measures were taken within the forty days, or afterwards, to dispute the occupation, we are of opinion that the residence was sufficient."

Rex v. Wooburn, 10 B. & C. 846. Appeal against an order whereby Hannah Beal and family were removed from Wooburn to Chipping Wycombe. Order quashed. Case:—In the spring of 1800, Dennis Beal, the husband of the pauper Hannah Beal, and the father of the other paupers, being settled in the parish of Wooburn, inclosed a small piece of waste land from a common in the adjoining parish of Chipping Wycombe, and surrounded it by a bank, on which he planted a quick fence; he held and cultivated this land, subject to such interruption as after mentioned, until Christmas, 1827, when he sold it for 10*l.*, and conveyed it by deed to the purchaser. From the year 1800 to the year 1825, Dennis Beal resided out of the parish of Chipping Wycombe. In the year 1825 he removed to a cottage in that parish, but not on the land in question. In the year 1826 he built a hut on the said land, and was provided with straw to thatch it by one of the overseers of the parish of Wooburn, and up to the time of his building the hut he continued to receive relief from the parish officers of Wooburn. He lived in the hut a year and a half. In the years 1806, 1811, and 1817, the parish officers and freeholders perambulated the parish for the purpose of marking the boundaries and asserting their rights of common by throwing open encroachments on the waste. In the first year they pulled up a large portion of the fence to the said land inclosed by Beal, dug up part of the bank and rode through the inclosure. In the two subsequent years they made a large gap in the fence, and again rode through the inclosure with the same object. In the year 1820 or 1822, but to which of those years in particular the witness could not speak positively, a similar perambulation was made by direction of the lord of the manor, when similar acts were done for the like purposes. It did not appear that Dennis Beal was present on either of these occasions, nor did it appear that any acknowledgment was paid by him to the lord of the manor or any other person during his occupation of this inclosure, nor that either the commoners or the lord of the manor commenced any action or did any other act to assert their rights, except as before mentioned. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether, notwithstanding the interruptions before stated, Dennis Beal, by his occupation and residence upon the land in question, gained a settlement in Chipping Wycombe. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "There has been an adverse possession for twenty years, and the husband of the pauper gained a settlement by estate in Chipping Wycombe. The order of sessions must therefore be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Pensax, 3 B. & Ad. 815. Appeal against an order removing Mary Radford, widow, and her children, from Pensax to Martley. Order quashed. Case:—Mary Radford was the widow of John Radford, who was the illegitimate child of Hannah Radford. After his birth Hannah married William Yarnold, and they resided in Pensax, the child John Radford living with them. In the chapelry of Pensax there is much common or waste land, beneath which there is coal belonging to the lessees (under an old demise) of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, who are the lords of the manor. Yarnold was often relieved by the officers of Pensax, and they furnished him with materials necessary for the erection of a cottage upon the common, which he accordingly erected about thirty years ago, having for the purpose inclosed an acre of land of about 10*l.* in value. Sixteen years ago he gave part of the land which he had so inclosed to John Radford upon his marriage with the pauper Mary, and Radford then built a cottage upon it. No deed was made between them. After John Radford had taken possession of the cottage and land, he inclosed a small piece of land immediately adjoining (about 5*l.* in value) from the common, and the whole was afterwards thrown together by him. The copyholders (who are accustomed to break down the fences of encroachments once in seven years, to prevent persons inclosing from establishing a right,) twice broke down the fences between the common and the new land thus inclosed by John Radford. The fence between the old and the new inclosure had been previously removed. The persons rode in at one side of the land and out at the other side, but they did not pass over that part which had been given to Radford by William Yarnold. On one occasion the lessees of the minerals under the dean and chapter sunk a coal pit on the land last inclosed by Radford. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether John Radford ever had such an estate in the land given to him by William Yarnold, or inclosed by himself from the waste, as would give him a settlement in Pensax. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Tenterden, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court: "We think this case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Wooburn (10 B. & C. 846; ante, 719), and the pauper's husband consequently gained a settlement by estate in Pensax. The order of sessions must therefore be confirmed." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Axbridge, 4 Nev. & Man. 477; 1 Harr. R. 76. Appeal against an order, by which Richard Hooper was removed from Axbridge to Chapple Allerton. Order quashed. Case:—Lord Viscount Weymouth granted to one Martin a lease of a cottage in the parish of Cheddar for ninety years, determinable on three lives, at a rent of 4*d.*; and in 1784 the cetteur que vies in lease of 1732 being all dead, the then Lord Weymouth granted to Richard Gilling a lease of the same cottage, therein stated to have lately fallen into his lordship's hands, for a like term, determinable on three other lives, at the same rent. At that time Joseph Wolf, who was in possession under the lease of 1732, claimed to hold the cottage against Gilling, on the ground that one of the three lives in that lease was still in existence, which was not the fact; and he did so hold the same until his death, about twenty-three years ago. On his death his widow, Ann Wolf, retained possession of the cottage, and continued therein until her death in 1827. In 1826 she made a will, and told the person who made it for her she had heard the cottage was Mr. Gilling's. By the will she devised the cottage to her daughter Martha, the wife of Richard Hooper (the pauper), and her heirs, and appointed Martha Hooper her executrix and residuary legatee. The will was duly attested to pass real estate; but no probate thereof was obtained. On the death of Ann Wolf, Richard and Martha Hooper, who had been living with her in the cottage, kept possession of it, and lived there for three years; when Richard Hooper conveyed it, by feoffment and livery, to a purchaser in fee for 8*l.*, it being well worth 40*l.* with good title. No rent has ever been paid by Joseph Wolf, or those claiming under him; but Gilling and his representatives have paid the rent of 4*d.* to Lord Weymouth and his heirs to the present time. One of the cetteur que vies in the lease of 1784 is still living. The question is, whether Richard Hooper took such an interest or estate as (coupled with residence) conferred upon him a settlement in Cheddar. If he did, the order of sessions is to be confirmed; if not, the order to be quashed. Lord Denman, C. J. "The question is, whether there is any proof of adverse possession. I do not find it expressly stated, nor do I find any facts from which it can be properly inferred. A lease was granted in 1732 for three lives to Richard Martin. In 1784 it is supposed that the lives are at an end. A new lease is then granted to Gilling, and he pays the rent. Wolf claims to hold under the first lease, on the ground that one of the cetteur que vies is still living, and he does so hold; yet Gilling pays the rent during all that time to Lord Weymouth. It cannot be said that Wolf held under any other claim than this—that the first lease was in existence. Then his wife held the property. What proof is there that she held it adversely? I see none; and even if she had claimed to hold adversely, there was not sufficient length of time to create a title by adverse possession. There is no case which would warrant us in holding that the circumstances which occurred here amount to an adverse possession; and therefore I think that the order of sessions must be quashed.” Littledale, J. “I am of the same opinion. In 1784 Lord Weymouth (now the Marquess of Bath) granted a lease to Gilling. At that time Joseph Wolf was in possession. How he came in we do not know; but he claimed to hold the cottage under the first lease, on the ground that one of the cetteux que vies was alive. He did not set up any adverse claim. He must be presumed to have held under the lease to the time of his death. He left a widow, who continued the possession. It must be presumed that she continued the possession in the same way as Joseph Wolf had done before. She devises expressing that she had some doubts whether it did not belong to Gilling, (but we do not take any notice of that), and appointed her daughter executrix. If she had entered by abatement, and made a will of it, that would have been a different thing, but she does not do so. I do not consider that her daughter acquired any right to the fee simple. She appointed the daughter executrix; but the daughter took no interest in any term, for there was none actually existing, except that which was in Gilling, for the old lease was clearly gone in 1784. She could only claim in continuation of the estate which her mother had.” Williams, J. concurred. Order quashed.

2. Of Estates acquired otherwise than by Purchase, &c.

III. Of Estate by Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration, affected by 9 Geo. I. c. 7.

1. What is a Purchase within the Statute.
2. Of the Consideration paid.
3. Money laid out on Estate after Purchase.
4. Equitable Interest in Purchased Estate.

3. Of Estate by Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration, affected by 9 Geo. I. c. 7.

1. The Enactment in General; and what is a Purchase.

By the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 5, No person or persons shall be deemed, adjudged, or taken, to acquire or gain any settlement in any parish or place, for or by virtue of any purchase of any estate or interest in such parish or place, whereof the consideration for such purchase doth not amount to the sum of 30l. bona fide paid, for any longer or further time than such person or persons shall inhabit in such estate, and shall then be liable to be removed to such parish or place where such person or persons were last legally settled before the said purchase and inhabitancy therein.

Purchase money must be at least thirty pounds bona fide paid, or party gains a settlement only while he inhabits such estate.

As no settlement can be gained by such purchaser, except whilst he continues on the estate so purchased, he of course can communicate no settlement thereby to his children, for a derivative settlement must be founded on a perfect settlement existing in the person from whom it is derived.

It will also be seen that the terms of the act must be strictly observed, that is, the estate must be actually bought; a gift or license to possess will not suffice.

Rex v. Salford, Burr. S. C. 516; 1 Bla. Rep. 433. Peter White removed from Salford to Over-Norton. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper's father, in 1726, for 29l. purchased a tenement in Salford. The pauper was born there in 1730, and lived with his father therein till about 1754, when he married, and left his father's family, and lived in a separate tenement at Salford, without having gained any settlement but what he derived from his father. Lord Mansfield, C. J. delivered the resolution of the court. “We are of opinion that no settlement of the father was gained in Salford by the purchase, but only during the time of his inhabiting in the purchased premises. And this would have been equally the case if the act

Children residing with their father upon a tenement purchased by him for less than thirty pounds, gain no settlement.

3. By Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration.

A conveyance from a father to his daughter, in consideration of natural affection, without any pecuniary consideration, is not a purchase within the act.

What is a purchase.

Same point, where the grantee was residing under a certificate. See as to this, post, Certificate.

A conveyance from father to son, in consideration of natural affection, and of ten pounds, gains a settlement, where the real value of the estate exceeds ten pounds.

had never been made: for he could not have been removed from his own estate, though he had no settlement in the parish where it lay. So that the father's settlement (if it may be so called) in Salford, was only temporary, and did not extinguish his settlement at Over-Norton. And the only settlement which the son could derive from his father was at Over-Norton; for there could be no derivative settlement from the father at Salford, the father himself having no settlement there, but being only irremovable from his own estate. And this may be illustrated by a supposition, that the son had not resided in Salford, but had gone to live in a third parish, and had there been likely to become chargeable: and the question had arisen, whether he ought to be removed to Salford? He could not possibly in such case have been removed to Salford, because such removal would have been conclusive upon Salford, and he would remain settled there for ever. Which shows that he can have acquired no settlement in Salford by virtue of his father's purchase, even during the time of his father's residence upon it."

Rex v. Marwood, Burr. S. C. 386; 2 Bott, 615. Removal of T. Connibear, and Mary, his wife, from Kentisbury to Marwood, confirmed. Case:—Mary had conveyed to her by her father, in consideration of natural love and affection, a cottage, garden, and plat of ground, at Kentisbury, for the residue of a term of ninety-nine years, then determinable on the death of Joan Slocombe, the consideration of which purchase, originally, in the year 1689, amounted to 20s. Mary and her husband entered upon the premises, and continued thereon for several years, until the lease determined by the death of Joan, upon which they were removed from Kentisbury to Marwood. Ryder, C. J. "If I had any doubt I would not give an opinion now. This is not a 'purchase' within the meaning of the act. The word 'purchase' is not to be taken in the largest extent of it, but is confined to cases where a pecuniary consideration is paid. Otherwise, no devise, or gift, or settlement on marriage, would gain a settlement, unless there were a pecuniary consideration paid. The intention of the act was to prevent settlements by purchases for small money considerations. In the present case the husband is not to be considered as a purchaser, and therefore he acquired a settlement in Kentisbury." By the court unanimously, the orders quashed.

Rex v. Ingleton, Burr. S. C. 560; 2 Bott, 621. Richard Speddy, and Rose, his wife, residing under a certificate at Astwick, the father of Rose conveyed to her, in consideration of natural love and affection, a customary cottage at Astwick to the use of herself for life, remainder in fee to her daughter. The paupers entered upon, and continued in possession of, the cottage for sixteen years, and then purchased of their daughter her remainder in fee for 5*l.*, and sold the whole for twenty guineas. On the authority of Rex v. Marwood (supra) this was held to be clearly a voluntary settlement, and not a purchase within the intent of the statute.

Rex v. Ufton, 3 T. R. 251. John Henwood removed from Ufton to Mortimer. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper came to reside with his father, about twenty-three years ago, in a cottage at Mortimer, which in 1766 the father duly conveyed to him in fee, *in consideration of natural love and affection, and of 10*l.* to him paid* by the pauper. About three years after, the pauper obtained a certificate from Ufton, dated 1st of January, 1770, and afterwards occasionally received relief from Ufton during his residence at Mortimer; his father lived with him on the premises until his death, about eight years ago. The pauper was his eldest son and heir at law, and continued to reside upon the premises until 1788, when he sold the same for 50*l.*, and returned to Ufton. Lord Kenyon: "In Rex v. Marwood (supra) it was contended that a purchase, under 9 Geo. I., was to be understood as contradistinguished from descent, as in a former case on the subject, (Rex v. Sawbridgeworth). (a) But the court exploded that idea, and said that the legis-

(a) In that case (Burr. S. C. 56), the father of the pauper, being seised of a copyhold cottage in Aldbury, which let at 25*s.* a year, did, about a year and a half before the removal, surrender to the pauper and his heirs, who were admitted and lived upon it about a year and a half, and then sold for 14*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, being lature only intended to prevent persons who made small purchases for pecuniary considerations from gaining settlements, but that donations from a father to a child did not come within the statute. Now in this case we are bound to take notice that the conveyance was in consideration of natural love as well as 10*l.*, and we cannot suppose that 10*l.* was the real value of the estate, for there are circumstances to show the contrary, having been afterwards sold for 50*l.* This being a donation from a father to a son, is clearly not a purchase within 9 Geo. I. c. 7, notwithstanding part of the consideration was in money. And though the certificate was conclusive at the time, it was afterwards done away by the pauper's residence on his own property at Mortimer." Order of sessions reversed. (See Rex v. Lydlinch, 4 B. & Adol. 150; 1 Nev. & M. 33; Rex v. Piddlehinton, 3 B. & Adol. 460, ante, 575; Rex v. Hatfield Broad Oak, 3 B. & Adol. 566.)

Rex v. Warblington, 1 T. R. 241. Removal from Havant to Warblington. Order confirmed. Case:—William Bridger, father of the pauper, came to Havant with a certificate from Warblington. John Moody, lord of the manor of Havant, by copy of court-roll, in 1748, granted to William and his heirs, one parcel of waste ground, called the Gravel Pit, which did not appear ever to have been granted before. William built a house thereon, and lived therein for several years as owner; he afterwards borrowed 100*l.* of Mary Roper, and surrendered the premises for securing the same; and on the money not being paid, she was admitted in 1763. She sold her interest to John Hammond, who was admitted. After the death of William, his heir-at-law sold his equity of redemption to Hammond for 20*l.* 17*s.*, and surrendered the same. It appeared by the court books that William was admitted on the lord's grant to one parcel of land, called the Gravel Land, and in the copy of his admission were these words, "fine one shilling, heriot one shilling, quit-rent one shilling." Moody's steward proved that Mr. M. was used to grant small parcels of the wastes of the manor for small pecuniary considerations, but he never knew him make such grants without. The value of the land at the time of the grant did not exceed 30*s.* or 40*s.* and William was at that time a very poor man. It was not customary to express the consideration, if any, in the surrenders. It did not appear whether any pecuniary consideration was given for the grant, or it was voluntary and without any consideration: it further appeared that in the margin of all the copies was inserted, "*fine 1*s." Willes, J., said, "That the question was, whether this grant was a voluntary grant, or made for a valuable consideration? That the proof lay on the appellants to show it was a voluntary grant, for it was incumbent upon a certifying parish to get rid of the certificate: that if that could only be done by presumption, it must stand good, for that the court could not presume one way or the other. But if the court could presume either way, it must be that this was a purchase. That, however small the consideration, they would hold it to be a purchase: that this appeared to be a grant for a small pecuniary consideration, and therefore not a voluntary grant: and being a purchase under 30*l.* did not give a settlement since stat. 9 Geo. I. Supposing it true, that the fine (a) is a fee for alienation, that is no answer to the heriot and rent reserved: for if a person meant to make a free gift, he would not reserve a heriot or rent. As to the objection, that this land had never before been demised by copy, however defective the original grant might have been,

3. By Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration.

A conveyance for natural love and ten pounds to a son, the estate being worth more, is not a purchase.

A grant of waste land by a lord of a manor, under thirty pounds value, the fine being one shilling, heriot one shilling, and quit-rent one shilling, will not give a settlement.

the full value; it was urged that this estate was the pauper's own by a surrender from his father, and there was no difference between a surrender from a father and a descent. But the court denied it, without so much as making a rule to show cause. For they not only thought that the surrender looked fraudulent, but they said that the intent of the statute was to prevent persons gaining settlements who were any ways likely to be chargeable, and therefore provided that they should be able to lay out 30*l.* in a purchase. And both the orders were confirmed.

(a) It had been urged, that payment of a fine was proof of purchase, St. Paul's Walden v. Kempston, (post, 728,) and contra, Rex v. St. Mary, Whitechapel.

3. By Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration.

Where there is no custom for that purpose, the lord of a manor cannot make a new grant of copyhold; and if he does, the grantee acquires thereby no settlement by estate. And it was held that a grant by the lord of copyhold land, paying a yearly rent of two shillings and sixpence (which rent, in a subsequent part, was called a quit-rent), is a purchase within 9 Geo. I. c. 7, and being under thirty pounds, confers no settlement.

Grant of a license from the lord of a manor to erect a cottage, rendering an annual rent of ten shillings and sixpence as quit-rent, and also a license to inclose a piece of ground for a garden to said cottage, and building a cottage thereon and residing in it a year and a half: Held to be a mere license, and not a grant of any interest in land, and conferred no settlement.

License by lord not a purchase.

there has been so long a possession that the presumption is strong that it was good." Ashhurst, J., said, "That a purchase was the acquisition of something for an equivalent: a quid pro quo. And that was so in this case."

Rex v. Hornchurch, 2 B. & A. 189. Removal from Hornchurch to Purleigh. Order quashed. Case:—By grant, May 13, 1799, James Thurtell, the father of the pauper, obtained from the lord of the manor a piece of the waste in Purleigh, where he built three cottages. The grant was, "To this court came J. T. and S. his wife, and prayed to be admitted tenant to all that parcel of land, being part of the waste of this manor, containing about half a rood, with the cottage thereon, lately built, paying to the lord the yearly rent of 2s. 6d., to whom the lord, with the consent of the homage, granted and delivered seisin, to hold unto J. T. and his wife, and to the heirs of the survivor, at the will of the lord, according to the custom of said manor, at the yearly quit-rent aforesaid and by suit of court; and he giveth to the lord for fine for his admission nothing, of the special favour of the lord, and so, saving all right of the lord, he is admitted tenant." Abbott, C. J., "I think that this grant was not a valid conveyance of the copyhold estate, because there is no custom stated for the lord to make a new grant of copyhold within this manor. Unless that custom exists, there can be no copyhold except where the land has been at all times demised or demisable by copy of court-roll. The lord therefore had no right to make this grant. But even if the grant were good, I should still think that this case fell within the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, for here the land was originally demised for a mere money consideration to be paid annually, and the sum stated in the case was a full consideration for all that the lord granted at the time. I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. Warblington (ante, 723), which must govern our present decision. Then if the case falls within 9 Geo. I. c. 7, it is clear that the consideration was less than 30*l.*, the sum required by the act." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Horndon-on-the-Hill, 4 M. & Sel. 562. Removal from Orsett to Horndon-on-the-Hill. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper applied to the lord of the manor for license to erect a cottage on the waste in Orsett. In the court rolls was this entry: "Manor of Orsett, 9th November, 1805. At a general court baron, the lord of the manor granted license to Benjamin Brad to erect a cottage on a piece of land, containing one rood, in the lane leading &c., rendering an annual rent of 10s. 6d. at Michaelmas in every year, as a quit-rent for the same." No other consideration was paid. The pauper erected a cottage at an expense of more than 30*l.* on the piece of ground, and some months afterwards applied to the lord for a piece of ground for a garden. As to that, this entry was made: "24th March, 1806, (reciting the former entry); at this court the lord of the manor granted license to B. Brad to inclose a piece of ground for a garden adjoining the cottage, containing ——— roods." No consideration was paid for this piece of ground, and both were parts of the waste of the manor, and their value did not exceed 5*l.* After the building of the cottage, the pauper resided on the premises about a year and a half, and then sold them to one Robinson, of which the following entry was made in the court rolls: "3rd June, 1809, (reciting the grant of the first license and the grant of the second), it was at this court presented that the said B. Brad had erected the cottage, and inclosed the ground, and had sold it unto Robinson for 40*l.*, whereby happened to the lord an alienation fine of one guinea, which had been paid." Robinson sold the premises to Bonham, of which the following entry was made: "7th June, 1813. At a general court baron then held, the homage presented that since the last court, Henry Bonham, esq. purchased of Wm. Robinson a cottage erected on the waste by B. Brad, and also a garden adjoining, granted by the lord, whereby there happened to the lord an alienation fine, which has been paid." None of these entries were stamped, and this was the only evidence of title produced. There was no evidence that these two pieces of waste land, or either of them, had ever been demised by copy of court-roll, or that there was within the manor any custom to create copyholds, or to grant any part of the waste thereof to hold as in the nature of copyhold. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "A license is not a grant, but may be recalled immediately; and so might this license the day after it was granted. We cannot take into our consideration what it may be conjectured a court of equity would determine in this case. Perhaps a court of equity might interfere, but can we say with certainty that it would? We ought to see that the party has clearly an equitable interest, and not merely such a claim as might possibly induce a court of equity to interpose in some way or other. This was a mere personal license, and not a grant by copy of parcel of the land, as Rex v. Warblington (ante, 723.) Here the pauper never had a more perfect estate than the license gave him, that is, a permission to occupy." Bayley, J. "We cannot know how a court of equity would deal with this case; probably the utmost that it would do would be to grant an injunction, if an ejectment was brought. But here is no grant of any interest in land; I cannot say that the pauper took any estate; and therefore this would be a new species of settlement." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Hagworthingham, 1 B. & C. 634; 3 D. & R. 16; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 476. Order of removal of E. Turner from Stainton to Hagworthingham confirmed. Case:—In 1798, the commissioners for the inclosure of Hagworthingham, by their award allotted to the Earl of Manvers, as lord of the manor, an allotment, as compensation for his right in the soil of the waste lands. In 1809, Goodwyn applied to Lord Manvers for leave to build a house upon the waste in Hagworthingham. Lord Manvers gave him liberty in writing. Goodwyn built on the waste by the road side, in the same year, a blacksmith's shop, which two years afterwards he sold to Bayley, who sold it to the pauper for 30*l.* No deed of conveyance was executed to the pauper. The pauper converted the shop into a dwelling-house, where he resided during five years, and then sold it to Wright for 34*l.* The pauper continued to live therein, as tenant to Wright, for two years longer. During the five years that the pauper resided in the house as owner, he paid 1*s.* a year to Lord Manvers as lord of the manor. The surveyor of the highways once demanded this 1*s.* to be paid to him, but it was never so paid. On the pauper quitting the house, Wright went to live there, and it is let by Wright to a tenant for 2*l.* 18*s.* a year at the present time. No adverse claim has ever been made. Abbott, C. J., delivered judgment. "It was contended, that this was a settlement obtained by purchase of an estate or interest in the parish for a consideration of 30*l.* paid. Some discussion arose as to the nature of the estate or interest, by the purchase whereof a settlement may be acquired. But we think the enquiry into that point unnecessary in this case; because upon the facts stated, and on the authority of Rex v. Horndon-on-the-Hill (ante, 724), we think there has been no purchase of an estate or interest of which we can take notice. The pauper after his purchase paid 1*s.* a year to Lord Manvers, but no such payment appears to have been made either by Bayley or by Goodwyn; therefore although the pauper might in consequence of this payment have acquired the character of a tenant from year to year, yet there is nothing to give that character either to Bayley or Goodwyn, and the matter purchased by the pauper is the same as in the case referred to. It was there decided, that a license to occupy does not operate as a grant, nor confer any legal title; and as to equitable right or title, the observations made by Lord Ellenborough are unanswerable: 'We cannot take into our consideration what it may be conjectured a court of equity would determine in this case. Perhaps a court of equity might interfere, but can we say with certainty that it would? We ought to see that the party has clearly an equitable interest, and not merely such a claim as might possibly induce a court of equity to interpose in some way or other.' Upon the ground therefore that this was not a purchase of any estate or interest in the land or building, we are of opinion that no settlement was gained." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Martley, 5 East, 40. Removal from Doddenham to Martley confirmed. Case:—On the 25th of November, 1754, the dean and chapter of Worcester granted to H. B., the grandfather of the pauper, a lease for lives of a cottage and garden, at the yearly rent of 2*s.* 6*d.* At his death, leaving no will, he was succeeded in possession by his son William, (the pauper's father,) who afterwards died leaving a will, devising the premises to his wife

3. By Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration.

A. built a house on the waste of a manor by license from the lord, resided in it two years, and then sold it to B. The latter sold it to C. for thirty pounds, but no conveyance was executed. C. resided in it five years, and paid one shilling per annum rent to the lord, and then sold his interest. No adverse claim was made: Held, that C. did not acquire by purchase an interest or estate sufficient to confer a settlement within the statute.

for life, remainder to W. B. the pauper. The pauper came at the end of two years to reside with his mother on the premises till he married, (February 2, 1790), when she demised to him the premises at a yearly rent, and went to reside elsewhere, leaving the pauper in the sole occupation. On the 27th August, 1795, the second life died. On the 13th of July, 1798, the mother of the pauper, who was tenant for life under the will of the pauper's father, died. The pauper continued in possession till November 26th, when on payment of a fine of two guineas, a new lease was granted to the pauper at a new rent of 1s., for three new lives, still existing. At this time the lives in the first lease were all extinct. The pauper's residence on the premises continued till the time of the removal. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "That there would be difficulty in deciding that this was a purchase under 30*l.* within the statute: but he asked how, admitting that, and presuming the third life under the first lease to be extinct, (she not having been heard of for thirty years), this order removing the pauper from his own estate could be supported?" To this it was answered, that where a man applies for relief, he must be taken to consent to all things necessary to afford him that relief in the due course of law, and consequently to an order of removal to his last legal settlement. But the court held that such a person was altogether irremovable, whilst he resided on his own estate.

2. Of the Consideration Paid.

2. Of the Consideration Paid. (a)

The consideration for the purchase must amount to "*the sum of 30*l.* bonâ fide paid.*"

Where the purchase money mentioned in the deeds was twenty-eight pounds, but the sum bonâ fide paid was thirty pounds, a settlement is acquired.

Rex v. Scammonden, 3 T. R. 474. Removal from Scammonden to Soyland. Case:—The pauper agreed with Harrison for the purchase of an estate in Rishworth for 28*l.*, and the consideration mentioned in the deeds and in the receipt indorsed was 28*l.*, but by parol evidence it was proved, that before the deeds were executed the vendor declared that as the agreement was not in writing he was not bound by it, and having since had 30*l.* offered for the estate he would not take less, nor would he execute the deeds unless the purchase-money were made up that sum. Upon which the pauper advanced 1*l.* 15*s.* more, which, with 5*s.* owing from Harrison to the pauper, it was insisted made up the sum of 30*l.*, but the deeds were not altered, and the consideration therein mentioned was left according to the original agreement, viz. 28*l.* The sessions were of opinion, that no parol evidence could be given (b) to contradict the consideration mentioned in the deeds. The estate purchased was the estate of Harrison's wife: and there was a covenant from Harrison that he and his wife would levy a fine at the cost of the pauper; towards the expense of which the pauper left in the hands of his attorney four guineas. The pauper resided above three months upon the premises, and afterwards sold them to his brother. To this conveyance Harrison and his wife were parties; and it recited the covenant to levy a fine; but as such a fine had not then been levied, it was agreed that instead thereof, Harrison and his wife should acknowledge and levy a fine of the premises unto the brother in fee, which was in 1787 levied; part of the expense whereof was discharged by the four guineas so left in the hands of the attorney by the pauper, and the other part was paid by the brother. And the sessions being of opinion that the four guineas was to be considered as part of the consideration under the act, and that the pauper by such purchase gained a settlement, discharged the order. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "It was clear that the party might prove other considerations than those expressed in the deed. It is permitted in all cases of covenants to stand seised to uses. And in Filmer v. Gott (7 Brown's Parl. Cases, 70), where the considerations mentioned in the deed were 10,000*l.* and natural love and affection, the lords commissioners of the great seal directed an issue to try whether natural love and affection formed any part of the consideration, the estates being worth near 30,000*l.* On an appeal to the House of Lords this was confirmed; and the jury on the trial of the issue finding that natural love and affection constituted no part of the consideration, the deed was afterwards set aside by the Lord Chancellor." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Cheadle, 3 Bar. & Adol. 833. Appeal against an order whereby W. Smith and family were removed from Cheadle to Scropton and Foston. Order quashed. Case:—The settlement of the pauper, W. Smith, at the time of his marriage in 1808, was in the appellant township of Scropton and Foston. The appellants, in order to establish a subsequent settlement by estate in Cheadle, the respondent parish, proved that John James, the father of the pauper's wife, had been seised in fee of a house and some land in Cheadle, on which he resided with his family (a wife and five children), and of which he continued in possession till 1807, when he died intestate, leaving his eldest son Simon James his heir at law. It had been agreed in the lifetime of John James, by all the members of the family, including Simon James, that the four younger children (of whom the pauper's wife was one) should have a parcel of the said land allotted to each of them, in order that they might build houses thereon respectively, when they could raise the money. In pursuance of this agreement, a portion of the land was staked out for the pauper to build on a short time after his marriage, and he built a cottage thereon upwards of twenty-one years since, in which he resided sixteen or seventeen years, and then sold it for 60*l.* to one John Higgs, who still has it. The land so staked out was a small plot, about four yards by six or seven, and the full value of it in fee before the cottage was built was two guineas or two guineas and a half. When the cottage was built, Simon James (the eldest son of John), who lived within a few yards, assisted the pauper in staking out the land, and in doing some of the work at the foundation. On the part of the respondents, indentures of lease and release of the 6th and 7th of January, 1815, were produced and proved, for the purpose of showing that this land had been purchased by the pauper for a money consideration not amounting to 30*l.* The release was between Simon James (therein described as eldest son and heir at law of John James deceased) of the first part, William Smith, the pauper, of the second part, and John Moreton (therein described as a trustee nominated by and on behalf of the said William Smith) of the third part; and after reciting, that "the said William Smith some time since agreed to purchase from the said Simon James the plot or parcel of land thereafter mentioned, and had paid the said Simon James the sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* as consideration for the same, and lately erected a dwelling-house thereon, but no conveyance thereof had yet been made," it was witnessed, that for and in consideration of 2*l.* 2*s.* to the said Simon James in hand paid by the said William Smith at or before the sealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof Simon James did thereby acknowledge, and thereof did acquit and for ever discharge the said William Smith, his heirs, &c.; he the said Simon James did grant, bargain, &c. the said plot of land, and the said house erected thereon, to the pauper, his heirs and assigns, &c. Each of these deeds was stamped with a 15*s.* stamp. The evidence of the pauper, and also of one Jeremiah Robinson (who was not a party to the deed), was then tendered on the part of the appellants, and objected to on the other side, but received by the court, to show that the consideration stated in the deed was not paid, nor intended by the parties to be paid; and that the deed was only made for the purpose of confirming the pauper's title to the plot of land which had been allotted to him shortly after his marriage, under the parol arrangement between John James and his children. The sessions found that the consideration mentioned in the deed was not paid, nor intended to be paid. The questions for the opinion of this court were, 1st, whether the last mentioned evidence was properly admitted? and if it was, then, 2dly, whether on all the facts of the case, the pauper acquired a settlement in the respondent parish? Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think a settlement was gained in Cheadle. The appellants proved that John James, the father of the pauper's wife, being seised in fee of a house and land in Cheadle, and having several children, it was agreed among them in Recital in a conveyance that the pauper had agreed to purchase the above parcel of land of S. J. and had paid him two guineas for the same, but no conveyance thereof had yet been made; and then expressed that in consideration of that sum S. J. bargained and sold, &c. : Held, that the appellants were not estopped by the recital of this deed from giving parol evidence, that the consideration stated in the deed was never paid or intended to be paid, and that the deed was made for the purpose of confirming the pauper's title to the land allotted to him in virtue of the above-mentioned parol agreement, and that consequently he gained a settlement.

his lifetime that a part of the land should be allotted to each of them. One of the children married the pauper in 1808, and soon after, in pursuance of the agreement, a portion of the land was staked out, upon which the pauper built a house, and after residing there seventeen years he sold the house for 60*l.* There having been twenty years' possession, the case thus far showed such an estate as gave the pauper a settlement. To avoid this settlement by estate, the parish officers of Cheadle proposed to show, by the deed of 1815, that the pauper's title to it accrued by a purchase for a money consideration not amounting to 30*l.* That deed recited, that Smith had agreed to purchase the land for the consideration of two guineas. The other parish alleged in answer that the recital was not true, and that the real consideration was not a money consideration; and they gave evidence that the two guineas were not paid, or intended to be paid, and that the only object of the parties in executing this deed was to confirm the pauper's title. The objection is, that evidence to contradict the statement of the consideration in the deed ought not to have been admitted. Now, the parties to the deed might be estopped by it from saying that this was not a purchase for a money consideration; but the parish officers, who were strangers to it, are not. If that were otherwise, the greatest inconvenience and injustice might arise, because a settlement might be acquired or not according to the language used by parties in an instrument of this nature. The evidence was, in my opinion, properly received, as showing, not that the deed was void, but that this was not a purchase for a money consideration." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "It is quite clear, that although the parties to this deed were estopped by it, strangers were not, and consequently the parish officers might show the real nature of the transaction. If this were not so, parishes might be burthened with settlements for which there was no colour. It is clear that a settlement was gained in this case by an estate voluntarily conveyed to the pauper." Taunton, J. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

A purchase of thirty pounds, part of which was paid by the parish officers of another parish, is not taken to be fraudulent, unless so stated.

The expenses of the surrender of a copyhold estate, paid by the purchaser to his attorney, are not part of the consideration.

The fine to the lord is a part of the consideration.

St. Paul's Warden v. Kempton, Fol. 238. Case:—A person purchased a copyhold tenement in St. Paul's Warden, which, with the fine and fees paid to the court, amounted to 30*l.*; and it appeared by the same order, that the officers of the parish of Kempton had given him 40*s.* towards paying his fine and fees. It was insisted that this was fraudulent and not a good purchase. But by the whole court: "We cannot take notice of its being fraudulent, unless the justices had adjudged it so."

Rex v. Cottingham, 7 B. & C. 603; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 137. Order of removal of W. Hardy from Bishop-Burton to Cottingham confirmed. Case:—In 1813, Hardy, the father of the pauper, agreed with E. Page for the purchase of a copyhold cottage at Bishop-Burton. It was agreed that Hardy should pay 22*l.* and all the expenses attending the sale. Upon these terms the purchase was made. In 1813, the cottage was surrendered to Hardy the father; in 1814 he was duly admitted, and has ever since continued to reside in it. The amount paid was 22*l.* to the vendor; 3*l.* 10*s.* the fine to the lord of the manor; 1*l.* 13*s.* to the steward of the manor for his admission copy; and 6*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* to Hardy's attorney, for the expenses of the surrender; making a total of 33*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* Bayley, J. "This case admits of no doubt. The question is, what was the consideration for the purchase bonâ fide paid within the act? I think the sum given to the seller for his interest in the land, and to other persons whose concurrence was necessary to make the sale valid and effectual, was the consideration for the purchase. The fine paid to the lord and the fees paid to the steward, in my opinion, form part of the consideration. But the sums paid to the vendor, the lord, and steward, do not amount to 30*l.* The expenses of the surrender paid by the purchaser to his own attorney, were no part of the consideration for the purchase. The cases cited are distinguishable from the present. In Rex v. Scammonden (ante, 726) the purchaser paid 30*l.*; for he paid the expenses of levying a fine, which it was necessary for the seller to levy to complete the title, and which he ought to have paid for, if the purchaser had not agreed to pay. In St. Paul's Warden v. Kempton (supra), 30*l.* was paid, including the fine to the lord and the fee to the steward." Littledale, J. "I think the consideration for the purchase was the sums paid to the seller and to the lord. The lord has an interest in the land, and the fine may be considered as paid to him for the purchase of part of his interest in it. I doubt whether the fee to the steward can be considered as part of the consideration for the purchase. The steward has no interest in the land. But it is unnecessary to decide that, because the money paid to the seller, the lord, and the steward, does not amount to 30*l*." (a)

Rex v. Tedford, Burr. S. C. 57; 2 Bott, 666. Removal from Waddingham to Tedford. Case, laid down before the judge of assize:—Francis Gill contracted with John Atkinson for a house in Waddingham for 39*l*., which was conveyed to Gill and his heirs. Gill paid 9*l*., and Isaac Bristol paid the remaining 30*l*., to Atkinson, by Gill's order. Conveyance, dated May 2, executed May 19, 1730. June 18, 1730, Gill mortgaged the premises to Bristol. Gill continued in possession about four years after the mortgage. Then Bristol entered, by virtue of the mortgage and release of the equity of redemption. The order of sessions recites, that whereas the judges of assize had not time to hear it, and whereas the parties agreed this to be the true state of the case; therefore, upon hearing counsel and further evidence on both sides, this court doth adjudge that the purchase made by Gill was fraudulent; but that the appellants are no ways concerned in the fraud. By Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "This case doth not appear to be within the act; for the act is confined to purchases under 30*l*. bonâ fide paid. Now the consideration was 39*l*. and bonâ fide paid to the vendor. And it would be pretty hard to say that the justices had a power upon this act to inquire whether or no the purchaser borrowed the money. It is a common case to borrow money to make up the price. And as to the fraud, it is true that the justices are the proper judges of fraud. But fraud is a fact which must be found. It must be so by a jury upon a special verdict. The residing four years is a very material circumstance in this case: it is frequent for persons to purchase, having no ready money to do so. It does not appear how much, or that any of the purchase-money was borrowed. The justices are judges of the fact; and they may judge of the fraud arising from the fact. If they had generally found the fraud, we might have been bound by such general finding; but when they state the facts particularly, the matter is as much open for our determination upon it as it was for theirs." And the whole court was of opinion that here was no sufficient evidence of fraud. Orders quashed.

Rex v. Chailey, 6 T. R. 755. W. Shaw removed from Chailey to Newick. Order quashed. Case:—In November, 1786, Shaw agreed to purchase a copyhold messuage in Chailey of R. Hale, (by whom it had been mortgaged to R. Coppard to secure 50*l*.,) and to pay for Hale's interest therein 10*l*. The pauper paid Hale 10*l*., who, on the 4th November, 1786, surrendered the premises to the pauper, subject to the conditional surrender made to Coppard for securing 50*l*. In May, 1790, the pauper agreed with J. Heath to borrow of him 50*l*. on security of the estate, in order to pay off the mortgage to Coppard; and on the 8th of May the conditional surrender to Coppard was discharged. On the same day the pauper made a conditional surrender of the premises to Heath, for securing the re-payment of 50*l*. which Heath had advanced to discharge the mortgage to Coppard. On the 4th November, 1795, the pauper sold the estate for 80*l*., being 30*l*. beyond the amount of the mortgage. The pauper resided in the cottage from the time of his purchase until the re-sale. By Lord Kenyon, C. J. "By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, no settlement can be gained by residing on a tenement that is purchased for less than 30*l*.; but it was decided in Rex v. Tedford (supra), that though the party cannot pay the money out of his own fund, if he can borrow it on credit that is sufficient to satisfy the words of the statute. It has been argued, that this was only an assignment of the original mortgage from the first to the

3. By Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration.

Purchase for thirty-nine pounds, though thirty pounds thereof was borrowed on mortgage of the premises, gains a settlement.

Purchase of a cottage for sixty pounds, which was then mortgaged for fifty pounds, and payment afterwards of that fifty pounds, by means of borrowing the same, will gain a settlement, though the estate be mortgaged for the fifty pounds the same day.

(a) In the report of this case, in 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca., Littledale, J. is reported to have said, "that the fee of the steward is part of the consideration." This is at variance with the above report, and with a MS. note of this case in possession of the Editor. In the case as reported in 1 M. & R. 439, it is merely stated, "Littledale, J. concurred," Holroyd, J. was absent.

3. By Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration.

Purchase for thirty-nine pounds seventeen shillings and sixpence, the premises being then mortgaged for thirty-two pounds, which was never paid, is a purchase only for seven pounds seventeen shillings and sixpence bonâ fide paid, and confers no settlement.

second mortgagee, and that the mortgage interest never was in the pauper: and to be sure if that interest never were in the pauper, it would be difficult to say that it conferred a settlement on him. Then it was said, that though the mortgage interest did pass through the pauper, it was merely the mode of transferring a copyhold interest from one person to another, and that this interest did not vest in the pauper; but the latter part of the proposition is not true; the estate did not pass immediately from the first to the second mortgagee; there was an interval, though a short one, in which the estate was vested in the pauper, and he conveyed it to the second mortgagee. An attempt, however, was made to distinguish this case from Rex v. Tedford, by saying, that there the legal estate was in the pauper for a longer period than in the present case, but that cannot furnish any real ground of distinction. If this had been a freehold estate, every judgment signed against the pauper, and properly docketed, would have attached on this estate. Although when I first read this case I hesitated whether this could confer a settlement on the pauper, yet, on consideration, I think it is more safe to support the decision of Rex v. Tedford, from which I think this cannot fairly be distinguished, and which has been adopted in subsequent cases, than to introduce nice and artificial distinctions." Order of sessions affirmed.

Rex v. Mattingley, 2 T. R. 12. Removal from Mattingley to Heckfield. Order quashed. Case:—On the 18th June, 1769, the pauper came to Mattingley with a certificate from Heckfield, and lived there till the removal. Previous to August, 1780, he contracted with John Ironmonger for the purchase of a copyhold tenement at Mattingley, which had been mortgaged to T. Bailey for 32*l.* which money was unpaid at the time of making the contract; the pauper was to pay 39*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* for the tenement, which was inclusive of the 32*l.* due on the mortgage, and the pauper paid to Ironmonger 7*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* which with 32*l.* to be paid to Bailey, made the sum of 39*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* On the 3rd of August, 1780, the pauper was admitted on the surrender of Ironmonger, subject to a mortgage surrender to Bailey, and the pauper entered and continued in possession for four years, during which he paid Bailey two years interest, which was all the interest Bailey received after the purchase. He never paid off the mortgage money: and in 1784 delivered up the possession. Ashhurst, J. said, "The only question was, whether the purchase made by the pauper was in fact of the value of 30*l.*? The pauper only purchased the interest of the mortgagor subject to the mortgage. Now the estate was mortgaged for 32*l.*; therefore the mortgagor's interest subject to that was only 7*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, which was the whole of the pauper's purchase. The estate having been mortgaged for 32*l.* the instant the mortgagee got into possession he might have gained a settlement upon it; if so, the mortgagee was a purchaser for 32*l.*, and the pauper only purchased subject to that charge. In the Tedford case (ante, 729) it was only decided that if a man purchased an estate for 30*l.* bonâ fide paid, the court would not enquire how the purchaser came by the money, but here the purchaser did not bonâ fide pay 30*l.*; and that circumstance distinguishes this case from Rex v. Tedford. If the pauper, previous to the contract for purchase, had given the mortgagee a personal security for the mortgage money, then he would first have bought an estate for 30*l.*, though part of the purchase money would have been borrowed on mortgage; then the statute would have been satisfied, and the pauper have gained a settlement." Grose, J. "It is to be observed that the statute does not give a settlement to a man purchasing an estate of the value of 30*l.* It has been argued, that if the vendor has been satisfied with 30*l.* it is a purchase. But that is not the true construction of the act; for the question must be, whether the purchaser is able to pay, or has bonâ fide paid, 30*l.* I agree that if the purchase money has been bonâ fide paid, the court would not have enquired how the purchaser came by the money, nor whether he mortgaged the estate for the payment of it: that might be a question of fraud for the consideration of the sessions: and if fraudulent, no settlement could be gained. In order to constitute a purchase within 9 Geo. I., the sum of 30*l.* must not only be paid in point of fact, but must be also bonâ fide paid." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Olney. 1 M. & S. 387. Order of removal of Richard Mayes from Olney to Earl's Barton, discharged. Case:—The pauper came to Olney by a certificate, dated July, 1788, directed to that parish from Earl's Barton. Whilst the pauper was residing in Olney under the certificate, about September, 1800, and some time prior to the feoffment hereinafter mentioned, he agreed with Michael Hinde to purchase a messuage of him in Olney at 52*l.*, if Hinde would allow 40*l.*, part of the 52*l.*, to remain upon mortgage, to which Hinde consented; by a deed of feoffment of the 8th of October, 1800, Hinde, in consideration of 52*l.* therein mentioned to be paid by the pauper, conveyed to him the messuage in fee; and upon the deed there was indorsed a receipt for 52*l.*, but in fact only 12*l.* were paid to Hinde, and the remaining 40*l.* was secured to him by a mortgage, bearing date the 9th of October, 1800, by which the pauper pursuant to the agreement demised the messuage to Hinde for 1000 years, in consideration of 40*l.* in the deed of mortgage mentioned to have been paid by Hinde to the pauper; and there was a proviso for the deed's becoming void upon payment of 40*l.*, with interest. The feoffment and deed of mortgage were both executed at the same time, and remained together with the title deeds in the custody of Hinde. The pauper immediately entered into possession, and continued to reside there, and paid the interest upon the 40*l.* to Hinde, until the execution of the deeds hereinafter mentioned, but during such time never had the ability to pay off the principal. About a month before the 12th of June, 1812, the pauper agreed with Thomas Bowden to sell to him the messuage, in consideration of 60*l.*, and soon afterwards Bowden paid to Hinde the 40*l.* in discharge of his mortgage, and in part of his (Bowden's) purchase money, and received from Hinde the title deeds, together with the feoffment and mortgage. Afterwards, by indorsement on the indenture of mortgage, bearing date the 12th of June, 1812, Hinde, in consideration of 40*l.* to him therein mentioned to be paid by the pauper, assigned the 1000 years to the pauper, and by deeds of lease and release, dated the 12th and 13th of June, 1812, the pauper conveyed the messuage to Bowden in fee for 60*l.*: and 20*l.*, being the balance of the purchase money, were then paid by Bowden to the pauper. The indorsement and indentures of lease and release were all executed at the same time. It was urged that when the mortgage was ultimately discharged on June 12, 1812, it became a bona fide payment of the whole sum. But Bayley, J. observed that "the pauper did not reside forty days after that time." Grose, J. (Lord Ellenborough, C. J. absente.) "The question is, whether this was a purchase for 30*l.* bona fide paid, so as to satisfy the stat. 9 Geo. I. where the purchase was contracted for upon security to be given for part of the purchase money and such part never paid by the purchaser? The case in substance states that the premises were mortgaged for 40*l.* of the purchase money, and that that money was not paid. But I think that the consideration must be bona fide paid at the time of the purchase, in order to satisfy the statute. Then it is clear that this was not the purchase of an estate for 30*l.* paid at the time, the consideration money having remained upon security." Le Blanc, J. "The 9 Geo. I. enacts, that no person shall gain a settlement by virtue of any purchase of any estate whereof the consideration doth not amount to 30*l.* bona fide paid. The question arises on the purchase. The purchase money amounted to 52*l.* of which 12*l.* only were paid at the time, the rest was left on mortgage to the vendor. That circumstance distinguishes it from the cases cited, where the party purchasing paid the whole money to the vendor by borrowing a part aliunde, so that there he had credit to borrow of others. In Rex v. Mattingley (ante, 370) it was held, where the purchaser contracted for the purchase of a copyhold estate for 39*l.* which was mortgaged for 32*l.* and paid only 7*l.* and was admitted subject to the mortgage, that it was not a purchase for 30*l.* bona fide paid, so as to take it out of the statute. That is a direct authority on this part of the case. But it has been argued upon a supposed difference, inasmuch as the purchase money was ultimately paid in the subsequent transaction with Bowden. But how does that stand? All that was done by Bowden, when he became the purchaser of the estate, was to pay off the incumbrance, in order to get the title deeds into his hands,

3. By Purchase for Pecuniary Consideration.

Where the pauper purchased a messuage for fifty two pounds under an agreement that forty pounds of the purchase-money should be secured by mortgage of the messuage to the vendor; and the pauper, after residing in it some years, sold the messuage for sixty pounds to another, who paid the forty pounds to the original vendor and received the deeds, and twenty pounds to the pauper, who quitted the messuage in less than forty days after the payment of the forty pounds to the original vendor: Held, that the pauper did not gain a settlement by residence on such estate.

A mortgagee entering as a principal creditor for above thirty pounds, by residing, gains a settlement.

which had never passed from the original seller into the hands of the pauper. That was a payment therefore made by Bowden for his own benefit, and not on behalf of the pauper." Order quashed.

Rex v. Stockland, 2 Stra. 1162; Burr. S. C. 169; 2 Bott, 667. John Spiller, the pauper, was a mortgagee of a term for 15*l.*; and 30*s.* were due to him for interest, and 18*l.* 10*s.* more on bond and simple contract. The mortgagor died. Spiller took out administration as principal creditor; entered and was possessed: and so continued till removed by the original order. By the court: "Spiller gained a settlement as a purchaser for a consideration of more than 30*l.* bonâ fide paid."

3. Money laid out on Estate after Purchase.

Laying out money afterwards upon a purchase under thirty pounds will not gain a settlement, even though the money be laid out in the erection of a shop.

3. Money laid out on Estate after Purchase.

Rex v. Dunchurch, H. 6 Geo. III. Burr. S. C. 553; 1 Bla. Rep. 596. Edward Tansur, a certificate man from Dunchurch, with his wife, were joint purchasers of a house and garden at South Kilworth, and paid for it 19*l.* He laid out 15*l.* more in repairs, and built a shop on the premises; and was taxed after the rate of a tenement of 30*l.* value, and resided in the same till his death. After his death, his widow, the pauper, continued in possession for ten months; afterwards sold part for upwards of 30*l.* and reserved part to herself; but removing out of the same into another house in the same parish she was removed to Dunchurch. Order confirmed. By the court:—"The whole question is, whether this woman was a bonâ fide purchaser of an estate of 30*l.* value? She cannot be presumed to have come to it by descent, or executorship, or any such like act of law, because the contrary appears. She and her husband were joint purchasers. They took jointly and by entirety, and not by moieties. If so she can only stand in the same situation as her husband did; which is that of a purchaser. And as to the value the act takes it according to the purchase money actually paid; and no money afterwards laid out can make the prior purchase of a greater value than it really was at the time of making it. Therefore she gained no settlement by this purchase." Orders confirmed.

4. Equitable Interest in Purchased Estate.

A written agreement was made for the purchase of an estate, to be paid for by two instalments; the first to be payable within a few days after signing the agreement, and the last at the expiration of seven months. The vendor was to make out a good title on the payment of the last instalment, and to convey the premises: but the purchaser was to be let into possession upon the payment of the first instalment. The purchaser paid the first instalment, and was let into possession, and continued in possession for a year and a half;

Rex v. Geddington, 2 B. & C. 29; 3 D. & R. 403; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 101.(a) Order of removal of J. Garfield from Geddington to Dunton Bassett quashed. Case:—In November, 1814, Garfield entered into a written agreement with Richard Nason, by which the latter agreed to sell to Garfield a messuage situate at Dunton Bassett, for 310*l.* to be paid as follows: 160*l.* on the 30th of November instant, and 150*l.* on the 24th June next, with interest at 5 per cent. Nason agreed at his cost to make out a good title, and to convey the same at the cost of Garfield on the 24th June next, on payment of 150*l.* with interest. Garfield agreed with Nason to pay him on the 30th November the 160*l.* and the 150*l.* with interest on the 24th June, on having the premises conveyed to him. On payment of the 160*l.* Garfield was to be let into possession; but in case default should be made by him of payment of the 160*l.*, the agreement was to be void, and Nason was to be at liberty to sell the premises on the 5th December next. The 160*l.* was paid on the day appointed, and possession then given by Nason, and the pauper resided in the house for a year and a half; but he never paid the 150*l.*, nor was any conveyance ever executed. An action at law was brought by Nason for the 150*l.*; but afterwards, by agreement, discontinued; Nason paying the costs, and returning to the pauper 30*l.* of the 160*l.*, and the pauper agreeing to give up the contract and the possession, which was accordingly done. [In the course of the argument of counsel, Holroyd, J., said, "If you show that the vendor and vendee stood merely in the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, then the latter would have an equitable estate, and would gain a settlement. But none of the cases cited show that a court of equity would, under the circumstances of this case, consider the estate to belong to the vendee as he failed to pay the residue of the purchase-money. And Bayley, J. observed, "That Rex v. Long Bennington (a) seems to be precisely in point. There the pauper agreed by parol to buy a copyhold for 150*l.* He paid 34*l.* and entered into possession, in part performance of the contract, and continued near six months; the contract was then rescinded, because the seller would not give an indulgence he had promised for the residue of the purchase-money, and the seller returned the pauper 14*l.* The question was, whether this gave a settlement? The sessions thought it did; but this court held otherwise: for the pauper had purchased no estate or interest in this land; he could have made no claim in equity without paying the remainder of the purchase money; and though an equitable estate is sufficient to confer a settlement, a questionable right to go into a court of equity is not." After the argument was concluded, Bayley, J. "In cases relating to the law of settlement, the manner of determining any particular point is not so important, as it is that the decisions should be uniform and consistent. For as that law is administered gratuitously by a most respectable and meritorious body of magistrates, whose habits and duties are not likely to make them acquainted with the nice distinctions of the courts of equity, it is desirable that they should have cases settled upon plain grounds for their direction, rather than that they should be called upon to entertain and decide difficult questions of equitable law. The question in this case arises on the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 5. There must either be an estate or interest purchased; and by the latter word I understand a definite interest, for which the party contracts at the time of making the contract. If the question raised were res integra, I should be disposed to hold that the legislature meant a legal interest only. It has been decided, however, that a cestui que trust has a sufficient interest in land to gain a settlement under this statute, and I feel bound to adhere to those decisions; but there may be a distinction between an equitable estate and a mere equitable right, and that is adverted to by my brother Holroyd in Rex v. Toddington. The Rex v. Long Bennington is expressly in point with the present, and shows that in cases of constructive trusts a settlement is not gained by the cestui que trust. The agreement there, indeed, was by parol, but that circumstance formed no ingredient in the judgment of the court. The principle of the decision was, that a court of law, perhaps in ignorance of what a court of equity would do under the circumstances, held that it was not the case of a mere naked trustee and a cestui que trust; for, until the payment of the full purchase money, the vendor had a beneficial interest, and was something more than a trustee; and therefore that no settlement was gained. There is one distinction between the two cases. In the case cited it does not appear when the residue of the purchase-money was to be paid: whereas in this case part was paid on the 30th November, and the residue was to have been paid on the 24th June. And it is said, that during the interval the pauper was irremovable; but I think he was not irremovable till the 24th June, because it was not his own estate, either at law or in equity, until he paid or tendered the residue of the purchase-money; and that being so, I am of opinion that there was no settlement gained in Dunton Bassett." Holroyd, J. "I am of opinion that this was not to be considered the estate of the pauper, either in law or equity, so as to give him a settlement under the contract which is stated in this case. Whether, if the vendee had paid, or offered to pay, the remainder of the purchase-money, an equitable estate would have been gained, so as to give a settlement, is a very different question. The cases which have been cited show, that where the vendee has performed the contract in part, and has offered to pay the remainder of the purchase-money, the vendor then becomes a trustee for the vendee, and a court of equity will compel a specific performance. Rex v. Long Bennington seems to me to have been properly decided, and to govern the present. There, indeed, the contract was by parol, and it did not appear that the vendee was to have possession for a specific but the last instalment was never paid, nor any conveyance executed; and the purchaser afterwards gave up the contract upon receiving back part of the first instalment: Held, that under this contract the purchaser did not acquire an equitable estate, so as to gain a settlement under the 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, s. 5.

(a) See observations on this case in a pamphlet by A. Amos, Esq.

period of time; but these distinctions were not relied upon. Here time is given till June, when the residue of the purchase-money is to be paid; and it is agreed that the vendee should have possession till that time. The effect of which is merely this, that it might or might not amount to a demise for that time; but there is not sufficient found in the case to show that there was a renting of a tenement of 10*l.* annual value. But it is said, that at all events there was a purchase of an interest for six months; it does not, however, appear how much was to be paid for that, or that the pauper, in purchasing that, acquired an interest in land to the value of 30*l.* If the contract was rescinded by the fault of the vendor, it is questionable whether any thing could be recovered for the possession during the six months. For these reasons I think that no settlement was gained in Dunton Bassett." Best, J. "It has long been settled that an equitable estate will satisfy the words, any estate or interest, in the 9 Geo. I.; but it must be a clear and absolute equitable estate; such an estate as a court of equity would put the person claiming it into the complete possession of, and protect him against any attempts to disturb his enjoyment of it. A court of equity could not give possession to a purchaser who had not paid the purchase-money, or keep him in possession if he were put in against the legal claim of the vendor. Such a purchaser has only an inchoate right, which is not rendered a perfect equitable estate until he has paid all that he has stipulated to pay. Where purchasers have been ready to pay the price, and tendered it to the vendor, cases have occurred in which very nice questions have arisen, whether they are entitled to a conveyance. The business in which we are occupied in this court does not qualify us for the decision of such points. But if we are incompetent, how much more so must those be who compose the courts of sessions; and these things cannot be submitted to us until they have first been decided upon by them. I say, therefore, with my brother Bayley, in Rex v. Horndon-on-the Hill, (ante, 724,) 'we cannot know how a court of equity will deal with such a case;' and that I do not see that the pauper had any equitable estate, certainly not such a perfect one as confers a settlement." Order confirmed.

Payment of a deposit does not give an equitable estate.

An equitable estate is necessary to give a settlement. An equitable right is not sufficient.

Rex v. Woolpit, 4 D. & R. 456; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 272. John Pennell was removed from Woolpit to Coombs. Order quashed. That part of the case on which judgment was given stated that the pauper, by a written contract, agreed to buy some cottages for 70*l.*, and paid 10*l.* of it "at the time." He never paid any more, nor was any conveyance executed. He built on the garden, but never lived on the premises. Bayley, J. "After Rex v. Geddington, (ante, 732,) which was founded upon Rex v. Long Bennington, it is quite idle to contend that the mere payment of a deposit upon the purchase of an estate of this description is sufficient to create such an equitable estate as will confer a settlement or render the party irremovable. Those cases have decided that an equitable right is not sufficient to confer a settlement, or make the pauper irremovable. There must be an equitable estate actually vested to produce these consequences. It is impossible to say that this pauper ever had an equitable estate. He had an equitable right; that is to say he had a right, upon the payment of the remainder of the purchase-money, to go into a court of equity, and call upon the vendor for a conveyance. He had an inchoate equitable right, but clearly had not an equitable estate. It never could be predicated of him that he had a right to go into a court of equity and demand a conveyance of the estate at all events, and say that he was seised in his demesne as of fee, in equity. Holroyd, J. "I am also of opinion that, so far from the pauper having an equitable estate, he had not even a right to go into a court of equity until he had tendered or signified his consent to pay the remainder of the purchase-money; and if it was refused on the other side, and he had filed a bill in equity, notwithstanding the refusal, the bill, I should presume, would be dismissed with costs. He had no right to go into equity unless he had done, or offered to do, all that was necessary on his part to perfect his title." Littledale, J. "He had no right to go into equity unless he did something else which he had not done." Order of sessions quashed.

A father, upon

Rex v. Standon, 2 M. & Sel. 461. Removal from Eccleshall to Standon confirmed. Case:—Ann is the widow of Joseph Farmer, deceased. Five years ago Joseph, their eldest son, agreed to give 65*l.* for a piece of land in Eccleshall, which was offered to sale by the commissioners under an inclosure act; but not having sufficient money himself he applied to his father, who consented to advance him 20*l.*, (which had been left to his wife, Ann,) upon the following conditions:—viz., that a house should be built by the son upon the land, which the father and mother were to have for their lives, and the life of the survivor, after whose death the same was to go to the son; but it was also agreed that the father and mother were not to sell or dispose of the place, nor to take any other family into the house. The father was at that time advanced in years, and the son wished to show his good will towards him and his mother, and to assist them all he could. This agreement was not reduced into writing, but the father having advanced the 20*l.* to the son, the whole 65*l.* were then paid by the son for the purchase, and the land was conveyed by the award of the commissioners to the son in fee. The house was built immediately afterwards at the son's expense, but the father assisted personally in building it. When finished, the father and mother took possession of it with the consent of the son, who did not think himself at liberty to turn them out, nor did he ever attempt to do so. The son lived in another house, and his father and mother paid no rent to any person, and after having resided in the house about three years, the father died, and the mother continued to live in it as before, with the son's consent, until her removal under the order to Standon. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It appears clearly that no estate, either legal or equitable, was conveyed to the father or mother, nor any such interest probably as a court of equity would have decreed to be conveyed. They had nothing more than a conditional and qualified license by parol to occupy, irrevocable perhaps, except on breach of the condition not to let in any other person. This is not like the case of a devise; here is no gift or grant of an interest in the land; and the parties seem to have been aware of that, for they stood by and suffered the whole to be conveyed to the son, resting merely on his parol license that they should live there." Le Banc, J. "The ground on which this case is rested is, that a party cannot be removed from his own estate. The cases decide that if a party has clearly an equitable estate, he shall not be removed from it. But the court must see clearly that he has an equitable estate, which would be perfected in him by the intervention of a court of equity. I think the argument here has failed in showing that these parties could, by resorting to a court of equity, have obtained a conveyance of the legal estate."

Rex v. Lopen, 2 T. R. 577. A woman, on her marriage with a copyholder of a manor where the widows were entitled to free bench, gave a bond that the son of her intended husband, by a former wife, should have possession of part of the copyhold after her husband's death, on condition of his repairing the whole. At the husband's death the son took possession. It was urged that as the bond was without consideration, a court of equity would not compel performance. Buller, J. "It was not a voluntary bond, for it was executed in consideration of marriage, and the widow reserved in it a benefit to herself. But this is an instrument obligatory at law. There is another circumstance decisive in this case; the widow was so satisfied that she was bound by the bond, that on the death of her husband she actually delivered up possession according to the contract; and from that time till 1768 the pauper's father (who was the son mentioned in the bond) continued in possession under an idea that he was entitled under the bond. This man then, so in possession, had a good title against all the world but the widow; nay, the widow herself was so far bound by the bond, that she could not have recovered in ejectment. So that he not only had an equitable title, but he had also the possession, and no person could have recovered the estate from him."

Rex v. Llantilio Grossenney, 5 B. & C. 461; 8 D. & R. 320; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 73. Order of removal of William Edwards, &c. from St. Peter's, Hereford, to Llantilio Grossenney, confirmed. Case:—In 1816 the pauper made a parol agreement with Ann Carter for the purchase of a cottage and price of 40*l.*, and having paid 30*l.* on account, was let into possession without a conveyance; and after remaining in possession for twelve months, resold the premises for the like sum of 40*l.*, and having given up possession, paid the original vendor the 10*l.* owing upon the purchase: Held, that the pauper did not gain a settlement by the purchase of an estate or interest under 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, s. 5.

garden for 40*l.* Under this contract he took possession, and paid Carter 30*l.* on account. No conveyance was executed. After the pauper had for twelve months lived in the cottage with his family, he sold the property for 40*l.* to Sarah Watkins, to whom he gave possession, and afterwards paid the remaining 10*l.* to Carter. The pauper was never in possession of the premises after he had paid the whole of the purchase money. Bayley, J. "It is very desirable to adhere to the language of the statute, and to the construction put upon it by decided cases. There must be a purchase of an estate or interest; and by the latter word must be understood some specific definite interest, and the party contracting must become the purchaser. Rex v. Long Bennington, and Rex v. Geddington (ante, 732) establish that although an equitable estate is sufficient to give a settlement, still the purchase must be completed; and that if it be not an estate, but an equitable right only, no settlement is gained. The principle deducible from these cases is, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust must be created in order to give a settlement by the purchase. In Rex v. Geddington the agreement was to purchase an estate for 310*l.* of which 160*l.* was to be paid on the 30th November, and 150*l.* on the 24th June then next. The latter sum was never paid. The pauper resided a year and a half, and afterwards the contract was rescinded; there by paying 150*l.* a perfect equitable estate would have been acquired; but it was never paid; therefore the pauper was held never to have had a perfect equitable estate. Here the pauper had paid 30*l.*, and by paying 10*l.* more he would have performed all he was bound to do, and would have acquired a perfect equitable estate. During the whole time the pauper was in possession, he might have been removed. He never was the purchaser of an estate or definite interest. It has been argued that the payment of the 10*l.* would have given the purchaser a right to demand a conveyance; and that as it might have been made at any time, the payment, when made, related back to the time when the occupation began, and therefore that the estate by relation was the estate of the purchaser from the time his occupation commenced. I think, however, for the purpose of a settlement, such a payment did not give him the estate ab initio, but only from the time the payment was actually made; the expression of my brother Holroyd in Rex v. Geddington as to the vendee having acquired a settlement by having paid or offered to pay the remainder of the purchase-money must be understood in that sense." Holroyd, J. "The pauper in this case never was in possession of the estate after he had paid the 10*l.* He therefore never came to settle upon his own estate. A tender of the purchase-money might perhaps have been equivalent to payment, upon the principle that an offer to perform is equivalent to actual performance; but then in that case, in order to give a settlement, the purchaser, at the time of the tender, must have had a right to continue to hold the premises. Here at the time when the payment of the residue was made, the purchaser had no right to hold possession of the premises." Order confirmed.

4. Of the Residence.

IV. OF THE RESIDENCE.

No one can be adversely removed from the parish in which his freehold is situated; and if he quit it voluntarily, and become indigent, he cannot be removed thither unless he has gained a settlement. It is therefore essential to the perfecting of a settlement in respect of estate, that the owner should have actually resided in the parish where it is situated for full forty days, and whilst his interest continued. After he has so resided for that time he has acquired a perfect settlement, and cannot be removed.

Settlement lost by non-residence within ten miles.

The pauper however will not now retain a settlement acquired by estate for any longer time than he inhabits within ten miles thereof. See 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 68.

Residence in the parish sufficient.

Ryslip v. Harrow, 2 Salk. 524; 2 Bott, 673. By Holt, C. J. "Having land in a parish will not make a settlement, but living in a parish where one has land will gain a settlement without notice; for the act never meant to banish men from the enjoyment of their own lands."

Berkhamstead v. St. Mary, North Church, 2 Sess. Ca. 182; 2 Bott, 51. J. Woodward, the husband, ran away, and it was not known whether he was alive or dead. In the mean time the wife had two houses devised to her in North Church, and she and her children went to live in one of them. The question was, whether by continuing therein forty days they gained a settlement. Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "As this case is stated, the mother cannot gain a settlement for her children: the father, whilst alive, is the head of the family, and the children must derive their settlements through him. As to the cases of foreigners or Scotchmen who have no settlements, they are singular cases, and the wife gains a settlement through necessity: but there never was an instance where the wife was held to acquire a settlement during the life of her husband. The husband, in right of his wife, has a title to live at N. C., but he can gain no settlement there without a residence for forty days. There must be in all cases an inhabitancy; the wife's inhabitancy at N. C. with her children is not the inhabitancy of her husband. A feme covert cannot by residence gain a settlement for her husband; the only doubt is, whether, as he is stated only to have been a clerk, we are bound to look on his appointment as for life." Page and Probyn, Js. agreed. Lee, J. seemed to think that the mother could gain a right of residence for her children at N. C., but he admitted that she could not gain a settlement for them during the father's life.

4. Of the Residence.

Residence by the wife, where husband is absent, on an estate devised to wife, is not sufficient.

Rex v. West Shefford, Burr. S. C. 307; 2 Bott, 677. John Bird came into West Shefford with a certificate from Baydon. During his stay at West Shefford he became beneficially entitled to a leasehold estate of 14l. a year there, determinable upon his own life; upon which he entered on November 17th, and continued in possession till the 15th of December following, being twenty-eight days only, when he died. By the court: "In all cases, whether of ownership of land or renting 10l. a year, a residence of forty days is necessary. And Mursley v. Grandborough (ante, 705) was cited as in point, in which it was holden that any person who has an estate of his own, either freehold, copyhold, or a beneficial term for years, by act of law (as by descent, marriage, executorship, or administration,) may dwell upon it as his own, and he is not removable, and will gain a settlement if he continue forty days, though under 10l. a year. But he must abide forty days. And neither he nor his can be removed to it from any other place, unless he shall have resided forty days.

Residence for less than forty days is insufficient.

Rex v. Sowton, Andr. 345. T. Willes, the pauper, rented an estate in Sowton at 100l. per annum, and being distrained, left the estate, and having an estate in his own right for a term of years of the value of 19l. 10s. per annum in Sidbury, went there and took possession of the estate. He continued at Sidbury from November to April, weeding the ground and sowing turnips therein, but paid no taxes and had no stock on the lands, nor any goods in his house at Sidbury, but lodged at a public house there, without having a particular room assigned to him. He continued there forty days in the whole, but not successively, and went frequently to Sowton to see his wife and children, who were left behind, and remained at Sowton, where he stayed sometimes a week at a time. Afterwards, in April, he sold his estate, and went back to Sowton, from whence he was removed. Lee, C. J. "The pauper had certainly no settlement at Sowton if he obtained one at Sidbury, which is the point in question. And to determine this, it is proper to be considered whether it appears he had such an interest in the estate as was properly his own, and contra-distinguished to a rack-rented estate. The case is not stated so fully as it should have been; for it should have been shown by what title the pauper came by the estate, whether by act of law as an executor, or by devise or purchase, or in what other manner. As this is not done, we cannot intend that he was a purchaser thereof, and consequently this case does not fall within the late act. However, upon the circumstances set out in the sessions order, the estate does seem to be of a beneficial nature, and the pauper is mentioned to have had it in his own right, and consequently the quantum of the value is not material, because the owner has a right to be where his estate lies, and so it has been determined. The next matter to be considered is the pauper's residence at Sidbury. It is rightly admitted at the Residence for forty days in the parish wherein a man has an estate of his own (except it be by purchase under 30l.) is sufficient to gain a settlement, though it be not on the estate or successive. It gains a settlement also for his children, they not having gained a settlement of their own, but remaining part of his family, though living elsewhere.

4. Of the Residence.

bar, that it is not necessary, upon the statute of Car. II., the continuance should be for forty days successively. In Edgeware v. Harrow it was held, that a residence for forty days, where the party is irremovable for that time, gains a settlement. And upon the old law, when a man came to a place, on the first day he was regarded as a stranger; on the second as a guest; and on the third as an inhabitant: and a place of settlement (which is a modern term, and has arisen from the acts of removal,) is a place of habitation. Now in this case it is plain, from what is said under the former head, that the pauper was irremovable whilst he was at Sidbury; and though he lodged at a public-house, this is not very material, because a man may have 100*l.* a year in a parish, and no house there. And the reason of his going to Sowton and other places is mentioned to be for the purpose of seeing his family, and about his affairs. Objected: That the party's settlement at Sowton was not determined, because it does not appear he was absent from thence for forty successive days. Answer: This point depends on the question whether he was long enough at Sidbury to gain one there; for if so, then he loses his former settlement at the other place. Upon the whole therefore we must take the estate to be a beneficial interest, and the property of the pauper. And his residence at Sidbury was such as is sufficient to gain him a settlement there. As to the other point, there has been some diversity of opinion amongst the judges, how far the settlement of children shall be derived from that of the father. In Edgeware v. Harrow it was said by Parker, C. J. 'That a child cannot be sent to the place of the father's settlement unless the child hath been there; for that he derives a settlement from his father, not as he doth an inheritance, but by reason of his being in a place from whence he could not be removed whilst he was with his father. But in Eversley v. Blackwater, where that objection was taken by Mr. Reeve, the court held that a child may be sent to the place of his father's settlement though he hath never been there, which was that case, but the child was only two years old. In East Goodaway v. West Goodaway, where the child was of a considerable age, and parted from his father, it was held that he could not be sent to the place of his father's settlement; and so it was resolved in St. Michael's, Norwich, v. St. Matthew's, Ipswich, where the child had been twelve years parted from his father, and emancipated from him, and also married. This therefore is the true distinction, that where a child remains in his father's house, and has gained no settlement of his own, his settlement shall attend that of his father; but otherwise it is where he has been separated from his father and has gained a settlement of his own. The consequence is, that as in this case the children have always continued in the father's family, and it is not stated that they have gained a settlement of their own, though some of them are twenty or thirty years old, they are settled where the father is. And the law is the same in the case of a mother as of a father." The rest of the court was of the same opinion with the chief justice upon both points, and for the same reasons, and therefore the order of justices was now confirmed, and the order of sessions quashed.

Same point.

Rex v. St. Nyott's, Burr. S. C. 132; 2 Bott, 676. Nicholas Penquite, the pauper, was born at St. Cleere; afterwards he gained a settlement at St. Nyott's; and from thence returned to St. Cleere, and lived there with his mother on a tenement, in part of which he had an estate of freehold and inheritance, and of which he was seised in common together with his mother and sisters. He worked there as a day labourer, and lodged sometimes on his own estate and sometimes in other places, where he worked in St. Cleere, and at other times in other parishes adjoining; but did not reside on his estate in St. Cleere, or in St. Cleere, forty days together at any one time between his return to and selling his estate in St. Cleere (about three years). By the court: "This depends on the 13 & 14 Car. II. which directs the sending a pauper to the place where he was last legally settled for the space of forty days. But this man continued off and on for more than forty days. And it is not necessary that he should have resided there forty days together. He was irremovable from St. Cleere for above forty days; and that is sufficient."

IX. Of Settlements by Office. (a)

1. Statutes on the Subject.

No settlement can now be acquired by serving an office. Before however the 4 & 5 Wil. IV. c. 76, it was observed by Lord Ellenborough, that a man who is of sufficient repute and station among his neighbours to be appointed to a public annual office, and who discharges the duties of such office for that period, seems peculiarly entitled to the privilege of a settlement in the parish where he has been thus known and employed. The law therefore which is to this effect, carries with it an obvious propriety, not so easily to be discerned in some of the other species of settlement. Rex v. Mersham, post, 747.

Though the service of an office may not gain a settlement, because it is not a public annual office, yet it may as an hiring and service.

1. STATUTES ON THE SUBJECT.

1. Statutes on the Subject.

The 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, (b) enacts, "That if any person who shall come to inhabit in any town or parish, shall for himself, and on his own account, execute any public annual office or charge in the said town or parish, during one whole year, or shall be charged with and pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the said town or parish, then he shall be adjudged and deemed to have a legal settlement in the same, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as is hereby before required."

And the 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, enacts, "That no person or persons whatsoever, who shall come into any parish by any such certificate as aforesaid, shall be adjudged by any act whatsoever to have procured a legal settlement in such parish, unless he or they shall really and bonâ fide take a lease of a tenement of the value of ten pounds, or shall execute some annual office in such parish, being legally placed in such office."

From and after the passing of the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, (Aug. 14, 1834,) no settlement shall be acquired by serving an office.

2. WHAT OFFICE, AND WHAT PLACING THEREIN, WILL GAIN A SETTLEMENT.

2. What Office, and what placing therein, will gain a Settlement.

The nature of the office is defined by the enactment itself;—it must be an annual office or charge, and public in its nature, and the party must have been legally placed in such office. The act also requires that the person shall execute it for himself and on his own account, to entitle him to a settlement thereby; it follows that one who fills the office for another person, or a deputy, gains no settlement.

A person sworn into and serving the office of constable, as deputy to another, does not thereby gain a settlement. (19 Vin. Abr. 379.)

Rex v. Winterbourn, Burr. S. C. 520; 1 Bla. Rep. 452. (c) The custom was for the constable to be presented by the jury at the leet. The jury presented R. Bayly, Esq., who procured the pauper to serve for him, in order

Deputy constable gains no settlement.

(a) See general division of the subject, ante, 269.

(b) This statute was evidently intended to be confined to inferior annual officers, such as constables and the like known to the parish, and though the construction of the act has been extended in some cases, it ought not to be carried further, per Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Wan- tage, 2 East, 65; and per Taunton, J. in Rex v. Stogursey, 1 B. & Adol. 798, post, 740.

(c) Mr. Nolan cites this case as an authority for saying that under 3 & 4 W. & M. a person must be appointed to the office; but the case as reported in Blackstone corresponds with the text.

2. What Office will gain a Settlement.

Same point.

A constable residing under a certificate was sworn into his office, and executed it by deputy: He gains a settlement under 9 & 10 W. & M.

Secus under 3 & 4 W. & M.

Parish clerk is an annual office. See however Rex v. Stogursey, infra.

The pauper must have been legally placed in an annual office. A person performing the duties of a parish clerk without any appointment, legal or de facto, and without any appointment being signified to the parishioners, does not acquire a legal settlement in the parish, although he resides therein upwards of forty days, and performs the duties for 12 years, during which he receives an annual salary.

to gain the pauper a settlement. The pauper accordingly was sworn into the office by a justice, and served the same for a year; but was not presented thereto at the court leet as constable in his own right. The court were clear that this was not serving an office on his own account, within the intent of the statute.

Rex v. Allcannings, Burr. S. C. 634; 2 Bott, 242. The house occupied by Mr. Amor, being in turn to furnish a tithingman for Patney, the leet jury presented him to that office. And he, by leave of the court leet, put in his place Thomas Palmer, a common labourer and housekeeper, living in the parish, who was sworn in at the leet, and served the office for a year; Amor paid him all expenses attending the execution of it. Lord Mansfield: "The question is, whether the pauper served the office on his own account or not? The question is not how he was presented to it, but how he served it;" and after stating the facts, said, "It is clear that he executed the office for Amor, and not for himself." The rest of the court concurred, and Yates, J., said, "In the case of Winterbourn (ante, 739), the pauper was considered as a substitute."

Rex v. Hope Mansell, E., 23 Geo. III., Cald. 252. James Davies, &c., was removed from Hope Mansell to Brampton Abbots. Order quashed. Case:—D. Davies, being a certificate person from Ross to Brampton, resided at Brampton, where his son the pauper was born: the son lived in the parish, was chosen constable, and sworn to execute the office. After being so sworn, he declared he would not serve himself, and employed and paid another to serve for him; and the court were of opinion that the pauper having been sworn into office, and executing it by deputy, discharged the certificate and acquired a settlement.

In Rex v. St. Maurice, Winchester, Burr. S. C. 34, Lee, J., in alluding to Rex v. Burclean, said, "In that case the court unanimously held, that this act (9 & 10 W. III.) was not to be considered as an explanatory, but a new act;" and he added, "And that is true; for it enlarges the certificate man's power of gaining a settlement: for now, if he executes such an office by deputy, he gains a settlement; whereas by 3 & 4 W. & M. he was to execute it for himself, and on his own account."

Gatton v. Milwich, Set. & Rem. 241; 2 Salk. 536; Fol. 123; 2 Bott, 157. A person being chosen parish clerk by a parson, served for several years, and received his fees and dues. By the court: "It is a parish office, and has the care and custody of the ornaments of the church. 'Tis more than an annual office, for he is not movable and has fees: he is by common law an officer, and in for life. 'Tis true, if he is poor and has a family, they may remove him: for although he came in by the parson only, yet their not removing him implies their consent and approbation; and by this consent of theirs, the law adjudges him in by the concurrence of the parish."

Rex v. Stogursey, 1 B. & Ad. 795. Joel Leversham was removed from Stogursey, in the county of Somerset, to Kilton. Order quashed. Case:—The office of parish clerk of Kilton being vacant in October, 1818, the pauper began then to perform the duties of that office, and continued to perform them until his removal in January, 1830, and until the order appealed against, and received a yearly salary of 2*l.* 13*s.* from the parish; but neither he nor any other person was, during that period, chosen to the said office by the vicar, in whom the appointment is vested, nor was any such choice signified to the parishioners according to the canon. The pauper, when he first served the office, was resident in the parish of Kilve. On the 2nd of February, 1819, he took a lodging in the parish of Kilton, and resided there until the 25th of March following, when he went to the parish of Stogursey, where he has since continually resided. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of Kilton. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think the order of sessions must be quashed, on the ground that there was no execution of an office. In my own opinion, there is great doubt whether this be an annual office within 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6. It is not so, strictly speaking, for it is more, it is an office for life. Gatton v. Milwich (2 Salk. 536, supra), can hardly be said to have been decided on the ground that the office was annual. Powell, J. there says, 'It is more than an annual office, for he is not removable, and has fees.' And in Helsington v. Over (Burr. S. C. 746, post, 746) Aston, J., (a judge very well acquainted with the poor law) after observing that the employment of officiating curate under a sequestration cannot be called an annual office, when the sequestration may be determined at any time, adds, 'It is not the annual office of a constable or a tithing-man, they are appointed yearly, and to serve for the year. That of parish clerk is a freehold, and it is upon that footing that a parish clerk gains a settlement.' I doubt therefore whether this be a public annual office within the statute. But assuming that an office for more than a year might be so considered, it appears to me that in this case the pauper cannot be said to have executed the office. There is indeed a difference between the statutes 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, and 9 & 10 W. III. c. 11. Under the last, it is necessary that the party, to gain a settlement by serving an office, should have been legally placed in it; under the former, if the office has actually been executed, it is not necessary to enquire whether the placing was legal. But here the party was never in any way placed in the office. The case merely states that he performed the duties from a certain time. The only proper appointment would have been by the vicar. If however he had been elected by the parishioners, and the vicar had afterwards assented, it might perhaps have been said that the service under such election was a good execution of the office. But here was not even a colourable appointment. The pauper only did the duties which a legal parish clerk, when appointed, would have done." Littledale, J. "It is not necessary to decide now whether or not the office of parish clerk be a public annual office within the statute, though I am rather inclined to think it is. But here the office was not executed. It is true the pauper served twelve years; but whether it were twelve or one makes no difference. The case merely states that the office of parish clerk being vacant in October, 1818, the pauper began then to perform the duties and continued doing so down to the time of his removal. It shows no appointment either by any person entitled by custom or otherwise. If there had even been such an appointment, as though not legal in the first instance, might ultimately have been rendered so, perhaps a settlement might have been gained. But here was no appointment whatever, and consequently no execution of the office." Taunton, J. "Whether this be an annual office or not it is unnecessary to decide; and perhaps the necessity may never arise, because a parish clerk duly appointed has at any rate a settlement by freehold. It is not pretended in this case that the pauper was legally placed in the office within the terms of 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 11, and it appears to me that he never was placed in it at all. He appears by the statement to have put himself into the office, and there done what would have been performed by a parish clerk if one had been legally appointed, but he himself never was appointed, elected, or nominated; he merely did the duties and received the salary. I think this was not an execution of the office within the meaning of 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, and that no settlement was gained." Order of sessions quashed. (a)

Rex v. Yalding, 3 D. & R. 352; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 39. Order of removal of John Russell from Yalding to Marden quashed. Case:—The manor of Aylesford is a manor of the ancient demesne of the crown, the court-rolls of which have been regularly kept for a long series of years, and the borough of Rugmorhill is a district within the manor, extending into seven parishes, and some part of it lying within the parish of Yalding. At a court-leet holden for the manor, it has been usual, from time immemorial, to appoint constables and borsholders, such officers being always expressed

Where the court-leet of the manor of A. appointed a person to be street-driver of the borough of R., a district within the manor, extending into seven parishes, and it

(a) In Rex v. St. Mary, Berkhamstead, 2 Sess. Ca. 182, the court seemed to be of opinion, that the executing the office of parish clerk is sufficient for a certificate person to gain a settlement; for it is an annual office and more.

In Peak v. Bourne, 2 Stra, 942, the plaintiff declared in prohibition; for that he was sued for serving the office of deputy parish clerk, without the license of the ordinary; and the court held, that a license was not necessary.

appearing, first, that it was not an annual office; second, that he took no oath of office; and third, that he had not served under the appointment for one whole year: Held, that he had not such a public annual office or charge as would gain him a settlement under 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6.

to be appointed to serve "for the year ensuing," and sworn to discharge the duties. A custom of appointing an ale-conner at the court-leet has also existed in the manor from time immemorial, but it does not appear that that officer was ever sworn to execute his office. Since 1793 the office of weigher of weights and measures has been added to that of ale-conner. These latter, as well as the street-driver, have been appointed from time to time at the same court-leet as the constables and borsholders, although not expressed to be "for the year ensuing." At a court-leet holden in 1750 a street-driver of the borough of Rugmorhill was appointed for the first time. Similar appointments took place in 1753, 1764, 1772, and 1784, and from that time to the present thirty-eight courts-leet have been held, at each of which a street-driver has been appointed, with the exception of 1798, no court having been held in that year. But in 1799 two courts-leet were held, one in January and one in November, at which the appointments were in the same form as in other instances, so that such officer, together with the constables, borsholders, &c., has been appointed on the days of holding the court-leet, which have occurred at intervals, sometimes of more, and sometimes of less, than a year; but it does not appear that he was ever sworn to discharge the duties of his office, or that there is any oath applicable to the office. In the record of the proceedings of a court-leet holden for the manor of Aylesford on the 19th of January, 1813, is the following entry:—"Also they present and appoint John Russell to be street-driver of and within the borough of Rugmorhill, within the manor." On the 8th of January, 1814, the pauper was again appointed in a similar form, and a third time on the 20th of February, 1815. The pauper never appeared at the courts at which he was nominated, and was never sworn. He discharged the duties of the office in person from the 19th of January, 1813, up to his re-appointment on the 8th of January, 1814; he also served in person for a short period after his re-appointment in 1814, but another person, to whom he paid no compensation, served at his request in his stead during the remainder of 1814, and after his appointment in 1815; including, however, his services under the first and second appointments, he served the office in person for more than a whole year. During 1813, 1814, and 1815, he resided in the respondent parish, but not in that part of it which is situate within the borough of Rugmorhill, where his duties were to be executed. He was not residing under a certificate. It was urged that St. Thomas, Winchester, v. St. Mary, Winchester, was decisive to show that the service was sufficient, though it did not extend through the whole parish. [Bayley, J. "There the pauper executed the office throughout the whole of the parish in which he resided, and therefore it was fairly to be presumed that it was notorious to every inhabitant of the parish, that he did in fact hold the office."] It was urged that the duties of the office need not extend over the whole of the parish in which the pauper resides. [Bayley, J. "Is there any case in which it has been held, that the serving an office in one part of the parish, and residence in another, affords sufficient notoriety, and is a sufficient service to confer a settlement?"] It was also urged that residence in any part of the parish is sufficient. Bayley, J. "That will hardly be enough to support this settlement; but independently of that point, can this situation be called an 'office' within the meaning of the statute? It is unnecessary to go more at large into the objections raised upon the face of this case, because it is perfectly clear that the office held by this pauper is not a public annual office or charge within the meaning of this statute. This person was appointed at one court-leet to serve till the next; the interval between the two courts did not amount to a year, and the courts were held at various intervals ad libitum. Therefore he was neither appointed for a year, nor did he serve a year; the office was neither in its nature annual, nor was the appointment to it annual; and one or the other of those characteristics is absolutely necessary. I entertain very considerable doubt whether his residence was such as to afford due notoriety of his being the person who held the office, and also whether, not being sworn, he was legally invested with the office; but it is not necessary to decide those points, because the settlement is evidently insufficient upon the ground already noticed. This is not a public annual office in its nature, and the pauper was not appointed to it for a year; and therefore it is not such an office as is necessary to confer a settlement." Best, J. "Upon the point last alluded to by my brother Bayley, it is quite clear that no settlement has been gained in this case. There must be either an appointment to an office to serve for a year, or an appointment to an office which by its nature is annual; and here there is neither the one nor the other. I am also inclined to think that the pauper's residence was insufficient. The principle upon which the courts have been accustomed to decide what is or is not good residence, is, that there shall be such a residence as necessarily renders it notorious to all the parish that the officer is within it. Now here there is no such notoriety, nor from the very nature of the residence can be. This case also comes within the very distinction laid down by Lord Kenyon in the case of Rex v. Whittlesea (post, 475), namely, that an appointment by the parish at large is good, but that by individuals is not; because this pauper was clearly appointed by a portion of the parishioners only." Order quashed.

Rex v. Clixby, 1 Nev. & M. 118; 4 Bar. & Ad. 153. Appeal against an order whereby W. Clayton and family were removed from Caistor to Clixby. Order confirmed. Case:—Clixby belongs, with the exception of about twenty acres of land, to one proprietor, Mr. Harman. There are nine occupiers of land in Clixby, including Harman, who retains some portion of his estate in his own hands; he holds no courts. The pauper (the only witness examined) stated that he had known the place thirty-three years, and had never known or heard of any pinder there before 1825. In 1825 Harman and two other occupiers of land in Clixby, of whom Mr. Lawrence, constable of Clixby, was one, ordered the pauper to go and be sworn in pinder. It did not appear in evidence that there was any public meeting of the parish, or any other meeting, to appoint him. The pauper went with Lawrence to a justice of peace, and was sworn in. He impounded cattle in Clixby in that year, and continued to do so for several years, till he was removed. In 1826 he was again sworn in before two justices of the peace. During all this time he resided in Clixby. The sessions found that this was a public annual office. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether by such service and swearing in the pauper gained a settlement in Clixby. Denman, C. J. "The court of quarter sessions have found this to be a public annual office, subject to the opinion of this court on the evidence. We think their finding is not warranted by the facts which they have stated. The office of pinder in this parish is not proved to be ancient, for it is not known that there was any such officer before 1825. Nor was the pauper appointed by any authority known to the law. The hog ringer is an annual officer of great public utility, appointed at the court leet. It is not necessary to decide generally whether a pinder properly appointed be a public annual officer within the act; it is sufficient to say, that under the circumstances of this case the office was not in this parish a public annual office." Parke, Taunton, and Patteson, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Hambledon, 4 B. & C. 459; 6 D. & R. 554; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 215. Order of removal of Birdseye from Witney to Hambledon confirmed. Case:—In 1786 the parishes of Brumley, Chiddingfold, Dunsfold, and Hambledon, were incorporated under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83. The parishes of Haslemere, Shalford, Saint Martha, Hascomb, and Elstead, afterwards took the benefit of the same provisions; and all the parishes before mentioned became incorporated parishes for the purposes of that statute. About 1787, a very large house of industry was erected by contribution of all those parishes upon the waste of the manor in Hambledon, as the most convenient situation for the purposes of the incorporation. To this house paupers from all the united parishes were sent, and were maintained separately at the expense of the parishes to which the paupers belonged. For the management of this house, and the employment of all classes of paupers therein, a governor was from time to time appointed, under the powers of the statute. In 1820 the pauper was appointed governor of the house of industry by this order. Form:—"Surrey sessions. We, two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Surrey, acting for the hundred of Godalmin, in the said county, do hereby appoint John Birdseye, of Hambleton, to execute the office of governor of the poor for the parish of Hambleton, within the said hundred, for one year, to be computed from the week of Easter now last past, to which he has been recommended at a public meeting, holden the 29th day of March last, pursuant to the directions of the statute passed in the 22 Geo. III. for the better relief and employment of the poor. Given under our hands and seals this 6th day of April, 1822. G. W., O. J. M." Under this appointment he served the office of governor for three years in succession, upon the same terms, and during that time resided in Hambleton. Bayley, J. "The last objection is decisive of the case: (namely) the appointment for one parish is clearly bad. But it seems to me that the other objections are fatal also. It has been decided that the situation of master of a workhouse is not a public office, unless it is so constituted by an act of parliament (Rex v. Mer sham, post, 747); consequently, previous to the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, no service in such a situation could have conferred a settlement. It is true, that statute calls it an office, but the 39th section provides that nothing contained in the statute shall alter or affect the settlement of any person; therefore it leaves the office just what it was before, and a settlement cannot be gained by service under it. Upon all these grounds, therefore, it seems to me, that the order of sessions ought to be quashed." Holroyd, J. and Littledale, J. concurred.

Office of town crier is sufficient.

The office of bellman and town-crier is also an annual office within the statute, and will give a settlement in that parish wherein such officer resides, if his office extends over several parishes of which the town is composed. (See Rex v. St. Nicholas, post, 757.)

A sworn tithing-man for part of a parish is sufficient.

Rex v. Fittleworth, Burr. S. C. 238. A certificate man was elected and sworn a tithing-man for a tithing which did not extend through all the parish. By the court: "It is not necessary that the office should extend throughout all the parish; the act only requires the executing some annual office in the parish."

Bailiff or ale-taster for a borough is an office.

Rex v. Whitchurch, Burr. S. C. 365; 2 Bott, 163. The pauper was nominated at the court leet, and sworn into the office of bailiff or ale-taster for the borough; and he executed the office for a year: the office consists in inspecting weights and measures within the borough, and in warning the jury to serve at the court leet there: the borough is not one-sixth part of the parish, the bailiffs have never executed any authority over the parish at large, great part of the parish knew nothing of such office; new married men and new comers were frequently nominated for the sake of colt-ale. Ale-taster is an ancient and known officer, and as to the objection of the parish, Rex v. Fittleworth (supra) is in point, and this is a good settlement.

Tithing-man is an office.

Burliscomb v. Sanford Peverell, 1 Stra. 544. The sessions adjudge that the office of tithing-man is not such an office as that a man thereby shall gain a settlement. But by the court: "The order must be quashed; for this is an annual office in the parish within the words and meaning of the act."

Whether a certificate man entering upon office immediately, but not sworn in till after the expiration of a year, be sufficient, Qu.?

Holy Trinity v. Garsington, Fol. 123; Sett. & Rem. 95. A certificate man was appointed tithing-man by the steward of a leet. He served a year; but was not sworn in till half the year was expired. The court inclined that it was a good settlement; but being a new case, and somewhat doubtful, they ordered a second argument to this point, whether he was legally placed in the office, or not, as not having been sworn till half the year was expired? But the order was afterwards quashed for want of complaint that the pauper was actually become chargeable.

A certificate man chosen borsholder, but not sworn in, gains no settlement.

Wingham v. Sellindge, 2 Stra. 1199; Burr. S. C. 223. A certificate man was told by his wife that the borsholder had left a wooden tally at his house, as a token that he had been chosen borsholder at a court leet of the manor; but he did not know it of his own knowledge, nor was there any evidence of a presentment by the leet jury, or of his appointment or election, nor did he ever take the oath of office; but once he executed a warrant of a justice directed to the borsholder, and for that whole year he was willing and ready to execute the office. By the court: "When an order of sessions states the facts specially, the court must take it, that the justices have stated all the evidence that appeared to them. Now the act requires a legal placing in the office. But it is stated here negatively, that there was no presentment, no admission or swearing. So that here is no foundation for supporting a legal placing."

Rex v. Whittlesea, 4 T. R. 807. Removal from Crowland to Whittlesea. Case:—The pauper, during his residence in Crowland, was legally chosen a hog-ringer for that parish for one year, at a court leet for the manor of Crowland: he was presented by the jury for the office, and was sworn therein, and paid 4d. for the oath, and he served such office two years on his own account. The duty of such office is to attend the open commons to see that all hogs turned thereupon were rung, and such hogs as were not rung to take to the pound, which he frequently did, and he always received 1d. for impounding, and 6d. for ringing, each hog. The appointment to such office is of great antiquity, and serviceable to the inhabitants of Crowland. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is stated in the case that this is an annual office of great antiquity, and serviceable to the parish at large, and that there is an oath of office; therefore it seems to me, that it is a public annual office within the meaning of the act. Every employment in a parish is not indeed equal to express notice, though it be a matter of notoriety to the parish. It was once made a question, whether shoeing the horses of the lord of the manor was not equal to notice? But it was determined not to be equivalent. If this person had been hog-ringer to certain individuals only, he would not have thereby gained a settlement; but he was not merely an officer of A., B., or C., but of all the inhabitants of the parish. It has been held, that a tithing-man, a borsholder, an ale-taster, or a hayward, may gain a settlement by serving either of those offices; and the latter, whose duty it is merely to take care of the fences within his district, cannot be distinguished from this case." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Lew, 8 B. & C. 655; 3 M. & R. 369. Order of removal of W. Purlrick from Charlbury to Lew confirmed. Case:—The pauper was on the 16th of October, 1820, duly elected by the inhabitants of Charlbury an assistant overseer, pursuant to the 59 Geo. III. c. 12. The vestry determined that the pauper should perform the duties and receive the salary mentioned in the warrant of appointment. On the 18th he was appointed by a warrant under the hands and seals of two justices; it recited that the inhabitants had nominated the pauper to be the assistant overseer, and did fix the yearly sum of 10l. as and for the yearly salary for the execution of the office; it then appointed him to be the assistant overseer, and authorized him to perform the duties, and receive the salary. It was not stamped: the pauper performed the office for a year. Bayley, J. "I have no doubt that the pauper held an office within the meaning of the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, and that he executed that office for himself, and on his own account. It was a public office in the parish; the duties were executed throughout the parish. He was appointed by the inhabitants in vestry assembled. I think also that it was an annual office; the pauper was to receive a yearly salary for executing the duties of it; and although he might be removed within the year, he would continue in the office for a year, unless something was done to determine it during that period. He had an estate for a year in his office, defeasible on a particular event, as in the case of a lease for a year, determinable by notice within the year. In that case the lessee is in the estate for the year, though it may be determined by notice. (Rex v. Herstmonceaux, 6 B. & C. 550; 1 M. & R. 426; ante, 633.) The office held by the pauper was held by him in his own right, not as deputy of the principal overseer. The great difficulty in this case arises from the want of a stamp. If I were at liberty to conjecture, I should say, the legislature did not contemplate an appointment of this description, but I am bound to give effect to the words of the statute. The 55 Geo. III. c. 184, Sched. tit. Grant, requires that any grant or appointment made by any person to any office or employment by writing, where the salary, fee, or emolument, appertaining thereto, shall not amount to 50*l.* per annum, shall have a stamp of 2*l.* Here there is an appointment in writing to an office or employment where the salary does not amount to 50*l.* It is, therefore, within the very words of the act, and required a stamp." Littledale, J. "The appointment requires a stamp. There are some general exemptions at the end of that part of the schedule which relates to offices, but this is not among them. I have no doubt on the other point. This is called an office in the act. It is from the nature of the thing an office. If an overseer be an officer, an assistant overseer is equally so. It is also an annual office, for there is an annual salary; and although he may be removed within the year, still he is appointed to the office for the year." Parke, J. concurred. Order confirmed.

Collector of the land tax is a public annual office.

Rex v. Hammond, 2 Bott, 157. By Pratt, C. J. "Serving the office of collector of the land tax is a sufficient office to gain a settlement within the 3 & 4 Will. III. c. 11, s. 6, for it is not necessary that the office should be a parish office; any office is sufficient, so that by the notoriety of it, it may be presumed that the parish had notice of the person's being come into the parish."

Collector of duties on births and burials.

Bisham v. Cook, 1 Str. 411. The pauper lived in Bisham, and executed there the office of collector of the duties given by 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 6, on births and burials. It was moved to quash it, because this was not a parish office, and it would be giving the commissioners (who are to appoint the collectors) a power to bring what charge they would upon the parish; besides, it was not stated in the order that this was an annual office, as it must be to give a settlement within the express words of the act. By the court: "The reason why the executing an office gives a settlement without notice, is because of the notoriety of the thing, of which the parliament thought it impossible but the parish should have notice; can any thing be more notorious than this, which is to collect a duty from house to house? We cannot suppose a fraud in the commissioners, that they would appoint a person of no substance to be collector, only to bring a charge upon the parish. It needs not to be a parish office, but a public annual office in the parish. And as to its not being said, that this man executed it for a year, we must take it he did so, because it appears, on looking into the statute, that the power given to the commissioners is to appoint a person who shall be collector of the duties for a year, and then give in his accounts. It hath been held a settlement in the case of the land tax, and why not in this?" Order confirmed.

Needs not be a parish office, but a public annual office in the parish.

A curacy is not a public annual office.

Helsington v. Over, Burr. S. C. 746; 2 Bott, 243. Order of removal of Rev. John Langhorn from Helsington to Over confirmed. Case:—On the 1st day of October, 1766, the vicarage of the parish of Over was sequestered for three years, or till the bishop should release the same: On the 12th of October, 1766, the pauper was ordained deacon, in order to supply the cure of Over during the sequestration. From the 15th of October, 1766, to the 15th of June, 1768, he, by an exchange with the curate at Acton, resided and did duty in Acton, but received his salary regularly from the sequestrators of Over. From the 15th of June, 1768, to the 1st of October, 1769, he resided and did duty as curate at Over, when the sequestration ended. It did not appear that he had any license to the curacy of Acton. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "There is no colour for considering this as an annual office: It is no office at all." And Aston, J. said, "You cannot call it an annual office, when the sequestration may be determined at any time. It is not like the annual office of a constable or a tithing-man. They are appointed generally, and to serve for a year. That of parish clerk is a freehold; and it is upon that foot that a parish clerk gains a settlement." Orders quashed.

Same point.

Rex v. Wantage, 2 East, 65. R. Puzey, clerk, was nominated by the rector of East Lockinge to be curate of the same, and was duly licensed, with a yearly stipend of 45*l.* The license authorized the party during pleasure "to perform the office of curate in the parish, &c., in reading the common prayer and performing other ecclesiastical duties belonging to the said office according to the form prescribed," &c. Puzey entered on the curacy the same year, and performed the duties for six years, during which he resided in the parsonage house in the parish. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "There is no pretence to say that this is an office the executing of which for a year will give a settlement. The statute of 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, was evidently intended to be confined to inferior annual officers, such as constables and the like, known to the parish; and though in some instances the construction has been carried farther, yet I am not inclined to extend it to cases still farther from the contemplation of the legislature." Order of sessions confirmed.

2. What Office will gain a Settlement.

Rex v. Milborne, 2 Str. 1225. T. Membury was certificated from Sheepshead to Milborne, and staid there ten years, during which time Lady Elizabeth Hastings conveyed lands to trustees for several charities out of the profits; and among others the sum of 10*l.* a year to the charity school at Milborne, to be paid to the vicar there for the time being. In the special order of sessions it was stated that the certificate man officiated as schoolmaster several years, and received the 10*l.* a year from the vicar: and this the sessions held gained him a settlement in Milborne, where they declared he had a freehold estate; and so had both the requisites to obtain a settlement to a certificate person, namely, a tenement of 10*l.* a year, and executing an annual office. But by the court: "The order must be quashed; a schoolmaster is not an office, but only an employment; and what interest T. M. had in the school, whether for life or otherwise, or how he came into this employment, doth not appear; and the legal right to receive the salary is in the vicar, who not caring to officiate himself has therefore paid it over to this man as his deputy, which could never give any person a settlement, much less a certificate man."

Schoolmaster not a public officer.

Rex v. Mersham, 7 East, 167. Removal from Boxley to Mersham confirmed. The parts of the case upon which the question was decided were, that the pauper at a vestry meeting offered his proposals to become master of the workhouse; that at a subsequent vestry meeting, at which twelve of the inhabitants were present, he was informed by the parish officers that he was appointed master of the workhouse of the parish of B. at a salary of 16*l.* per annum. No time was ever mentioned for which he was to hold his situation. No appointment was made in writing, nor any entry in the parish books. After serving for four years, he was dismissed at a quarter's notice. After argument, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "The principle on which this mode of gaining a settlement has been given is undoubtedly notoriety to the parish, but a settlement can only be gained in this mode upon the terms of the act of parliament; viz. by executing 'a public annual office or charge in the parish:' which brings us back to the question, whether that which the pauper was appointed to execute were a public office or charge? And it appears to me that he cannot be considered as a public officer. An office must be derived either immediately or mediately from the crown, or be constituted by statute; and this is neither one nor the other, but merely arising out of a contract with the parish, which the parish officers with the consent of the parishioners are by the statute enabled to make with any person for the maintenance and employment of the poor. It might as well be said that a nurse employed to look after the pauper, or any other employed in like manner to do any part of the parish business, was an officer. The question might admit of a different consideration if any distinction had been established between an office and a charge, but I can find none either in any case or in the sense of the statute. The determination of the appointment at a quarter's notice repels the presumption that it was an annual office or charge; therefore as far as we can collect the intended duration of the employment from the acts of the parties, it appears that the parish might put an end to it within the year if they thought proper; upon the whole therefore it appears neither to have been an office, nor a public office, nor a public annual office within the statute." Lawrence, J. said, "It was clearly no office; but

Master of a workhouse held not to be a public officer.

Time of determination evidence of contract.

2. What Office will gain a Settlement.

An appointment from one court till the steward should please to hold another confers no settlement.

No settlement gained by serving an office to which a local statute authorized the appointment for a discretionary period.

only an employment arising out of a contract, between which and an office there is a great distinction. (Rex v. Milborne, ante, 747.) And he agreed in the definition of the word charge, that it must be taken to mean something of the same kind with office, though it may not commonly be known under the name of an office." Le Blanc, J. "If this were to be deemed a public annual office or charge within the act, it would extend to every case where a person had a duty to perform which from its nature must be known to the parish in general. But there is a difference between an employment created by the parties themselves, which they may put an end to whenever they please, and that which exists or is created by law. Now this man was in the former situation. It was in the option of the overseers and parishioners to have such a person in such an employment or not; and they could put an end to the employment altogether whenever they pleased. It was created by themselves, and depended upon their contract. I cannot therefore call this an office or charge within the meaning of the act of parliament." Both orders confirmed.

Rex v. Bow, 8 T. R. 445. The pauper, at a Michaelmas court-leet, holden by adjournment for Chumleigh, November 16, 1792, was appointed to the office of ale-taster to the borough, and duly sworn, according to the custom of the manor, to execute the office for one year thence next ensuing, or until he should be lawfully discharged. He entered upon the office and served till November 1, 1793, when at a similar court holden by adjournment a new officer was appointed. No business is transacted at the original court; and there is only one original court in the year, and it is held within the month after Michaelmas at the convenience of the steward. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This is an attempt to carry the point further than in Rex v. Newstead, (ante, 358). This is not an appointment for a year, from one moveable feast to another, but from one court till it should please the steward to hold another. The statute is express, and Rex v. Fittleworth (ante, 744,) shows that it has been construed according to its plain meaning."

Rex v. Middlewich, 4 Nev. & M. 682; 3 Ad. & El. 156. Appeal against an order whereby M. C. Yarwood was removed from Church Hulme to Middlewich. Order confirmed. Case:—Both townships support their own poor. The pauper, two years before the date of the order, being then settled in Middlewich, was duly appointed under the Cheshire Constabulary Act assistant petty constable for fourteen townships in the county of Chester, of which Church Hulme was one, and under that appointment he served the office fifteen months, during the whole of which time he resided in Church Hulme. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the pauper gained a settlement in Church Hulme by serving an office. Lord Denman, C. J. "If this office were annual in its nature we should have wished to see the appointment. But we think that it is not annual in its nature, and that it may last for such time as the justices think proper. The case of Rex v. Lew (8 B. & C. 655; 3 M. & R. 369; ante, 745;) seemed at first to present a difficulty in the way of this view. But, first, the assistant overseer's office corresponds with that of overseer, which is annual, and by the statute (59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7,) it is to continue till the appointment is revoked, or till the officer resign. Secondly, the salary is to be annual by the same. Thirdly, in Rex v. Lew the salary was in fact annual. The case is therefore easily distinguishable from the present, where the duration of the office depends on the discretion of the justices." Little-dale, J. "I am of the same opinion. In Rex v. Lew the officer was an assistant overseer, appointed under the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, which directs that he shall execute all such duties of overseer of the poor as shall be expressed in the warrant of appointment, in like manner and as fully to all intents and purposes as the same may be executed by an ordinary overseer. Now the office of an ordinary overseer is annual. The person appointed assistant overseer is to continue in office till he shall resign or till his appointment shall be revoked, it is therefore an annual office defeasible. Rex v. Lew is consequently inapplicable. By the words in the act now before us, the appointment is to be for so long as the justices think expedient, it is therefore not an annual office." Patteson, J. "In Rex v. Lew the appointment, if for less than a year, would not have been valid." Coleridge, J. "I am of the same opinion. If the office were annual in itself, we should recur to the appointment, in order to see whether it was annual, in fact for a year; there is nothing to show that it would be an annual office. I have always understood that the office must be such, that if the appointment were general, it would be assumed that the tenure of it was to be for a year." Order of sessions confirmed.

2. What Office will gain a Settlement.

Rex v. Newmarket, St. Mary, 3 Ad. & El. 151; 4 Nev. & Man. 693, S. C. Appeal against an order whereby John Porter was removed from Fordham to Newmarket, St. Mary. Order quashed. Case:—The appellants relied upon a settlement in the respondent parish, derived from the pauper's father, who whilst residing in that parish served there for two years the office of pinder. He was appointed at a court baron held for the manor of Fordham Biggen, on the 5th of September 1787; the appointment being entered on the court rolls in the following words: "And lastly, the said homage did elect John Porter pinder for the town of Fordham for the year ensuing, and until another person be chosen in his stead. And the said John Porter came into court and was duly sworn to execute the said office." The first entry on the court rolls of the manor of Fordham Biggen which can be found of the appointment of any officer, is at a court baron held on the 1st of November, 1693. From that period to the year 1810, when the parish of Fordham was inclosed, there were four courts leet with courts baron, and a great majority of courts baron without a leet, at which the pinders and other officers of the manor were appointed and sworn in. In the other instances of courts leet and courts baron being held together (except one where the pinder was appointed by the homage only) the pinders and other officers of the manor were elected by the jury of the leet. From 1739 to 1794 there were eight consecutive courts baron, at which certain persons were in like manner as the pauper's father elected pinders by the homage and sworn in, and there was not one instance on the court rolls of any such appointment at a court leet held as such only. There are in all five manors in the respondent parish, of which the manor of Soham and Fordham is the most extensive; but there is no paramount manor. There were previous to the inclosure of the parish three commons in the manor of Fordham Biggen, over which the inhabitants of Fordham had common rights. There were also two pounds, one belonging to the manor of Fordham Biggen, the other to the manor of Soham and Fordham. The only question for the opinion of the court was, whether the pauper's father was legally placed in the office of pinder under the above-mentioned appointment by the homage of the court baron, 1787, so as to acquire a settlement in the respondent parish. The case stated as above was argued in Easter term, 1832, when this court sent it back to the sessions to find whether the town of Fordham were co-extensive with the parish of Fordham, and more or less extensive than the manor of Fordham Biggen. At a subsequent session the justices found that the town of Fordham was co-extensive with the parish of Fordham, and was more extensive than the manor of Fordham Biggen, and it confirmed the order of removal subject as before to the opinion of this court. Per curiam: "The rule for quashing the last order of sessions must be discharged." Order of sessions confirmed.

Appointment to the office of pinder for the town of F. being made at a manor court, which manor did not comprehend the whole of the town of F.: it was held that no settlement was gained, as the homage of one manor cannot elect an officer for a parish which lies in several manors.

Rex v. Ilminster, 1 East, 83. Removal from Honiton to Ilminster confirmed. The case originally stated was, that the pauper was appointed governor of the workhouse in Ilminster, under the annual salary of 20*l.* He served for five years, and regularly received his salary: at the end of that time he was dismissed: at the time of his appointment he was put by the parish officers into possession of certain apartments in the workhouse appointed for that purpose, and which had been occupied by the former governor. Upon the first amended case these words following were added after the word officers, "(in conjunction with two of the principal people of the town, who acted as inspectors of the accounts and conduct of the overseers.)" Lord Kenyon, after the case had been argued the first time, intimated a strong opinion against the settlement, considering the appointment of the pauper merely in the nature of a servant to the parish officers, by whom he might have been dismissed at any time. In the second amended case it was stated, that the said office of governor "was a public annual office." And the court then said, that by this finding, "that it was a public annual office," they had precluded any further discussion. (a)

Governor of a workhouse, if found by the sessions to be a public annual office, gains a settlement.

2. What Office will gain a Settlement.

A female organist at a chapel, appointed by a select vestry at an annual salary, paid half yearly, and which she held nearly four years, being then dismissed on complaint by an order of vestry, does not thereby gain a settlement; it not being such an office as the statute contemplated.

Rex v. St. George, Hanover Square, 2 Nev. & M. 505; 5 B. & Ad. 571. Appeal against an order, whereby Catherine Seaman was removed from St. George, Hanover Square, to St. Peter, Paul's Wharf. Order quashed. Case:—The parish of St. George, Hanover Square, is governed by a select vestry, consisting of 101 persons. In the year 1827 a chapel was erected in North Audley Street, in the said parish; and on the 21st of January, 1828, the vestry of that parish took into consideration what name should be given to the chapel, then nearly finished, and resolved that the same should be called St. Mark's Chapel, and that advertisements should be published, stating that the vestry would meet on the 11th of February to appoint an organist for the chapel. On the 11th of February, 1828, an election took place at the board room in Mount Street, by the select vestry, of an organist to the said chapel, on which occasion there were about forty candidates, and the election fell upon the pauper, as appears by the following minute, "11th of February, 1828. The vestry, pursuant to their resolution of January 21st, proceeded to the election of an organist for St. Mark's Chapel, and appointed Miss Catherine Seaman to that situation, to commence when the organ was in readiness for use, at a salary of 60*l.* per annum." In May, 1828, the organ being completed, she entered upon her duty, and continued to perform it, and to reside in the respondent parish, and received her salary from the vestry through the vestry clerk half yearly (with the exception of the first payment, which was 25*l.* only from May to Michaelmas, 1828), until the 31st of March, 1832, when she was discharged by the vestry, as appears by the following entry in their minutes: "At a meeting of the vestry held on the 31st of March, 1832, much discontent having been expressed by the pew-renters from time to time to the Rev. Allen Cooper, the minister of St. Mark's Chapel, of the total inefficiency of the present organist, resolved that she be removed; and that the Rev. Mr. Cooper be requested to look out for and recommend a competent person to succeed her, upon the same salary as is now enjoyed by her; it being understood that the person to be appointed shall continue to pay her her salary up to Midsummer next." The question for the decision of the court was, whether, under these circumstances, the pauper gained a settlement in St. George, Hanover Square. Denman, C. J. "The principle on which this kind of settlement rests is notoriety; but that must be attained by serving an office within the meaning of the statute. The question is, whether the present be a case in which that has been done. I think it comes within the objection which prevailed in Rex v. Mersham (7 East, 167, ante, 747). According to the argument which has been urged, a settlement would be gained in every case where the party had executed an annual office which was notorious. But I think an office created by the parties themselves, who agree upon the employment, and which they may put an end to at pleasure, does not come within the meaning of the statute." Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion. If a settlement was gained in this case, it might be said that the fiddlers and bassoon players in a country church, or even the pew openers, executed offices within the statute." Taunton, J. "The office of organist does not necessarily give notoriety; for when persons hear the organ it does not follow that they know who plays it." Patteson, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Corfe Mullen, 1 Bar. & Adol. 211. J. Miller was removed from Sturminster Marshall to Corfe Mullen. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper having obtained a settlement by hiring and service in the parish of Corfe Mullen, went to reside in the tithing or chapelry of West Holme, a place maintaining its own poor, as shepherd to Mr. Kemp. On the 5th of October, 1824, a court leet for the hundred of Hasler was held, in which hundred the tithing or chapelry of West Holme is situated. At that court

A tithing-man, going out of office, nominated his shepherd, Miller, to serve as tithing-man the following year. Miller was chosen at a court leet holden Octo-

(a) It will be observed that this position is denied in Rex v. Clixby (ante, 743).

Kemp, the tithing-man for the preceding year, appeared, and acted in his office of tithing-man. On the same day, at the same court, Kemp nominated the pauper as a fit person to serve the office of tithing-man for the tithing or chapelry of West Holme, and he was appointed by the jury for one year. The entry from the books of the court leet appeared as follows:—"October 5th, 1824. Tithing-man of West Holme. George Kemp appears, and Joseph Miller is chosen into the office for the year ensuing, and he is directed to be sworn in before a magistrate within one month, under the penalty of 5*l*." But Miller not being present, the steward gave him notice of the appointment as follows:—"Hundred of Hasler to wit. At a court leet held this day for the said hundred you were chosen tithing-man for the tithing of West Holme, and you are hereby required to be sworn into your office before a magistrate for the county of Dorset, within one month after the date hereof, under the penalty of 5*l*. Given under my hand and seal in the said court the 5th day of October, 1824. E. Castleman, Steward." When this notice was shown to the pauper he refused to receive it, or to pay the usual fee to the person who served it. The pauper was never sworn into office, but executed all its duties. He was not a householder either at the time of his appointment, or at any time while serving the office; but occupied part of a house, rent free, found for him by his master, Mr. Kemp, in West Holme, and resided there while serving the said office. On the 4th of October, 1825, another court leet for the hundred of Hasler was held, when the pauper was present, and acted as the tithing-man of West Holme, and paid the essoign pence and lawday silver, as is customary with other persons serving the office. At this court another person was appointed tithing-man for the year ensuing. The entry of this appointment in the books of the court leet was exactly in the same form as the entry of Miller's in the preceding year. One objection was, that the pauper did not serve the office on his own account, but as deputy to Kemp. Bayley, J. "The sessions have not found so, and we cannot infer it. In Rex v. All Cannings (ante, 740,) the facts expressly appeared on the case. It was urged, that the pauper here was not of the description of persons liable to serve the office." Parke, J. "That might have been an objection to the appointment, but he has been appointed and served. A similar objection was noticed in Rex v. All Cannings, but only as tending to show that the pauper served as a deputy." Bayley, J. delivered the judgment of the court: "The question in this case was, whether the pauper obtained a settlement in the tithing of West Holme, by serving the office of tithing-man for that place. He was appointed to the office on the 5th October, 1824, and we think we must infer from the special case, that he accepted the office on that day, and executed all its duties until and upon the 4th October, 1825, which, as the law does not regard the fraction of a day, constitutes 'one whole year.' There is no doubt that the pauper acted on his own account, and the objection that he was not compellable to serve the office is of no weight. The pauper was never sworn into his office; and the only remaining point in the case is, whether that circumstance was necessary to enable him to gain a settlement? The statute 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, upon which this question turns, provides, 'That if any person who shall come to inhabit in any town or parish, shall for himself, and on his own account, execute any public annual office or charge in the said town or parish during one whole year,' &c. 'then he shall be adjudged and deemed to have a legal settlement in the same, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as is hereby before required.' The words of this section, in their ordinary sense, require nothing more than the execution of the office de facto during one whole year; there is nothing in the context to induce us to come to a conclusion that the legislature meant to use the words in any other than that sense; and this construction is consistent with the supposed object of the statute, which appears to have been to substitute the notoriety of the execution of the office for the notice in writing required in most other cases, as explained in the judgment of Lord Tenterden, in Rex v. Holy Cross, Westgate (post, 753). But it is said, that this statute and that of 9 & 10 W. III. c. 11, are in pari materia, and are to be ber 5th, 1824, and was ordered to be sworn into office within one month, under the penalty of five pounds. He never was sworn in, but executed the office; while he did so he was not a householder, but lived in part of a house found for him by his employer. His successor was chosen at a court leet October 4th, 1825: Held, that he gained a settlement in the place for which he served, although not sworn, by executing there, on his own account, a public annual office for one whole year, pursuant to 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6; and that the question whether or not he was legally placed in the office, according to 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 11, did not arise, he not having been a certificated person.

construed together; and that the latter statute may be considered as giving a parliamentary exposition of the former: and if so, that no one can be 'legally placed' in an office, unless he takes the oath under which it should be executed. We do not, however, think that the latter statute is to be deemed to alter or affect the construction of the former, as the latter relates to a particular class of persons, namely, certificated paupers alone; and it is impossible to say that the legislature did not mean to superadd, with reference to that class of persons, another circumstance, namely, that of being legally placed in the office, as a condition of their obtaining a settlement. It becomes therefore, in this view of the case, unnecessary to decide whether the pauper was 'legally placed' in the office, according to this latter statute, not having taken the required oath. There can be no question that he executed the office de facto, nor indeed can there be any that, for some purposes at least, he executed it de jure. Swearing in may be rendered necessary, either to enable the party to serve the office, or to impose a greater sanction on his discharge of it. We think, in this case, the latter is the object. A month is given for taking the oath; yet the year commences from the appointment. Can it then be said that the party is not in office till he is sworn? In one of the cases which have been cited, the swearing in of a tithing-man at the end of half a year was considered as taking effect ab initio. It is laid down in an anonymous case, 1 Ventr. 267, that a churchwarden (and no distinction can be drawn between his case and that of a constable) may execute his office before he is sworn, though it is convenient he should be sworn. And it may be observed, that a mandamus to swear such an officer in is referred to by the court immediately afterwards in that case; which must therefore be issued, not on the ground that the oath is essential to the due execution of the office, but because it is fit and proper for the interest of the public that the office should be executed under its sanction. But on the statute 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, alone, we think it clear that the pauper gained a settlement in West Holme by the execution of the office de facto." Order of sessions quashed.

3. Of the Time of Serving.

Serving a part of the year only is not sufficient. A person executing an office is removable when chargeable.

3. OF THE TIME OF SERVING.

Rex v. Fittleworth, Burr. S. C. 238; 2 Bott, 252. A certificate man was elected and sworn a tithing-man. He executed the office a little more than five months, and then became chargeable, and was removed. Lee, C. J. "The question is, whether a person coming into a parish under a certificate, who is made a tithing-man, and exercises his office in part only of the parish, and for half a year only, gains a settlement? To this three objections have been made: 1st, that the order of removal is bad, because at the time when he was removed he was in the execution of a public office, from whence they had no power to remove him; and it has been compared to the case of a servant, whom the justices cannot remove: but for this they have not cited any authority; and if a servant should become chargeable to a parish, I think he may be removed. This act of the 8 & 9 Will. III. describes the time when a certificate man shall be removed, that is, when he becomes chargeable, without any limitation; so that the justices by this act had certainly power to remove the pauper. The second objection is, that this office did not extend to the whole parish: but it is stated in the order that he exercised it in the parish; which is complying with the very words of the act of parliament, which says that he shall execute it in such, and not through such parish. As to the third objection, which is the chief, I do not know that any case has been determined as to that purpose. That of Garsington was never determined, and besides differs essentially from the present case, as Sir John Strange has shown. The 3 & 4 W. & M. differs in words from this act, yet it would be odd to place him on a different footing from other paupers, who are to gain settlements by the exercises of annual offices, and that is for and during a year; which must be the construction of this act, otherwise the bare placing a certificate man in office would gain him a settlement immediately. As to the case of Mr. Lloyd about the taking of a tenement, there are no words about his living a year, and it is the credit he gets by the taking that fixes him in the parish; but in the present case he gains it by the execution of the office; and though the words of the 3 & 4 W. & M. have no relation by words to this act, yet I should think it ought to have the same construction." Wright and Dennison, Js. of the same opinion.

Cold Ashton v. Woodchester, Burr. S. C. 444; 2 Bott, 253. There was a custom to serve the office of tithing-man for half a year only at a time. By Lord Mansfield, C.J. "This cannot be an annual office to gain a settlement. In this case the pauper had served the office of tithing-man in Cold Ashton for half a year, and twenty days after for another half year.

Rex v. Holy Cross Westgate, 4 B. & A. 619. Order of removal of Edward Best from Holy Cross, Westgate, in Canterbury, to Holy Cross, Westgate, in Kent, confirmed. Case:—The city of Canterbury is divided into six wards, and two of the twelve aldermen of the city are appointed for each ward; a court-leet is held annually by the two aldermen, at which a constable and borsholder for the ward are chosen. In October, 1817, and for some time previously the pauper resided and carried on business in St. Mary Northgate, Canterbury, which is in the ward of Northgate, that ward containing the parishes of St. Mary Northgate and St. Alphage. On the 21st of October, 1817, the annual court-leet was held for the ward of Northgate, at which the pauper was duly chosen borsholder of the ward for the year ensuing, and upon being sent for he attended at the court and was regularly sworn in; the staff of office was delivered to him by the former borsholder. A day or two afterwards a dispute arose between some persons, and he was desired to preserve the peace; in consequence of which he fetched his staff and put an end to the dispute, but he did not do any other act as borsholder than that. After he had been sworn in a few days he was desired to attend the monthly meeting of the magistrates, and he attended with his staff; he was called into the council chamber and informed by the then mayor that as it was a question as to what parish he belonged, he must leave his staff there for the present, and that he should know further about it in a few weeks; he left his staff accordingly, and not having heard any thing more, he did not act, nor was he called upon afterwards to act as borsholder. The steward of the leet notified the pauper to the magistrates as the sworn borsholder for the ward of Northgate, and he appeared so in the list of peace officers entered in their record book. The succeeding court-leet for the ward of Northgate was holden on the 20th of October, 1818, and the pauper resided during the whole of the year in St. Mary Northgate. The duties that were required to be performed by the borsholder of the ward of Northgate during the remainder of the year were performed by another person, who resided part of that time within the ward, and part in the borough of Staplegate, adjoining to the ward, but not within the jurisdiction of the city of Canterbury; but that other person was not chosen or sworn in as borsholder of the ward, nor did he attend the sessions in that character, nor was his name enrolled in the list of peace officers. Abbott, C. J. "At the time of passing 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 6, it was possible for any individual to gain a settlement by a residence for forty days in the parish. The object of that act was to add to this the necessity of delivering to the parish officers a notice in writing, which they were required to read in the church, and to register, in order that there might be public notice to all the inhabitants that they might, in case the individual was likely to become chargeable, procure his removal from the parish. But that act contemplated two cases in which no notice in writing was to be given, viz. the serving an annual office, and the payment of parish rates. Its object was obviously notoriety. Now this is only attained by the actual execution of the office, and not by the appointment to it. Although therefore it does appear that the pauper in this case was irregularly discharged from his office, and another person irregularly appointed to succeed him, yet as he did forbear to do the duties of it, I think he cannot within the statute be considered as having executed a public annual office in the parish, and that he did not thereby gain a settlement." Order confirmed.

3. Of the Time of Serving.

Serving office for half a year at a time only, gains no settlement.

A pauper was legally sworn in as borsholder at a court leet, and executed the office a few days, when he was irregularly discharged from office by two magistrates, and another person appointed: but he acquiesced in this, and did not in fact execute the office: Held, that this did not confer a settlement.

3. Of the Time of Serving.

See also Rex v. Yalding (ante, 741), one of the points in which case was that the pauper had not served for a year, which was held a good objection.

4. Residence.

If a church yard lie in two parishes, the sexton may gain a settlement in the one in which he resides, although no part of the church lies within that parish.

4. RESIDENCE.

Rex v. Liverpool, 3 T. R. 118. Samuel Littlemore removed from Liverpool to Stourton. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, about sixteen years ago, came to reside in Liverpool, and while he resided there was elected sexton by the proprietors of seats in the church or chapel of St. James's, at a vestry held in the presence of the churchwardens, being recommended by the then minister to that office, and executed that office six years, lodging all the while in Liverpool. The boundary between Walton and Liverpool is in the chapel-yard of St. James's; the church and part of the church-yard stands in Walton, and the other part of the church-yard is in Liverpool; but no corpse was ever buried in that part (within the parish of L.) whilst the pauper executed the office, though corpses have been buried there since. The inhabitants of Liverpool, seatholders, and others, constantly attend the church of St. James's, in proportion of fifty to one of any other parish or place. It was admitted that the office of sexton was such as would entitle the person executing it to a settlement; but it was contended that the office must be executed in the town or place, in order to give a settlement. But here he was chosen sexton to the chapel of St. James's, which stands in Walton; and it appears that he never executed any part of the office in Liverpool. The executing of an annual office is equal to giving notice, but the execution of this office in Walton was no notice to the parish of Liverpool. The sexton is appointed to the church, and not to the church-yard; for it appears from the definition of a sexton in Burn's Eccl. Law and Chamb. Dict. that he is an officer to take care of the vessels, vestments, &c. belonging to the church, and to attend the minister and churchwardens at church; and this office is entirely distinct from that of a grave-digger. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "There is no doubt but that part of the office of sexton consists in digging graves; this is different from that of sacrist, which is an office scarcely known since the Reformation, except in some of the cathedrals, whose duty it is to take care of the sacred vestments. And it is as clear that the office of sexton is a public office within the meaning of 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6. In this case the church-yard lies in two parishes, and the sexton gained a settlement in that in which he resided." Per curiam. Order of sessions confirmed.

Warden for a borough, which extends itself into several parishes, gains a settlement in the parish in which he lives.

St. Mary v. St. Lawrence in Reading, 19 Vin. Abr. 379; 2 Bott, 156. Mr. Foley says the question was, whether the being warden for the borough, and serving that office for a year in the borough, which extends itself into several parishes, is such a service of an annual office as will gain a settlement? And by the court it was held to be an office, the serving of which for one whole year was sufficient to gain him a settlement in that parish within the borough in which he lived. Foley, 121. But in this report there must probably have been some mistake. A churchwarden is a parochial officer, and his office doth not extend into several parishes. Mr. Viner, from a manuscript note which he had of this case, says, "The officer is mentioned there to be warden of the borough (which is most likely), being in nature of a tithing-man to execute the process of the justices of the borough. But he is not to execute his office in one parish only, but all over the borough. And it was doubted whether this was a settlement or not; because he was not elected into this office by the parish, neither was the exercise of his office confined to the parish; yet he is a public officer, and his office is partly exercised within the parish, so that the parishioners must take notice of him." And by the court it was held a good settlement, being within the express words of the statute of executing an office in a town or parish.

Constable of a city, comprehending several parishes, gains a settlement in that parish in which he lives.

St. Maurice v. St. Mary Kallendar, in Winchester, 1 Burr. S. C. 27; 2 Bott, 158. William West, a certificate man from St. Thomas's, came into St. Mary Kallendar, in Winchester. He was afterwards chosen one of the constables for the city of Winchester, which city consists of several other parishes besides that of St. Mary Kallendar, and was legally placed in that office, and executed it in and through all parts of that city for one whole year; during which time he resided in the parish of St. Mary Kallendar. By the court, unanimously: "He avoided his certificate, and consequently gained a settlement in St. Mary Kallendar by executing this office in that parish, though chosen by the whole city, and not by the parish of St. Mary singly, and though not a mere parish office. For, in the words of the act, he executed an annual office in the parish being legally placed in such office."

Rex v. Amlwch, 4 B. & C. 757; 3 D. & R. 303; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 304. Order of removal of John Owen from Amlwch, in the county of Anglesea, to Llanerchymedd, quashed. Case:—The market town or village of Llanerchymedd lies partly in the parish of Amlwch, the church of which is five or six miles distant, partly in two other parishes, and partly in the vill of Llanerchymedd, to which place this removal is made. The vill of Llanerchymedd lies in the middle of the village, and consists of a small plot of land, the property of the parson, on which stand the whole of the church and churchyard. There are also within it twelve or fifteen houses, and a few acres of land. It has of late maintained its own poor, and the inhabitants have been assessed to the land tax, as in the hamlet of Bryngwallen, which is in the parish of Ceidio. No churchwardens were ever known to be appointed, and no evidence was given of the appointment of a constable, although it appeared that the pauper's father had been seen acting as one for several years. The church or chapel of Llanerchymedd is kept in repair of right, one side thereof by the family who own the Llwydiarth estate, and the other side by the family who own the Chrodden Issa estate. That part of the village which is in the parish of Amlwch is all on the Llwydiarth estate, as are also the hall, and several farms in the vicinity. The chapelry of Llanerchymedd is attached to the rectory of Llanbenlan, in the presentation of the Bishop of Bangor, the parson of which receives the rents of the glebe lands in and near the vill of Llanerchymedd, appoints the curate, and pays his salary. The emoluments of the curate arise partly from his salary, and partly from offerings and oblations, and other payments termed surplice fees. The inhabitants of the vill have no private sitting places in the church; all those on the south side belong to the Chrodden Issa estate; those on the north side belong to the Llwydiarth estate, which is in the parish of Amlwch, and the chief part of the congregation are dwellers on that estate. A proportion of the elements used at the administration of the sacrament at Llanerchymedd church is supplied by Amlwch. The clerk and sexton of Llanerchymedd appear to have been appointed by the Llwydiarth family, malgré the minister; his emoluments arise from sweeping the church and washing the surplices, which are not paid by the inhabitants of the vill, and also from offerings and other fees pertaining to his office. John Owen, the pauper, was appointed clerk and sexton of Llanerchymedd in March, 1795, and he has executed the office to the present time, dwelling altogether in that part of the village of Llanerchymedd which lies in Amlwch. The pauper's father was settled in the vill of Llanerchymedd. It had been the uniform practice of the minister of Llanerchymedd to attend with his clerk at the houses of the inhabitants of Amlwch, in the village and its vicinity, for the purpose of visiting the sick, administering private baptism, and reading a prayer prior to the removal of bodies that were about to be buried at Llanerchymedd church. No limits were assigned as to the distance from the village within which these several services had been performed by the minister and clerk of Llanerchymedd. No marriages of the inhabitants have been solemnized in Llanerchymedd. The witnesses differed in opinion, whether these services rendered to the inhabitants of Amlwch by the minister and clerk were rendered as a matter of right or of indulgence. The sessions were of opinion that the pauper had held an annual office, a part of the duties of which were performed in the parish of Amlwch, where he resided, and on that ground quashed the order. Bayley, J. "The question is, whether the pauper exercised a public annual office within the parish of Amlwch, within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Will. III. c. 11, s. 6? It enacts, 'That if any person shall execute any public annual office in the parish during one whole year, then he shall be adjudged to have a legal settlement in the same, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as is hereby before required.' The legislature considered the executing of an office within the parish to be so notorious, as to form an equivalent to the notice required in other cases. The question is, whether the pauper acquired a settlement by executing the office of clerk and sexton in a part of the parish in which he resided? Now it is not necessary in order to acquire a settlement by serving an office, that the duties of the office should be co-extensive with the parish. If it be notorious to the parish that the office is exercisable within it, that is enough. In Rex v. St. Mary, Reading (ante, 754), which was the case of a constable, and in St. Maurice v. St. Mary Kalendar (ante, 754), which was the case of a tithing-man, the duties of the office were performed in several parishes besides those in which the paupers resided. In Rex v. Fittleworth (ante, 752), a certificate man was elected and sworn a tithing-man for a tithing which did not extend through all the parish of Fittleworth, but comprehended that part of it where he resided; and the court said it was not necessary that the office should extend throughout all the parish; the act only required executing some annual office in the parish. It is sufficient, therefore, to give a settlement in a parish, that the duties of the office served extend into that parish. Then, were the duties of any part of the office of clerk and sexton of the vill and chapelry of Llanerchymedd of right to be performed within the parish of Amlwch? Whether the vill and the chapelry are in point of fact co-extensive does not appear; they are not necessarily so; for Llanerchymedd being an extra-parochial place, the duties of the office of clerk and sexton of the chapelry may be confined and limited to the vill. The founder of a chapel may, by consent of the rector, fix the limits of the chapelry; and it was matter of evidence, therefore, whether the chapelry extended beyond the vill. Upon that point there was contradictory evidence; but altogether it seems to me that the justices have arrived at the right conclusion, that the duties of the office were of right performed in the parish of Amlwch; and if that be so, the pauper has acquired a settlement by discharging some of the duties of the office within the parish. The rectory of Llanbenlan, to which Llanerchymedd is attached, appoints the curate, and pays his salary; but the owner of the Llwydiarth estate appoints the clerk, and repairs the chapel. The chapel is appropriated part to the use of the tenants of the Llwydiarth estate, and part to the use of the tenants of another estate. The inhabitants of the vill have no seats. It has been the uniform practice of the minister of Llanerchymedd occasionally to attend with his clerk at the houses of the inhabitants of Amlwch; whether as matter of duty or of indulgence was left in doubt; but in my opinion the sessions have done right in concluding that it was done as matter of obligation. Then was not this a description of office notorious in the parish of Amlwch? The fact of the parish having supplied a portion of the sacramental elements, is a very clear circumstance to show its notoriety. Part of the charges made by the parish officers of Amlwch in their accounts must have been for bread and wine supplied to the chapel of Llanerchymedd, and that affords a strong argument that the chapel was erected for the benefit of the parish as well as of the vill." Holroyd and Littledale, Js. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

To gain a settlement by office, the party must reside in the parish where it is executed.

Rex v. Woodbridge, 1 Nev. & M. 457; 4 B. & Ad. 711. Appeal against an order whereby Joseph Bird was removed from St. Matthew to Woodbridge. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was on the 29th of September, 1820, appointed by the bailiffs of Ipswich a crane porter at the common quay in that town. The business of the crane porters is to unload vessels arriving at the common quay, it is a public annual office and the pauper served it for a year. The quay where the vessels are unloaded is situated in the parish of St. Mary at the quay at Ipswich, but during the whole of the year the pauper resided in the parish of St. Matthew in the same town; and the sessions, thinking the office was executed in the parish of St. Mary at the quay, were of opinion that no settlement was gained in St. Matthew's. If the court should be of the same opinion the order of sessions was to be confirmed, if of the contrary opinion the order to be quashed. Denman, C. J. "The words of the statute are sufficiently explicit to show that a settlement can be gained only by serving an office in the parish where the party resides. The order of sessions must be confirmed." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Hereford, 10 Bar. & Cres. 832. Removal of S. Hall, widow, and her children from St. Peter to St. Nicholas, both in the county of Hereford. Order confirmed. Case: T. Hall, deceased, the husband of S. Hall, the pauper, gained a legal settlement in the parish of St. Nicholas, Hereford, by renting a tenement. He quitted that house 23d of November, 1827, and lived in the parish of All Saints, Hereford, till the 23d of June, 1828, when he removed to St. Peter, Hereford, and resided in that parish till the time of his death, 29th of December, 1828. On Monday the 2d of October, 1826, he was appointed by the corporation of Hereford to the annual public office of town crier and bellman for the city of Hereford, and also sworn in a constable of the city of Hereford. He was re-appointed and re-sworn on the 1st of October, 1827, and 16th of October, 1828, and he executed the office of town crier and bellman in the city of Hereford, of which the parish of St. Peter forms a part, from the time of his first appointment on the 2d of October, 1826, up to the time of his death, 29th of December, 1828; he was also liable and ready to execute the office of constable when called on, but never had acted as constable. There were other persons sworn in as constables, who acted as such in the city. T. Hall resided forty days and upwards, namely, from the 23d of June, 1828, to the 29th of December, 1828, in the parish of St. Peter's, Hereford. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether the residence of T. Hall in St. Peter's parish for forty days and upwards (while executing the annual public office of crier and bellman in all the parishes in the city of Hereford, namely, from the 23d of June, 1828, to 29th of December, 1828), was sufficient to gain a settlement? if it be, his widow, S. Hall, and family, have gained a settlement in St. Peter's parish; but if that residence be not sufficient, their settlement is in St. Nicholas's parish. Lord Tenterden, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court; and, after stating the facts of the case, proceeded as follows: "We are of opinion that the pauper did gain a settlement in the parish of St. Peter's, Hereford. The question turns entirely on the statute 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, which enacts, 'that if any person who shall come to inhabit in any town or parish during one whole year, shall on his own account execute any public office in the town or parish during one whole year, then he shall be judged to have a legal settlement in the same, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as is hereby before required.' Now, the office of crier is undoubtedly an office within the meaning of the statute; it need not be confined to a particular parish; but an office in a city containing several parishes will confer a settlement. By the statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, a party coming into a parish to settle gained a settlement by forty days' residence. The statute 1 Jac. II. c. 17, s. 3, enacted, 'that the forty days' continuance in the parish intended by the former statute to make a settlement, should be accounted from the delivery of a notice in writing of the house of abode, &c. to the churchwarden or overseer of the poor.' The effect of that statute, therefore, was, to prevent a party gaining a settlement until forty days after the delivery of the notice required to the parish officers. Now, the statute 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, after enacting that the forty days shall be accounted from the publication in the church of the notice in writing required to be delivered to the parish officers, substitutes the executing of a public annual office for the notice required in the case of coming to settle upon a tenement; and as in that case a party would be settled in a parish by residing therein forty days after the publication of the notice, by analogy he will gain a settlement by the execution of a public annual office during a year, in any parish where he has last resided for forty days. Here the husband of the pauper did execute a public annual office in the town or parish during one whole year. He comes, therefore, within the very words of the section, and it is a safe rule of construction to adhere to the words of a statute. The seventh section throws some light on the subject. It enacts, 'that if any unmarried person, not having child or children, shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, such service shall be deemed a good settlement therein, though no notice in writing be delivered and published.' Now, although the subsequent statute 8 & 9 Will. III. requires that there shall be a service as well as a hiring for a year, yet, it is clear that a party will gain a settlement by a year's service under a yearly hiring in that parish wherein he has resided for the last forty days; and it is immaterial, in that case, whether the party be hired before or after he comes into the parish. By analogy to the case of hiring and service, it appears to us that the husband of the pauper having been appointed to the office before he came to reside in the parish; and having served that office for one whole year for this as well as for the other parishes of that town, and having resided there for the last forty days during which he executed the office, gained a settlement in the parish of St. Peter's, Hereford. The order of sessions must, therefore, be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

10. Of Settlement by being Charged with and Paying Parish Taxes or Levies.

10. Of Settlement by being Charged with and Paying Parish Taxes or Levies.

By the 3 Will. III. c. 11, s. 6, a person might gain a settlement by being charged with and paying his share towards the public taxes and levies of the town or parish. But by the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 4, it was provided that the person must pay such parochial taxes or levies in respect of a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* or upwards. The effect of which statute was that this mode of acquiring a settlement was seldom relied on, for in most instances where the tenement was of the yearly value of 10*l.*, the occupier could obtain a settlement on other grounds. This was the state of the law from 1795, when the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, was passed, down to 22d June, 1819, the date of the 59 Geo. III. c. 50, by which latter statute this mode of establishing a settlement was revived, as the latter statute required that in order to gain a settlement by renting a tenement, such tenement must be bonâ fide hired for one whole year at 10*l.* a year, and the rent for a year actually paid. But although the means of acquiring that kind of settlement were thus narrowed, the statute did not affect the right of acquiring a settlement by payment of parish taxes, &c. as it previously existed, and consequently if a person paid parish rates, &c. in respect of a tenement of 10*l.* yearly value, whether he had complied with the provisions of 59 Geo. III. or not, it was immaterial, for he was still entitled to his settlement as being charged with and paying public taxes or levies of the parish.

Such the state of the law continued until the 22d June, 1825, when the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, annexed the same conditions to acquisition of a settlement by paying rates as it imposed upon settlements by renting a tenement, and thereby virtually abolished this branch of settlement. (See Rex v. Penryn, 1 Nev. & M. 74; 4 B. & Ad. 224; post, 761.)

The 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, however has added, as a condition to the acquisition of a settlement by renting a tenement, that the occupier shall be assessed to the poor rate, and shall have paid the same for one year. Sect. 66.

Before the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, the annual value of the tenement in respect of which the taxes or levies were charged and paid, was immaterial; and this statute first required that the tenement for which the person was rated should be of the value of 10*l.* a year at the least.

The 3 Will. III. c. 11, s. 6, enacts, "That if any person who shall come to inhabit in any town or parish, shall be charged with and pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the said town or parish, then he shall be adjudged to have a legal settlement in the same, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as is hereby before required." (See Rex v. Lower Heyford, 1 B. & Ad. 75; post, 762.)

Settlement by being charged with and paying public taxes and levies of parish.

By 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, it is enacted, "That no person or persons whomsoever, who shall come into any parish by any such certificate as aforesaid shall be adjudged by any act whatsoever to have procured a legal settlement in such parish, unless he or they shall really and bonâ fide take a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l.*, or shall execute some annual office in such parish, being legally placed in such office."

But by 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 4, "No person after 22d June, 1795, who shall come into any parish, township, or place, shall gain any settlement therein by being charged with and paying his share towards the public taxes or levies of such place, for and on account or in respect of any tenement not being of the yearly value of 10*l.* (a) (See Rex v. Lower Heyford, 1 B. & Ad. 75; post, 762.)

But not if tenement under 10*l.* per annum.

By 43 Geo. III. c. 161, s. 59, it is enacted, "That the payment of any of the duties made payable by this act (viz. the assessed taxes), by any person or persons in any parish or place shall not entitle the person or persons so paying such duties to a settlement in such parish or place."

Payment of duties shall not confer a settlement.

By 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 2, it is enacted, "That no person shall acquire a settlement in any parish or township maintaining its own poor, by or by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying (b) parochial rates for any tenement not being his or her own property, unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person in such parish or township at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year; nor unless such house or building or land shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* actually paid for the term of one whole year at the least; provided always that it shall not be necessary to prove the actual value of such tenement; any thing in any act or acts, or any construction of or implication from any act or acts, or any usage or custom to the contrary, notwithstanding."

The tenement must have been hired and occupied for a year.

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 66, it is enacted, "That from and after the passing of this act no settlement shall be acquired or completed by occupying a tenement, unless the person occupying the same shall have been assessed to the poor rate, and shall have paid the same in respect of such tenement for one year."

gularly rated by and paid a poor rate to the parish of St. Pancras, as occupier of the house. Bayley, J. "The question in this case is, whether the right to a settlement by being rated and paying taxes, was still a subsisting right at the time when the pauper was rated and paid, the tenement which he occupied being of the annual value of 10*l.* or upwards? In this case the pauper could not gain a settlement by renting it, because he had not been in the occupation of it for the period of one whole year, as required by the 59 Geo. III. c. 50. In order to decide the question, we must advert to the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 4, by which it has been contended that this head of settlement was entirely put an end to. It is material to consider what was the law upon this subject before the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, passed. A person rated and paying taxes for a tenement, whatever might be its value, acquired a settlement. The parish in such a case was considered as having adopted him as one of their parishioners. In most instances where the tenement was of the yearly value of 10*l.* the occupier would obtain a settlement upon other grounds. In the course of the argument however one instance was referred to, in which a party occupying such a tenement would not acquire a settlement unless on the ground of paying rates. I allude to the case of a person living in a house belonging to the king, as a servant of the public. The words of the clause to which I have referred do not in terms import an intention of the legislature to abolish this head of settlement entirely. They are qualified and apply expressly to tenements not being of the yearly value of 10*l.* And before we give a general effect to words which are not in themselves general, we ought to see clearly that such was the intention of the legislature. I think that it would be going too far to give a general effect to the words of this act, when we find that being rated and paying, as applied to a tenement of above the annual value of 10*l.* was one medium by which a settlement in all cases might be obtained, and in some instances the only medium. Rex v. Islington and Rex v. Penryn (a) have been referred to in argument, and are certainly at variance with the opinion of the court. In the former however the point did not arise, and the opinion of Lord Kenyon was quite extra-judicial. The real question was, whether the operation of the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 4, was limited to persons who should thereafter come into any parish, or whether it extended to persons residing there before. In Rex v. Penryn the question was again presented to the consideration of Lord Ellenborough, who certainly gave a distinct opinion that it was the intention of the legislature to abolish entirely this head of settlement. The present lord chief justice merely said 'That it was expedient to do away settlements by paying rates for tenements of very small

(a) Rex v. Penryn, 5 M. & Sel. 443. Case:—The pauper occupied four rooms at the yearly rent and of the value of 4*l.*, part of a large dwelling-house of the yearly value of 18*l.* and upwards. The other parts of the dwelling-house were occupied by several other tenants, two of whom also paid 4*l.* a year each for their respective apartments. This dwelling-house had but one outer door and one staircase, and each tenant kept the key of his own apartment. For three years the pauper was rated to the church and poor rates for the whole house, and paid the same, and they were allowed to him out of his rent, except in one instance. He had no concern with or control over the remainder of the house. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It will be in vain for the legislature to make general enactments, if such enactments are to be explained away, and their operation defeated by nice distinctions. The 3d section was undoubtedly meant to abrogate this head of settlement, and the authorities upon it, which perhaps had been carried to some degree of absurdity. Lord Kenyon appears so to have considered the operation of the act; and I am glad that we have his authority for it. If this construction of Lord Kenyon had not been felt to be the correct one, I doubt not that we should have had some observation upon it from the learned reporter with whom the act originated, and which is generally known by his name." Abbott, J. "This act prevents the removal of any person before he is actually chargeable. This rendered it expedient to do away with settlements by notice or paying rates, for tenements of very small value." The Rex v. Islington, the other case over-ruled, is in 1 East, 283.

value.' It does not appear by the report whether my brother Holroyd or myself were present. These two authorities naturally drew the attention of the court carefully to consider the words of 35 Geo. III. and the state of the law as it existed before the passing of that act. If there had been no case before that time, in which the occupier of a tenement of 10*l.* annual value would gain a settlement by the payment of rates, and on that ground only then perhaps the words of the statute might be construed to have a general operation, and to annihilate this head of settlement altogether. One instance however has been mentioned, and possibly there may be others where before the statute 35 Geo. III. a settlement could not be acquired at all by the occupier of such a tenement, unless by the payment of rates; and that being so, I think that we are not warranted in saying that these qualified words were intended by the legislature to have a general and unqualified operation, so as to abrogate entirely this head of settlement. It might perhaps be imagined when the 59 Geo. III. c. 50 passed, that this head of settlement no longer existed; and we have avoided delay in giving our opinion, that if such were the notion, the error may be remedied during the present session of parliament." Order of sessions confirmed. (a)

Rex v. Penryn, 1 Nev. & M. 74; 4 B. & Ad. 224. Appeal against an order of two justices removing H. Gill, widow, and her three children, from Budock to Penryn. Order confirmed. Case:—In 1815, Henry Gill, the deceased husband of the pauper, took of Edgcome, a tenement consisting of three rooms in the borough of Penryn, at the rent of 6*l.* a year. These rooms originally formed part of a dwelling-house, which before 1815 had been subdivided into five distinct dwelling-houses, of which the three rooms occupied by the pauper formed one. The other houses were occupied by other tenants. It was agreed between Gill and the landlord, that Gill should pay all the rates upon the whole property, the amount to be deducted from his rent.

2. Construction and Operation.

Between passing of 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, a settlement might be gained by reason of a party being charged with and paying his share towards the public taxes or levies of the parish, in respect of a tenement above the value of 10*l.*

(a) The sole object of the legislature in passing the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, was to take away the power of removing poor persons likely to become chargeable, and to make them irremovable till actually chargeable. But in doing this it became necessary to guard against certain evils which this change would produce to parishes. For instance, by the old law, a person coming into a parish, and giving a written notice to the overseers, would, if he resided forty days, gain a settlement. The reason of this being, that if likely to be chargeable, the overseers, availing themselves of the knowledge thereby communicated, might remove him. But when the law was altered, and actual substituted for probable chargeability, it would follow that a person very likely to become chargeable might, if he was desirous of doing so, come in and give notice, and in defiance of the overseers, acquire a settlement by only not demanding relief for forty days. In order to remedy this evil, settlement by notice was abolished by section 3. So again, if a person came to settle on a tenement under 10*l.*, he would by the old law be removable if likely to become chargeable; but if he was rated, and paid rates in respect of it for forty days, and was not during that time actually chargeable, he might become settled in the parish, and demand relief on the forty-first day. For this reason such persons rated in respect of tenements under 10*l.* were prevented by section 4 from gaining settlements by paying rates. Similar reasons may be given for the two remaining enactments in the 5th and 6th sections. The whole may be thus summed up: Wherever the change of the law from probable to actual chargeability, enabled persons who were likely to become chargeable to obtain settlements by preventing the parish officers from removing them for forty days, those settlements were abolished; but where by the law as it stood before the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, such persons were irremovable, that act did not interfere with their cases. See the judgment of Holroyd, J., in Rex v. Idle, 4 B. & Ald. 156 (ante, 280). Applying this principle to the case here decided, we may conclude that the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, did not prevent settlements by paying rates in respect of tenements above 10*l.*; for to such cases the inconvenience above pointed out did not apply. By 13 & 14 Car. II. persons coming to settle on tenements above 10*l.*, and consequently persons paying rates in respect of such tenements, were irremovable even though likely to become chargeable. Their situation therefore was not altered by 35 Geo. III. c. 101. 2 B. & C. 128, note.

2. *Construction

Gill was accordingly rated to, charged with, and paid the church, poor, and highway rates, for the borough of Penryn between 1815 and 1830, for the whole premises in one entire sum or charge. The aggregate annual value of these premises amounted to 16*l.*, being the rent which the landlord received for the same; but the value of the tenement occupied by Gill was under 10*l.* a year. In pursuance of the agreement with his landlord, Gill when he settled his rent was allowed the amount of the rates which he had from time to time paid. Gill was not answerable for the rent of any of the other tenants, nor had he any connection or controul over them. Denman, C. J. "The stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, enacts, 'that if any person who shall come to inhabit in any parish, shall be charged with and pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the parish, then he shall be deemed to have a legal settlement in the same, though no such notice in writing be delivered as is thereby before required.' It makes no distinction as to the value of the property in respect of which he is to be charged. It would be too much to say that the intention of the legislature was to give a settlement by rating in those cases only where notice was before required to be given to the parish officers. The judgments which have been relied upon in Rex v. Islington, (1 East, 283) and Rex v. Penryn (5 M. & Sel. 443, ante, 760), were considered with due respect and attention, and overruled in the case of Rex v. St. Pancras (2 B. & C. 122, ante, 759). The order of sessions must be confirmed." Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion. There is a time when a point even of sessions law ought to be considered as settled." Taunton and Patteson, Js. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Dunstan's (see this case, ante, 641), 4 B. & C. 686; 7 D. & R. 178. Abbott, C. J. "It is contended against the order that, upon the true construction of the stat. 35 Geo. III. c. 101, we ought to hold that no person shall gain a settlement by being charged and paying rates in respect of a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.*, unless he is actually rated at that sum in the assessment. Whether that was the intention of the legislature may admit of some doubt, but certainly it is not for us to say that such an effect is to be given to the act of parliament, because the expressions used in the statute are, 'that no person shall gain a settlement by being charged with, and paying his share towards the public taxes of the parish, in respect of any tenement, not being of the value of 10*l.*' Then, must not the yearly value be the criterion, and not the sum at which the tenant is actually rated? In this case I think that the fixtures having made the tenement amount to the value of 10*l.*, we must say that the pauper's husband gained a settlement without any regard to the amount of rate, or the value fixed by the parish officers in their assessment. If we were to lay down a different rule of construction, it might happen that a person could gain no settlement by rating, even though it could be proved to demonstration that the tenement was of the yearly value of 20*l.* or any larger amount." Bayley, J. "I do not agree with the construction put upon the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, in argument. The legislature has said, 'not being of the value of 10*l.*,' which only shows that the tenement must be of that value. If it had been said, 'not rated to the value of 10*l.*,' I should have acceded to the argument."

Rex v. Lower Heyford, 1 Bar. & Adol. 75. John Garratt and children were removed from Banbury to Lower Heyford. Order confirmed. Case:—John Garratt had been for many years previous to his death the clerk of Mr. Bignell, an attorney. In September, 1818, Mr. Bignell took certain premises in Caulcott in the appellant parish, consisting of a cottage, garden, orchard, and about thirteen acres of land, for a term of seven years, at the yearly rent of 38*l.*, and in 1819, he allowed John Garratt (who up to that time lived at Bicester) to reside at the cottage as being nearer to Middleton, his own residence, and more convenient for business. Garratt accordingly removed to Caulcott with his family, and lived in the cottage, to which three acres of land were attached, and which Garratt occupied for several years, but he never had anything to do with the remainder of the land. Mr. Bignell always paid the entire rent to his landlord, and Garratt paid no rent; neither was any reduction made in his salary; and Mr. Bignell stated

It is not necessary that the person should be rated at ten pounds, rating in respect of a tenement of that annual value is sufficient.

An attorney having a cottage and land near his residence, allowed his clerk to occupy them, that he might the more conveniently attend to the business; and suffered him to hold them rent free, as an augmentation of his salary; the clerk was rated as occupier, but the attorney was sometimes called upon to pay, and as his reason for this, that Garratt had a large family, and his salary was low, and as an augmentation to it, he, Mr. Bignell, permitted him to occupy the cottage, &c., valued by Mr. Bignell at 20*l.* per annum. Garratt left the premises when required, without receiving any notice to quit. In the books of the appellant parish Garratt was rated as the occupier of the cottage and land, and he paid the rates, although Mr. Bignell was sometimes called upon to pay, and did pay, the entire rate so assessed. The rates, when paid by Garratt, were either repaid to him by Mr. Bignell, or allowed in account. The sessions determined that there was no such renting of a tenement as would confer a settlement, but confirmed the order on the ground that Garratt had been charged with and paid his share towards the public taxes of the parish. Bayley, J., now delivered the judgment of the court: "This case depended on the settlement of John Garratt, the father of the paupers. The facts were these: Garratt was clerk to Mr. Bignell an attorney. Mr. Bignell rented a cottage and about thirteen acres of land in Lower Heyford, and he suffered Garratt to live in the cottage, to which three acres of land were attached, rent free. For this cottage and land Garratt was rated, and he paid the rates; but Mr. Bignell either repaid him or allowed him the money in account. Whether he was rated for the whole thirteen acres, or only for the cottage and the three, does not appear very clearly upon the case; but if what he was rated for was of the yearly value of 10*l.*, which has not been disputed, it is in our view of the case sufficient. Upon these facts two questions appear to have been made at the sessions, one whether he gained a settlement by coming to settle upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* and the other, whether he gained one by coming to inhabit in the parish, and being charged with and paying his share towards the public taxes and levies of the parish; the sessions thought he gained a settlement by the latter mode, and we think their decision was right. It was decided in Rex v. St. Pancras (ante, 759,) that the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 4, has not entirely abolished this head of settlement, but that it still remains in force where the premises for which the rates are imposed are of the value of 10*l.* a year. The 3 W. & M. c. 11, upon which this head of settlement depends, prescribes the steps where a settlement shall be obtained by notice, and by section 6, provides that if any person who shall come to inhabit in any parish shall be charged with and pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the said parish, he shall be adjudged to have a legal settlement therein, though no notice has been given. The questions, therefore, in this case are, did Garratt come to inhabit in this parish? and was he charged with, and did he pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of this parish? and upon these points there is no doubt. It was never contended that he did not gain a settlement upon these grounds. The grounds upon which it is contended that he did not gain a settlement are, that he was not properly tenant of the cottage and land, though he occupied them, but that he occupied rather as servant to Mr. Bignell; that Mr. Bignell was to be considered as the person rated, though it was in Garratt's name; that there was nothing which could properly be called Garratt's share of the rates; and that, though he paid the rates in the first instance, he was either reimbursed or allowed them in account by Mr. Bignell. It is not necessary for us to decide whether Garratt was properly tenant of this cottage and land (though, as the occupation of this cottage and land was unconnected with, and wholly independent of, the service of Garratt to Bignell, there would be no difficulty in the decision,) but it is not necessary to decide this question; because the settlement in this case depends, not on the coming to settle on a tenement under the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, in which case the relation of landlord and tenant is essential, but on coming to inhabit, and being charged with and paying his share of the public taxes or levies of the parish, under the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, in which case the relation of landlord and tenant is not necessary; but all that is requisite is, that the parish shall rate the party, so as to show that they are aware that he is in the parish, and that he should pay upon such rating. That the relation of landlord and tenant is not necessary in the latter case, under the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, is established by Rex v. Stapleton. There the pauper lived with his mother, and was rated for a house and land she occupied. He occupied nothing in the parish himself, and yet it was decided, that by paying such rate he gained a settlement: for the parish, by rating him, had shown that they knew he was inhabiting within the parish, and had recognized him as an inhabitant, and by making the payment, he had performed that part of the condition the statute imposes upon the person charged, viz. paying his share. It was contended there, as it has been contended here, that as he was not occupier, no part of the rate could be called his share; but that argument was overruled. Now that case is much stronger than this; for there the person rated was not the occupier; here he clearly is." After alluding to the other point, which see post, he added, "that Garratt gained a settlement by payment of rates, and confirmed the decision of the sessions."

3. OF INHABITANCY.

3. Of Inhabitancy.

The pauper must inhabit the parish in which he is rated,

Rex v. St. Michael-at-Thorn, in Norwich, 6 T. R. 536. The pauper resided in one, and was assessed to the land-tax in another parish. The two parishes were consolidated by statute, and the poor maintained out of one joint fund. The removal was from a third parish. Lord Kenyon. "Though they were consolidated for that purpose, as between them and strangers each parish continues a separate and distinct parish. Then the stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. (ante, 753), says, that any person who shall inhabit in any town or parish, and be charged with and pay his share towards the public taxes of the said town or parish, shall thereby obtain a settlement; but in this case the pauper's husband lived in one parish, and was assessed to the land-tax in another, therefore this does not come within the statute."

and reside forty days after being rated, &c.

Rex v. Ringstead, 7 B. & C. 607; 1 Man. & R. 448. Being charged with and paying parochial taxes, did not, before the statute of 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 2, confer any settlement, until the party charged with and paying the same had resided within the parish forty days after he had been so charged; and since that statute passed, no person can acquire a settlement by reason of renting, or paying parochial taxes for any tenement, unless it be of a certain description; and therefore where a pauper had rented a tenement insufficient to confer a settlement under 6 Geo. IV., and in respect thereof had been rated and paid parochial taxes, but had not resided thereon, after such rating and payment, forty days before the passing of the 6 Geo. IV., it was held that he did not thereby acquire any settlement."

4. What are Parochial Taxes or Levies within this Act.

Not assessed taxes. Land-tax held to be a tax within the act.

4. WHAT ARE PAROCHIAL TAXES OR LEVIES WITHIN THIS ACT.

Payment of the assessed taxes shall not entitle any person to a settlement. See 43 Geo. III. c. 161; sect. 59; ante, 759.

Rex v. Bramley, Burr. S. C. 75. John Close, the pauper, inhabited and farmed lands at Armley, for which he was charged and paid two quarterly payments to the land-tax only. By the court: "It hath been a great doubt, whether in this respect the legislature did not mean parochial taxes. But this hath been long gotten over; and the land-tax has been holden to be within the act, from the notice of inhabitancy that arises by the party's being assessed and paying it."

The words "parochial rates," in the 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, applies to the land tax; and is not confined to rates made for the use of the parish, but extends to all levies collected within the parish.

Rex v. East Teignmouth, 1 Bar. & Adol. 244. Appeal against an order of removal of G. White and family from East Teignmouth to Bishopteignton. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper a short time before Lady-day, 1825, hired a mill and some closes of land in the parish of Bishopteignton, at the rent of 30*l.* a year, from the said Lady-day, and occupied the premises, residing thereon, with some intervals, during which he was under arrest, till shortly after Christmas, 1826, when in consequence of his rent being unpaid a negotiation took place between him and his landlord, and he gave up his possession and interest in the property. During his occupancy he was assessed to the parochial and other rates, some of which he paid, and among these one half year's assessment to the land-tax, due on the 12th day of April, 1826, was paid by him in the month of July following. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether the assessment to the land-tax, and payment thereof, conferred a settlement? Bayley, J. "I think that the decision of the court of quarter-sessions was right. I quite agree that where a variety of language is found in several acts of parliament in pari materia, prima facie the inference is that the legislature had a different meaning, but that does not of necessity follow. We must look not only at the words of the statute, but to the cause of making it, to ascertain the intent; 'qui hæret in litera hæret in cortice.' The words of the statute 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, so far as respects this question, are 'that if any person shall be charged with and pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the said parish, he shall be adjudged to have a legal settlement in the same.' The 35 Geo. III. c. 101, with the accuracy which might be expected from the framer of that act, adopts the words of the 3 W. & M. and enacts, 'that no person who shall come into any parish shall gain a settlement in such parish by being charged with and paying his share towards the public taxes or levies of the said parish for or in respect of any tenement not being of the yearly value of 10*l.*' A question had arisen previous to Rex v. Bramley (Burr. S. C. 75, ante, 764), which was under the statute 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, whether the land-tax was a public tax and levy of the parish. It was said not to be a parochial tax; and it was not so in one sense, because when raised it was not applicable to a parochial purpose; but it was held to be one of the public levies and taxes of the parish, and that construction has been put on the act in several cases. Then, if a settlement might be obtained before the passing of the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, by paying public taxes of the parish, are not such taxes 'parochial?' within the meaning of that statute, taking the word in a large sense. The argument is, that the words 'parochial taxes' in the latter statute import taxes raised for parish purposes. But that is not of necessity the meaning of the words 'parochial taxes.' They may mean taxes of the parish; and if they may have two meanings, the question is, in what sense they were used in the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57? The title of the act is 'An Act for the amendment of the law respecting the settlement of the poor as far as regards renting tenements and paying parochial taxes.' Now these latter words undoubtedly mean taxes of the parish, by the payment of which a settlement might be gained by virtue of the statute 3 W. & M. It then recites, 'that the settlement of the poor has been made in some instances to depend upon the annual value of tenements which they may have rented, or upon the annual value of tenements in virtue of which they had paid parochial rates.' It is conceded there is no distinction between the words 'rates' and 'taxes.' The recital therefore refers to the annual value of tenements, in respect of which settlements might have been gained by virtue of the statute of 3 W. & M. by payment of public taxes or the rates of the parish. The statute proceeds to enact, 'that no person shall acquire a settlement by paying parochial rates,' &c. There is undoubtedly a confusion of language; but we may collect from the title and preamble, that it was intended to use the words 'rates' and 'taxes' as synonymous, and the word 'parochial' in the general large sense, 'of the parish.' There is nothing to show that a different sense was intended. If this be so, it concludes the present question; because the land-tax has been decided to be a tax of the parish. I think then the words 'parochial rates' in the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, are not to be confined in construction to rates or taxes raised for the purposes of the parish, but that they are to be construed in the same sense as the words 'taxes of the parish' in the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, and 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 4, and therefore that they import taxes raised within the parish. That being so, then that statute prevents the gaining of a settlement by reason of any person being assessed to and having paid parochial taxes, unless the rent has been paid for the term of one whole year. Here that condition has not been complied with, and consequently no settlement has been gained." Littledale, J. "I am of opinion that, construing the word 'parochial' in a large sense, the land-tax is a parochial rate within the meaning of the act of parliament. In common parlance the word 'taxes' is used to denote taxes raised for the general purposes of the state; the word 'rate,' to denote taxes raised for local purposes. But generally speaking, a rate is a levy; and a parochial rate is a levy raised within the district called a 'parish,' though it be applicable to the general purposes of the state. That being the general meaning of the term, there is no ground for saying that it was intended to be used in any other sense in the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57; and if not, then no settlement was gained by the payment of the land-tax; it was the payment of a parochial rate, and the requisites of the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, had not been complied with by occupying and paying the rent of the tenement during one whole year." Parke, J. "The question turns entirely on the construction to be put on the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 2, by which it is enacted, 'that no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of settling upon, renting, or paying parochial rates for any tenement, &c. unless such tenement shall consist,' &c. If the words 'parochial rate' are to be understood of any tax levied within the parish, then a settlement was gained, because the act does not apply. But if it be understood as applicable strictly to a tax raised for the purposes of the parish, then no settlement was gained. Now it is a good rule of construction to interpret the words of an act of parliament in their ordinary grammatical sense, unless it appear clearly from the context that the legislature used them in some other. Here, by looking at the title of the act and the mischief recited, and by comparing the title and the recital with the body of the act, it is manifest that the legislature meant to use the words 'parochial rates' in the sense of rates or taxes raised within the parish. The title of the act is, "An Act for the amendment of the law respecting the settlement of the poor, as far as regards renting tenements and paying parochial taxes.' Now before this statute a settlement might be gained by the payment of taxes raised within the parish. The word 'parochial' clearly applied to that term. The mischief recited is, 'that the settlement of the poor had been made in some instances to depend upon the annual value of tenements which they may have rented, or upon the annual value of tenements in virtue of which they had paid parochial rates, and that the ascertaining such value in such respective cases had given rise to very expensive litigation.' I conclude therefore from the preamble, that the parochial rates therein mentioned were intended to include all parochial rates or taxes comprehended in the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, and that the legislature meant to prevent all discussion and litigation relating to questions of settlement depending upon the payment of such parochial taxes. The land-tax was one of those taxes; consequently, since the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 57, no settlement can be gained by the payment of that tax in respect of any tenement, unless all things required by that statute be done." Order of sessions confirmed.

In Rex v. Axmouth (post, 772), it was contended, that since the land-tax redemption acts, (38 Geo. III. c. 60, sed vide 42 Geo. III. c. 116, vol. iii.) which perpetuate the tax on lands as a charge upon the lands in the parish, and leave the tax on salaries as a mere personal tax; the rating in respect of the latter no longer satisfied the words of 3 Will. III. c. 11. But the court immediately over-ruled it, stating, that the tax was still a public tax, leviable and collected within the parish. (See 43 Geo. III. c. 161, sect. 59, ante, 759.)

watch rate in one of the city wards does not gain a settlement.

Rex v. Christ Church, London, 8 B. & C. 660. S. C. nom. Rex v. St. Anne's, Blackfriars, 3 Man. & R. 383. Order of removal of Sophia, wife of John Gyles, who was absent from her, from St. Anne, Blackfriars, to Christ Church, confirmed. Case:—John occupied part of a house in Christ Church, of the yearly value of 20*l.*, for several months in 1821, and during that time was rated to and paid two quarters' watch-rates for the ward of Farringdon. The city is divided into twenty-six wards, and the ward of Farringdon into seventeen precincts; the house of John, with regard to ward matters, is in St. Ewin's, and not in Christ Church precinct. The watch-rate is made by the alderman and common councilmen of each ward, under 10 Geo. II. c. 22, which enables the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city to determine what sum [shall be raised for watching, and directs the alderman and councilmen of each ward to make an assessment upon every person who shall inhabit or hold any land in the ward. The rate is collected by the beadle of the ward. Bayley, J. "The land-tax was holden to be within the act, from the notice of inhabitancy that arises by the party having been assessed and paid it. Payment towards a county bridge gives no settlement, because a person pays as an inhabitant of the county, and not of the parish. This watch-rate is not a parochial tax, nor is it collected by any officer belonging to the parish: the parish had no notice that the party who paid the watch-rate was an inhabitant of the parish: no settlement therefore was gained." Order of sessions quashed.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 6, no person who shall be assessed to the scavenger's rate, or to the repairs of the highways, and shall duly pay the same, shall be deemed to be settled thereby.

T. 9 An. Set. & Rem. 1. Paying to a county bridge gains no settlement, for there all the county is liable, and the payment is made as one of the county, and not as an inhabitant of the parish or town where the person resides. And see the judgment of Bayley, J. supra.

But as the 12 Geo. II. c. 29, charges a sum certain upon every division in proportion to their poor-rate, towards the repair of bridges and other county expenses, and (with respect to bridges) is charged by the justices upon every individual, the case may be altered since that act was passed, under which it may be considered a parish rate or tax. And there is in this case the same notoriety of his inhabitancy as in the case of the poor-rate.

The church-rate is a parish tax. (Rex v. St. Bees, 9 East, 203, infra.)

Although the rate be from the manner of making it, or from the want of authority in those who assume to make it, not strictly legal, or be void for want of form, or on any other ground, yet if the party be rated, and pay to such a rate, he shall gain a settlement: for it would be hard that one of the parish should come and say, that was a void rate, being of their own making, and acquiesced under, and the money paid accordingly. Rex v. Edgbaston, 6 T. R. 540. A person's name was inserted in a rate after payment, and after it was so introduced, he always refused to pay. He gained no settlement.

Rex v. St. Bees, 9 East, 203. Removal of Sarah Tidyman from Egremont to St. Bees, confirmed. Case:—The pauper's husband occupied a house in Egremont till his death. A year after they occupied the house, a churchwarden called at the house for an assessment (generally called in the parish a couple sess, but which the pauper understood to be a church cess), and told her that her husband was assessed, and she paid 1s. 2d. as the sum assessed. Some time afterwards she paid 1s. more, upon a similar demand made by another churchwarden. And afterwards another shilling was paid, and the assessment was as follows:—

"1791. An assessment upon the householders in the parish of Egremont, at 1s. per couple, for the ornaments and repairs of the parish church;

" × John Tidyman..... s. d. 1 0

"We whose names are hereunto subscribed (being of the church vestry), do allow of this as a regular assessment; as witness our hands, the 28th of March, 1791." (Signed by the minister and eight other persons, including the two churchwardens.)

The mark × opposite Tidyman's name denoted that he had paid the assessment. It appeared from the churchwarden's accounts of that year entered in the vestry book, that the sums received under that assessment were in part laid out in the repairs and ornaments of the church, and the rest in payment of a debt due to the preceding overseers. But that assessment being insufficient, another was made in the same year in aid of it, upon the landholders of the parish who were never assessed but when the assessment upon the householders proved insufficient. And it was frequently the practice for the select vestry of the parish to make out these assessments in the form of a list of the names of the inhabitants liable to pay; charging the householders at 1s. each, and the widowers and widows, householders, at 6d. each; which assessments were afterwards submitted to and approved by the general parish vestry. It was contended that the rate was clearly bad, as being made upon the householders only, and not upon the parishioners at large. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The settlement is given by 3 Will. III. c. 11, to any person inhabiting any town or parish, who shall be charged and pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the town or parish. Now if a public tax be laid too narrowly, is it less a public tax on that account? This was a tax, and it was public, and it was charged and paid within the parish. What else was required to meet the act of parliament?" Order of sessions quashed.

Omission of the sum assessed immaterial, if the amount can be ascertained from the rate.

Tender of repayment.

Rex v. Corhampton, Doug. 621. The overseers made a rate for 2s. in the pound in this form, "Rent 4l. Q. C. Occupier Richard Goodiff. Sum assessed ———." The overseers demanded 8s. for the rate, declaring he was assessed in that sum for the relief of the poor. Goodiff objected, alleging that he was not a parishioner. The overseers opened the rate book, and showed him his name therein, and threatened to distrain for the 8s. if he did not pay it. Goodiff on this paid the money directly. In the afternoon of the same day, the overseer returned with the vestry clerk, and offered to return the money, saying he had taken it by mistake. Goodiff refused to receive it. The overseer however left it, and went away; on which Goodiff threw the money after him. It was contended that the parish never intended to rate him. The mistake of the overseer (and corrected so soon), in supposing him rated when he was not, could not be binding upon the parish. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "There is no question in the case. The title of the rate is, 2s. in the pound; and in the column of rent, Goodiff's rent is 4l. This fixes his proportion of the rate. For what purpose was his name inserted, if not to rate him? And besides he has paid it, and against his will; and the overseer shall not have it in his power to say, upon reconsidering the matter, I have thought better of it, and you shall not gain a settlement. Rex v. Warblington (Burr, S. C. 245), was different from this. The payment there was not till a year after it should have been made, and the overseer was induced to receive it by misrepresentation."

The person paying must be the person rated.

Solon Tongham v. Worplesdon, Fol. 128. The landlord was rated to the poor for the tenement, as being in his hands, and the tenant paid part of the rate. By the court: "The tenant doth not gain a settlement, unless he be both rated and pay."

Same point.

Kinfare v. Kingswinford, Fol. 129. The pauper rented a tenement and paid all parochial taxes for the same for three years in his own right, but was not rated in the parish books; but the name of Richard Coates, who rented the tenement before the pauper, was kept in the levy books. By the court: "This was no settlement."

Same point.

Rex v. Sarratt, Burr. S. C. 73. The landlord, who never occupied the house, was charged to the poor rate; but the tenant on demand of the overseers paid it. Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "The act requires both a charge and payment; and here is only a charge without a payment. The charging is the principal act, as it infers notice to the parish; but both are necessary. The tenant must both be charged and pay."

Same point.

Rex v. Bramshaw, Burr. S. C. 98. The landlord of the house, who was also overseer of the poor, was charged to the poor rate; but the tenant on demand of the landlord paid the rate. By the court: "It is a settled point, that a person must be rated as well as pay."

Same point.

Rex v. Lower Walton, Burr. S. C. 100. The father was rated, and the son who occupied the tenement paid the rate. By the court: "He must both be rated and pay in order to gain a settlement."

Rex v. Heckmondwicke, Doug. 564. The mother occupied the house, and was rated and paid the taxes till the time of her death; after which, her son occupied the house and paid taxes, but the parish officers continued her name in the rate, knowing at the same time that she was dead. By Lord Mans- field, C. J. "There must be such a rating and paying, as to show manifestly that the parish had notice. Here the rate was continued in the name of a dead person, whom the parish officers knew to be dead. The rate ought to be made on the occupier, and could be on nobody else. This (he said) was determined in Rex v. Walsall (infra), where a settlement was gained.

Rex v. Brightman, 8 Mod. 38; 2 Burr. 1062. Where a man lived in a place called Hoscoe's tenement, and paid taxes there by the name of the occupier of Hoscoe's; this was adjudged to be a sufficient designation of the party, so as to gain a settlement. (S. P. 2 Salk. 478.)

Rex v. Painswick, Burr. S. C. 465. The pauper, Isaac Moorman, took a house in Cirencester, of Thomas Clifford, and agreed to pay the land-tax, and poor-taxes, and all other taxes. The rating was thus: "Thomas Clifford, or tenant." Moorman paid the taxes: and the overseers gave receipts to him in his own name. The landlord lived five miles off. It was urged, that Moorman himself was not rated: being neither expressly named nor even personally hinted at. But the court (Lord Mansfield absent) was clearly of opinion, "that the pauper was sufficiently charged, to notify to Cirencester that he was an inhabitant there, and consequently gained a settlement by payment of the rates so charged. It was not necessary that he should be expressly named."

Rex v. Walsall, Cald. 35. The pauper, Joseph Dean, took a farm in the borough of Walsall and paid the poor rates in his own right, which were charged in these words, "Late Lowbridge's house, 2l. 6s. 0d.—1s. 2d." Other tenements in the borough were charged in the same manner, after new inhabitants had come into them, who severally paid the rates for them: this tenement had been so charged ever since one Lowbridge left it. By Aston, J. and the court (Lord Mansfield, C. J. being absent): "It is agreed that the person must be both rated and pay; and as to the manner how he is to be rated, it is clear that his name need not be inserted in the rate. If the parish have sufficient notice of him, it is enough; paying under a rating is equivalent to notice, and the officers have received the rate of this man for two or three years, and therefore must have known him; and it is stated that he paid in his own right. He gained a settlement."

Rex v. Llangammarch, 2 T. R. 628. The pauper was removed from Llanwslyd to Llangammarch. Removal confirmed. The pauper, in May, 1778, rented a house and land in Llangammarch, at 5l. per annum. No agreement was then made between the landlord and tenant about payment of the taxes. The house is called Bryn Frwst, or Waynllwyd, and the land is rated to the poor tax by the name of Waynllwyd. The pauper lived one year in the house, but paid no taxes for it. In September, 1778, the landlord informed him that taxes were wanted for his land. The pauper desired the landlord to pay them, and he would repay him the same. In fact, no taxes were ever paid by or demanded from the tenant; but it appeared that the landlord paid the taxes, and that the pauper allowed them. The overseer who received the taxes from the landlord for this land knew nothing of the pauper; nor whether or not he resided at this farm at the time. Rex v. Painswick and Rex v. Walsall (supra) were cited. Ashhurst, J. "The circumstance that the overseer did not know the pauper, nor whether he resided at this farm, distinguishes this from the cases cited. The ground of determination in Rex v. Painswick was the notoriety of the occupancy. For when Mr. J. Dennison thought that rating the house only might be sufficient, he added, 'for the parish could not but know who was the occupier.' That, indeed, is the natural presumption; but we cannot presume against the facts of the case; and here it is expressly stated as a fact, that the overseer knew nothing of the pauper or whether he resided at this farm. The reason why a party gains a settlement by paying taxes, is because it is an admission by the parish that he is an inhabitant. There is no foundation for the distinction which has been taken between the knowledge of the overseer, and that of the parish at large; for the overseers are the trustees for, and transact the business of, the parish, and they ought to know the state and conditions of the inhabitants. And, indeed, if we could presume either way, it would rather be, that the

5. Must be Charged and Pay such Tax.

The rate must be on the occupier.

It is sufficient if a person is rated as "occupier," without his name.

It is enough if there be a description sufficient to charge the tenant.

There must be a charge upon the tenant, and if the rate be made in any other way than by name, it must appear that the tenant was notoriously such.

5. Must be Charged and Pay such Tax.

The poor rate is a tax on the occupier.

It may be inferred from the form of rating who is the person rated; and in the case of land-tax, the presumption is (between the public and the tenant), that the occupier is the person rated.

S. P. Rex v. Lawrence, Winchester, 4 Doug. 190.

parish even did not know that the pauper resided in his farm." Buller, J. "The poor's rate is a tax on the occupier; if the house be rated, it is prima facie a rate on the occupier, but it is not conclusive. If the overseer call on the occupier for the rate, and he pays, that shows that he intended he should pay. But here the overseer did not know that he was an inhabitant, and he went to the landlord and received the rate from him." Grose, J. concurred.

Rex v. Folkstone, 3 T. R. 505. The rate for the land-tax was as follows:

Sum assessed.	Proprietors.	Occupier.	Houses.	Quarterly payment.
10s. 10d.	H. S.	J. King.		2s. 6d.

The sessions were of opinion that the landlords were the persons intended to be rated. Lord Kenyon, "On the rate there is one column of the proprietors, and another of tenants; but the names of the tenants were only inserted in order to show for what property the landlords were rated." Buller, J. "Whether the landlord or tenant is rated, is a question of fact which should always be found by the justices."

Rex v. Mitcham, Cald. 276; 4 Doug. 226, S. C. John Heard removed from Mitcham to Moredon. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper inhabited for several years a house at Moredon, which he rented of Mr. Gasson, who was also an inhabitant there, at the yearly rent of 5*l.* clear of all taxes, parliamentary and parochial. Whilst he occupied it, an assessment for the land-tax was made on Moredon, the title of which was, "Surrey, &c. an assessment on the inhabitants of the parish of Moredon, for raising a sum by a land-tax," &c. in the following form:—

£5 0 0	Mr. Gasson.	John Heard.	0	9	9½

Heard paid the 9*s.* 9½*d.* to the collector who demanded the same. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question is, whether the landlord or tenant is the person charged? The assessment does not say who is, but the names of both landlord and tenant are used. The rate alone then, in this case, is no charge upon either. The answer to this question must, therefore, be gathered from other circumstances. In the first place, who ought to be charged? Undoubtedly the occupier ought. The landlord, it is true, is the debtor, but the rate is pointed at the occupier. The parish cannot tell who is the landlord, or who has a rent charge. It is upon the occupier that the officer of government takes his remedy; and though the landlord is directed to allow the sum levied out of the rent, the parish have nothing to do with the transactions between landlord and tenant: this is a matter between them; but for the sake of the public, the occupier, the ostensible person, is to be considered as the person first liable. The next consideration is, what does the assessment profess to be? It professes to be an assessment on the inhabitants, that is, the occupiers; the landlord may or may not be an inhabitant: the tenant must be. Then, of whom is it demanded? Of the occupier. Who pays it? The occupier. We may, therefore, supply from the circumstances that which is omitted in the rate itself; and intend here, that which was expressed in Rex v. Carshalton (Burr. S. C. 809), with which the present decision does not interfere." Willes, J. "There are two circumstances which differ this case from that of Rex v. Carshalton, viz. the title of the rate, and the manner of making it; (a) and the court were there of opinion, that the landlord was charged upon the face of it. Here, where the expressions fall short, and we cannot, from the instrument itself, collect enough to found our judgment upon, collateral circumstances point out the tenant as the person meant to be charged." Order quashed. (See Rex v. Endon, Cald. 374.)

Where the collector gave the receipt in the name of the landlord, in the form "so much assessed on the landlord," the presumption is that the landlord was rated. (Rex v. St. James's, Bury, 4 Doug. 200.)

Rex v. Coppull, 2 East, 25. Removal from Standish with Langtree to Coppull confirmed. Case:—The respondents proved by the evidence of the pauper, that his father purchased an estate in Coppull and actually paid the parish rates in respect of it; but the respondents did not produce any rates, and had not given notice for the production of any. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is impossible to argue that parol evidence may be given of rates which are not produced, nor any notice proved to produce them, nor any reasonable account given for their non-production. The best evidence was not given which the nature of the case would admit of." Both orders quashed.

5. Must be Charged and Pay such Tax.

The rate itself must be produced as evidence of being charged.

Rex v. Bridgewater, 3 T. R. 550. T. Bastard was the occupier of a house, and the assessment for the land-tax was—Landlord, J. W.—Tenant, T. B.—Assessment 6s. 9d. Bastard absconded, and the landlord requested the tax collector to go with him to take a distress for the 6s. 9d., otherwise he should lose the money. They went and saw Bastard's daughter, who pleaded her poverty and said a friend would pay it. She then went with them to Mrs. O. who gave a guinea to the collector, who received thereout the land-tax. The court were clearly of opinion, that it was money paid for his (Bastard's) use, for which an action might be maintained against him. The money was advanced by a friend, in order to protect him from a distress, under which his goods would have otherwise been taken.

The payment by another may be equivalent to payment by himself.

Rex v. Openshaw, Burr. S. C. 522; 1 Blac. Rep. 463. James Bowden took a house and two closes at Gorton, and the landlord was to pay all taxes and levies but the window tax. The rating was thus, "Bowden's." The landlord himself for some time paid the taxes; but in the last year the landlord having some disputes with the overseers about his assessments, directed the overseers to call upon his tenant Bowden for a poor-rate and a church-rate, and tell him that his landlord ordered him to pay and he would allow it to him out of his rent. The tenant paid the same, declaring he paid them for his landlord, and the overseer said he accepted them accordingly. But the landlord, not being asked by the tenant to allow it did not allow it out of the rent till three quarters of a year after he left the estate, (which was six days before the order of removal,) when he repaid the money. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Pray, whom was the landlord to pay it for? Clearly, for the tenant: for it is a tenant's tax. The court has nothing to do with their private agreement. And per tot. Cur.—The settlement is clearly good." The orders were discharged.

Landlord refunding to the tenant the amount of the tax paid, does not prevent the gaining a settlement.

Rex v. Okehampton, Burr. S. C. 5. A tide-waiter resided in Kenton, and had a salary: he was rated for this salary to the land-tax. It was paid for some time by himself, but repaid to him by the collector of the customs; and afterwards was paid by the collector. The question is, whether he paid his share towards the public taxes and levies of the parish? It was said it was not his own money, but the money of the collector. By Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "Suppose the landlord has agreed to reimburse his tenant, would not the tenant be settled? This collector did not pay it to exonerate the parish, but to better the man's salary." And by the court: "It hath been settled, that the land-tax is a parish tax within the act; and his being taxed for his salary makes no difference."

Nor where the salary of a tide waiter, rated to the land-tax paid by himself, but repaid by the collector. (a)

Rex v. Weobley, 2 East, 68. Removal from Weobley to New Radnor quashed. The pauper resided as an officer of excise in W., and during such residence was rated to the land-tax in that parish for his salary, which was proved by the production of the land-tax assessment; but it appeared by the evidence of the pauper that he never paid such rate himself, or any rate; the same being paid by the collector of excise, and not deducted out of the pauper's salary. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "If the rate had been paid by him through the medium or by the hands of another, that would have been a payment by himself; but here he neither paid it mediately nor immediately. He was not affected by the payment at all. It was not deducted out of his salary, nor was his income diminished by it. I know that the statute in question has been extended by construction much beyond what was apparently intended

An excise officer was rated for his salary, but the rate was always paid by the collector, and no deduction made from the salary: No settlement.

(a) And see Rex v. Lower Heyford, 1 Bar. & Adol. 77; ante, 762.

5. Must be Charged and Pay such Tax.

Salary of a custom-house officer was rated to the land-tax, paid by the pauper, and reimbursed by the collector: This is sufficient.

by the legislature. This being a new case, where the pauper neither in fact paid the rate himself, nor constructively by the hands of his agent, it is better to abide by the letter and true spirit of the act, and to hold that he did not thereby gain a settlement." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Axmouth, 8 East, 383. Removal of Martha Clarke from Axmouth to Lyme Regis quashed. Case:—The pauper's husband, deceased, (J. Clarke) was an officer under the custom-house, stationed at Axmouth with a salary of 50*l.*; he did the duty of the office there, and was charged 8*l.* per annum to the land-tax in respect of his salary of 50*l.* There had been annually an order issued from the treasury, authorizing the commissioners to direct the collectors of the outports to reimburse those officers of the customs whose salaries did not exceed 60*l.* per annum the taxes assessed on such salaries, and paid by them. It most frequently happened that Clarke was unable to pay the tax assessed on him, until he had received the same from the collectors of the customs, and the tax collector of the parish was at such times in the habit of trusting Clarke with a receipt, and the collector of the customs upon having this receipt given him, paid Clarke the sum, and Clarke paid the same to the collector of the parish. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Rex v. Okehampton (ante, 771,) is not to be distinguished from the present. The land-tax being a public tax within the 3 W. III. c. 11, the officer was both charged to it, and paid it within the parish, and nothing more was wanting to give him a settlement there. Rex v. Weobley (ante, 771,) was distinguished from the other cases by Lord Kenyon, because there the officer did not pay the tax mediately or immediately; and, as he says afterwards, because the pauper neither in fact paid the rate himself, nor constructively by the hands of his agent. As to his being reimbursed afterwards, all the cases agree that that makes no difference, and that is not contradicted by Rex v. Weobley." Order of sessions confirmed.

And in Rex v. Lower Heyford (see facts of the case, ante, 762), Bailey, J. said, "The remaining objection, that Garratt had been reimbursed the rate, is sufficiently answered by Rex v. Axmouth (supra), which was cited in the argument. There a custom-house officer was rated for his salary to the land tax, and paid the rate, but he always either got the amount from the collector beforehand, or was repaid by him afterwards; and the collector was under orders from the treasury to reimburse the officers of his description. This was adjudged to give the officer a settlement; and Lord Ellenborough, in delivering his judgment, said, "As to his being reimbursed afterwards, all the cases agree that that makes no difference." We are therefore of opinion that Garratt is to be considered as having been charged with and paid his share towards the public taxes of Lower Heyford, within the meaning of 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, and that the decision of the sessions was right.

11. Of Settlement by Acknowledgment, &c.

Settlements of this description are rather evidence of a previous settlement than modes of acquiring a settlement, but nevertheless are usually classed under the head of a settlement. (2 Nolan, P. L. 134.)

Parishes upon whom the burden of supporting or relieving a pauper is sought to be cast in any particular instance, and who resist the attempt of the removing parish, are regarded by the courts, and are subjected to the same rules of law as individual litigants. If therefore the defendant parish has previously made any practical acknowledgment of the liability against which it is defending itself, such admission or acknowledgment may be given in evidence, and will in some cases be conclusive, and estop the parish from afterwards controverting the fact either as to the party himself, or those who claim settlements through him, unless its effect can be explained away, by showing that the acts which are pressed against the parish, as amounting to an acknowledgment that the pauper was settled with them, were exercised towards him as casual poor, and not from a sense of his having the more permanent right to relief in consequence of a legal settlement in such parish.

As in all other cases, so in this, the admission of the party sought to be charged, of the justice of the claim, is the strongest proof in support of it; and hence it has happened that a notion has prevailed, that a pauper may gain a settlement by the acknowledgment of a parish that he is settled there; it is necessary however to bear in mind, that it is no more than evidence that the pauper was previously settled there, and is not in itself a means of acquiring this right. The parish which has placed itself in such a position is not in all cases absolutely bound thereby, if it can be clearly shown that the burthen ought to be assumed by some other parish.

It is material to consider the nature of the acknowledgments which afford this almost irresistible evidence of settlement. They are of three kinds, namely:

1. By Certificate.
2. By Relief.
3. By Non-appeal against an Order of Removal.

1. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SETTLEMENT BY CERTIFICATE.

The practice of granting certificates has been in a great measure put an end to by the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, which renders persons irremovable till actually chargeable, yet parish officers retain the power (though they were not nor are compellable by mandamus, or otherwise, to do so, Rex v. St. Ives, 2 Sess. Cas. 153) to certify as heretofore; and Abbott, C. J. in Rex v. Idle, 2 B. & A. 153 (ante 280), recognized the system of granting certificates as still existing, and seems to recommend the continued use of it, observing that "in many cases a labourer who might wish to come into a parish might not be able to obtain employment there, for fear that by so doing he might bring burdens upon the parish. But if he came with a certificate that fear would be removed." And Bayley, J., in the same case, spoke to the like effect upon this subject, and as questions may also arise upon old certificates yet existing, the law upon this head cannot properly be omitted. It may be divided as follows:

1. Of the Enactments relating to Certificates.
2. The Form of Certificate.
3. Of the Direction of the Certificate.
4. Of the Signature of the Certificate.
5. Of the Allowance and Attestation.
6. Proof of Certificate.
7. Of the Delivery of Certificate.
8. Persons Protected by Certificate from Removal.
9. To what Individuals a Certificate extends.
10. Of the Effect of the Certificate.
11. Certificate, how determined.
12. Removal of Certificated Persons.

1. Of the Enactments relating to Certificates.

By 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 1, it is enacted, "Forasmuch as many poor persons chargeable to the parish, township, or place where they live, merely for want of work, would in any other place, where sufficient employment is to be had, maintain themselves and families, without being burthensome to any parish, township, or place, but not being able to give such security as will or may be expected and required upon their coming to settle themselves in any other place, and the certificates that have been usually given in such cases having been oftentimes construed into a notice in handwriting, they are, for the most part, confined to live in their own parishes, townships, or places, and not permitted to inhabit elsewhere, though their labour is wanted in many other places, where the increase of manufacture would employ more hands:" be it therefore enacted, that if any person or persons whatsoever, from and after the 1st May, 1697, shall come into any parish or other place,

By 12 Anne, st. 1, c. 18, s. 2, after reciting 8 & 9 W. Majesty King William the Third, and for making such certificates more effectual, be it enacted, "That from and after the 24th of June, 1730, the witnesses who attest the execution of such certificates by the churchwarden or churchwardens, overseer or overseers, signing and sealing the same, or one of the said witnesses, shall make oath before the justices of the peace, who by the said act are directed to allow the same (which oath they are hereby authorized to administer), that such witness or witnesses did see the churchwarden or churchwardens, overseer or overseers, whose names and seals are thereunto subscribed and set, severally sign and seal the said certificate, and that the names of such witnesses attesting the said certificate are of their own proper handwriting; which said justices of the peace shall also certify that such oath was made before them; and every such certificate so allowed, and oath of the execution thereof so certified by the said justices of the peace, shall be taken, deemed, and allowed in all courts whatsoever, as duly and fully proved, and shall be taken and received as evidence, without other proof thereof; and that all certificates given in pursuance to the said act, before the said 24th of June, 1730, shall be also taken and allowed in all courts as evidence, without other proof; provided the same are duly allowed by two justices of the peace, as by the said act is required."

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

Certificate sufficient proof of execution.

By 51 Geo. III. c. 80, s. 1 (see ante, 472, title Apprentice), all certificates of the settlements of poor persons, executed by two persons only, acting as churchwarden as well as overseer, shall be considered valid.

Certificates signed by two persons only, acting as churchwarden and overseer, to be valid.

54 Geo. III. c. 107 (see ante, 473, title Apprentice), all certificates of the settlements of poor persons by persons, who, at the time of their executing such certificate of settlement, acted as churchwarden, &c., shall be taken to be valid, as if the same had been executed by persons actually sworn into the office of churchwarden, &c.

Certificates of settlement valid, although churchwardens, &c. not sworn in.

By sect. 2, "all certificates of the settlement of poor persons, executed by the overseers of the poor of any township, hamlet, chapelry, or place, and the churchwarden or churchwardens, acting for or appointed in respect of such township, hamlet, chapelry, or place, or the major part of them, shall be taken to be valid, as if the said certificates had been executed by such overseers and the churchwardens of the parish wherein such township, hamlet, chapelry, or place, is situate, or the major part of them."

The statute does not affect prior settlements. Sect. 3.

1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 32, (ante, 479, Apprentice), all certificates of the settlement of poor persons which have been, previous to the passing of this act, executed by one churchwarden or chapelwarden, acting or purporting to act in the capacity of churchwarden or churchwardens for any parish or place in England, for which two had formerly been appointed, shall be taken to be good and effectual."

Certificates of settlement declared valid, when executed by one churchwarden.

3. Of the Direction of the Certificate.

Certificate need not be directed to the parish to which it is delivered.

But a particular parish must be intended.

May be to parish of A., or any other parish in city and county of .

3. Of the Direction of the Certificate.

The statute does not require any particular direction; and, therefore, if the certificate is not addressed at all, the omission will not vitiate. In Rex v. Lillington (1 East, 438), Lord Kenyon said, "A certificate need not be directed to the particular parish to which it is delivered. But," he added, "a certificate is not a transferable instrument from one parish to another; for then it would operate as a license for vagrancy. That is, after it has performed its office in one parish, it cannot be taken to another for the same purpose; and so from parish to parish as often as the certificated person shall choose to remove himself."

Rex v. Lubbenham, 4 T. R. 251. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "There must be a particular parish in contemplation at the time of granting the certificate." (And see post, 796.)

Rex v. St. Nicholas, in Harwich, 2 Stra. 1163. The pauper came into St. Nicholas, in Harwich, with a certificate from Woolverstone, addressed to the parish of Harwich, near Dover Court. The sessions were of opinion as there was a mistake in the name of the parish in the address of the certificate, that Harwich could not be obliged to receive the pauper. But it was ruled they were, for it is not to be considered as a certificate to any particular parish, but as a general acknowledgment of his being a parishioner of Woolverstone, and is conclusive against them for all the world.

A certificate was directed "To the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Holy Trinity, or any other parish in the city and county of Coventry," this certificate was held to be valid. (Rex v. Lillington, 1 East, 438, supra.)

4. Of the Signature and Seals of the Certificate.

A certificate must be signed by a majority of the churchwardens and overseers.

If signed by one churchwarden and one overseer, where there are four churchwardens and two overseers, it is void.

So if signed by one overseer of a township.

4. Of the Signature and Seals of the Certificate.

The 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30 (ante, 773), requires the certificate to be under the hands and seals of the churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them; but more recent statutes (see ante, 775,) have provided for those cases in which the number of officers in the parish have been deficient.

Rex v. Tamworth, 3 Burr. S. C. 770. A certificate must be signed by a majority of churchwardens and overseers, or it is void. Same point in Rex v. Margam (1 T. R. 775).

Rex v. Clifton, 2 East, 168. "The appointment of one overseer alone for a township is bad in law, and a certificate granted by such overseer cannot avail; for, by the statute of Elizabeth, the churchwardens and not less than two substantial householders are required to be nominated overseers. The statute of Will. III. directs that it shall be made by the churchwardens and overseers, or the major part of them; or, where there are no churchwardens, by the overseers; and a certificate, like the present, is not granted by either one or the other of those descriptions of persons. The 13 & 14 Car. II. requires, at least, two persons to be appointed overseers for a township. Therefore, this latter statute requiring two to be appointed, and the statute of Will. III. having required the certificate to be executed by the overseers, where there are no churchwardens, and there having been but one overseer appointed by the township, by whom this certificate was granted, I am of opinion this was void." Per Grose, J.

In Rex v. St. Margaret's, Leicester (8 East, 332), a certificate signed by two churchwardens, one of whom was sole overseer, was decided to be a nullity. To remedy which inconvenience the 51 Geo. III. c. 80, s. 1, was passed. (For which see ante, 775.) And see 54 Geo. III. c. 107, ante, 775.

Rex v. Catesby, 2 B. & C. 814; 4 D. & R. 434. Removal of George Cox from Badby to Catesby. Case:—The respondents produced a certificate, dated the 10th of May, in 1761, stating that W. Goodman, the only churchwarden, and E. Webb, the only overseer, of the parish of Catesby, did certify the parish of Badby, that they did acknowledge Thomas Cox to be settled in Catesby.

Bayley, J. "Upon the principle established in several cases it seems to me that this is a good certificate. In Rex v. Hinckley (ante, 518), Lord Ellenborough and Le Blanc, Js. both say, 'That if any intendment can by law be made to support an indenture of apprenticeship, the court must make that intendment.' In that case, the indenture was produced on one side, and there was no evidence to impeach it on the other, and Le Blanc, J. says, 'The question then is, whether by any intendment of law such an indenture can be good?' And both judges say, it might be considered good 'by intending that there was a custom in the particular parish to have only one churchwarden.' There are two acts of parliament which bear upon this question, and which contain similar language; the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, which relates to parish apprentices, and the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, which relates to the granting of certificates. Both these acts require that there shall be the concurrence of the churchwardens and overseers, 'or the major part of them,' to give validity to the indentures and certificates respectively, and therefore decisions upon the one throw a light upon the other; and notwithstanding the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3, which gives to the justices a power of appointing an additional overseer when one shall die in the course of the year, I think that this case is to be considered as it would have been prior to the period when that act passed. Generally speaking, there are two churchwardens in every parish; but, by custom, there may be one only. (a) By law, there must be two overseers originally appointed, and an appointment of less than two is, upon the face of it, bad; but if by custom there may be only one churchwarden appointed, and if there be two overseers duly appointed, death may reduce the number to one, and then the question would be, whether prior to the statute 17 Geo. II. that churchwarden and that overseer might not do the act in question, as constituting the major part of the persons originally appointed. In Rex v. St. Margaret's, Leicester (ante, 776), there was a very plain and decisive objection to the certificate, because in that case there was only one overseer originally appointed, and it was with reference to that fact, that the language of Lord Ellenborough and Lawrence, J. there is to be applied. They said that the certificate act, 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, requires that a certificate shall be granted under the hands and seals of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, or the major part of them. It has since been decided in Rex v. Hinckley (ante, 518), and Rex v. Earl Shilton (1 B. & Ald. 275; ante, Vol. I.), that though the word in the statute is 'churchwardens,' yet, by custom, if one only be appointed, that one will be sufficient to satisfy the word churchwardens; but it being clear that by law less than two overseers cannot be appointed, there must have been originally two overseers; and in the case of Rex v. St. Margaret's, Leicester (ante, 776), it was stated as a fact that there was one only. In Rex v. Clifton (ante, 776), the certificate was stated to be under the hand and seal of J. W., 'only overseer of the poor of the township,' and therefore the court decided, not upon the language of the certificate itself, but upon the fact that originally there had been an appointment of one only. Rex v. Hinckley (ante, 518), and Rex v. Earl Shilton (ante, Vol. I.), both establish this proposition, that if a certificate or the binding of a parish apprentice be by one churchwarden and one overseer it is good, and it is only because in this case the certificate describes Edward Webb as 'the only overseer,' that we are at liberty to assume that there was originally a bad appointment. Now let us consider the law of presumption, with reference to that point. Are we to presume that it was non ritè actum? The statute says, that the justices are to appoint two overseers. Are we then to presume that the justices have deviated from their duty and appointed one only, or are we not rather to presume that two overseers had been duly appointed, and that one of them had died? The law will presume that a party has conformed to the law; and if we are to make any presumption, it is ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Between these two, I say, that presumption ought to prevail which assumes that the justices have conformed to the law; and therefore I think we ought rather to support the instrument than destroy it. Upon this principle it appears to me we are at liberty to assume that in this case William Goodman was, by the custom of this parish, the only churchwarden appointed; that Edward Webb was the only surviving overseer, that he duly granted the certificate in the character in which he is described upon the face of the instrument, which he would not have done had he not been regularly and duly appointed; and that we are bound to intend, according to the language of Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Hinckley (ante, 518), that there had been originally a good and valid appointment of two, there being no evidence to show what the appointment was, or to rebut the inference arising from the face of the certificate itself. For these reasons I am of opinion, that, as against the parish which has granted this certificate, we ought to hold that this overseer was duly authorized to do the act in question, and therefore that the order of sessions must be confirmed." Holroyd, J. "I think, upon the authorities which have been cited, and likewise upon the principles which ought to govern us, assuming that the authorities did not exist, that this certificate was good in point of law, or at least that the sessions might legally draw the conclusion, and intend from the circumstances which appeared in evidence, that it was a good certificate. The certificate was granted on the 17th May, 1761, by two persons who were at that time to be taken as the only existing parish officers. It is submitted to by the parish to whom the pauper is sent, as a good certificate, and now after a lapse of sixty-three years, it is for the first time called in question. If any intendment or presumption can legally be made in favour of the validity of such an instrument, it must be in a case of this description; and I think that the justices had authority in point of law to presume such facts as would make it a good certificate, assuming such facts to have had existence. That such facts might really exist, there seems no doubt, at least upon the authority of the cases cited. It is perfectly clear, that by custom there may be only one churchwarden in a parish. There must be two overseers appointed in addition to the churchwardens; and then, according to the 43 Eliz. c. 2, such persons shall be called overseers of the poor, and are to take charge of them. Now upon the face of this instrument, I think we are to take it, that the person who is called 'the only overseer' of the poor, was, in point of law, the survivor of two; for unless there had been two persons appointed, who, together with the churchwardens, were to be overseers of the poor, the statute of Elizabeth would not have been satisfied. Indeed, the description of himself as 'the only overseer' would not be correct, unless there had been two overseers originally appointed, and therefore it is a fair presumption, arising from the face of the certificate, that he was the survivor of two. Suppose an issue had been directed to try simply whether he was or was not the overseer of the parish; if it was shown that there had been only one originally, the issue must have been found that he was not the overseer of the parish, and if the onus was to be thrown upon those who are called upon to support the certificate, (even assuming that it had been submitted to for an hundred years,) it could not, by legal intendment, be considered a good certificate. I think, however, that the magistrates were abundantly warranted in presuming, as they have done, that there had been an appointment of two overseers originally, and that if there was by custom only one churchwarden, they had a right to presume the fact in favour of the certificate. If so, then the certificate must be considered as signed by a majority of those who would be the original existing body. Whether it is absolutely necessary for the purpose of executing their functions that the majority of the original existing body should continue to exist or not, is a question which we need not decide, because if that was necessary the 17 Geo. II. would not have been passed, for then in case the original churchwardens and overseers had been reduced below a majority, as for instance, if there were originally four, and they were reduced to two, all their functions must be at an end during the residue of the year, until that statute had passed. It is, however, unnecessary to decide that question. In this case the sessions have drawn, as they had a right by law to do, the proper conclusion from the presumption of facts, in holding that this was a legal certificate; and as they have done that, I think we should not be justified in reversing their order. But independently of what they have done, I am of opinion, that according to the authorities of Rex v. Hinckley (ante, 518,) and Rex v. Earl Shilton, we are bound by law to make every intendment that can reasonably be made in favour of the certificate. Acting upon the maxim, 'res magis valeat quam pereat,' we ought to conclude that this certificate has been legally granted by persons who describe themselves as 'the only churchwarden and the only overseer,' which the latter person could not have done with propriety, unless there had been two originally appointed; and inasmuch as there might have been originally only one churchwarden by custom, we must presume, particularly after an acquiescence of sixty-three years, that the person who signed the certificate was a majority of the existing body, and consequently that this was a valid certificate." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion. A certificate signed by one churchwarden and one overseer alone, would certainly not be sufficient, unless the law would intend something more. But it appears to me, that upon the face of this instrument we are at liberty to intend those circumstances which are necessary to give it validity. First, with respect to the churchwarden, I think there is no difficulty in intending that he was such a churchwarden as the custom of the parish would authorize, inasmuch as by custom there may be only one churchwarden in a parish. Then, secondly, with respect to the overseer, though a certificate signed by one overseer would be bad, still we are at liberty to assume from the language of this certificate, that there were originally two overseers appointed, but that one had died after the appointment, and before the certificate was granted. It is said, we are called upon to intend death instead of the continuance of life. So we are; and I think we are at liberty to do so, until the contrary be shown. But we are placed in the situation of choosing between two intendments, a particular, and a general intendment; first, that a party should be presumed to live, when once shown to be alive; and second, that every thing shall be presumed to be right according to law. Now the question is, which of these two intendments is to prevail? Because it is impossible that both can operate. The intendment that every thing is to be presumed to be right according to law, is a general intendment, and, I think, ought to prevail, especially in a case of this description, until the contrary is shown. In Rex v. Clifton (ante, 776,) and Rex v. St. Margaret's, Leicester (ante, 776,) the question of intendment did not arise, because the facts did not warrant it. There the appointment of one overseer was nugatory, being contrary to the statute. But here, after the lapse of sixty-three years, the description of the overseer may warrant us in presuming an original appointment of two overseers, and enable us to intend that one of them had died. Rex v. Hinckley (ante, 518,) and Rex v. Earl Shilton are authorities to warrant the court in saying, that every thing must be presumed to be rightly done, until the contrary is proved. So in Rex v. Morris (4 T. R. 550), which was the case of an appointment by justices of one overseer for a hamlet in a particular parish, in which the question was, whether only one overseer could by law be appointed, Lord Kenyon says, 'This court has invariably made a distinction between orders of justices and convictions, and said, that every thing is to be intended in support of the former;' and speaking of the objection there as to the supposed illegality of the appointment of one overseer, he said, 'we are not left to conjecture that no other person was appointed overseer of this place, for it appears on the order of sessions that this was an appeal of one of the overseers.' Now when we apply what that learned judge says to the present case, that every thing should be intended in support of the order of justices, I think it will justify our opinion on the present occasion. This certificate is a public document, and though not framed by justices of the peace, yet being the act of the parish officers, the court, for the same reason that it intends every thing in favour of an order of justices, will intend every thing in favour of an instrument made by parish officers. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that this is a valid certificate." Order of sessions affirmed.

A parish certificate, purported to be granted in 1761, by A., the only churchwarden, and B., the only overseer of the parish: Held, that it must be taken to have been a good certificate, because it may be intended in favour of such an instrument, that by custom there was only one churchwarden in the parish, and that two overseers had been originally appointed, but that one of them died, and that the certificate was granted before the vacancy was filled up.

Less than two overseers cannot be appointed.

Ret v. Austrey, 6 M. & Sel. 319. The case is fully stated in the judgment given by Lord Ellenborough. In this case an order of removal of J. Smith from St. Margaret's, Leicester, to Austrey, was confirmed, subject to a case. The question now remaining for the opinion of the court, arose upon a certificate, duly attested and allowed by two justices, granted to the pauper, purporting to be the certificate of J. S., J. P., and J. B., churchwardens and overseers of Appleby, acknowledging the pauper to be settled at Appleby. In witness whereof (the certificate stated) we have hereunto set our hands and seals, the 4th of April, 1768. This certificate, the case states, is under the hands of S., P., and B., but there are only two seals, one opposite to the names of S., and P., styled churchwardens, and the other opposite the name of B., styled overseer. And the question is, whether this is a good certificate within the 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30? If it is not a good certificate, the order of sessions must be confirmed. The certificate required by sect. 1. is a certificate under the hands and seals of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or the major part of them, or under the hands and seals of the overseers of the poor, where there is no churchwarden. The certificate in question being a certificate by the two churchwardens, and by one only of the overseers, and under two seals only, it was objected that it was not a certificate under the hands and seals of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or the major part of them. In answer to this, it was contended that if several persons seal and deliver an instrument, by putting their several seals upon one and the same piece of wax or wafer that is put upon the instrument, or using the same as their several seals, and delivering the instrument as their respective deeds, that the seal becomes the several seal of each, and that the instrument becomes the deed of all: and that this reasoning is applicable to the present case as showing, that in law, the seal opposite the names of the two churchwardens, is to be considered as the distinct seal of each, and therefore that the certificate testifying that the three had in witness thereof set their hands and seals thereto, and having been allowed by two justices, and the certificated person having been received under the same, was to be considered in law as being under the hands and seals of the three. In considering how far the cases of deeds are applicable to a case like the present, it is to be recollected that in those cases the parties alone, under whose authority the deeds were executed, are bound by them. But the present is the case of the execution of a power, which binds and operates upon other persons at their peril, and subjects them to indictments as for crimes, in case of their disobedience to the power if it be duly executed. In the execution of powers, all the circumstances required by the creators of the power (however unessential and otherwise unimportant) must be observed, and can only be satisfied by a strictly literal and precise performance. Hawkins v. Kemp, (3 East, 440.) It is also a general principle of law, whenever a power is given to particular persons to do any written act in a particular manner, and under certain particular circumstances,—whether it be to parish officers or magistrates to grant certificates, under which, if duly executed, other persons, especially public officers, are bound to act, or to grant warrants, or make orders,—that their authority must appear on the instrument itself. It must thereby appear, that they are the persons authorized, and that the certificate, warrant, or order, was made in the manner and under the circumstances required; otherwise it is not obligatory, but void: the mere statement that the parties, in witness thereof, have put their hands and seals to such an instrument, does not make it so, unless it really have their hands and seals put to it; nor in the execution of a power has it, as it seems to us, their hands and seals to it, so as to make it a good execution of a power requiring such execution to be under their hands and seals, unless it be apparent upon the instrument itself that it has the hand and seal of each put to it. The statute is to be construed, in a case like this, according to common parlance and understanding, and so as to be a security to persons who are bound to obey the powers given by it at their peril, and not to be construed according to what may be brought within its words by nice legal reasoning, applicable merely to deeds, and by which construction persons bound to obey the execution of the power, if it be duly granted, cannot ascertain whether it be so or not, without delay, enquiry, expense, and trouble. In Thaire v. Thaire (Palm. 109, 112), where there was a submission to arbitration, "so that the award be delivered under their hands and seals," it was made a question, whether an award sealed, but not signed, was a good award: the point argued being, whether the sealing, which was virtually a signing, was sufficient; or whether the words of the submission should be intended, in common parlance, an actual writing of their hands? The judges of C. P. were at first divided, but it was finally decided by the whole court, not that a virtual signing would do, but that there ought to be an actual signing under their hands. So, where an act is to be under the hands and seals of the three, a mere virtual sealing by any of the three appears to us not sufficient; but it ought to be under the actual distinct seal of each of the three, that is to say, under a distinct and several sealed impression adopted by each of the three. The necessity and importance of requiring this is still more striking in cases of warrants of imprisonment, (where they are required to be under the hands and seals of two justices of the peace,) where resistance and death might follow, and where the justification or high criminality of the officer or of the party to be apprehended would depend upon the uncertainty, and upon the subsequent establishment by extrinsic proof, whether the seal, if one sealed impression on the warrant would in any case do, was used so as to be considered in law the seal of both or one: the consequence is, we think the certificate is void, and that the order of sessions must be confirmed.

Rex v. Whitchurch, 7 B. & C. 573; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 167. Order of removal of William Bray, &c., from Whitchurch to St. Mary's Bourne, quashed. Case:—A certificate was produced, by which J. Harbutt, W. Piper, W. Arundel, and W. Phillpott, churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary's Bourne, acknowledged W. Bray, jun., and his wife, William, Mary, and Elizabeth, their children, to be inhabitants settled in St. Mary's Bourne. Signed, &c., "In witness whereof we have hereunder set our hands and seals, this 7th day of September, 1758. —, (L. S.), W. Piper, (L. S.), churchwardens; W. Arundell, (L. S.), the mark of W. Phillpott, (L. S.), overseers. Attested by us, T. May, A. Neave." It was directed to Whitchurch, and was duly allowed on the 12th of September, 1758. William Bray, jun., the grandfather of the pauper, resided in Whitchurch till the time of his death, in 1799; William Bray his son, also named in the certificate, had resided there ever since the certificate was granted, and the pauper had resided there from the time of his birth, till the time of this order. It appeared by the visitation books, that St. Mary's Bourne is in the diocese of Winchester, and is a peculiar within the jurisdiction of the chancellor's visitation. Harbutt and Piper were not sworn churchwardens in 1758 till the 15th of September. No churchwardens appeared by the books to have been sworn at the visitation from 1751 to 1758: the visitation book for 1750 was lost. It appeared from the registrar, that it was the course of office to make an entry in the visitation books of the swearing of churchwardens at the time of swearing, whether the swearing takes place at the visitation, or afterwards. If it took place afterwards, the registrar always entered it, but he had not looked over the books before his time to see whether there was any entry of such subsequent swearings. At Easter, 1750, J. Longman was nominated churchwarden. In 1757, T. Cowdey, and E. Maltin were nominated churchwardens, and Harbutt signed the nomination. At Easter in 1758, Thomas Harbutt and William Piper were nominated churchwardens. The pauper was on the 7th day of December, 1790, bound by indenture to his grandfather for seven years, which he served in Whitchurch. The father of the pauper, sixteen or seventeen years ago, received relief from the overseers of St. Mary's Bourne, he at that time residing at Whitchurch. He has also constantly for these last two years received relief from St. Mary's

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

A certificate granted in 1758 by four persons, as churchwardens and overseers, was signed by both overseers, and by one churchwarden. The churchwarden was nominated at Easter, and sworn in September, the usual time for swearing churchwardens, and there was no proof of his having been sworn when he signed the certificate. The parish relieved the pauper and his family in another parish, at various times, from 1758 to 1827: Held, first, that the execution by two overseers and one churchwarden, was an execution by the major part of the churchwardens and overseers; and secondly, that after such a lapse of time, the court will presume that the churchwarden was sworn before he signed the certificate.

Bourne; and no objection was made upon his application for relief, when he required it. The pauper had been occasionally relieved by St. Mary's Bourne, nearly ever since his apprenticeship whenever he wanted it, and has constantly received relief for the last seven or eight years. The sessions thought the certificate inadequately executed. Bayley, J. "The certificate, upon the validity of which the question in this case turns, was granted nearly seventy years ago. It contains the names of four persons, whom it describes as churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary's Bourne. It appears by the visitation book, that the churchwardens were sworn into office three days after the allowance of the certificate; therefore it has been contended, that the execution by Piper being an act done before he was sworn, was done without authority, and is not binding upon the parish. Now, though the fact may be, that at the time when he executed this certificate he had not taken the oath of office, still the other parish into which the pauper went, and in which, in consequence of his having the certificate he was suffered to reside, must have been equally imposed upon, and must have been induced to believe that the certificate was genuine, and had been executed by competent officers. If we were bound in point of law to allow this objection, we must do so, notwithstanding the grievous injustice which would result from it, and though one of the consequences would be, that no prudent person would from henceforth receive a certificate, and the object of the statute would be entirely defeated. But as it seems to me it is by no means necessary, in order to render such an act as this binding upon the parish, that the churchwardens shall have been previously sworn. The parish may allow him to act as their officer de facto, though there may be another, who is officer de jure; and if they do hold him out as churchwarden de facto, and suffer him to act in that capacity, they cannot be permitted to practise the fraud of afterwards denying the validity of his acts. At present therefore I am disposed to think that the fact of the churchwardens not having been sworn until after the execution of the certificate, does not vacate it. It is clear, from the statement in the case, that the parish have all along, almost from the year 1758 down to the time when the present order of removal was made, been acting upon the certificate, as good and valid. It is not then, in my opinion, too much for us to presume that it is so: and I think cases may be put from which we may assume it to be really valid. It may have happened, for instance, that the churchwardens were first sworn at or shortly after their nomination, and were afterwards sworn again at the visitation in September. Piper, the only person respecting whom there is any dispute, may have wished to be, and may actually have been, sworn at Easter, although the administration of the oath was not recorded, and may afterwards, in September, have been required to take the oath again. We may presume this, and I think it is perfectly fair and reasonable to presume it. To the other parish these persons were held out as churchwardens duly and legally appointed; and unless some such presumption as I have suggested is admitted, we must on the other hand be driven to presume, that which a court of law never can presume, that a fraud was contemplated and practised. I am therefore of opinion, that justice requires us to presume that the churchwarden had been sworn when he executed this certificate; and then it follows that the certificate is valid, and it becomes unnecessary to decide upon the other points raised in the case." Littledale, J. (a) "I am of the same opinion. If it were necessary to decide the question of law, whether the execution of a certificate is an act which a churchwarden de facto, who has not been sworn, has authority to do, I should wish for time to consider that point, upon which I at present entertain great doubts. But I think we need not decide that question, because the lapse of time is quite sufficient to justify us in presuming that every thing necessary to be done to make the certificate valid and binding was done. I think that we may fairly presume that Piper, upon his nomination to the office, went before the commissary and took the oath, and that the fact of his having taken it at that time was, from some circumstance or other, omitted to be registered. We cannot presume fraud and illegality, which we must do, if we decide against the certificate upon this objection. With respect to the supposed necessity of both the churchwardens signing the certificate, the statute only requires that the major part of the aggregate body of churchwardens and overseers shall sign, and not that the major part of each of those classes of officers shall sign. Upon the whole, it seems to me that we must consider this as a valid certificate, and therefore that the order of sessions must be quashed."

(a) Holroyd, J., was absent.

Rex v. Upton Gray, 10 Bar. & Cres. 807. Appeal against an order of removal of T. Woodman and family from Upton Gray to Bishop's Waltham, both in the county of Southampton. Order quashed. Case:—A certificate was produced by the respondents from the parish chest of their parish, signed by two churchwardens and two overseers of the parish of Bishop's Waltham, dated the 16th of April, 1748, by which it was acknowledged to the former parish, that Peter Woodman, the great grandfather of the pauper, was legally settled in the latter parish. The certificate had never been discharged so far as it regards the pauper. On the part of the appellants it was proved from the parish books of Bishop's Waltham, that on the 27th day of May, 1747, five overseers were appointed by the said parish; their names were Harris, Edney, Vernon, Stares, and Cowdery, of whom Harris and Cowdery signed the above certificate, dated the 16th of April, 1748. In an indenture of parish apprenticeship, dated the 24th of October, 1747, it was recited that at that time the said five persons, viz. Harris, Edney, Vernon, Stares, and Cowdery were overseers; and that at the same time four persons named Homer, Barefoot, Hellyer, and Wateridge (of whom Homer and Wateridge signed the above certificate), were churchwardens of the parish of Bishop's Waltham. It was also proved on the part of the appellants, from the parish books, that a church rate for the said parish for the year 1747 was signed on the 8th of May, 1748, by four churchwardens, whose names were there stated to have been Horner, Barefoot, Hellyer, and Wateridge. It was also proved on the same part from the same books, that on the 6th July, 1748, five overseers were again appointed for the same parish, whose names were there stated to have been Lacy, Parker, Trodd, Edney, and Suet. It appeared also by the said parish books, that from the year 1633 to 1829, four churchwardens had been regularly chosen every year of the said parish. By the proper visitation books for 1746, it was proved that four churchwardens were sworn in for the parish of Bishop's Waltham, for the year ensuing the date of such swearing in. The visitation books for the year 1747 were lost. By the visitation books for 1748, it was proved that on the 19th September, 1748, four churchwardens were sworn in for the said parish for the year ensuing that date. By the same books it appeared, that in twelve or thirteen different years, between the years 1683 and 1829, four churchwardens had not been sworn in for the said parish, but that in those instances less than four had been sworn in. It was contended on the part of the appellant parish, that under the circumstances above stated, the certificate granted by the appellant parish was bad, it having been signed by two out of five persons, whose appointment as overseers was void as to all, (inasmuch as by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, not more than four overseers can be appointed,) and on the ground that the majority of the parish officers had not signed it. On the part of the respondent parish it was contended that after so long a period (being more than eighty years), any possible case by which the certificate might be supported ought to be presumed. Hence, as it might be presumed, either that a new and valid appointment of Cowdery and Harris as overseers, had been made for the appellant parish in the interval between the 24th of October, 1747 (when it is recited as above that there were five overseers), and the date of the certificate 16th of April, 1748; or that at that date there were not four churchwardens sworn in, in either of which cases the certificate would be signed by a majority of the parish officers, such presumption should now be made. Bayley, J. "This is an attempt to carry the cases of Rex v. Catesby (ante, 777,) and Rex v. Whitchurch (ante, 781,) to a most

A certificate was signed by two churchwardens and two overseers on the 16th of April, 1748. On the 27th of May, 1747, five overseers were appointed, two of whom signed the certificate. A church rate was signed on the 28th of May, 1748, by four churchwardens. Five overseers and four churchwardens were appointed in 1746. The court would not presume any facts to make this certificate valid.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

unreasonable extent. In the last of those cases in the certificate four persons were described as churchwardens and overseers of the parish, but it purported to be signed by three of them only; by one Piper as churchwarden, and by two others as overseers. It was proved by the visitation books that in the year 1758 the two churchwardens were sworn in after the date of the certificate; and it was therefore contended that Piper, the party who signed the certificate as churchwarden, was not at that time churchwarden de jure, and therefore that it was not binding on the parish. It appeared further by the visitation books that no churchwardens were sworn in from 1751 to 1758, but the parish who had granted the certificate had, from the year 1758 to the time when the order of removal was made, treated it as valid, for it had relieved the pauper while he was residing in another parish. The sessions having found in favour of this certificate, the court held that it might reasonably be presumed that Piper, after his nomination in 1758, and before he did any act as churchwarden, had gone to the commissary and had been sworn into office before him; and, under the circumstances of that case, such a presumption was not unreasonable, for it was not inconsistent with any other fact. In Rex v. Catesby (2 B. & C. 814; 4 D. & R. 434), the certificate which the law required to be signed by a majority of the parish officers, purported to be signed by one churchwarden and one overseer. If, therefore, there were two churchwardens and two overseers, it was not valid. The sessions having presumed in favour of the certificate, it was for the court to say whether there could be any state of facts to make it a valid certificate, and they decided that it might be valid on two grounds. By custom there might have been only one churchwarden in the parish, and therefore the sessions might have presumed that one only was appointed; or two overseers might have been originally appointed, and one of them have died before the certificate was granted. Then what is the state of facts here? Can the court say that the justices at sessions have done wrong in refusing to make the presumption which they were called upon to make? It is conceded that the presumption is one of fact, which in an ordinary case it would be for a jury to decide; but it is said that a jury ought to draw such a presumption whether they believe the fact really did exist or not; and a dictum of Sir W. Grant to that effect has been cited. To that, as a general proposition, I cannot agree. I would not direct a jury to presume that which they believe to be contrary to the fact. Here the fact which we are called upon to presume is not only highly improbable in itself, but wholly inconsistent with other facts which existed about the same time. We are first to presume that the four churchwardens were not sworn in. That would be presuming that they committed a breach of duty when we ought to presume rather that they discharged their duty. It is then said that we may presume that one of the churchwardens died. Such a presumption, if made at all, ought to have been made by the sessions, and not by us. The other ground is still more unreasonable. It is said there was a bad appointment of overseers, and that we ought to presume a new appointment of overseers before the certificate was granted. In the next year, however, it appears that five overseers were again appointed. We must, therefore, presume that the error as to the number of overseers was discovered between October, 1747, and April, 1748, although the ancient erroneous practice was again adopted in October, 1748. I think there was nothing in this case to warrant any presumption of fact necessary to give validity to this certificate, and I cannot say that the sessions ought to have drawn from the facts stated any of the conclusions which it has been insisted they ought to have drawn." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion. The doctrine attributed to the Master of the Rolls in Hillary v. Waller may be true as applied to the particular subject-matter which he was then discussing. A jury would probably be directed to presume, after a lapse of time, the reconveyance of a legal estate by trustees, without any specific evidence of a deed of conveyance, provided there be no fact to rebut such presumption." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Samborn, 3 T. R. 609. The certificate stated that T. A. and R. B. of Samborn, churchwarden and overseer of the parish of Great Coughton, acknowledged the pauper to be settled at Samborn, in their said parish of Great Coughton. The hamlet of Samborn maintains its own poor separately from the parish, and has a churchwarden and overseer of their own. T. A. and R. B. were churchwardens and overseers of Samborn at the time of granting the certificate. It was objected that evidence ought to have been received, to show that the persons described in the certificate as the officers of the parish were the officers of the hamlet. Buller, J. "The evidence does not contradict, but it explains the certificate."

proved to have been officers of the hamlet.

Rex v. St. Ives, 2 Sess. Ca. 153. A mandamus was moved for, to compel the churchwardens and overseers to sign a certificate, acknowledging a poor person being settled in their parish, on an affidavit that he had served an apprenticeship there, and that he was capable of getting a good livelihood elsewhere; but the court rejected the motion as a very strange attempt.

A parish is not compellable to grant a certificate.

5. Of Allowance and Attestation.

Rex v. Wooton, St. Lawrence, Burr. S. C. 581; 2 Bott, 713. The parish officers of St. Lawrence gave to Thomas Pryor, the pauper, a common printed form of a certificate, acknowledging him to be settled in St. Lawrence. It was signed and sealed by the parish officers, and attested by two witnesses. But the blanks for the allowance of justices were not filled up, and no name of any justice signed thereto. On his return to the parish granting the certificate, they relieved him until the time of his removal. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "A certificate cannot conclude the parish unless properly signed. The certificate act specifies certain checks and guards upon certificates. The justices are not obliged ministerially to allow and sign a certificate; they are not bound at all events to allow and sign it; they have a discretion to allow it, or not to allow it, if it be liable to objection. The act requires a conclusive certificate to be under the checks and guards therein particularised. This certificate wants them; therefore it is no certificate within this act. And if it be not a certificate within the act, it cannot conclude the parish." Yates and Aston, Js. concurred.

Certificate not signed by two justices is null.

Justices are not bound to allow a certificate.

Rex v. Austrey (see case, ante, 780). The certificate was allowed by two justices of Derbyshire. The certifying parish (Appleby) was situated partly in Derby and partly in Leicester. By the court: "The allowance of a certificate by two justices was not, like the removal of a pauper, strictly an act of jurisdiction, although the justices had a discretionary power to refuse or allow a certificate; yet the allowance was merely a voucher that credence was due to the acknowledgment of the churchwardens and overseers, that the pauper was settled in their parish. For this purpose, the justices of either county might be supposed to have a competent knowledge of the parties, although one end of the parish might be situate in an adjoining county; and, therefore, they might be taken to be within the meaning of the act."

If the certifying parish is in two counties, the justices of either may allow it.

Rex v. Boston, 2 Bott, 561. The justices who allow the certificate may also attest as witnesses; but it must appear upon the certificate that they took upon them to act in both capacities.

The justices who allow may attest as witnesses.

Barleycroft v. Coleoverton, 1 Strange, 402; 2 Bott, 710. Order of removal from B. to C., reciting that the pauper had come with a certificate, allowed according to the act, from C. to B., and being now become chargeable they send him back to C. Moved to be quashed, because it is not said the certificate was attested, but only that it was allowed. Sed per curiam: "The attestation is by the statute made previous to the allowance; and, therefore, when they say it was allowed according to the act of parliament, we must intend it was attested, for otherwise it could not be so allowed." Order confirmed.

When due allowance presumed.

Rex v. Ashton Keynes, Burr. S. C. 725. The certificate was signed by A. B. and P. J., and in the allowance it was certified that P. J. came before the justices, and made oath that he was present with the other witness and saw it signed by the parish officers, and that his name was his own writing. The sessions thought this no certificate, because A. B.'s signature was not proved before the justices. But the court were clear that there was sufficient

A parish certificate of more than thirty years' date, acknowledging the pauper's grandfather and father to belong to the appellant parish, produced by a rated inhabitant who was overseer of the respondent parish, was held to be evidence, and that the witness was not competent to give that account; and it seems that if necessary he might be examined as to the custody.

On an appeal, the respondents, in order to prove the fact of the delivery to them of a certificate given by the appellants, acknowledging the pauper to be their settled inhabitant, produced an old book from their own parish chest, in which was an entry of that fact in the handwriting of a former parish officer: Held, that such evidence was inadmissible.

Rex v. Netherthong, 2 M. & Sel. 337. Order of removal from Netherthong to Honley discharged. Case:—A rated inhabitant and overseer of Netherthong produced a certificate, dated in 1756, from Honley to Netherthong, acknowledging the pauper's grandfather and father to belong to Honley. It was objected, that before such certificate could be received and read in evidence some account must be given of it, and whence it came, which the witness was not competent to give, being a rated inhabitant of Netherthong. The sessions refused to permit the witness to give evidence. It was admitted that after Rex v. Ryton (post, 786), the ruling of the sessions could not be sustained; but it was prayed that the case might be remitted to be heard on the merits. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I remember upon the trial of an action for a false return to a mandamus, a corporator was called to produce some of the corporation muniments, and objection was taken to his admissibility; but Lord Kenyon said, 'that he should hold him capable, as a depositary of the muniments, of being brought forward for the purpose of producing them, and that if the party objecting wished to inquire as to the custody he might, and that he would receive the evidence.' If the parties choose to stand on such a point as this, it may be as well that they should abide by it." Order of sessions quashed. See the 3 Geo. II. c. 29, s. 8 (ante, 774), which directs that a certificate, after it has been allowed, and the oath of its execution certified by the justices, shall be evidence without further proof.

Rex v. Debenham, 2 B. & Ald. 185. Removal from Debenham to Kenton quashed. Case:—The pauper had gained a settlement in Debenham, unless it could be shown that his father at the time resided in that parish under a certificate from Kenton. No such certificate could be found in the custody of Debenham. The pauper's father, James Driver, proved that in 1771, having been removed from Debenham to Kenton, Debenham refused to allow him to return unless Kenton would grant him a certificate; to this Kenton consented. An order for granting this certificate was made at the quarterly meeting of the directors and guardians of the incorporated hundreds of Loes and Wilford, (in which Kenton is situated,) as appeared by an entry in the minute book of the proceedings of the hundred-house quarterly meetings, dated 20th March, 1771. And to prove that such certificate was delivered to the respondents in pursuance of such order, a book was produced from the parish chest of Debenham, on the outside of the cover was "Certs. Rec'd. Bonds do. Coppys of Orders, 1756." This book contained memorandums of orders of removal, of bonds and certificates received. The certificates were regularly numbered, and under the title of certificates received was the following entry, dated 1771, "No. 88. John Polkins from Kenton.—No. 89. James Driver, do." There were a variety of other certificates subsequently entered. The sessions were of opinion that this book was not admissible in evidence. Abbott, C. J. "The principles of the law of evidence in this country are founded on the strongest sense and soundest reasoning. It is of the first importance to preserve them strictly; inasmuch as they are the great safeguards of the subject, in the administration of justice in all cases, from those involving property of the most trifling amount to those where the life of an individual is at stake. I therefore should be extremely unwilling to come to any decision which should break in upon any established principle. It is an established principle, that nothing said or done by a person having at the time an interest in the subject-matter shall be evidence either for him or persons claiming under him. Now the entry in this book is of that description; for it is made by a person having an interest to make it, inasmuch as it is produced as proof of the delivery of a certificate by which the parish, of which the party making an entry is an inhabitant, is to be relieved from the burden of maintaining the individual named in the certificate. I think, therefore, that the safest course which the court can pursue will be to hold, that the sessions were justified in rejecting this evidence. There are, however, in this case, other circumstances from which the sessions may draw the conclusion, (if they shall think fit so to do,) that the certificate was in fact delivered. I think, therefore, that the case should go back to be re-heard upon that point." Bayley, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion, that the entry in this book was not evidence, the effect of it being to advance the interest of the person who made it." Holroyd, J. concurred. Case sent back to be re-heard.

Rex v. Ryton, 5 T. R. 259. Where the respondents produced a certificate more than thirty years old, purporting to be granted to their parish by the appellant parish, the Court of King's Bench said that it was sufficient for the respondents barely to produce the certificate to the sessions, without giving any account of it. (See Rex v. Netherthong, 2 M. & Sel. 337, ante, 786.)

A certificate of the master must be delivered to prevent his apprentice from acquiring a settlement.(a) (Rex v. Wensley, 5 T. R. 154.) [See case and judgment, post.]

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Harwich, Burr. S. C. 171. Wright, J. said "That the neglect to deliver did not make the certificate ineffectual; the parish who gave the certificate is at all events bound by the certificate, and the certificate is therefore good as against them."

A certificate may be evidence, though not delivered.

Rex v. Egremont, 14 East, 253. William Gainsford removed from Egremont to Cockermouth. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice to J. Raney, April 18th, 1802, for seven years, and served more than forty days of the latter part of his apprenticeship with J. B. in Cockermouth, who came into that parish with a certificate from an amicable society, acknowledging him to be a member of that society. On the certificate was an indorsement signed by a justice, according to the act. The only question was whether the production of the certificate was sufficient evidence under the 33 Geo. III. c. 54, without proof of its having been delivered to the churchwardens and overseers of Cockermouth? It was said that this evidence was sufficient, for the 18th section of the act provided that such a certificate so attested and certified "shall be taken, deemed, and allowed in all courts whatsoever as duly and fully proved, and shall be taken and received as evidence without other proof thereof." But that if this were not sufficient, yet the sessions under the circumstances might presume that it had been delivered, as it was produced in court by the parish of Cockermouth. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "To warrant them in presuming any fact, there must be presumable matter. The mere giving of the certificate by the society to the member is not made sufficient by the act to protect his residence under it in the parish, without a delivery of it to the parish officers. The 17th section says that no members of the society who shall come to inhabit in any parish, and shall deliver to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish a certificate, &c. shall be removable till actually chargeable. But if it remain in the pocket of the certificated person, that is not sufficient to prevent a settlement being gained under it. Here there is an absence of any proof of its having been delivered to the parish officers before the period when the apprentice served his master in Cockermouth, and therefore an exclusion of any presumption of the fact." Order of sessions quashed.

A certificate from a friendly society to a member, under 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, must be delivered to the parish officers.

from the parish of L. and W. to St. Peter and St. Paul, Bath. Order confirmed. Case:—The parishes of St. Peter and St. Paul had together purchased a piece of land in L. and W., and built thereon a common poor-house. In this they placed the pauper and others, giving them certificates to L. and W. The pauper had not been chargeable to L. and W., but was removed by it on the ground that he was not an object of the certificate act, and therefore not protected by it. Lord Mansfield, C. J. held that no restriction was imposed against two parishes uniting under 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4, to purchase a building for their poor, and that they might purchase it in a third parish; but when it is once purchased it becomes a part of the local system of each parish; and if the poor will not go there, they are not entitled to relief; and that the certificate acts authorize the whole body of the poor of whatever denomination and with whatever object, to leave their own, and to remove into any other parish, provided they can obtain the protection of a certificate. Buller, J. "As to the difficulty about bastards gaining settlements by birth, I should doubt whether the poor-house is not to this purpose to be considered as part of the parishes to which it so belongs, as in the case of children born in gaols." Order quashed.

9. To what Individuals a Certificate extends.

An unborn child is included in a certificate, so as to prevent his gaining a settlement by hiring and service.

A certificate to a spinster with child, acknowledging both to be legally settled in the parish, such parish is bound to receive the bastard.

But a certificate stating the woman to be unmarried, and agreeing to receive her and all the children she might thereafter have, does not extend to a bastard born several years after.

A certificate does not extend to children after they become heads of families. The family consists of those who live under the same roof with the pater-fami-

Rex v. Sherborne, Burr. S. C. 182. The case stated that the pauper's father came to Sherborne with a certificate including his wife and family from Thornford. About two years after, his wife died, and he married the pauper's mother, and three years after this marriage the pauper was born in Sherborne, whilst his father resided under the certificate. When the pauper was sixteen, he was hired and served for a year to an inhabitant of Sherborne. The court held that the pauper did by his birth come by certificate into Sherborne, and that he was restrained to the two modes of acquiring a settlement specified in the statute. (No argument was raised as to the second wife.) (S. P. Rex v. Bray, M. 19 Geo. II., Burr. S. C. 259; and Rex v. Buckingham, Burr. S. C. 314.)

Rex v. Frampton-upon-Severn, post, 803. A father went with a certificate to A. from B., but returned to B., and lived there for many years, and where he had a son. The son went to A., and hired himself for a year, and thereby gave a settlement.

Rex v. Ipsley, Burr. S. C. 650. A certificate was given by Studley to Ipsley, which acknowledged "Ann Causier, a spinster, and the child she now goeth with, to be legally settled in Studley." She was delivered of a child in Ipsley, and removed to Studley. The court held that the parish of Studley was bound by this certificate, thus noticing the woman's being unmarried and with child, and acknowledging the child she then went with to be legally settled in that parish.

Rex v. Mathon, 7 T. R. 362. The parish of Mathon engaged by a certificate to receive and relieve M. C. with the child of which she was then pregnant, and all other children she might thereafter have. Some years after she had an illegitimate child in the certificated parish. Lord Kenyon. "It is not now necessary to question the propriety of Rex v. Ipsley (supra), as that certainly went much beyond the former cases on the subject. However that is distinguishable from the present, as that only extended to the child with which the woman was then pregnant, and a child en ventre sa mere is capable of being described. But this child was not born till eight years after the certificate was granted, and being illegitimate it is not included within the general words of the certificate, which extends only to legitimate children."

Rex v. Darlington, 4 T. R. 797. Sarah, widow of T. Milburn, and seven children, were removed from All Saints to Darlington. Order confirmed. Case:—The grandfather of the pauper's husband came to All Saints with a certificate from Darlington. During his residence there he had a son, Thomas, who lived with him as part of his family, except for one year, when he was a servant in All Saints; after which service he returned to his father, and married, when he had a child, the pauper's husband, who lived in All Saints till his death. The pauper's husband, at the age of fourteen, was hired and served for three years in All Saints. Some time before this service the grandfather returned with his wife to Darlington (leaving his son and son's family behind), and died there. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "By 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, the parish to which the certificate is granted is obliged to receive the certificated person, together with his or her family. Now what is the fair legal import of the word family? It is true that in construing a will, and where it is the intention of the testator that it shall extend beyond the immediate children, it may have that operation; but that is not the sense in which it is used in this act. In common parlance the family consists of those who live under the same roof with the pater-familias; those who form his fireside. But when they branch out and become the heads of new establishments, they cease to be part of the father's family. I admit that a certificate extends to the son on account of the positive words of the act of parliament, he being part of the father's family; but when he himself becomes the head of a family, then the words of the statute, public policy, and the convenience of mankind, require that he should no longer be considered as part of his father's family, or be protected by the certificate granted to his father. Giving full effect to the certificate, as far as the words of the act and the intention of the legislature go, I think it meets with its boundary line, when it has protected the family of the certificated person, that is, all those who live with the pater-familias, and consequently that this grandchild, who was the son of the head of a distinct family, was not prevented gaining a settlement by hiring and service." Grose, J. "Grandchildren are not, properly speaking, of the family of the grandfather, but of his son; for when the son becomes the head of a new branch, and has children of his own, he ceases to be a part of his father's family, and his children then form a part of his own family. Orders quashed. [Same point in Rex v. Heath, 5 T. R. 583, and Rex v. Hampton, id. 266.]

Rex v. Idle, 2 B. & Ald. 149. The 35 Geo. III. c. 101, did not repeal the 33 Geo. III. c. 54. And therefore where an unemancipated daughter was delivered of a bastard child in the township of Idle, during her father's residence there under a certificate acknowledging him to be a member of a friendly society established under 33 Geo. III. c. 54, it was held that such certificate extended not only to him but to all members of his family; that the daughter was therefore at the time of her delivery residing in the township under the authority of 33 Geo. III. c. 54, and that by sect. 35 of that act, the settlement of the child followed that of the mother.

A certificate under the friendly society act to a man will include the family.

Rex v. Testerton, 5 T. R. 258. Testerton gave Great Ryburgh a certificate for Thomas Wood, the father of the pauper, his wife and seven children, by name, of which the pauper was one. The pauper lived with his father at Ryburgh till he was twenty; he then lived as a servant in Ryburgh for a year, and returned to his father. He then served two years more as a servant in Ryburgh, and afterwards returned to his father and resided a year with him, and then married, and has lived in Ryburgh till this order was made, but never with his father since his marriage. His father has been dead about five years. Lord Kenyon said, "This case was not contrary to Rex v. Darlington (ante, 788), for here the pauper is mentioned by name in the certificate itself, and he has never gained any settlement or lived out of the certificated parish since it was given." Order of removal to Testerton confirmed.

If the child is named in the certificate, his children are included.

Rex v. Batheaston, 8 T. R. 446. E. Gay, the grandfather of the pauper, went to Box with a certificate from Batheaston, certifying him, his wife, and "Edward and Thomas their children." Edward lived with his father till he married at Box, and had the pauper, who was hired and served as a servant in Box. The order of removal of pauper to Batheaston was confirmed; and the Court of King's Bench held that the distinction was taken in Rex v. Testerton between those cases where the certificate is granted to a person and his family generally, and those where the son is mentioned by name in the certificate; that in the former a grandson is not within the protection of the certificate; but that in the latter, where the son is named, his family, until they are emancipated, are within the protection of the certificate, not as the grandchildren of the principal person named, but as the family and

Persons who come into a parish under a certificate must also reside there under it, for the purpose of being within the operation of it; therefore where a son of a certificated person included as one of the father's family, marries and lives separately from the father, his apprentice may gain a settlement in the certificated parish.

Rex v. Mortlake, 6 East, 397. Removal of Mary Dormer and children from Mortlake to Great Marlow, quashed. Case:—John Dormer and Ann his wife went with a certificate from Hambleton to Great Marlow, and during their residence at Great Marlow had a son William. John and William died there; but William had left his father's family, married, and occupied a separate house at Great Marlow, and had a son named Thomas, who in 1760, several years after the death of John and Ann, was bound apprentice to his father for seven years, and served the same at Great Marlow. Thomas was afterwards married and had a son named Thomas, now deceased, who was the husband of the pauper and the father of the children removed. The question was, whether under the apprenticeship of T. D. the elder to his father W. D., and the 12 Anne, c. 18, T. D. the elder had gained a settlement in Great Marlow? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The question is, whether William, the son of John, who was once covered by his father's certificate, ceased to be so when he married and lived separately from his father; for if he ceased to be covered by the certificate himself, there seems to be no reason why he might not communicate a settlement to another, as well as gain one himself in the certificated parish. This depends upon the meaning of the word 'family' in 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30. The meaning of the word is not to be taken in its largest sense, and has been soundly restrained by the determinations in Rex v. Darlington (ante, 788,) and Rex v. Heath to those who constitute part of the existing household and family of the certificated person, or as Lord Kenyon expressed it in Rex v. Darlington, those who form his fireside. That character cannot apply to William after he had married and left his father's house and had become a new stirps, having a family of his own. Rex v. Hampton was decided upon the ground that the second wife continued after her husband's death to be the root and remains of the old family, and not a substantive distinct family, as here. She still continued as the representative of her deceased husband; but here the son had started for himself at the head of a new family by marrying and taking a separate house for himself. He was then in a condition to gain a settlement for himself in the certificated parish. But the words of the statute of Anne are relied on to show that he is not such a person with whom an apprentice bound to him could gain a settlement there; and it is said that they are in the disjunctive 'come into or reside in;' but upon referring to the certificate act, the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, which speaks of persons who 'shall come into any parish, there to be, inhabit, and reside,' and the 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, which speaks of doubts having arisen upon the former statute, by what acts any person coming to inhabit or reside within any parish by virtue of any such certificate may procure a settlement, and which enacts that no person who shall come into any parish (without more) by any such certificate, shall gain any settlement there except in certain ways mentioned; I say, upon comparing the words of the statute of Anne with the former provisions, I think those words must be read copulatively, and that they mean only to designate persons who may come into any parish for the purpose of residing, and actually reside there under a certificate." The other judges agreed.

Rex v. Thwaites, 1 M. & Sel. 669. Removal from Harrington to Thwaites confirmed. Case:—The pauper, Huddleston, was born in Thwaites, but was bound apprentice to R. Cass in Brigham, and served his whole time in that township. T. Cass, the father of R. Cass, resided at Brigham, under a certificate from Sunderland, which had been delivered to the parish of Brigham, acknowledging T. Cass and his wife to be settled within their township, and they promised to receive them, their child or children, born or to be

(a) The principle of these cases seems to be confirmed by Rex v. Thwaites (sup.), and the observations of Lord Ellenborough and Bayley, J. in Rex v. Lcek Wootton (post, 792), if reconcileable with these cases, must be understood in reference to derivative settlements only, and so they seem to have been construed by Mr. Nolan, vol. ii. 174.

born in their township, as persons legally settled. R. Cass was born at the time of the certificate so granted and delivered, and during the time of the pauper's serving him, was a married man, residing with his family in Brigham, apart from his father; but it did not appear that he had gained any settlement there. The question is, whether the pauper gained a settlement in Brigham by such service with R. Cass? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This appears very clearly to have been a service under an indenture of apprenticeship to a person, who at the time was not protected by the certificate, and consequently, such a service as coupled with the residence will entitle the pauper to a settlement in Brigham. The certificate engages 'to receive the father and mother their child or children born, or to be born.' The parish officers perhaps did not know the name of the son, or probably they were ignorant of the fact that they had any son at the time; but it is clear that they meant only to comprehend the whole of the family with which the parents should migrate. The parents do migrate with their own son into another township, and there the son afterwards separates from them, and becomes himself the head of a distinct family, and so from that time was emancipated. This is a main feature that distinguishes this case from Rex v. Sowerby, where the party continued to reside with his mother, and brings it within Rex v. Mortlake (ante, 790), which is also an authority to show that the pauper, by serving the son, under these circumstances, in the certified township, will thereby gain a settlement in that township." Le Blanc, J. "It seems to be admitted, that this case falls precisely within the determination of Rex v. Mortlake, unless it can be distinguished upon the terms of the certificate. The circumstance of distinction relied on is this, that the certificate is in its terms an acknowledgment of 'the child or children born or to be born,' and this, it has been argued, is the same thing as if the child had been expressly named by its christian name in the certificate. If this were so, there would be an end of the question; for it has been determined, and that determination has never been shaken, that a child named in the certificate stands precisely in the situation of the father, that is, as one of the principals mentioned in the certificate; and therefore if the son had been named in this case, it would follow that a service with him as an apprentice would not have conferred on him a settlement in the certified parish. No case, however, has been cited to show that any thing less than an express mention of the person by name will have the same effect as naming him; or that describing him by the words 'child born or to be born,' has ever been held to be equivalent. The current of all the authorities seems to decide this, that if a person, who is not named in the certificate, but only comes within the scope of it, as being the child of a person named, abandon the roof of his parents and become himself the parent stock of another family, such person is not only capable of gaining a settlement himself, but also of being the means of others gaining a settlement by service with him, although his father remains protected by the certificate. I am therefore of opinion, that the decision of the sessions was wrong." Bayley, J. "The provisions of the certificate act seem to place this case in a clear point of view. The statute enacts, (a) 'That if any person or persons that shall come into any parish or other place, there to inhabit and reside, shall deliver to the churchwardens or overseers a certificate under the hands and seals of the churchwardens and overseers of any other parish, township, or place, thereby acknowledging the person or persons mentioned in the said certificate to be an inhabitant or inhabitants legally settled in that parish, township, or place, every such certificate shall oblige the said parish or place to receive and provide for the person mentioned in the said certificate, together with his or her family, whenever they shall happen to become chargeable to the parish, township, or place to which such certificate was given.' Therefore, if a certificate be granted to a person by name, the parish is bound to provide for him and his family; but if several members of a family be named in it, the parish must provide for each as distinct and separate members, born at the time of granting the certificate, so long as he continues a part of his father's family; therefore, where the son married, and resided with his family apart from his father, in the certified parish: It was held, that his apprentice gained a settlement by serving him in the said parish.

unconnected with each other. Who then, are the persons named in this certificate, whom the township acknowledge as their inhabitants legally settled? The father and mother only; for 'their child or children born, or to be born,' comprehends nothing more than their family; the children are to be received back as part of the family of the father, and not because they are acknowledged as settled inhabitants of the certifying township. In the cases relied upon, the certificate not only named the parents but the children also. But where children come within the certificate, merely under the description of the family of the person named, Rex v. Darlington, Rex v. Heath, and Rex v. Mortlake, have decided, that they continue under the protection of the certificate so long only as they constitute a part of the family. That is the plain and broad line of distinction." Order of sessions quashed.

The settlement of a son coming into a parish with his father under a certificate, as part of the father's family, not having before gained any settlement of his own, shifts with the settlement of the father in the certificated parish, though such son were named in the certificate.

Rex v. Leek Wootton, 16 East, 118. Removal of Joseph Bromwich, &c., from Leek Wootton to Milverton, quashed. Case:—Some time before and at the time of making the order of removal, Joseph Bromwich and his family resided in Coventry, within which the removing magistrates had no jurisdiction; but he had applied to the overseers of Leek Wootton for relief before the order was made. In April, 1790, Michael, the father of the pauper, went from Leek Wootton with his family, of which the pauper was one, to reside with his (Michael's) father, Joseph Bromwich at Milverton, who rented a tenement there at a rent of 6*l.* a year; but the same was of the yearly value of 10*l.* He had no lease thereof, but was tenant from year to year. He made a will, and dying in May following, devised his interest in this tenement to his son Michael, and appointed him his executor. Michael continued in possession and remained in this tenement many years, and paid the last rent due from his father as his executor. In 1791, and while he was in possession of the tenement, Michael applied to Leek Wootton for, and the parish officers there granted a certificate, by which they acknowledged him, his wife, Joseph (the pauper), and several other children by name, to be inhabitants, &c., of Wootton. Joseph was then about twelve years of age, and continued to reside at Milverton with his father on this tenement, five years after the death of Joseph Bromwich the elder, but never gained any settlement in his own right." Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Where there are conflicting decisions upon the construction of a statute, the court must refer to that which is, and ought to be, the source of all such decisions, that is, the words of the statute itself. Some cases have been cited upon this occasion which are certainly of great weight, but which are in contradiction to the prior cases of Cold Ashton (post, 800,) and Deddington; and therefore the court are obliged to refer to the fountain head of all, the statute, to see which of them most corresponds with the words of it, and upon the best consideration I think that Cold Ashton and Deddington range more strictly within the words of 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, and 9 & 10 W. III. c. 11. The second of these statutes recites the former, which empowers the granting of such certificates to provide for the person mentioned in the certificate, with his or her family; and the legislature evidently meant that the certificate should be entire to protect the pater-familias and his family, whether named or not; and the naming of any of the family is mere matter of convenience, in order the more easily to identify them, but is not directed to be done by the legislature, nor are any powers taken away from or given to such children on account of their being named or not named in the certificate. The 8 & 9 W. III. says, that when any person coming to inhabit and reside in any parish, shall at the same time bring and deliver a certificate to the parish officers, thereby owning the person or persons mentioned in the certificate to be an inhabitant or inhabitants of the parish certifying; every such certificate shall oblige the parish to provide for the person mentioned in the certificate, together with his or her family, when chargeable. Now the person to be named in the certificate is the pater-familias, with his family, if he happen to have any; and then and not before, it shall be lawful for any such person and his or her children, &c., to be removed. I am aware that the word such is not in the enacting part of the clause; but I think it must, to complete the sense, be incorporated there, being in the antecedent part of the statute. The scope and object of the act was to protect the residence of a father or mother coming with their family into another parish, without casting a burthen upon it, or enabling them to gain a settlement there except in the two ways mentioned. There is nothing in the act which requires the nomination of the constituent parts of their family, and it is mere artificial reasoning which makes the distinction between such of the children as are, and such as are not, named in the certificate; a distinction which the act itself does not make. Then as the child, though named, was still to be considered only as a constituent part of the family, it brings it to the question, whether he was ousted of his derivative settlement from the father? Upon that point I think that the language of Lord Mansfield is founded in reason, and not opposed by the act, that the children of all parents must have the settlement of the father until they acquire another for themselves. I think therefore that the pauper in this case continuing part of his father's family at the time, derived the settlement from him, and was not repelled from it by the circumstance of being named in the certificate." Grose, J., agreed.

Le Blanc, J. "The sessions have sent this case for the opinion of the court upon the question, whether the pauper acquired a derivative settlement from his father? We must therefore take it that the son came into the certificated parish as part of his father's family, never having gained a settlement in his own right; though that was not stated in the case. Then coming into the parish as part of his father's family, under the certificate, with only a derivative settlement from his father, the question is, whether while he continued part of his father's family, a settlement gained by his father there will not also be communicated to the son; whether the settlement of the son will not also shift with that of the father? The cases of Testerton and Batheaston have not decided that the son coming into a parish, and continuing as part of his father's family under a certificate, is not capable of having his derivative settlement shift with his father's settlement; they only decided that a child named in the certificate stood in a different situation from that of a child who was not named; and that the settlement of a son so named, who had ceased to be part of the father's family, should not shift with that of his father. Now here the son had gained no settlement of his own at the time, but was living with the father as part of his family; and the cases of Cold Ashton and Deddington have decided that the settlement of a son so circumstanced, though named in the certificate, shall vary with the subsequent settlement of the father; and that if he comes into the parish as part of the father's family, with a certificate, his being named in it does not prevent the shifting of his settlement with his father's. This case therefore is distinguishable from those of Testerton and Batheaston" (ante, 789).

Bayley, J. "The true construction of the certificate act seems to be, that a pauper having an independent settlement of his own, and not merely a derivative settlement from the father, shall not, if named in the certificate, gain a settlement in the certificated parish, except in one or other of the ways permitted to the father himself; but if the child come into the parish under the certificate with his father, having only a derivative settlement from the father, what is there to prevent his settlement shifting with that of his father, as in other cases? The act does not say it shall not; and the cases say, that though named in the certificate, he shall be treated as part of his father's family, and his settlement shift with his father's. It is said, indeed, that by the words of the act, the settlement of a certificated person can only be acquired in the certificated parish by two modes, and that this is not one of them. But I think the fallacy of the argument is this, that the children do not come into the parish under the certificate suo jure, but only as part of the father's family, and under his protection. The cases of Cold Ashton and Deddington have decided this point. And if this were not the true construction, this inconvenience would follow, that however young the children might be, coming with their father into the parish with a certificate naming them, if the father gained a new settlement there, he would be settled in one parish and the children in another." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Storrington, 7 T. R. 133. Order of removal of James Ceary from Storrington to Patching quashed. Case:—Soon after 1778 the pauper's father, John Ceary, returned to Storrington with a certificate, acknowledging him, his wife, and two children, by name, to be inhabitants of Patching; but the pauper, then about fourteen years of age, was neither included in a previous order of removal to Patching, nor in the certificate; the parish officers of Storrington having declared, upon the examination of the father before the magistrates, that as the pauper got his own living they had nothing to do with him. The pauper, both before and after his father's removal, supported himself entirely by daily labour, and lodged and boarded with his father, for which he paid. About two years after his father's return with the certificate, and while he continued to reside under it, the pauper, being then about sixteen years of age, hired himself for a year to Mr. Brown, of Storrington, with whom he had previously served as a day-labourer, and served the year out, after which he again worked for himself as a day-labourer, and lodged and boarded with his father on the same terms as before, until he married; he continued to reside at Storrington until he was removed by the present order. By Lord Kenyon, C. J. "In deciding this case I wish not to disturb any of the authorities which have been cited; but my opinion in this case proceeds upon its own particular circumstances. Consider the situation of this family; the father, mother, and two of the younger children, who had been resident at Storrington, were removed by an order of justices to Patching, who gave them a certificate, and they returned to Storrington. Now, before and at the time when this certificate was obtained, the pauper had worked as a day-labourer, and received his wages for his own use; had lodged in his father's house, and paid a weekly sum for that accommodation. The form of the certificate too is material, it was granted to the father, mother, and the two younger children; but the pauper was not included either in the order of removal, or in the certificate. If, indeed, he were under the disability of gaining a settlement by 9 & 10 W. III., to be sure this is not one of the modes allowed by that act. But the question is, whether he is to be considered a certificated person? Generally speaking, if a certificate be granted to the head of a family, it extends to all the members of that family; but it is competent to the parties themselves to narrow the extent of a certificate; and the certificate in question seems to have been specially framed for the purpose of excluding the pauper from the operation of it. It is not conceived in general terms, but, after mentioning the father and mother, it goes on to specify the two younger children, omitting the pauper, who was the eldest; and it is a known maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Therefore, on the particular circumstances of this case, I am opinion that the pauper was not resident at Storrington under the certificate, and consequently was not disabled from gaining a settlement there by hiring and service; but I desire to have it distinctly understood that I do not, by this decision, mean to shake the authority of any of the former cases." Grose, J. "The question is, whether the pauper's residence in Storrington were, or were not, protected by this certificate; for if it were not he is now settled in that parish. A certificate protects only three classes of persons:—those who are named in it; those who are part of the family of the certificated person when it is granted; and his children born in the certificated parish after that time. Now the pauper certainly does not come within either the first or the third class: nor was he part of his father's family, as far as respects the certificate; for the certificate does not mention his name, though it does mention the names of the younger children; and the parish officers declared that he was not included in the former order of removal, which was the occasion of this certificate, because he was capable of gaining a livelihood for himself. All the parties interested considered the pauper to be sui juris, when the certificate was granted, and therefore it was not meant to include him; he was not a part of his father's family for the purposes of this certificate." Lawrence, J. "As the certificate would not be conclusive of the pauper's settlement, it seems to follow that he gained a settlement in Storrington.

10. Of the Effect of a Certificate.

Rex v. Wootton St. Lawrence, Burr. S. C. 581; 2 Bott, 713. The certificate had not been duly allowed, still it was argued that it amounted to an admission by the parish of the pauper's then settlement; but the court held that if it was not a certificate within the act, it did not conclude the parish, and if allowed as evidence and presumption, would lead to great litigation.

New Windsor v. White Waltham, 1 Stra. 186. The pauper went with a certificate from White Waltham, owning him and a woman as husband and wife, into New Windsor, where they had six children. The man died, and the woman swearing they had never been married, the justices adjudged the children to be bastards, and settled where born. But by the court: "The certificate is conclusive as to White Waltham, and they are not to be admitted to dispute the validity of the marriage; and therefore the children must be sent to White Waltham."

Rex v. Headcorn, Burr. S. C. 253; 2 Stra. 1233. Maidstone gave a certificate to Headcorn, acknowledging Richard Burden and Mary his wife, and their four children, to be settled at Maidstone. Afterwards it appeared that Mary was not his wife, but that he had a former wife then living. Maidstone acknowledged the settlement of the real wife, but not of Mary and her children; and pleaded, that it would be hard that they should be forced to take two wives, and different children. But by the court: "The parish that certifies must take care for whom they certify; and the certificate is conclusive. The parish of Maidstone have by this certificate expressly acknowledged the said Mary to be their legal inhabitant; and the parish of Headcorn were thereupon bound to receive her. Therefore, the parish of Maidstone are obliged to provide for her and her children by Burden. Maidstone say they were deceived: but it was their own fault or folly if they were so; and they deceived Headcorn; therefore they ought to suffer, and not Headcorn."

Rex v. Ullesthorpe, 8 T. R. 465. Case:—The mother of the pauper married a person who enlisted soon after as a soldier, and had not been heard of by her for forty years, and was never again seen by her. Hearing he was dead, she married the pauper's father; Earl Philton gave a certificate to Ullesthorpe, including the father, Mary his wife, and their family. The original husband came home after the second marriage. The removal was of the father, mother, and pauper from U. to E. P., and the order was quashed by the sessions, which order of sessions was quashed by the court without opposition. (And see Rex v. Lubbenham, post, 796.)

Rex v. Tostock, 2 Bott, 739; Burr. S. C. 737. Case:—The pauper, Edward Parkinson, was born at Tostock of Elizabeth Parkinson, spinster, an inhabitant of Tostock; E. Jerman, who was settled in Islame, but resided in Tostock, was the putative father of the pauper; soon after the birth of the pauper, E. P. was married to Jerman; a short time after the marriage the parish officers of Tostock desired Jerman to get a certificate from Islame; whereupon Jerman applied to Islame for a certificate for himself, his wife, and his son, without informing them that the pauper was born a bastard; and they knew nothing of it: Islame granted a certificate, acknowledging Jerman, his wife, and Edward their son, to be inhabitants. Lord Mansfield, "This is the case of Rex v. Headcorn (supra), unless you can show that the pauper desiring a certificate as to the son, and that the pauper receiving the certificate, colluded with the parish officers of Tostock, in which case the justices should have found fraud: the certificate is conclusive."

Rex v. Buckingham, Cald. 64. Mary Swift, widow, was removed from Fringford to Buckingham. The pauper and her father jointly purchased a tenement for 14*l.* or 15*l.* in Buckingham: each paying a part of the purchase-money. It was surrendered to the father during his life, with the remainder to the pauper in fee: the father was admitted: in the father's lifetime the pauper married Robert Swift, who was settled at Fringford:

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

10. Of the Effect of a Certificate.

Imperfect certificate but evidence as an admission.

A certificate, acknowledging the persons named in it to be man and wife, is conclusive to the parish, though it afterwards appear untrue.

Same point.

When the second marriage of the wife is not fraudulent or criminal, a certificate acknowledging the second husband, and M., his wife, will be conclusive, though the first husband return after the second marriage.

Where a certificate included, by mistake, a bastard as a legitimate child, it was held conclusive.

A certificate is conclusive between the parish certifying and the parish to which it is granted, although not delivered till after the removal.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

A certificate is not conclusive, excepting between the two original parishes.

When a question arises between the certifying parish and a third parish, the certifying parish may inquire into the truth of the facts stated in that certificate.

after the father's death the pauper alone, according to the custom of the manor, was admitted, and she and her husband came to and resided upon the premises until his death: on the 14th June, 1776, Fringford granted a certificate to the pauper, which was delivered to her and kept in her possession, and not delivered to Buckingham till after the removal: the pauper, after the granting the certificate, and before the removal, resided upon the premises upwards of forty days. The certificate was offered as conclusive evidence against Fringford, so as to prevent their setting up any settlement obtained in Buckingham, previous to the granting thereof. But the sessions were of opinion that the certificate, under these circumstances, did not prevent the pauper gaining a settlement at Buckingham by such estate and residence, and confirmed the order. It was moved to quash these orders, on the ground that the detention of the certificate by the pauper till after her removal, granted by the parish removing, and of which they could not be ignorant, would not entitle them to avoid the effect of it when produced at the trial against them, but that they were thereby concluded. No cause being shown to the contrary, both orders were quashed.

Rex v. Lubbenham, 4 T. R. 251. Order of removal of Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Hutchins, (then absent,) and H. her daughter, from Lubbenham to Oxendon, quashed. Case:—The pauper, Elizabeth, was married about seventeen years ago to J. Hutchins. Two years afterwards he was convicted of a robbery, and condemned, but reprieved on his enlisting as a soldier: he went abroad, and five years after, Elizabeth (hearing that he was dead) married Ponton at Lubbenham. About a twelvemonth after, Hutchins returned. Whilst Ponton and Elizabeth were residing at Threddingworth as man and wife, they went together to Lubbenham for a certificate to Threddingworth, who granted one, acknowledging Ponton and his wife (without mentioning her christian name) to be settled in Lubbenham, and they returned with it to Threddingworth. Ponton was never married to any other person. H. was born during their cohabitation at Lubbenham, and baptized as the daughter of J. Ponton and Elizabeth. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "In the first place, without considering the effect of the certificate, there is no doubt but that the second marriage was void, and consequently that the settlement of the pauper, Elizabeth, continued where her first husband was settled. But it is stated that she afterwards contracted a marriage de facto with a person whose settlement was at Lubbenham; and that she and her second husband applied to Lubbenham for a certificate to Threddingworth, which was accordingly granted. And therefore the question is, whether that certificate be conclusive against Lubbenham as to all the world, or only as between the two contracting parishes? Now estoppels in general are not to be favoured; they are to be extended only as far as the positive rules have gone; because the tendency of them is to prevent the investigation of the truth of the case. It is reasonable that a certificate, which is a kind of estoppel, should protect the parish which acts immediately on the faith of it; by the act of the officers of Lubbenham, the parish of Threddingworth were induced to receive the parties into their parish; but there is no necessity for extending the estoppel any farther. In all the cases, except that of Honiton v. St. Mary Axe, (a) the question arose between the parish granting the certificate and the parish to which it was given. That is the only case which extends the doctrine further; and there it is said that a certificate is conclusive on the parish granting it as to all the world. But the reason given by Lord C. J. Parker, 'that as all other parties are bound to receive the pauper, so the parish that certifies is concluded as to all other parishes,' is not true; for other parishes are not bound to receive the pauper; there must be a particular parish in contemplation at the time of granting the certificate. Therefore, as the reason on which that case was decided fails, we are delivered from the authority of it. Then what reason is there why the truth of the case should not be enquired into? No injury is thereby done to the third parish; no imposition is practised upon them; neither is there any hardship in it. It would indeed be a hardship on Threddingworth parish, who acted on the faith of the certificate, and who were bound to receive the parties mentioned in it, if the certificate were not conclusive in their favour against Lubbenham: but that reason does not extend to this parish. Therefore on that ground, and on the principle that estoppels are not to be favoured, the parish of Lubbenham ought not to be precluded from enquiring into the truth of the case: and according to the truth of the case it appears that the pauper, Elizabeth, was settled at the place of her first husband's settlement. I am therefore of opinion that the order of sessions, as far as it respects the wife, should be quashed; but affirmed as to the child, because the fair conclusion from all the facts stated is, that she was a bastard." Ashhurst, Buller, and Grose, Js., delivered their opinions to the same effect.

Harrison v. Lewis, 3 Salk. 253. A certificate promising to receive the persons whenever they become chargeable, is not conclusive against a settlement obtained afterwards; for though it be according to the agreement between the parishes, yet a private agreement in this respect shall not alter the law.

Rex v. Petham, 2 Stra. 1147. The pauper was bound apprentice to a certificate man in Tenterden, and after living with him there two years was by him assigned over to a parishioner of Lidd, with whom he inhabited and served for the remainder of the seven years. And the court were of opinion he had gained a settlement in Lidd; for the act had not made the binding void, but has only taken away one of the consequences of such binding for the sake of the certificated parish. It never intended to meddle with the case of a legal parishioner's apprentice, and when once there is an assignment to such an one, it is the same as if it had been an original binding: the true construction of the statute is, that in respect to the certificated parish, such binding or inhabitation shall give no settlement.

Rex v. Sherbourne, Burr. S. C. 182. It was observed by Mr. J. Denison, (to which all the court agreed,) that a certificate provides for the security of that parish only into which the certificate person came to reside by virtue of such certificate; but doth not exclude a certificate person from gaining a settlement in another parish, in the same manner as any other person may do.

Rex v. Silton, Burr. S. C. 269; 2 Bott, 59. The father and mother of John Milbourn, the pauper, came from Silton with a certificate to Wincanton. The pauper was afterwards born in Wincanton, and at twelve years of age was bound out by Silton apprentice to a tailor at Horsington for eight years, and served him there. By the court: "The pauper in this case was a person at large as to every other parish except Wincanton, to whom the certificate was delivered; and, therefore, he gained a settlement at Horsington."

Rex v. Horsley, Burr. S. C. 385; 2 Bott, 646. Horsley gave a certificate to A. Cope and his family, who went with it to Hollingsclough, where his son, the pauper, was born. The pauper, at twelve years of age, was hired and served for a year at Peck; and then returned to Hollingsclough. By the court: "The Rex v. Silton (supra) is in point, only with this immaterial difference, that there the son's settlement was gained by apprenticeship, and here by hiring and service."

Rex v. Bishopside, Burr. S. C. 381. Jonathan Joy came from Menwith with a certificate to Bishopside, where he resided for some years. Afterwards he purchased a freehold house for 10*l.* in Dacre cum Buerly, and went to inhabit there, to which place he carried his certificate and delivered it to the proper officer there. During his residence in Dacre, John Thackrey, the pauper, was bound to and served him as an apprentice in Dacre. By the court: "The delivery of the certificate was neither necessary nor proper; it ought to have been left at Bishopside. It is not directed to the officers of Dacre; besides, the master did not go to Dacre under the certificate, but as the owner of a freehold there, to which he had a right to go and inhabit in."

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

A certificate is not binding against a subsequent settlement.

An apprentice to a certificated man being assigned to one in another parish, may gain a settlement in the other parish by serving him there.

Settlement prevented only in the certified parish.

A certificated person is at large as to every parish but the certificated one.

So also in the case of hiring and service in a third parish.

11. Certificate how determined.

11. Certificate how determined.

There are various ways in which the operation of a certificate may be determined: as

1. By the Acquisition of a Settlement in any mode in a third Parish.

2. By a Settlement in the Certificated Parish, gained—

First. By taking a Lease of a Tenement of the annual value of 10l.

Secondly. By Appointment to and Execution of a Public Annual Office.

Thirdly. By Residence of Forty Days on Estate acquired by Devise, Descent, and semble, Voluntary Gift.

Fourthly. But not a Purchase in its ordinary sense.

3. By Abandonment of the Certificate.

4. By an Order of Removal.

5. By Certificate to another Parish.

“The parish who grants must get rid of the certificate, and if that can be done only by presumption, it remains good.” “The onus probandi of a fresh settlement lies on the certifying parish.” (Rex v. Warblington, 1 T. R. 241, ante, 723.)

1. It may be determined by the Acquisition of a Settlement in a third Parish.

Rex v. Great Torrington, Burr. S. C. 753. By a certificate from Lancrass, Mary Bray came to Bideford, and inhabited there some years. Then she was bound apprentice by the parish of Lancrass, and lived under the indenture at Great Torrington for several years. After the expiration of the apprenticeship, she hired for a year, and served that year in Bideford. The question was, whether by this hiring and service she gained a settlement at Bideford, to which place she had come by certificate? And it was adjudged (the point being given up) that, “having served an apprenticeship in a third parish, she was become quite clear of the certificate, and therefore was as much at liberty to gain a new settlement in Bideford, as any uncertificated person could be.”

[The like adjudged the same term, in Rex v. Keynsham, Burr. S. C. 429.]

2. Determination by gaining a Settlement in the Certificated Parish.

The legislature has imposed certain restraints on the acquisition of settlements in the certificated parish: but settlements may be gained,—

First. By really and bona fide taking a Lease of a Tenement of the yearly value of 10l.

Rex v. Findern, Cald. 426. A pauper obtained a certificate before he had completed forty days' residence upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10l.; by completing such residence the certificate will be avoided, and he may gain a settlement.

Rex v. Croft, 3 B. & Ald. 171. Removal from Croft to Stoney Stanton. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper was bound apprentice to and served Edward Stephens in Croft. The father of Stephens came into Croft under a certificate. After he came to Croft he occupied a house in Croft and some land in Marston, and in one year, while he was in the occupation of the said premises, he agisted three cows for two or three months in the fields of his landlord. No positive contract for the agistment was proved. The three cows were agisted for above forty days in the year, and the average value of the agistment, reckoned by the year, added to the value of the other tenements, made the whole above 10l. per annum; but, if the value of the agistment, taken only for the time that the cows were on the land, were to be added, it would make the whole less than 10l. Abbott, C. J. in delivering the opinion of the court said, “Upon the authorities there can be no doubt that the facts here stated must be deemed to be a coming to settle upon a tenement of the yearly value of 10l., within the meaning of the stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12. The only doubt was, whether a difference of construction might prevail upon the certificate act, the 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, which is expressed in somewhat more precise terms, viz. 'bonâ fide take a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l*.' It is obvious, however, that in construing these words, reference must be had to the former statute, to supply the word 'yearly,' which is wanting in this statute; and in like manner the words of the second branch of this clause, 'execute some annual office in such parish, being legally placed in such office,' have been construed, with reference to the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6, to require a service of the office for an entire year. (Rex v. Fittleworth, Burr. S. C. 238.) No case has been found in which the 9 & 10 Will. III. has received a different construction from the 13 & 14 Car. II., as to the nature of the tenement or of the taking thereof. On the contrary, it has been decided, that a lease at will is a lease within the certificate act. (Stra, 502.) And in Rex v. Shenston (Burr. S. C. 474), Lord Mansfield says, the two acts are to be considered together, being in pari materia.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

Lease at will is within the act.

A residence by permission is not sufficient. Taunton, J. (Rex v. St. Mary, Newington, ante, 611; Rex v. Nacton, 3 B. & Ad. 543; ante, 611.)

Residence by permission is not sufficient.

Secondly. If the Pauper executes an Annual Public Office, being legally placed therein, he gains a Settlement in the Certificated Parish. (See "Settlement by Office," ante, 739.)

The words "legally placed therein" are not in the 3 & 4 Will. III. c. 11, s. 6.

Thirdly. By Estate. Estates acquired by Operation of Law, &c. (See "Settlement by Estate," ante, 680.)

Rex v. Cassington, 2 Bar. & Ad. 874. Appeal against an order of two justices removing W. Whitley, his wife and family, from Handborough to Cassington. Order confirmed. Case:—Robert Whitley, about sixty years ago, went to the parish of Handborough with a certificate duly signed, certified and allowed, acknowledging that he, his wife and family were legally settled at Cassington. In 1771, Thomas Whitley, father of the said Robert, duly made his last will in writing, and thereby devised as follows:—"I give and bequeath to my son Robert Whitley the sum of 5*l*., and my desire is that my son Robert shall live in that part of my house as he now doth, and at the same yearly rent which he now gives, as long as my son John shall enjoy or own the same: And all other my estate and stock whatsoever I stand possessed of at the time of my decease, I give to my beloved son John Whitley and his heirs for ever." It appeared by the court rolls of the manor of Handborough, that on the 18th of October, 1772, John Whitley, as son and devisee of Thomas Whitley, was duly admitted tenant to the house mentioned in his father's will. It further appeared from the same court rolls, that on the 25th of October, 1773, the said John Whitley surrendered the house to the use and behoof of Robert Whitley of Handborough and his heirs for ever, and at the court Robert Whitley did his fealty and was admitted tenant. It appeared also, that in the year 1773 it was not usual to state on the court rolls the consideration, whether valuable or otherwise, which were given for property surrendered; but they were mentioned in the copies of the court rolls delivered out. The copy was not produced in evidence in this case. Robert Whitley, the pauper's father, resided in the house more than forty days previous to such surrender, (and after his father's death and more than forty days after the surrender,) and during this occupation the pauper was born. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It seems to me that under the will the pauper's father took an estate pur autre vie, that is, for John's life, defeasible on his ceasing to enjoy and own the estate. No one could say that John would so cease during the whole of his life, so long therefore as John lived Robert might hold his estate. And it was conveyed to him by the will of his father and not by his purchase or any act of his own." Parke, J. "Robert took an estate for life determinable on certain events. It is immaterial whether the estate be equitable or legal, the certificate is equally discharged. The case of Rex v. Great Driffield (8 B. & C. 684,) leaves all the cases untouched where the consideration is any other than pecuniary." Taunton, J. and Patteson, J. concurred. The rule for quashing the order of sessions was made absolute.

Rex v. Cold Ashton, Burr. S. C. 444. In 1725 D. Harrison, Mary, his wife, and William, their son, went with a certificate from Woodchester to Cold Ashton. In 1728 W. Fido, the father of Mary, died intestate, leaving her and five other children, and being possessed of a tenement in Cold Ashton for the remainder of a term of eighty-two years, determinable on the death of himself and Mary. Upon the death of W. F., D. H. and Mary took possession of the tenement, and have occupied it ever since. No administration of the effects of W. F. was granted to any person. William lived with his parents in the tenement till 1748, when he married the pauper, Mary, and after his marriage he and his wife lived in Cold Ashton, separate from D. H., until the death of William in 1755. There were two questions: First, Whether D. H. acquired any settlement different from that to which he was entitled by the certificate? Second, Whether, if so, the son gained a derivative one? Lord Mansfield, C. J. "As to the first question, the case of a certificate man's gaining a settlement by residing on his own estate, is precisely the same as that of a common person not under a certificate, and arises by construction: for it is not within the words of the 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, which speaks only of serving an annual office, and renting 10*l.* a year. But residing on a man's own estate was considered as a stronger case than the casual property acquired by renting, because he has a settlement on the statute of the 13 & 14 Car. II., not by the words, but on the principle that he cannot be removed. This construction being made upon the reason, gives a greater latitude to the principle on which the construction is founded; and, therefore, a man who resides on his own estate, though of ever so small a value, is irremovable. And this holds equally in the case of a certificate person who gains a settlement, if, after he comes in by certificate, he is under such circumstances as by his property he cannot be removed. Whether in this case Daniel Harrison had such a property in this leasehold estate when he first entered upon it, is a question that need not now be determined. What I ground my opinion upon is, that he has acquired by the length of possession such a right as he was not removable from. For the statute of limitations doth not operate by way of barring the remedy only, but it gives a right. He may bring an ejectment after twenty years' possession; and no person could have recovered against him, because such person was out of possession all the time. I except the case of landlord and tenant; for there the possession of the tenant is that of the landlord. This possession gives a title from which the parish officers could not remove him, nor the next of kin. In Rex v. Widworthy (ante, 690,) they had been satisfied their shares; and here, if they have not controverted it for such a length of time, it is to be supposed they have given up that right. If the case had turned upon the general question, whether the next of kin gains a settlement without administration, I should have desired time to consider of it, and the cases cited. There is a material difference between the party's being sole next of kin, and where in common with others, as in this case; for where one is the sole next of kin, he has the undoubted right of administration. In general it is of more consequence that the law with regard to the poor's settlements should be certain, than what the determination is as to the particular case in question. As to the second point, of a derivative settlement to the son, the word emancipation is a loose term in our law, especially in the matter of settlements, and it is used in the books without affixing any precise idea. Indeed, it is a term borrowed from another law, and not properly applicable to ours. The rule I take to be this: Children are entitled to the settlement of their father till they have acquired another. As to the distinction made at the bar, that the son shall not derive a new settlement from his father, because it was acquired by the father himself after the son had left him; this might be material were the fact so, but it is not stated here to day that was the case, or that he left his father so as to change his derivative settlement. It is stated, that he lived twenty years with his father in this tenement, or, at least, very near it, and we cannot intend that he did not." Denison, J. was of the same opinion. (Forster, J. absent.) Wilmott, J. "As to the father, I do not think it material to say any thing about the administration. Had the case turned upon that, it would have deserved consideration. If it be a matter already settled, I shall be for adhering to the rule stare decisis, which is a right rule, and more especially in the poor law. Possession by wrong gives a title upon an ejectment against the legal owner. Here is a legal title, without administration: after such a length of possession, one would be inclined to presume as much as possible. Now, here it is possible that Daniel Harrison and his wife might have some grant or assignment from William Fido in his lifetime; or some other regular and rightful title to the possession which they took of this tenement. So that their possession might, possibly, have been a rightful one. It would be too nice to be computing days to see whether the son was with his father a day over or under the twenty years." And the order of sessions was affirmed.

Rex v. Shenstone, Burr. S. C. 468. The wife of Isaac Green, a certificate man, had an estate devised to her for life by her father; upon which she and her husband entered, and lived thereupon for above six months. The court: "Isaac hereby gained a settlement, notwithstanding the certificate."

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

So if an estate be devised to the wife of a certificate man for her life.

Fourthly. No Settlement can be acquired by Purchase in its ordinary sense. The Law on this point is fully stated in the following Case.

Rex v. Great Driffield, 8 B. & C. 684. Order of removal of T. Harrison from Great Driffield to Garton quashed. Case:—The pauper's father was bound apprentice to Lyon, then residing in Great Driffield, under a certificate from Kirkburn. During the apprenticeship, Lyon bought a cottage at Great Driffield for more than 30*l.*, and the pauper served more than forty days after the purchase. C. a. v. Bayley, J. delivered the judgment. "The question was, whether the pauper's father gained a settlement in Great Driffield by serving as an apprentice to Lyon. It was contended that he did, because the certificate was discharged by the master's having acquired a settlement in Great Driffield by the purchase mentioned in the case; and if so, it was argued, that the subsequent service to the master, after he ceased to reside under the certificate, though by virtue of a binding made to him whilst so residing, was sufficient to confer a settlement on the apprentice. It is unnecessary to decide the latter question, if no settlement was gained by the master by the purchase which he made, and we are of opinion that no settlement was gained. [He then read the 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, and said,] By the words of the statute no settlement can be gained by any act whatsoever; that is, as the context shows, by an act done by the pauper, other than the two which are pointed out by the act. The purchase of an estate by Lyon is an act done by him other than those mentioned; and according to the plain and ordinary sense of its words, he cannot gain a settlement in the parish. But we are bound to construe every statute according to the plain import of the words, unless we feel ourselves bound by an uniform course of well-considered decisions giving a different effect to the provisions of the statute; or unless it would lead to such consequences that we can safely say that the legislature must have had a different intention from that which the ordinary import of the words convey. It will be found, however, that the decisions are few, and they are founded, in some degree, upon a mistaken supposition, that the point properly arose and was decided in the first reported case, that is, Burclear v. Eastwoodhay (1 Stra. 163; Burr. S. C. 221), in which it was held, that where a certificated pauper acquired an estate in right of his wife, his certificate was discharged; and it is stated in the judgment that he did not come to it by an act of his own, but by act of law. Other reasons, it is true, are assigned in the judgment, but it may be supported on that ground, for a settlement acquired by operation of law is not required by any act of the pauper, and therefore not prohibited by the statute 9 & 10 Will. III. In that case, Abraham Hacket came with a certificate into the parish of Eastwoodhay, and afterwards marries one Sarah Smith. Her father surrenders to her a copyhold estate of 20*s.* a year, and so the husband had it in her right. By the court: 'The 9 & 10 Will. III. is not an explanatory act, but new, and must therefore receive a liberal construction. The exceptions in the statute prove this case, being a case more reasonable than either that are there mentioned. If a certificate man by taking a tenement of 10*l.* a year gain a settlement, a fortiori, shall he who has an estate of his own, especially in this case, where he does not come to it by his own act, which might savour of fraud, but it is cast upon him by the operation of law. If he who serves a parish office gains a settlement by reason of his presumed ability, with greater reason shall he who has ability of his own, visible to all the world. It has been adjudged, that any other person by descent or purchase of a freehold or copyhold, or by being entitled to a lease for years, gains a settlement, and the parliament never intended to put a certificate man in a worse condition than another person.' The court, therefore, seemed to think that a certificated man might gain a settlement by estate coming to him by purchase. But that was not a case of purchase; and where an act says in distinct terms that a settlement shall be gained by two modes only, we are not at liberty to say he may gain it by any other. There the estate came to the pauper by operation of law; by voluntary surrender of the copyhold to his wife. The next case was Ivinghoe v. Stonebridge (1 Stra. 265). This case decided that an apprentice to a certificated man gained a settlement in 1709, because it was prior to 12 Anne, prohibiting such settlements. The opinion of the court, that the purchase of an estate made the certificate man a settled inhabitant, was expressly founded on Burclear v. Eastwoodhay, and was also extra-judicial. These two cases are not of sufficient weight to induce us to say, in the teeth of the words of the act, that a settlement may be gained by purchase, which is an act done. I come now to cases where the estates have been acquired by purchase for money. The first is Rex v. Stansfield, where a purchase for 47*l.*, paid by the pauper for a leasehold estate in the certificated parish, was held to confer a settlement. It is material to look at the language used by the court in their judgment. Lord C. J. Lee says, 'I do not know that the 9 & 10 Will. III. had been taken so strictly as the counsel suppose. A descent or devise, and, I believe, a purchase too, has been determined to gain a settlement upon the fact of a person not being removable from his own, and as not being included within the 13 & 14 Car. II.' The present question turns indeed upon the construction of the certificate act. Now, though this person was a certificate man, yet if he had come to this by act of law it would have gained him a settlement; and I believe it has been so determined in cases of purchase too. I think the same construction has been made on this act as upon 13 & 14 Car. II. In the following term, in Rex v. Deddington (Burr. S. C. 220,) it was held, that a purchase by a certificate man for 42*l.* gained a settlement expressly on the authority of Burclear v. Eastwoodhay. Lord Lee, C. J. says, 'The purchase was most plainly neither of the two cases mentioned in the act;' and he observes, 'a purchase was a matter of as much notoriety, or more, than the renting of a tenement of 10*l.* a year; that the construction ought to be agreeable to that put on 13 & 14 Car. II., under which any man is irremovable from a tenement of his own, and that if the construction was different, a person could not gain a settlement by a purchase of 5000*l.* per annum.' In Rex v. Cold Ashton (ante, 800,) the estate came to the husband, not by his own act, but by operation of law, (a) and it should also be remembered that though a man may not be removable from his own, it does not follow that he will gain a settlement. In Rex v. Long Wittenham (2 Bott, 531,) the estate came to the pauper by her husband's death. [His lordship then referred to the judgments of Ashhurst and Buller, Js. in Rex v. Warblington (ante, 723), to show their impression as to the construction of 8 & 9 Will. III., and adds,] These two learned judges must have been satisfied that there was a material distinction between a case where the estate was obtained by purchase, and where it was obtained by a voluntary gift. We do not feel ourselves bound by these decisions to put a construction upon the act at variance with the plain import of the words. It is clear these cases proceeded upon a misapprehension of the precise point decided in Burclear v. Eastwoodhay. The other reasons assigned in giving their judgments do not appear to us satisfactory; they seem to us to turn upon the notoriety of the purchase. There is no question whether a certificated person would be removable during the time of his living in the parish and being the proprietor of an estate, but whether he acquired a settlement; and with respect to the similarity of construction to be put on this statute, as on the 13 & 14 Car. II., it is to be observed that the words are very different; and that looking at the recital in the latter statutes, which applies to poor persons going from one parish to another, and endeavouring to settle themselves where there was the best stock, and at the enactment which authorizes the removal of such persons only as are mentioned in the recital, it is clear that it never meant to apply to persons who had estates in the parish in which they came to settle. We think also no mischief will follow from the construction which we put on the 9 & 10 Will. III., for though, on the one hand, a certificate man would gain no settlement by the purchase of a large estate; on the other, he would be disabled from burthening the certificate parish, by making a purchase of an estate for a very small consideration, which he might have done prior to the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 5. The other cases of settlements may be supported on the ground that the estate came by operation of law, as in Rex v. Cold Ashton (ante, 800), or by voluntary conveyance from another, as in Rex v. Upton, which perhaps may be considered as an estate not acquired by any act done by the party. We are, therefore, of opinion that the 9 & 10 Will. III. prevents any settlement by reason of an estate acquired by the act of the pauper, by a purchase in the ordinary sense of that word; but it does not prevent the acquisition of a settlement by reason of an estate devolving on the pauper by operation of law, or acquired by purchase, in the technical sense of that word." Order of sessions quashed. (See the observation of Parke, J. in Rex v. Cassington, ante, 799.)

(a) See also Rex v. Wivelingham, ante, 696.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

3. Determined by Abandonment of the Certificate.

Rex v. Taunton, St. Mary Magdalen, Burr. S. C. 402. Robert Bagg, grandfather of the pauper, came from St. James to St. Mary, Taunton, with a certificate, in 1702. He afterwards went back to St. James's, and there had a son, Robert, the father of the pauper. The pauper's father afterwards married, and lived in St. James's, apart from his father, and there the pauper was born. The grandfather died in St. James's. The pauper's father died, and the pauper was bound an apprentice by St. James's into St. Mary's, and there served his apprenticeship. And the court held, that the certificate was of no force at the time of the pauper's being put apprentice, but was then at an end. For in so long a course of time, and after such a desertion, we will conclude there was an end of it, and it ought to have been given up to St. James's. It is now of no more effect than if it had never been given. It was absolutely evaded and deserted; and the father and grandfather could not have gone to St. Mary's again without a new certificate. It is a good deal like the case of Rex v. Sudbury.

Absence for seventeen years, and dying without returning to certificated parish, is an abandonment of it.

Rex v. Frampton-upon-Severn, Doug. 418; Cald. 97. In 1751 Tretherne granted a certificate to Frampton, acknowledging Job Minett and wife to be settled at Tretherne. Under which certificate they lived in Frampton two or three years, when they voluntarily returned to Tretherne, and had afterwards a son, Samuel, born there. Job continued to live in Tretherne for seventeen or eighteen years, when, having a relation in Frampton dead, he went by himself (his wife being dead) to possess himself of the effects, and remained there about six months, when, being taken ill, he was by Tretherne recommended to Gloucester infirmary, and there died. Before he went to Frampton to take possession of his relation's effects, Samuel had been hired for a year, and served the same in Frampton, and so continued for several years until after his father died. Samuel, his wife and child, were the paupers removed from Frampton to Tretherne. It was urged, that

If the person certified return to the certifying parish, and there have a son, and the son hire himself to a person in the certificated parish, and there marry and have a family, that family is not within the certificate.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

If a certificated person go to the certificating parish, and there be hired to different persons for a year respectively, and serve accordingly, and then return to her brother, who is still residing under the certificate, it is no desertion of the certificate.

If the son of a certificated person leave him and go to the certificating parish, and there hire himself to and serve several persons, but gain no settlement there, and then return to the certificated person it is no desertion of the certificate.

in Rex v. Taunton (ante, 803,) the extraordinary length of time during which the certificate had slept was considered as a waiver of it, and that a voluntary removal of a certificated person will not vacate a certificate, and this without any regard to any interval or length of time. It was also urged, that if a pauper can by length of time desert or annul a certificate, by analogy to the statute of limitations, twenty years at least ought to be required. Here, the certifying parish did not look upon the certificate as at an end, for they recommended the father to the Gloucester infirmary. Lord Mansfield said, "The principle has been long settled of abandonment by disuse, at least it is to be found in the Taunton case." He then [after adverting to the facts of the father returning for a special purpose, after an absence of seventeen years,] added, "The question is, whether the son went to Frampton under the faith of the certificate? Certainly not. Frampton had never heard of him. He goes there as an emancipated son, in his own right. It shall not be said that he came under a certificate abandoned by his father before he was born, and quo animo the pauper returns to the certificated parish must always be considered." Buller, J. "It does not appear that the court, in the case of Spotland, meant to overturn that of Taunton. A mere going away, indeed, shall not avoid a certificate; but what absence shall have that effect is left open." Willes and Ashhurst, Js. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Keel, Cald. 144; 2 Bott, 605. Jane Peak was removed from Bedworth to Keel. Order confirmed. The pauper was born at Bedworth, where her father and mother resided under a certificate from Keel until their death; she remained there after their death until she was about seven years of age, with her brother (who was named in the certificate), and then voluntarily went to Keel, where she remained till she was fourteen, during which time she was maintained by Keel, and then she was hired for a year, and served the same, and also two or three others in Keel, when she voluntarily returned to her brother's house at Bedworth, and was afterwards hired to a person for a year, and served him at Bedworth. The question was, whether the pauper, after she returned to Bedworth, was to be considered as still under the certificate, or that under these circumstances it was to be considered as having been abandoned? Lord Mansfield, C. J. at first inclined to think that she returned independently and as sui juris, rather than to her old home and parish, and under the certificate. But Willes, J. "thought that the inquiry here must be, whether the certificate was functus officio? The fact is, that the pauper returns voluntarily to the house in which she had before resided under the certificate, which belonged to her brother, who was at that time resident there under the certificate; it certainly was not discharged as to him, and there do not appear to me to be circumstances in the case sufficient to warrant us in saying that it was so with respect to the pauper." Lord Mansfield. "I am satisfied. The voluntary return to the house of her brother, who was then resident under the certificate, had escaped me." Both orders affirmed. (a)

Rex v. Ingworth, 8 T. R. 339. Order of removal of S. Slaughter from Ingworth to Erpingham quashed. Case:—In 1781, the father of the pauper went with his wife and the pauper, as part of his family, to reside in Ingworth, under a certificate from Erpingham. In 1787 the pauper, then sixteen years old, let himself to J. Brettingham, of Erpingham, and served two years as a yearly servant. He then let himself to W. Clarke, of Erpingham, and served him as a yearly servant for a year. He afterwards let himself from three days after Michaelmas following to M. Kemp, of Brickling, farmer, and completed his service. At the expiration of the year he returned to Ingworth, where his father still resided under the certificate, and lived in his father's house about a month, during which time he worked as a day-labourer at Brickling, and paid his father for his board. When he returned to Ingworth, he did not consider himself as going with a view to a certificate. At the expiration of the month he let himself for a year to B. N. of Ingworth, and lived in his service two years. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "Although the distinctions in some of the cases on settlements are very nice, whenever we find a case precisely similar to the case in question, we ought to be governed by it. Now it appears to me that Rex v. Keel (ante, 804,) is exactly like the present: there, indeed, Lord Mansfield at first doubted whether or not the pauper returned to the certificated parish under the certificate; but afterwards he was of opinion that the pauper had returned under the faith of the certificate. If the pauper in this case had gained a settlement in a third parish, the reasoning in support of this order could have applied; but here is no ground for presuming as in Rex v. Newington (infra) that the parties had abandoned this certificate; for the pauper's father was resident at Ingworth under the certificate when the son returned to him." Lord Blanc, J. mentioned Rex v. Collingbourne Ducis (4 T. R. 199), the principle of which he said applied to the present case. Order of sessions quashed. (See Rex v. Morley, 2 M. & Sel. 417, ante, 309.)

(a) In Rex v. Heath, 5 T. R. 586, Lord Kenyon remarked that "in Rex v. Keel, Lord Mansfield's first thoughts were best: he afterwards gave way to what was suggested, but it was generally thought he did so without sufficient grounds." In 3 B. & Ald. 380, Lord Tenterden said, "I cannot agree to Rex v. Keel."

Rex v. Newington, 1 T. R. 354. John Small, &c. removed from Newington to Mersham. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper's father resided at Newington under a certificate from Mersham, when the pauper was born: the father removed with his family to Hoo, and stayed there two years; and from thence removed with his family to Strood, where he continued four years, when he died: about two years after the death of the father, his widow went to Newington to keep her uncle's house, with whom she continued until his death, and afterwards lived at Newington till she died; she had been relieved by Newington, having gained a settlement there after her husband's death: the pauper within a year after his father's death went to Newington and hired himself for a year, and served the same in Newington, and continued with the same master another year; and then was two years with the minister of Newington, and never gained a settlement elsewhere. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "It is admitted that there may exist a case in which a certificate shall be considered as functus officio. Then the court ought to draw a line; in doing which it will be material to consider what is the nature of a certificate. It seems to me that a certificate given by the parish from which the pauper goes to another parish, is an indemnity to that other parish from the consequences of permitting him to reside there; therefore it has done its office the moment that residence is permanently at an end. A temporary absence for a particular purpose will not discharge it; but when the pauper has left the certified parish for years, and neither party has had any reliance upon the certificate, then it has done its duty, and has no longer any operation. In the present case, the pauper had left the certified parish for six years, without any intention of returning, by which it is manifest that the certificate was discharged." The other judges gave their opinions to the same effect; and Buller, J. said, "That whenever a pauper returns to the certified parish again, they should require from him a new certificate." Order of sessions affirmed.

In Rex v. St. Michael's, Coventry, 5 T. R. 526, the certificated man left the certificated parish, and returned to his own parish, together with all his family, and there took a house, and resided there for two years, during which time the pauper was born; at the end of two years he and his family returned to the certificated parish, after which he returned to his own parish, and made it his permanent residence; and the question was, whether this were a desertion of the certificate? Lord Kenyon, C. J. acknowledged the law to have been settled by Rex v. Newington (supra), that a voluntary removal from the certificated parish, where the residence there is permanently at an end, will put an end to a certificate. He said that he understood a temporary removal to be where the person goes from the certificated parish to make a visit elsewhere, or on occasional business, leaving his family behind him in that parish, as being the place of his domicile. On the ground therefore that the certificated man left the certificated parish, not for a temporary purpose only, but with a view of making the certificating parish the place of his permanent residence, he considered the certificate to have been discharged. The other judges agreed.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

Whenever a certificated person leaves the certificated parish, without any intention of returning, the certificate is at an end.

A temporary removal is where a person goes from the certificated parish elsewhere on a visit, or on occasional business, leaving his family behind him in that parish as his domicile.

4. Determined by Order of Removal.

Rex v. Sudbury, Burr. S. C. 373. Thomas Bladen came by certificate from Sudbury with his wife and children to Uttoxeter. Thomas died there, and his wife and child John became chargeable, and were removed to Sudbury. About a year after, John was bound apprentice to T. B. of Uttoxeter, and served out his time there. Ryder, C. J. "The question is, whether the pauper is to be considered as a certificate man now, since 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 11. We are all of opinion, that the removal of the pauper did restore him as fully as if there had been no certificate at all. The certificate was functus officio, after this order of removal to the parish which gave it. It can have its effect but once, and therefore after his removal back again, it can have no further effect. The intention of the certificate is to secure the parish in case the pauper should be chargeable. Now this event did fall out, and they were accordingly removed. The law is so far from looking upon a certificate as continuing after an order of removal, that the pauper cannot return to the place from which he was removed without incurring a penalty. It is said, that the construction contended for would destroy the certificate. But it does not destroy it, any otherwise than by satisfying it. And there is no absurdity in its being satisfied as to one, and remaining in force as to another. In Sowerby v. Halifax the pauper was not removed by any order." Order quashed.

Rex v. Bridham, Cald. 500; 4 Doug. 245. George Eaurcher was removed from Bridham to Walberton. Order quashed. Case:—The father of the pauper, about thirty years ago, went by certificate from Bridham to Walberton, where the pauper was born three or four years after. His father went to several other parishes after, and to each with a certificate from Bridham. From one of these an order of removal was made for him and his five children (he having only five) to Bridham. The pauper, being then in employ, was not removed with his father, but went to him in Bridham two or three days afterwards, and there lived six months as part of his family, and then being about sixteen years of age, he bound himself to E. N. at Walberton, and served him there the greater part of the time, and particularly the two last months. Lord Mansfield: "I think the original certificate was discharged by the following certificate; but if that is doubtful, I am clearly of opinion it was discharged by the order of removal." Order of sessions quashed.

5. Determined by a Certificate to another Parish.

A second certificate to a pauper discharges a former one given by the same parish.

Rex v. St. Peter, Derby, 1 T. R. 218. Order of removal of Benjamin Pratt, &c. from St. Peter, Derby, to Chaddesden, quashed. Case:—The pauper, on the 5th November, 1751, was bound an apprentice for seven years to Joseph Pinn, of All Saints, in Derby, to which place Pinn had a certificate from Smalley; the pauper served his master in All Saints about five years and a half; and the master and his family, at Lady-day, 1757, removed to Chaddesden, where he resided till 14th January, 1758, when Smalley granted Pinn, the master, a certificate. Between Lady-day, 1757, and 14th January, 1758, the pauper served his master upwards of forty days in Chaddesden. Pinn never returned to All Saints, but continued at Chaddesden under the certificate; but the pauper returned to All Saints in the summer of 1758, and served his master there upwards of forty days after Smalley had granted the certificate to Chaddesden. The only question was, whether the second certificate to Chaddesden discharged the former one to All Saints, they having both been given by Smalley? The court being of opinion that this question was determined by Rex v. Birdham discharged the rule. Order of sessions affirmed. (The question decided in Rex v. Leeds (post, 809,) was not raised in this case. See the observation of the chief justice.)

12. Removal of Certificated Persons.

In Rex v. Framlingham, Burr. S. C. 748, Aston, J. said "That if several persons reside in a parish under the same certificate, the asking relief by a single one of them would not render the rest removable. The certificate act says that the parish who gives the certificate shall receive and provide for the person mentioned in it, together with his family, whenever he or they shall happen to become chargeable or ask relief; and then, and not before, it shall be lawful for any such person, and his or her children, to be removed to the parish from whence such certificate was brought. And it must be adjudged by the justices that such person has actually become chargeable before they can legally make an order of removal. Now how can the justices be authorized to make such an adjudication upon a person who in fact is not become chargeable nor ever has asked relief?" (See also Rex v. Kingswood, Burr. S. C. 392, and Rex v. Haydon, 2 Bott, 717.)

Rex v. St. Mary, Westport, 3 T. R. 44. T. P. and family were removed from B. to W. They went to reside in B. under a certificate from W., where the eldest son afterwards married, and lived apart in the same parish, and during sickness received (as did his infant son after his death) relief from the parish of B., with the knowledge of T. P., who had never himself, or any part of his family residing with him, asked relief. It was contended that they were irremovable because not chargeable. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "Although this certificate is not in the usual form, yet as far as it relates to the question now before us, it must be considered as a common certificate: and the single question is, whether these persons who have been removed can, in the fair sense of the words, be said to have been actually chargeable to the parish? Now it is negatived by the case that any of these parties receive relief in person. But it is contended that they were virtually relieved, because the son and the grandson both received relief. But it must be observed, that at that time they were not members of the family of the pater-familias now removed; they lived apart from him, and formed another family of themselves. Then it has been said that a burthen has been thrown upon the parish by the relief of the son and grandson, and therefore that the grandfather was virtually chargeable, because the 43 Eliz. requires fathers and grandfathers to support their children and grandchildren. But that proposition hastens to a conclusion too soon; for by that statute they are not in all events to maintain their children, &c., but only when they are of sufficient ability. Now the justices are the proper judges of that ability; and the grandfathers, &c. are only to be called upon by an order of justices."

Rex v. St. Martin at Oak, 16 East, 303. The pauper, T. Gardener, in 1775, obtained a settlement in Felthorpe, and subsequently a settlement in Drayton. In 1787 Felthorpe granted a certificate to the parish of St. Martin at Oak, where the pauper continued to reside under this certificate, occasionally receiving relief from the parish of F. until 1812, when he was by order removed to F.; from this order the parish of F. entered an appeal. The parish of St. Martin then withdrew the order, and the pauper was removed to Drayton. The question for the opinion of the Court of King's Bench was, whether St. Martin at Oak were not bound to remove him to F., the certifying parish under the 8 & 9 Will. III.? But the court were clearly of opinion that the act was not restrictive of the power of removal from the parish to which the certificate is granted, to any other parish, but only conclusive upon the certifying parish, as between that and the parish to which the certificate is granted. This was considered to be the object of the act in Rex v. Lubbenham (ante, 769), and in a prior case of Rex v. St. Giles (2 Salk. 530.) All the authorities agree that it signifies nothing when the certificate was granted; it is only an estoppel upon the parish granting it as between the two parishes. Order of sessions quashed.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

12. Removal of Certificated Persons.

Of a certified family, those only can be removed back that ask relief.

The chargeability of the son does not render the father removable.

A pauper may be removed from a parish where he is residing under a certificate, to a parish in which he gained a settlement before the granting of the certificate.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

13. Of Apprenticeship under Certificate.

Apprentice of an uncertified man serving a certificate man, can gain no settlement thereby in the certificated man's parish, where the service is performed.

Apprentice to a certificate man serving an uncertificated person in the same parish, gains no settlement there.

13. Of Apprenticeship under Certificate.

A person bound apprentice, or by hire as a servant, to one who came into the parish by certificate, shall not gain a settlement. 12 Anne, st. 1, c. 10, s. 2. (See statute, ante, 457.)

Romsey v. St. Michael's, Southampton, Burr. S. C. 640. S. Bishop was bound an apprentice to W. Kearley, of All Saints, for four years, and served him there for three years. It was then agreed between them and S. Dagnell, residing in Romsey under a certificate from St. Giles's in Reading, that Bishop should work with Dagnell the remainder of his apprenticeship, for which Kearley was to receive 2s. a week. Bishop accordingly served him and resided with him in Romsey. The question was, whether the apprentice gained a settlement by this service in Romsey? Lord Mansfield, C. J. "This question is plainer than any argument can make it. The end and intention of the act was to prevent certificated persons from bringing a charge upon the parishes into which they came by certificate. How then can it be imagined that another man's apprentice should gain a settlement by serving him in that parish, when his own apprentice is made incapable of doing so?" And the court were unanimously of opinion that the apprentice gained no settlement in Romsey. (See Rex v. Hardwicke, ante, 296, and Rex v. Hugate, ante, 302.)

Rex v. Hinckley, 4 T. R. 371. The pauper, J. Farborough, at nine years old, was bound a parish apprentice to D. Palmer, of Hinckley, who was residing there under a certificate from Copson. The pauper, after serving part of his time with Palmer, was assigned by him to J. Hurst, a parishioner of Hinckley, under an agreement that Hurst was to pay 1s. a week to Palmer, and which was paid accordingly. He served Hurst in Hinckley above forty days before he left him. Lord Kenyon, C. J. delivered the judgment: "The question is, whether any settlement was obtained by the apprentice by his service under his second master, who was a parishioner of Hinckley, in which parish his first master, by whom he was assigned, had been certificated to? The first impression made upon my mind was, that as the last forty days of the apprenticeship was served under a person who was not under the disability of the certificate, such service gained a settlement; but upon looking more fully into the authorities cited, on which I had formed my first opinion, and advertg more particularly to the words of the statute of Anne, I am disposed to think that a settlement was not acquired by the service under the indenture of the second master in Hinckley, although he were not residing there under the certificate. And that opinion which we have formed, proceeds principally on the words of the statute of Anne, and the view with which it was passed. By the general tenor of the certificate act, persons settled in one parish, bringing a certificate with them into another, have a right to remain there until they become chargeable; and the parish to which such certificate is granted cannot refuse to receive them. But the mischief was, that though the certificated persons themselves could not gain a settlement in that parish, yet they were the means of conferring settlements on others, by taking servants and apprentices, which was thought to be a great hardship on those parishes who were bound to receive them under the certificate. Therefore, to provide against that inconvenience, the 12 Anne, c. 18, s. 2, was passed. There has never been any precise determination on this point; and therefore we think it better to abide by the words of the act, from whence the intention of the legislature can best be collected; and the act having expressly provided that persons bound apprentices to certificated men shall not by virtue of such apprenticeship, indenture, or binding, gain a settlement in such parish, it is necessary that the binding should be such as would be capable of conferring a settlement by service under the original master in that place, otherwise no settlement can be gained there by virtue thereof; for the legislature intended that no act whatever of this sort done by a certificated man should help to bind the parish. As to Rex v. Petham (ante, 797), where it was held, that the apprentice of a master, certificated to Tenterden, might gain a settlement under an assignment to a second master residing at Lidd, which was a third parish; that does not govern the present, because it does not interfere with the policy of the statute of Anne; for the parish of Lidd had not received the original master by force of the certificate, and therefore had no right to avail themselves of the provisions of that statute, which was intended for the protection of the certificated parish. But here the words of the statute cover Hinckley in the broadest manner, to prevent any burthen coming on that parish on account of their obligation to receive the certificated person. The other case principally relied on (of Romsey parish) has no application to the present question; for though it was contended generally at the bar, that the statute of Anne was confined to apprentices bound by indentures to certificated masters, and claiming settlements by serving under such original masters, yet the court by no means adopted that argument, but decided rather on the ground that no settlement could be gained by the apprentice, through the medium of a certificated person in that parish. Therefore as there has been heretofore no determination on this point, as the statute of Anne was passed for the express protection of the certificated parish, and as the words of the act are very particular and positive in favour of that parish, we see no reason to restrain the meaning of them to a service with the original master." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Leeds, 1 Nev. & M. 650; 4 B. & Ad. 248. Appeal against an order of justices removing N. Bowles and family from Horton to Leeds. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's father was settled in Leeds. In 1809, the pauper being about thirteen years of age, was bound apprentice by his father for seven years to Joseph Fox, shoemaker, who was then residing in Horton under a certificate from a Friendly Society. Four years after the indenture was made, Fox took a farm for a year in Horton at 40*l.*, which he occupied for the year. The pauper continued to serve his master for seven years from the date of the indenture. The sessions being of opinion that the pauper had not gained a settlement by such apprenticeship, confirmed the order. Cur. adv. vult. Denman, C. J. "The question in this case was, whether a pauper had gained a settlement in the parish of Horton. The pauper was bound apprentice to a master who was at that time residing at Horton under a certificate from a friendly society; but before the term of apprenticeship expired, the master gained a settlement in Horton by renting a tenement, and the pauper served him under the indenture of apprenticeship more than forty days after that time. The question turns upon the proper construction of the 33 Geo. III. c. 54, s. 24, by which it is enacted 'that no person who shall be an apprentice bound by indenture to any person who did come into or shall reside in any parish, township or place under the authority of this act, and not afterwards having gained a legal settlement in such parish, township or place, shall gain or be adjudged to have any settlement in such parish, township or place, by reason of such apprenticeship or binding; but all such apprentices shall have their settlements in such parish, township or place, as if they had not been bound, any act or acts of parliament to the contrary notwithstanding.' The words are copied nearly verbatim from 12 Anne, stat. 1, c. 18, s. 2, which act has received a judicial construction in the case of Rex v. Hinckley (4 T. R. 371, ante, 808), by which case we think we are bound. That case differs from the present in one circumstance only, viz. that in that case the pauper having been bound to a certificated man, was afterwards assigned to another person in the same parish, who was under no disability, whereas here the pauper continued with the original master after his certificate was discharged. But the reasons given by Lord Kenyon in delivering the judgment of the court, which was evidently much considered, apply to the present case as much as to that; and we cannot decide in this case that the pauper gained a settlement without overruling Rex v. Hinckley (4 T. R. 371). The words of the statute are plain, that an apprentice bound to a man who did come into or shall reside in a parish under a certificate, and not afterwards having gained a settlement, shall not by such apprenticeship or binding gain a settlement in that parish, but shall be as if he had not been bound. Now the words 'not afterwards having gained a settlement,' are grammatically to be referred to the preceding words 'come into or reside,' and manifestly point to the situation of the master at the time of binding. If the master be residing under the certificate at the time of the binding, no settlement can by possibility be acquired by the apprentice in the certificated parish, notwithstanding a subsequent removal of the master's disability; but it is otherwise if the binding is after the discharge of the certificate, where the master has gained a settlement in the certificated parish. Lord Kenyon says 'It is necessary that the binding should be such as would be capable of conferring a settlement by service under the original master in that place, otherwise no settlement can be gained there by virtue thereof, for the legislature intended that no act whatever of this sort done by a certificated man should help to bind the parish.' Here according to this opinion the binding was not, at the time it took place, such as would be capable of conferring a settlement, nor could any subsequent circumstances make the binding more efficacious, whatever effect they might have on the service; the consequence is, that the pauper remained as if he had not been bound, and gained no settlement at Horton. The case of Ivinghoe v. Stonebridge (1 Str. 265) was pressed in argument; but in that case the service expired before the passing of the statute of Anne, and besides the original binding was not to a certificated person and was free from all objection. The case of Rex v. St. Peter's, Derby (1 T. R. 218, ante, 806,) was also pressed. It is sufficient to say, that in that case the present question was not presented to the court, but it was decided without argument on the sole point whether one certificate was discharged by the granting of another, and the case was also prior to Rex v. Hinckley (4 T. R. 371, ante, 806). Neither does our opinion militate against the case of Rex v. Nacton (3 B. & Ald. 543, ante, 601,) decided in Easter term last, for that case proceeded entirely on the ground that the master never did reside under the certificate, but came into the parish in a condition to obtain a settlement. Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the case of Rex v. Hinckley must govern the present decision, and that the order of sessions must be affirmed." Order of sessions affirmed.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

Under the statute 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 24, (which is in substance the same as 12 Anne, stat. 1, c. 18, s. 2,) an apprentice bound to a person residing in a parish under a certificate cannot gain a settlement by such apprenticeship, though the certificate be subsequently discharged and he afterwards continue to serve his master in the parish for forty days. The binding, to confer a settlement, must be such as would at the time be effectual for that purpose.

1. Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate.

A settlement by apprenticeship can be gained by a party who is one of the family of the certificated person, only by a binding and inhabitation after he is sui juris.

Rex v. Manningtree, 6 M. & Sel. 214. Order of removal of W. Finch from Manningtree to Culphoe quashed. Case:—The pauper was born in Manningtree, where his parents were residing under a certificate from Culphoe. When he was nineteen years of age and upwards, he was duly bound apprentice to R. Hobson, of Mistley, for three years, to serve on board his vessel engaged in the coasting trade from Mistley to London. He served his master for two years and then ran away, the vessel then being at Mistley. Eight months previous to this he became twenty-one, during which eight months he slept at his father's in Manningtree for more than forty nights, with his master's consent, his master having no room for him. He slept at his father's the night before he ran away. Whenever the vessel was at Mistley the pauper uniformly slept at his father's. No evidence was offered of a settlement gained by the pauper in any other parish. He was not married, nor had his father done any act to discharge the certificate. The sessions thought a settlement had been gained in Manningtree. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It has occurred to this court, upon reference to the 3 W. & M. c. 11, which requires a binding as well as inhabitation, in order to confer a settlement, for the words are, 'such binding and inhabitation,' that in a case like the present, where the pauper is to be withdrawn from the effect of a certificate, and placed in a condition to acquire a settlement in the certificated parish, by some act clearly indicative of his being sui juris, the binding must be for this purpose after he has attained his full age. It is plain the binding here was before he was of age; and that seems to make an end of the question." Bayley, J. "It is clear, I think, that a settlement could not be gained in Manningtree by this pauper by means of a binding and service there whilst he was under age. A settlement in that parish could only be acquired by him after he became sui juris; and as it regards a settlement by apprenticeship, the act of binding as well as inhabitation, ought to be one entire act after he was of age, and not an act in part commencing during his nonage. The binding therefore ought to have been after he was twenty-one. In this lies the distinction between this case and Rex v. Morley (ante, 309), because a hiring and service concurred there after the pauper was of age. This decision will not militate with former cases. The court does not say that where a settlement in the certificated parish is not in question this doctrine will apply; if the question here were upon the effect of this binding coupled with a service in a third parish, the court does not pronounce that the pauper would not have acquired a settlement there. For instance, let the binding be in A., the service in B., and let the apprentice sleep in C., in that case the settlement would be in C.; yet if C. be the certificated parish, then, unless the binding and sleeping be entire after the pauper be of age, he does not acquire a settlement in the parish C. This, I apprehend, is the distinction on which the court means to decide the case." Holroyd, J. "The son of a certificated person included in the certificate as part of his family, can only gain a settlement in the certificated parish when he is sui juris. Under 3 W. & M. c. 11, two things are requisite to confer a settlement by apprenticeship, viz., binding and inhabitancy. By analogy to that statute, when the question regards a settlement in the certificated parish, both these must concur after the party is of full age, so as to make an act sui juris. If the apprentice had been bound when he was of age, and had served afterwards, Rex v. Morley (ante, 309,) would have been in point." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Queenborough, 2 Bar. & Adol. 219. Appeal against an order of two justices removing J. Webb from the parish of Milton to Queenborough. Order confirmed. Case:—In the year 1775 the parish of Queenborough granted a certificate for Robert Webb, the pauper's grandfather, and several individuals of his family by name, to the parish of Milton next Sittingbourne, under which certificate William, one of the persons named, the father of the pauper, has continually from that time hitherto resided in Milton. On the 10th of July, 1810, the pauper, then being about eleven years of age and residing as part of his father's family under the certificate, was bound without any premium, an apprentice to his father's brother, Daniel Webb, an inhabitant of Milton, as a dredgerman, for the term of ten years. His master covenanted in the indentures of apprenticeship to find him in board, lodging and clothing, and to instruct him in the art and business of a dredgerman, and he continued to serve under the indenture until January, 1818, when his master and his family became chargeable to the parish of Milton. The master having originally resided under the above certificate, and not being then supposed to have acquired a settlement in Milton, was with his family removed to Queenborough, but on arriving there and an explanation taking place, this order was abandoned. The pauper was afterwards, by another order of removal bearing date the 5th of February, 1818, removed to Queenborough, which parish acquiesced in his removal, and received him as their parishioner. The pauper stayed at Queenborough about a week, and then returned to Milton to the said D. Webb, and continued with him there under circumstances which amounted to a service and residence of forty days under the indenture subsequently to his return. He never gained a settlement in any other parish. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the pauper gained a settlement in the parish of Milton by the above binding and the service performed after his removal to Queenborough. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The binding in this case having been before the pauper attained his full age, is not distinguishable from that in the case of Rex v. Manningtree (6 M. & S. 214, ante, 810), where it was held no settlement was gained in the certificated parish. That case must govern our decision in the present instance, unless we can say that a binding which was not available at the time it was made, can be rendered so by matter ex post facto. I cannot think that any subsequent act of the parish can have the retrospective effect of making that binding effectual by relation which was not so at the time when it was entered into. The safest course is to adhere to the decision in Rex v. Manningtree (ante, 810)." Littledale, J. "No subsequent act of the certifying parish will make the binding valid for the purpose of conferring a settlement in the certificated parish, which was not so at the time when it was made." Parke and Patteson, Js. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

St. Cuthbert's v. Westbury, Burr. S. C. 470. A person was bound apprentice to a man residing at Westbury, but whose settlement was at Harptree, a neighbouring parish. After the apprentice had served twenty-two days, the master obtained a certificate from Harptree, and delivered it to the overseers at Westbury; and the apprentice served there further with his master for three years. The question was, whether the apprentice hereby gained a settlement in Westbury? By the court: "Before the act, the serving under an apprenticeship to a certificated man for forty days in the parish where the master lived, would have gained a settlement to the apprentice. But the act says, that if any person shall be bound apprentice by indenture to any person residing under a certificate, he shall not thereby gain a settlement. Now here is no service for forty days under an apprenticeship to a master who did not reside in this parish under a certificate; therefore the apprentice in this parish did not gain a settlement. But it would have been otherwise if he had served forty days before his master became certificated."

Rex v. Wensley, 5 T. R. 154. The pauper was bound apprentice to R. Hallam, of Chesterfield, with whom he continued two years. Before the pauper was bound to Hallam, the overseer of Chesterfield told Hallam he must procure a certificate or they would remove him; he accordingly before such binding of the pauper procured a certificate from Chaddesden, directed to Chesterfield, but nothing further passed between Hallam and the overseers of Chesterfield respecting the certificate, after their first requisition to him to procure one; he therefore not being again called upon, did not deliver the certificate to the overseers of Chesterfield, and it remained in his hands without mention or further notice during the whole time that the pauper served him as his apprentice at Chesterfield; but some time after the pauper left Hallam, the certificate was delivered by Hallam to the overseers of Chesterfield. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "We cannot depart from the express and positive words of the act, which are decisive of this question. In the construction of some statutes, the courts have thought, from considering the context and the words of it, that some particular words are merely directory; but there is nothing in this statute to show that the words commented upon should be construed to be directory only. The statute says expressly that 'if any person shall come into any parish, &c., he shall at the same time procure, bring, and deliver to the churchwardens, &c., of the parish where such person shall come to inhabit, a certificate, &c.; the act therefore requires a delivery at the time when the pauper goes into the certificated parish; and it is essential to the interest of that parish that it should be delivered, as the withholding it from them for a time may be the means of introducing frauds. Rex v. Buckingham (ante, 795,) only decided, that a certificate, though not delivered, was an acknowledgment by the parish granting it, that the pauper was settled with them when it was given, but it did not determine that it prevented the pauper gaining a settlement in the certificated parish after it was granted." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Rustington, 6 M. & Sel. 396. Order of removal of J. Mitchiner from Newhaven to Rustington confirmed. Case:—The pauper was included by name in a certificate given in 1763 by Rustington to Newhaven. While residing under it he was bound apprentice to a lighter-man in Newhaven, and served the seven years. During the greater part of the apprenticeship, and on the last night of it, the pauper slept at Newhaven; but in the course of his master's employment, he went up and down the Ouse to Lewes in his master's barges. He was frequently detained at Lewes two or three days together, but not more at any one time; and, when so detained, he slept either at an inn in St. Thomas à Becket, by the cliffs near Lewes, or on board in his master's barge, while it lay in the same parish. He slept in that parish more than forty nights in the seven years, but not forty nights in any one year. (a) Lord Ellenborough, "Had it not been for the certificate, the settlement would have been at Newhaven, because that is the parish where the pauper slept the last night of his service. The certificate prevents this; but why is that to place a third parish in a worse situation? There was nothing like a permanent residence in St. Thomas à Becket to constitute an abandonment of the certificate. Bayley, J. "The law on this branch of the settlement is, that an apprentice is settled in the parish where he sleeps the last night of his apprenticeship, if he has slept there altogether during the year for forty nights. According to that law the pauper would have been settled in Newhaven were it not for the certificate. How then is the certificate, which is in the nature of a bargain between two parishes, to vary the case as it regards a third parish, and in the present instance to throw a charge on St. Thomas à Becket, which, otherwise, they would not have to bear? In Rex v. Great Torrington (ante, 798,) the certificate was completely discharged by a settlement gained in another parish by apprenticeship. But when was this certificate discharged?" Abbott, J. "The Rex v. Spotland (b) certainly gives colour to the argument of to-day, which would maintain that a settlement was acquired in St. Thomas à Becket, for the two cases are in circumstances very similar. But I cannot help thinking that the court there were under some misapprehension of the terms of the statute, for it also says, "that the apprentice shall have his settlement in such parish, as if he had not been bound apprentice to the certificated person." Holroyd, J. "The argument would place a third parish in a worse situation than if a certificate had not existed." Order confirmed.

12. Of Settlement by Acknowledgment; viz. by Relief.

It is a presumption of law, that a parish will not extend relief to a pauper, at least when out of such parish, unless it is under an obligation to do so, by the pauper being settled in such parish. Wherever, therefore, such relief has been afforded, except in the case of casual poor, it has been considered to be an acknowledgment that the pauper is settled in that parish. Whether the parish institutes any inquiry as to the settlement at the time, or has the means of ascertaining the fact, is not very material, if the relief be given in a manner, and under circumstances which fairly lead to the conclusion, that it was given because it was felt and believed that the pauper was settled in

(a) Residence for forty days during the term would have been sufficient, Rex v. Aldstone, 2 B. & Ad. 207 (ante, 584.)

(b) Rex v. Spotland, Burr. S. C. 527. The pauper, John Hamer, was bound apprentice to a certificated man at Castleton, and after some years removed to Spotland, where he served him forty days, and then married; and till the expiration of the apprenticeship, which was upwards of half a year, the apprentice worked in the day-time with his master in Spotland, but lodged with his wife at Castleton. By the court: "The master, who was a certificated man at Castleton, gained no new settlement in Spotland; and the pauper still remained an apprentice to this certificated man. The master may still go back to Castleton, the parish to which he was certificated. Indeed, it hath been determined, that if a certificated person goes to another parish, and becomes chargeable to it, and is by an order of justices removed from thence to the parish which gave the certificate, then the certificate is at an end, it is satisfied, it is functus officio, and it can have its effect but once. But here the removal is voluntary, not by force: the certificate subsists, and the apprentice remains part of his master's family. He was so at Spotland; and all along continued to be so. The certificate act says, that the apprentice shall not gain a settlement in the parish to which his master came by certificate. But as this apprentice hath gained an intermediate settlement, he ought to be sent to that settlement which he hath intermediately gained." And the court were unanimous that his settlement was at Spotland. But N. B. Rex v. Spotland is considered as overruled by Rex v. Rustington, 6 M. & Sel. 390 (ante, 812).

such parish. At the same time the parish is not thereby absolutely precluded and estopped from disputing the settlement, as the fact of giving relief only shows the opinion of the parish that the pauper was settled with them.

It has been supposed, that the mere circumstance of parish officers having relieved a pauper in their parish, affords prima facie evidence that he was settled there; but the rule is now clearly otherwise, and the affording such relief is now considered as no evidence whatever against the parish (see Rex v. Coleorton, 1 B. & Ald. 25, infra); but affording relief to a pauper out of the parish is evidence against such parish (Rex v. Edwinstowe, 8 B. & C. 671, post, 817).

The bare fact of receiving relief while in a parish is no proof of settlement in that parish.

Hearsay no evidence of the fact.

Not even when relief was given many times.

Rex v. Chadderton, 2 East, 27. Removal of John Buckley from Little Bolton to Chadderton confirmed. Case:—The pauper, when he buried his first wife, applied to, and received relief from, the overseers of Chadderton, and the pauper's mother being with child of a bastard, some few years after his father's death, went from another township to Chadderton to lie in there, and "as the pauper had heard from his mother," who has been dead some years, she was relieved there by Chadderton. This hearsay evidence was objected to, but received. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The hearsay from the pauper's mother is no evidence at all of any fact, and then the only fact applicable to the settlement in C. is, that when the pauper buried his first wife he received relief there from the overseers: but the bare fact of his receiving such relief is no evidence of a settlement, as they might have been relieved as casual poor. If the paupers were in want of relief while they were in C. the overseers were bound to give it, whether the paupers were settled there or elsewhere; and by the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, they could not have been removed till they were actually chargeable." Case remitted.

Rex v. Chatham, 8 East, 498. Removal of Sally Burgoyne, widow, from Ashford to Chatham, confirmed. Case:—The pauper was married to Robert Burgoyne in Clerkenwell. A considerable time after their marriage her husband went to live at Chatham. Her husband more than once received relief from Chatham: he was at one time a fortnight, at another a longer period in the workhouse of that parish, on account of illness; and he died in that workhouse, and was buried at the expense of the parish. During all these times of relief he was resident in that parish. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "On subjects of this sort, it is important there should be one uniform rule, as far as is consistent with law; and the rule having been laid down by Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Chadderton (supra), that the bare fact of giving relief to a pauper within the parish was no evidence of his settlement there, because it might be given to him as casual poor, it is proper to abide by it. In that case, indeed, the relief was only administered once; and it becomes necessary to consider, whether its having been administered more than once, or several times, alters the case, and differs this in substance from the other; for each instance in itself might not be evidence of the settlement, and yet it might be difficult to say that several instances might not furnish the conclusion. At the same time, however, it is to be observed, that though the relief were given for any length of time, the inference may either be, that the party receiving was a settled inhabitant, or that his settlement could not be known. But that would bring it to an alternative case, on which the sessions might draw their own conclusion, and the difficulty would still exist. Upon the whole, therefore, it appears to me, as the better rule to adopt, that it does not amount to evidence of the settlement. And there would be great impolicy in allowing it to have any weight; for if the parish officers, by giving relief to a pauper, were to be making evidence against themselves as to his settlement in their parish, it would make them perform their duty to casual poor with great reluctance. And therefore it is more consonant to humanity and policy, and to the rule of law laid down by Lord Kenyon, to say at once that it is no evidence of the settlement, than to leave it as a matter of inference in each case." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Coleorton, 1 B. & Ald. 25. Joseph Allen, his wife and children, were removed from Merevale to Coleorton. Order confirmed. Case:—

The pauper's father died when the pauper was seven years of age, and left him residing with his mother in Coleorton, where, after her husband's death, she and several of her children were relieved during a long period, and while resident in the same parish. During this time, also, one of the children (the pauper's brother) was bound out by the parish of Coleorton into a third parish. But throughout the whole of the above time the mother of the pauper, with her children, received relief from the parish of Thringstone whilst they were resident (as before mentioned) in Coleorton; and the pauper's mother having died in that parish, was buried there at the expense of Thringstone. The sessions were of opinion that the relief by Coleorton preponderated over the relief by Thringstone, and confirmed the order.

Bayley, J. "If there had been evidence on both sides it would have been for the sessions to draw their own conclusion, and I should not be inclined to disturb it. But if there is evidence on one side, and the sessions act upon what is not evidence on the other, and then send the case to us, it becomes a fit subject for our adjudication. It is decided, and I think rightly, by Rex v. Chatham (ante, 814), that relief by the parish in which a pauper resides is no evidence of settlement. Lord Ellenborough there enters into the question, whether relief, administered in more than one instance, may not require a different consideration, but he concludes by laying it down as the best rule to abide by, that such relief, whether given once or several times, is not evidence. One powerful reason in support of this decision is the reluctance which parish officers would feel against relieving casual poor, if by doing so they were furnishing evidence against their own parishes. It is true that, in the present case, Coleorton has not only relieved the family, but bound out one of the children. The sessions, however, have not acted upon this fact per se, but upon the continued relief generally; and in my opinion, the binding is no more evidence against Coleorton than the other circumstances; for parish officers may apprentice out paupers, being within the parish, whether settled or not. Rex v. Yarwell (9 B. & C. 894) does not militate against our present decision. In that case the sessions formed their own judgment on the facts, and afterwards sent a case to us, not stating upon what point they doubted. We, therefore, would not interfere with the conclusion they had come to. But here was evidence on one side, and none on the other, and the sessions have determined that the no-evidence preponderated. Littledale, J. "The court having decided in Rex v. Chatham (ante, 814), that relief in circumstances like the present is no evidence, I think we ought to hold accordingly. The binding out of the child carries the case no farther, as the power of apprenticing does not depend upon the pauper being settled in the parish. Parke, J. "If this had been res integra, I should have had a difficulty in saying that the relief being continued was not evidence. But the contrary rule is so distinctly laid down in Rex v. Chatham (ante, 814), that we are bound to abide by it. As to the apprenticing, if the law had empowered parish officers to bind out settled paupers only, we might have sent the case back; but the statute of Elizabeth gives the power generally. The binding therefore is no additional proof, and the evidence on which the sessions decided was altogether illegal" Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Trowbridge, (a) 7 B. & C. 252; 1 M. & R. 7; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 71. Order of removal of Matthew Acorn, &c., from Trowbridge to Chatham, quashed. Case:—The pauper's first recollections were of his being in the workhouse at Chatham. He supposed he might be then about four or five years old. He never knew his father, and his mother was not in the workhouse with him. He stayed in the workhouse till he was thirteen or fourteen, when he entered on board a man of war and served in various ships till resident in it, is no evidence of settlement, though the relief be continued for a long period, and though one of the family be put out apprentice by the parish.

The fact of a poor child being first found in a particular parish, is no evidence of his having been born there. Nor does his being maintained by that

(a) Mr. Starkie has remarked on this case, "that the appeal was against an order of removal to Trowbridge and the justices at sessions quashed the order, but quære, whether, though they were not bound to act upon it, they might not have acted on it." Lord Holt, in Banbury v. Broughton (Camb. 364), held, "that where a child is first known to be, that parish must provide for it till it find another." (2 Stark. Ev. 728, n.)

parish for several years, and occasionally relieved by them for several weeks together, amount either to an admission of his being settled there.

Semble, that relief given to a pauper is no evidence of his being settled in the relieving parish.

1814. He then went to Trowbridge, and married there. Being out of work at Trowbridge he went with his wife to the workhouse at Chatham, where he stayed more than three weeks, during which time he was maintained there by the parish of Chatham; and on going away was furnished by the parish officers of Chatham with 1*l.* in money, and a pair of shoes for him and his wife to return to Trowbridge. He returned, and remained there about ten years, when, being again out of work, he went to Chatham again with his wife and family, where he again stayed about three weeks in the workhouse; and while there was again maintained by Chatham, and received 1*l.* in money, and a pair of shoes for him, his wife, and each of his children, and provisions to return to Trowbridge; at the same time he was desired by the Chatham overseers not to return to Chatham again without an order or a pass. He then returned to Trowbridge, at which place he was afterwards relieved, and thereupon removed by order of the magistrates to Chatham. The parish registers of Chatham were searched by the pauper, but no entry was found of his baptism nor of any persons bearing his name. Bayley, J. "If the decision in Rex v. Chatham (ante, 814,) is law, which seems not to be denied, relief is no evidence of a settlement in the relieving parish; and then the sessions could not act upon the evidence of the relief by Chatham, and have come to the right conclusion, in holding that there was no proof of the pauper's being settled at Chatham. It does not, however, appear to me in the present case necessary to say the giving relief within a parish may or may not, under certain circumstances, be evidence, from which the sessions may conclude that the party so relieved was settled in the relieving parish; because, admitting that there was some evidence of a settlement at Chatham, the effect of that evidence was a question for the sessions to decide; and as they have decided it, and the facts of the case do not, in my opinion, show that their decision was wrong, I think we ought not to interfere to disturb it. The pauper is first found in the workhouse at Chatham. By what means he came there does not appear. Until they could ascertain that he had a settlement elsewhere, the parish officers of Chatham were bound to maintain him, and relief given under such circumstances is no evidence, or at least not conclusive evidence, of his being settled there. In process of time the pauper became settled at Trowbridge, and received relief from that parish. He afterwards revisited Chatham; but how did the officers of Chatham then act? They relieved him, undoubtedly, and supplied him with money, provisions, and clothes; but for what purpose? For the purpose of returning him to Trowbridge, and at the same time telling him not to come to Chatham again without an order or a pass. I think it is impossible to say, that relief given by Chatham under such circumstances and for such a purpose was relief given to the pauper in Trowbridge, or was any admission that he was settled and belonged to Chatham; if it had been, it would have been conclusive against the latter parish; but as it seems to me, it had no such effect. I cannot concur in the argument, that the mere fact of a pauper being first found in a particular parish, is presumptive evidence of his having been born there; and if the cases that have been referred to go that length, I, for one, must be allowed to doubt their authority. Upon the whole view of this case, I am of opinion that the sessions have come to a right conclusion." Holroyd and Littledale, Js. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

But relief given to a family resident in another parish, is evidence of a settlement in the relieving parish.

Rex v. Wakefield, 5 East, 335. Removal of Mary, the wife of G. F., &c., from Alverthorpe with Thornes to Wakefield, confirmed. Case:—Wakefield at various times during forty years past relieved the father of G. F., the husband of the pauper Mary, and different members of his family, some by being taken into the appellant's workhouse, and some in other ways, during the time that they resided in the township of Stanley, and had provided coffins for, and defrayed the expenses of, the funerals of some of the family. G. F., who at the time of the appeal was thirty-eight years old, the husband of the pauper Mary, and father of the other paupers, was born and had always lived in Alverthorpe with Thornes. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The relief was given by the township of Wakefield to the father of the pauper's husband and to different members of his family, which must mean the family of the pauper's husband's father: and this, while they were residing in another township. This was evidence of the pauper's husband's settlement in Wakefield at that time; and this is stated to have been done at different times during the last forty years; the particular periods are not material, for no other settlement has been established since; and all things are presumed to continue in the same state, unless something be shown to the contrary. Then the only evidence against this is, that of the birth of the pauper's husband in Alverthorpe, which is no more than prima facie evidence of a settlement there. Then if there were evidence on both sides, the sessions were to decide on it." The other judges agreed, and Le Blanc, J. added, "That the place of birth is the weakest evidence of settlement." Orders confirmed.

Rex v. Stanley cum Wrenthorpe, 15 East, 350. Peter Musgrave, &c., removed from Leeds to Stanley cum Wrenthorpe. Order confirmed. Case:—Joshua Musgrave, the grandfather of the pauper, Elizabeth his wife, and Elizabeth his daughter, came into Stanley with Wrenthorpe with a certificate from Ossett dated the 5th of December, 1727. The pauper and his family had been relieved at different times by the overseers of Stanley with Wrenthorpe when residing at Leeds, and also whilst residing at Wakefield. Upon this evidence the court confirmed the order. The court (Lord Ellenborough absent) were clearly of opinion, that the sessions had drawn the right conclusion.

In Rex v. Barnsley, 1 M. & Sel. 377, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "The only doubt is, whether, where the sessions have drawn a conclusion palpably erroneous upon two points we should send the case down again, or in case of the parties, draw the irresistible conclusion ourselves. The relief given by the parish of Killinghall to the family of J. G. for seven years, is evidence of such preponderating weight that I should think any judge would direct a jury to find upon such evidence, (supposing the question legally to come before them,) that G. was by some means or other a settled inhabitant of that parish. It does not, indeed, amount to an estoppel; but it is cogent evidence against the parish." (See also Rex v. Woburn, ante, 719.)

Rex v. Edwinstowe, 8 B. & C. 671. Order of removal of Sarah Dewick, &c., from Mansfield to Edwinstowe confirmed. Case:—The paupers, resident at Mansfield, applied for relief to B., the overseer of Edwinstowe, at a public-house in Mansfield, which is seven miles from Edwinstowe, on a market day; he gave her 3s. and said, if she wanted more she must apply again at Edwinstowe and he would give it her. A fortnight after, the pauper went to Edwinstowe for relief, when she saw B. and the other overseer: they then refused to give her relief, saying, she must throw herself upon Mansfield. Bayley, J. "I certainly agree that if there be not any premises to warrant the conclusion to which the justices at sessions have come, we are bound to reverse their decision. I do not say that, from the facts stated in the case, I should have drawn the same conclusion which the justices have done. But it was a question of fact; and it was for them to draw their conclusion from the evidence. Before we reverse their decision, we must see clearly that they were wrong. It is not sufficient that the evidence in support of their conclusion is slight. The question is, whether there was any evidence to warrant the justices in coming to the conclusion? It appears that at the time when the relief was given, the parish officer was at a distance from home. It is possible, however, that he may have known that the pauper was settled in Edwinstowe. If he did not know it, he might have said to the pauper, 'I cannot tell whether you are settled in the parish or not, and I give you this whether you are settled there or not.' But he gave the relief in an unqualified manner, and seems to have acted on the principle, that he conceived there was an obligation on his part to grant relief and a right in her to demand it. It was for the sessions to draw their conclusion from these facts. There was some evidence upon which they might exercise their discretion; and though I might, perhaps, have come to a different conclusion, I think we are not at liberty to reverse their decision." Littledale, J. "I concur in the judgment delivered by my brother Bayley, entirely on the ground that there were some premises to warrant the sessions in coming to

12. By Relief.

Evidence of a settlement in A., by showing that the pauper's grandfather came into B. under a certificate from A., is rebutted by showing that B. had relieved the pauper and his family while residing in other places.

Single instance of relief not conclusive.

12. By Relief.

Relief given to a pauper not residing in the relieving parish is prima facie evidence of his being settled there; but the sessions are not bound upon such evidence only to find that he is settled in the relieving parish; and, therefore, where upon the trial of an appeal the pauper proved relief given to him by the appellant parish while resident in another parish, the sessions having quashed the order of removal, this court refused to disturb the decision.

The sessions to draw the conclusion, the conclusion to which they have come. The evidence was undoubtedly very slight; but it was for the sessions to draw their conclusion from it, and having done so, I think we ought not to disturb their decision." Parke, J. "Upon the evidence stated in this case, I should have come to a different conclusion. But it is for the sessions and not for us to draw the conclusion from the evidence given, and they having done so, I think their decision ought not to be disturbed." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Yarwell, 9 B. & C. 894; 4 M. & R. 685. T. Ireson, &c. were removed from Yarwell to Stibbington. Order quashed. Case:—The respondent proved by the pauper and his wife that the appellants had, about twenty-eight or twenty-nine years ago, and at three or four times subsequently, the last time being ten years ago, relieved the pauper and his family while they were residing in the respondent parish. When they wanted relief they applied to the parish officers of the appellant parish for work, and as they could not find it for them, they allowed the family 12s. a week. It was the pauper's wife who applied for relief upon all those occasions except one, when the application was made by the pauper himself. He had been once examined by the appellants, and stated that he had been an apprentice in their parish. The appellants also, within the last six years, and while the pauper was resident in the respondent parish, paid the expenses of his wife's confinement in a lunatic asylum at Peterborough. Bayley, J. "The sessions have sent this case for our consideration, without telling us what question they wish to be answered. They have stated a strong prima facie case, from which they were at liberty to draw the conclusion that the pauper was settled in Stibbington, but they were not bound to do so. It was purely a question for them. The pauper might have been examined as to the fact whether he had ever gained, or whether there was a reasonable ground to conclude that he had gained a settlement in the appellant parish by apprenticeship, or otherwise. If he was not examined as to that, the sessions may have refused to act on presumptive evidence of settlement, when the respondents might have proved a settlement actually gained by the pauper in the appellant parish." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion." Parke, J. "If the sessions intend to ask us whether there was prima facie evidence of a settlement in the appellant parish, I should have answered that there was, and that they ought to have acted upon it. If they asked me whether they were bound to do so, I should answer they were not." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Great Salkeld, 6 M. & Sel. 408. (See part of this case, ante, 278.) The case also stated, that soon after the order was quashed, the mother returned to Great Salkeld, and was removed from thence to Bongate, but whether by an order or not did not appear. Bongate received her, and told her she must nurse her child, the pauper then at the breast. When the pauper was six or seven years of age and residing with his aunt at Great Salkeld, the mother being in service, the overseer of Bongate went to Great Salkeld and paid the aunt some arrears of relief due from the parish for the maintenance of the pauper, and threatened to take him away that he might earn something for himself: the aunt was reluctant to part with him, and the overseers threatened to diminish her allowance. Bayley, J. "If the circumstances were sufficient to raise a presumption of a settlement in Bongate, it was for the sessions and not for this court to draw the conclusion, but I cannot see any ground for such a presumption."

13. Of Settlement
by Acknowledgment, &c.

13. Of Settlement by Acknowledgment; viz. By Non-Appeal against Order of Removal.

If the act of relieving a pauper can in any case be regarded as an acknowledgment by the parish giving the relief, that the pauper is settled with them, it seems reasonable that the acquiescence in or submission to an order of removal, by the parish against whom it is made, should be treated as at least equally conclusive. It is an adjudication by a competent legal authority (the magistrates) of the fact that the pauper is settled in the place to which the removal is directed to be made, and although such an adjudication may be disputed upon appeal, yet if the party whose interest it is does not in due form put its correctness in issue the legitimate inference is, that it cannot be set aside or reversed. Mr. Justice Buller says, "There is no proposition in the law of settlements more clear than this, that an order of removal unappealed against is conclusive against all the world." See Rex v. Kenilworth (post.) But it is only decisive of the question, up to the time when it is made; it has no effect prospectively; the pauper may acquire a settlement elsewhere immediately afterwards, and if he does, upon proof thereof, the order of removal unappealed against is no longer in force. The decisions upon which this plain and simple rule of law is founded, and the requisites of such an order to make it effectual for this purpose, will necessarily be given under the general title "Of Removals," and need not therefore be inserted here. (See the division VII. "Of the effect of an Order of Removal unappealed against," post.)

CHAPTER VII.

OF REMOVALS.

THE authority of the magistrates to remove paupers to the place of their settlement is given by statute, and must be exercised according to the prescribed regulations, some of which relate to the form of the order itself. And though so strict an observance of them is not necessary, as the sessions, in case of appeal, are empowered by 5 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 1, to amend defects of this description, yet in matters of substance, correctness is essential, as errors of this kind cannot be aided or remedied in like manner. Besides, it will sometimes be doubtful whether the particular defect complained of be one of form only or of substance, the line of distinction not being very obvious in the statute, nor very accurately marked by any of the cases, so as to afford a sure guide upon all occasions. Hence the importance of correctness in both respects becomes apparent.

Although the enactments on this subject, or many parts of them, have already been given in different parts of this volume, it will be convenient to collect them together in this place, and then to show under what circumstances poor persons are removable; and lastly, the method of proceeding in cases of removal, with the requisites of the order for that purpose.

The general division will be as follows:—

- I. Enactments on the Subject.
- II. Who may be removed.
- III. Of the Order of Removal, Suspension, and Execution thereof.
- IV. Of Persons returning after Removal.
- V. Order of Removal of one Certificated.
- VI. Appeal against an Order of Removal.
- VII. Effect of an Order Unappealed against.
- VIII. Effect of Quashing or Confirming an Order.
- IX. Of Amendments by Sessions.
- X. Power of Sessions in Orders of Removal.

13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12.

Recites inconveniences resulting from poor persons removing from one parish to another, &c.

I. Enactments on the Subject.

The first statute that authorized the removal of poor persons to their place of settlement, was the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, which, after reciting that the necessity, number, and continual increase of the poor, not only within the cities of London and Westminster, with the liberties of each of them, but also through the whole kingdom of England and dominion of Wales, is very great and exceeding burthensome, being occasioned by reason of some defects in the law concerning the settling of the poor, and for want of a due provision of the regulations of relief and employment in such parishes or places where they are legally settled, which doth enforce many to turn incorrigible rogues, and others to perish for want, together with the neglect of the faithful execution of such laws and statutes as have formerly been made for the apprehending of rogues and vagabonds, and for the good of the poor: for remedy whereof, and for the preventing the perishing of any of the poor, whether young or old, for want of such supplies as are necessary, enacts "that whereas by reason of some defects in the law, poor people are not restrained from going from one parish to another; and therefore do endeavour to settle themselves in those parishes where there is the best stock, the largest commons or wastes to build cottages, and the most woods for them to burn and destroy, and when they have consumed it then to another parish, and at last become rogues and vagabonds, to the great discouragement of parishes to provide stocks, where it is liable to be devoured by strangers; be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish, to any justice of peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming so to settle as aforesaid, in any tenement under the yearly value of 10*l.*, for any two justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable (a) to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant, to remove and convey such person or persons to such parish where he or they were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or they give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said justices."

The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 3, provides "That (this act notwithstanding) it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons to go into any county, parish, or p'ace, to work in time of harvest, or at any time to work at any other work, so that he or they carry with him or them a certificate from the minister of the parish, and one of the churchwardens and one of the overseers for the poor for the said year that he or they have a dwelling-house or place in which he or they inhabit, and hath left wife and children or some of them there (or otherwise as the condition of the persons shall require), and is declared an inhabitant or inhabitants there: and in such case if the person or persons shall not return to the place aforesaid when his or their work is finished, or shall fall sick or impotent whilst he or they are in the said work, it shall not be accounted a settlement in the cases abovesaid, but that it shall and may be lawful for two justices of the peace to convey the said person or persons to the place of his or their habitation as aforesaid, under the pains and penalties in this act prescribed: and if such person or persons shall refuse to go, or shall not remain in such parish where they ought to be settled as aforesaid, but shall return of his own accord to the parish from whence he was removed, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace of the city, county, or town corporate where the said offence shall be committed, to send such person or persons offending to the house of correction, there to be punished as a vagabond, or to a public workhouse in this present act hereafter mentioned, there to be employed in work or labour; and if the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish to which he or they shall be removed, refuse to receive such person or persons, and to provide work for them as other inhabitants of the parish, any justice of peace of that division may and shall thereupon bind any such officer or officers in whom there shall be default, to the assizes or sessions, there to be indicted for his or their contempt in that behalf."

By the 1 Jac. II. c. 17, s. 3, the forty days' continuance in a parish intended by the above act, was to be reckoned from the delivery of notice in writing, by the person coming to settle, of the house of his abode, and the number of his family, to one of the churchwardens or overseers of the parish to which he shall so remove.

And by the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, it was further required that the churchwarden or overseer should cause such notice to be read on the next Lord's day, immediately after divine service, in the church or chapel of the parish, and that the forty days to make a settlement should be accounted from such publication.

These provisions as to notices were in effect abrogated by the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 3, which enacts that no person coming into any parish, township, or place, shall from the passing of this act be enabled to gain a settlement therein by delivery and publication of notice in writing.

And the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 10, provides a more summary remedy as follows: "That if any person be removed by virtue of this act from one county, riding, city, town corporate, or liberty, to another, by warrant under the hands and seals of two justices of the peace, the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the said parish or town to which the said person shall be so removed, are hereby required to receive the said person, and if he or they shall refuse so to do, he or they so refusing or neglecting (upon proof thereof by two credible witnesses upon oath before any justice of the peace of the county, riding, city, or town corporate, to which the said person shall be so removed) shall forfeit for each offence the sum of 5*l.* to the use of the poor of the parish or town from which the said person was removed, to be levied by distress and sale of the offender or offender's goods, by warrant under the hand and seal of any justice of the peace of the county, riding, city, or town corporate, to which such person was removed, to the constable of the parish or town where such offender or offenders dwell; which warrant the said justice is hereby empowered and required to make; the overplus, if any be, to be returned to the owner or owners; and for want of such sufficient distress, then the said justices shall commit the said offender or offenders to the common gaol of the said county, riding, city, or town corporate or liberty, there to remain without bail or mainprize for the space of forty days: provided always and be it hereby enacted that all such persons who think themselves aggrieved with any such judgment of the said two justices, may appeal to the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be held for the county, riding, city, town corporate, or liberty, from which the said person was so removed." (a)

The 5 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 1, which gives the sessions power to amend defects of form in orders of removal, is as follows: "Whereas in many cases his majesty's justices of the peace by law are empowered to give or make judgments or orders, great expenses have been occasioned by reason that such judgments or orders have, on appeals to the justices of the peace at their respective general or quarter sessions, been quashed or set aside upon exceptions or objections to the form or forms of the proceedings, without hearing or examining the truth and merits of the matter in question between the parties concerned; therefore to prevent the same for the future, be it enacted, that after the 24th day of June, 1732, upon all appeals to be made to the justices of the peace at their respective general or quarter sessions to be holden for any county, riding, city, liberty, or precinct, within that part of Great Britain called England, against judgments or orders given or made by any justices of the peace as aforesaid, such justices so assembled at any general or quarter sessions shall and they are hereby required from time to time, within their respective jurisdictions upon all and every such appeals so made to them, to cause any defect or defects of form that shall be found in any such original judgments or orders, to be rectified and amended without any cost or charge to the parties concerned, and after such amendments made, shall proceed to hear, examine, and consider the truth and merits of all matters concerning such original judgments or order, and likewise to examine all witnesses upon oath, and hear all other proofs relating thereto, and to make such determinations thereupon as by law they should or ought to have done in case there had not been such defect or want of form in the original proceeding; any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

(a) See construction of 13 & 14 Car. c. 11, s. 10, in Rex v. Davis, Sayer, 163, 11. c. 12, and above section of 3 W. & M. (post.)

By 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 1 (called Mr. East's act), reciting the 13 & 14 Car. II. (ante, 820), and reciting also "that many industrious poor persons chargeable to the parish, township, or place where they live, merely from want of work there, would in any other place where sufficient employment is to be had, maintain themselves and families without being burthensome to any parish, township, or place; and such poor persons are for the most part compelled to live in their own parishes, townships, or places, and are not permitted to inhabit elsewhere, under pretence that they are likely to become chargeable to the parish, township, or place into which they go for the purpose of getting employment, although the labour of such poor persons might in many instances be very beneficial to such parish, township, or place: and whereas the remedy intended to be applied thereto by the granting of certificates, in pursuance of the 8 & 9 Will. III. intituled 'An Act for supplying some Defects in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor of this Kingdom,' hath been found very ineffectual," it enacts, "That from and after the passing of this act, so much of the said in part recited act of 13 & 14 Car. II. as enables the justices to remove any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable to the parish, township, or place into which they shall come to inhabit, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and that from henceforth no poor person shall be removed by virtue of any order of removal from the parish or place where such poor person shall be inhabiting, to the place of his or her last legal settlement, until such person shall have become actually chargeable to the parish, township, or place in which such person shall then inhabit, in which case two justices of the peace are hereby empowered to remove the person or persons in the same manner and subject to the same appeal, and with the same powers, as might have been done before the passing of this act with respect to persons likely to become chargeable."

Sect. 2. "And whereas poor persons are often removed or passed to the place of their settlement during the time of their sickness, to the great danger of their lives; be it enacted, that in case any poor person shall from henceforth be brought before any justice or justices of the peace, for the purpose of being removed from the place where he or she is inhabiting or sojourning, by virtue of any order of removal, or of being passed by virtue of any vagrant pass, and it shall appear to the said justice or justices that such poor person is unable to travel, by reason of sickness or other infirmity, or that it would be dangerous for him or her so to do, the justice or justices making such order of removal, or granting such vagrant pass, are hereby required and authorized to suspend the execution of the same until they are satisfied that it may safely be executed, without danger to any person who is the subject thereof; which suspension of, and subsequent permission to execute the same, shall be respectively indorsed on the said order of removal or vagrant pass, and signed by such justice or justices; and no act done by any such poor person continuing to reside in any parish, township, or place, under the suspension of any such order, shall be effectual, either in the whole or in part, for the purpose of giving him or her a settlement in the same: and the charges proved upon oath to have been incurred by such suspension of any order of removal may by the said justices be directed to be paid by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish or place to which such poor person is ordered to be removed, in case any removal shall take place, or in case of the death of such poor person before the execution of such order; and if the churchwardens or overseers of the parish, township, or place, to which the order of removal shall be made, or any or either of them, shall upon the removal or death of such poor person, ordered to be removed, refuse or neglect to pay the said charges within three days after demand thereof, and shall not within the same time give notice of appeal as is hereinafter mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for one justice of the peace by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause the money mentioned in such order to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so refusing or neglecting payment of the same, and also such costs attending the same, not exceeding forty shillings, as such justice shall direct; and if the parish, township, or place, to which the removal of such poor person is made, or was ordered to

Sect. 5. "That every person who shall have been convicted of larceny, or any other felony, or who by the laws now in being shall be deemed a rogue, vagabond, idle or disorderly person, or who shall appear to any two or more justices of the peace of the division wherein such person shall reside, upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, to be a person of evil fame, or a reputed thief, such person not being able to give a satisfactory account of himself or herself, or of his or her way of living, shall be considered as a person actually chargeable within the true intent and meaning of this act, to the parish in which such person shall reside, and shall be liable to be removed to the parish of his or her last legal settlement by the order of the said justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any such person shall reside."

Sect. 6. "That every unmarried woman with child shall be deemed and taken to be a person actually chargeable, within the true intent and meaning of this act, to the parish, township, or place, in which she shall inhabit, and may be removed as such to the place of her last legal settlement; and in case any order of removal obtained for such purpose shall be suspended for any of the reasons before mentioned, and during such suspension the said woman shall be delivered of any child, which by the laws of this kingdom shall be a bastard, every such bastard child shall be deemed and taken to be settled in the same parish, township or place, in which was the legal settlement of the mother at the time of her delivery: provided nevertheless, that all act or acts heretofore made touching bastard children, or concerning the mothers or reputed fathers of such children, shall be and remain in full force and effect after the passing of this act, as well in cases where by this act the place of settlement of such bastard children is directed to be the same as that of the mothers of such children, as in cases where the place of settlement of such bastard children remains the same as it did before the passing of this act."

(a) This constructive chargeability is not affected by the 69 sect. of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. (See Appendix.) That section applies only to the punishment of the mother and the security of the putative father. And as a bastard child after the age of sixteen will be settled in the place of his birth, the object of the enactment by Mr. East's statute still continues. Sed quare; see observations in Burn's Justice, tit. Poor, 1126, 1127, 1140, 1141, edited by Mr. Serjt. D'Oyley and E. V. Williams. See further, post.

49 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 1. After reciting the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, and further reciting that "it is expedient that the power of putting an end to the suspensions of any such order of removal or pass, and of executing the several other authorities aforesaid, should not be confined to the order of the justice or justices making such order or pass; be it enacted, that in all cases wherever the execution of any order of removal or of any vagrant pass shall be hereafter suspended by virtue of the said recited act, it shall be lawful for any other justice or justices of the peace of the county or other jurisdiction within which such removal or pass shall be made, to direct and order that the same shall be executed, and to direct the charges to be incurred as aforesaid to be paid, and to carry into execution any such amended orders as aforesaid, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as the said respective powers and authorities can or may be executed by the said justices who shall make any such order of removal, or by the justice who shall grant any such pass as aforesaid."

Sect. 2. "That when the execution of any such order of removal shall be suspended, the time of appealing against such order shall be computed according to the rules which govern other like cases from the time of serving such order, and not from the time of making such removal under and by virtue of the same."

Sect. 3. "' And in order to avoid any pretence for forcibly separating husband and wife, or other persons nearly connected with or related to each other, and who are living together as one family at the time of any order of removal made or vagrant pass granted, during the dangerous sickness or other infirmity of any one or more of such family, on whose account the execution of such order of removal or vagrant pass is suspended: ' be it enacted, that where any order of removal or vagrant pass shall be suspended by virtue of this or of the said recited act, on account of the dangerous sickness or other infirmity of any person or persons thereby directed to be removed or passed, the execution of such order of removal or vagrant pass shall also be suspended for the same period with respect to every other person named therein, who was actually of the same household or family of such sick or infirm person or persons at the time of such order of removal made or vagrant pass granted."

Sect. 4. "That whenever it shall happen that any pauper is by age, illness, or infirmity, unable to be brought up to the petty sessions to be examined as to his or her settlement, it shall be lawful for any one magistrate acting for the district where such pauper shall be, to take the examination of the said pauper, and to report the same to any other magistrate or magistrates acting for the said district, and for the said magistrates upon such report to adjudge the settlement of the said pauper, and make and suspend the order of removal, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if the said pauper had appeared before two magistrates."

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, enacts, "That every person being able wholly or in part to maintain himself or herself, or his or her family, by work or by other means, and wilfully refusing or neglecting so to do, by which refusal or neglect, he or she, or any of his or her family, whom he or she may be legally bound to maintain, shall have become chargeable to any parish, township, or place; every person returning to and becoming chargeable in any parish, township, or place, from whence he or she shall have been legally removed by order of two justices of the peace, unless he or she shall produce a certificate of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of some other parish, township, or place, thereby acknowledging him or her to be settled in such other parish, township, or place; every petty chapman or pedlar wandering abroad and trading, without being duly licensed, or otherwise authorized by law; every common prostitute wandering in the public streets or public highways, or in any place of public resort, and behaving in a riotous or indecent manner; and every person wandering abroad, or placing himself or herself in any public place, street, highway, court, or passage, to beg or gather alms, or causing, or procuring, or encouraging any child or children so to do, shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person, within the true intent and meaning of this act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him by his own view, or by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses,) to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one calendar month "

By section 20 it is enacted, " That every person who, under the provisions of that act, shall have been convicted as an idle and disorderly person, or as a rogue and vagabond, shall be deemed to be actually chargeable to the parish, township, or place, in which such person shall reside; and such person shall be liable to be removed to the parish of his or her last legal settlement, by the order of two justices of the peace of the division or place in which such person shall reside."

The 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 79, enacts " That from and after the 1st day of November, 1834, no poor person shall be removed or removable, under any order of removal from any parish or workhouse, by reason of his being chargeable to or relieved therein, until twenty-one days after a notice in writing of his being so chargeable or relieved, accompanied by a copy or counterpart of the order of removal of such person, and by a copy of the examination upon which such order was made, shall have been sent, by post or otherwise, by the overseers or guardians of the parish obtaining such order, or any three or more of such guardians, to the overseers of the parish to whom such order shall be directed: provided always, that if such overseers or guardians as last aforesaid, or any three or more of such guardians, shall by writing under their hands agree to submit to such order, and to receive such poor person, it shall be lawful to remove such poor person according to the tenor of such order, although the said period of twenty-one days may not have elapsed: provided also, that if notice of appeal against such order of removal shall be received by the overseers or guardians of the parish from which such poor person is directed in such order to be removed within the said period of twenty-one days, it shall not be lawful to remove such poor person until after the time for prosecuting such appeal shall have expired; or, in case such appeal shall be duly prosecuted, until after the final determination of such appeal."

Sect. 84. " Provided always, that no charges or expenses of relief or maintenance shall be recoverable under a suspended order of removal, unless notice of such order of removal, with a copy of the same, and of the examination upon which such order was made, shall have been given within ten days of such order being made to the overseers of the poor of the parish to whom such order is directed."

of Worcester granted to H. B., the grandfather of the pauper, a lease for lives of a cottage and garden, at the yearly rent of 2s. 6d. At his death, leaving no will, he was succeeded in possession by his son William, (the pauper's father,) who afterwards died, leaving a will, devising the premises to his wife for life, remainder to W. B., the pauper. The pauper came at the end of two years to reside with his mother on the premises, till he married, (February 2d, 1790,) when she demised to him the premises at a yearly rent, and went to reside elsewhere, leaving the pauper in the sole occupation. On the 27th of August, 1795, the second life died. On the 13th of July, 1798, the mother of the pauper, who was tenant for life under the will of the pauper's father, died. The pauper continued in possession till November 26th, when, on payment of a fine of two guineas, a new lease was granted to the pauper at a new rent of 1s., for three new lives, still existing. At this time the lives in the first lease were all extinct. The pauper's residence on the premises continued till the time of the removal. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "That there would be difficulty in deciding that this was a purchase under 30l. within the statute;" but he asked, "How, admitting that, and presuming the third life under the first lease to be extinct, (she not having been heard of for thirty years,) this order, removing the pauper from his own estate, could be supported?" To this it was answered, "That where a man applies for relief, he must be taken to consent to all things necessary to afford him that relief in the due course of law; and, consequently, to an order of removal to his last legal settlement." But the court held, "That such a person was altogether irremovable whilst he resided on his own estate."

Rex v. Amphill, 2 B. & C. 847; 4 D. & R. 447; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 297. The facts of this case are stated ante, 648. Bayley, J. on the question of the power to remove, said, "I am of opinion, that at the time when this order was made the pauper was removable. It is said, that although he had in fact received relief from that parish, yet as he possessed property, he was not actually chargeable. But, I think, that as the parish did not act fraudulently, and as they were compelled to grant him relief by an order of justices, the pauper is to be deemed as actually chargeable, and if so, then he was removable under 35 Geo. III. c. 101, although he had resided on the tenement more than forty days. It is material to consider the history of the law with respect to this power of removal. By the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, upon complaint made to any justice of the peace within forty days after any person comes to settle in any tenement under the yearly value of 10l., any two justices of the division where any person that is likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit are authorized to remove such person to such parish where he was last legally settled. Under that statute complaint must be made to a justice within forty days after the party has come to reside in the parish. The 35 Geo. III. c. 101, recites this act, and repeals so much of it as enables justices to remove persons likely to be chargeable, and enacts, that 'no person shall be removed from the parish where he shall be inhabiting to the place of his last legal settlement until such person shall have become actually chargeable to the parish in which he shall then inhabit;' and then two justices are empowered to remove such person in the same manner, and subject to the same appeal, and with the same powers as might have been done before the passing of that act with respect to persons likely to become chargeable. Now, taking these two statutes together, I think the meaning of them is, that the statute 35 Geo. III. c. 101, takes away altogether the power of removing, within forty days, persons likely to become chargeable, but gives the power to remove persons actually chargeable at any time after they have become so, and before they have actually gained a settlement." Holroyd and Littledale, Js. both concurred on this point.

Wookey v. Hinton Blewet, 1 Stra. 476. A person settled at Hinton Blewet had an estate descended to him in Wookey; whereupon the justices send him thither as to the place of his last settlement. But by the court: "The order must be quashed; for it is no settlement nor inhabitation, on an estate granted him for lives, in consideration of two pounds two shillings fine and one shilling rent, cannot be removed therefrom, though he have applied for relief, and is thereby actually chargeable. Whether this is an estate within 9 Geo. 1, quære?

A person become chargeable is therefore removable by 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, although he has resided above forty days on a tenement, if he has not paid a year's rent, as required by the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50.

as to his settlement.

2. Of Removal of the Wife.

A woman cannot be removed from her husband's estate, though he had run away.

Nor from a leasehold tenement of the husband's, above the annual value of ten pounds.

The wife of a transported convict went to B., and resided there upon an estate in which she was jointly interested with her sisters, under their mother's marriage settlement: Held, that she was residing upon her own, and irremovable.
